"SWOOSH!" Those six gigantic meteors formed purely from earth elemental essence, each the size of a house, smashed towards the six men at such a high speed that it seemed as though they were tearing through space itself.

Those six Special Executors fled in terror, but those six meteors only chased after them.

"Linley." Doehring Cowart looked at Linley. "Goodbye."

Linley looked up at Grandpa Doehring, with his white beard, white hair, and white robe.

"Remember this. Live well." Doehring Cowart's face suddenly blossomed into his trademark smile...and then his now translucent spirit disappeared, like smoke being blown away by the wind.

Linley opened his mouth, but felt as though no words could come from his throat. His tears began to uncontrollably roll down his face.

"Ah...Ah!!!" As though he were mute and incapable of speech, Linley howled to the heavens, and his tears came pouring down.

"BAM!" "BAM!" "BAM!" "BAM!"

.....

The six giant meteors smashed down viciously towards those six Special Executors. The six Special Executors all used their hands to rip the ground apart beneath them and try to tunnel downwards.

Those six giant meteors struck the ground, causing the earth to shake furiously with colossal booms, as though giant waves of thunder were suddenly emanating from the ground.

"BOOOOOM!"

Six massive, deep gouges appeared in the earth, each of them around ten meters wide. The tremendous shockwaves spread out in all directions, and the earth itself began to buckle and roil about, toppling houses and snapping trees in every which way.

Within a circular area with a circumference of several hundred meters, everything was turned to dust.

This terrifying explosive boom caused the entirety of Hess City to take notice. Whether it was the Ascetics who had just stepped out of the gates of Hess City, or the men of the Dawson Conglomerate, or other powerful experts, everyone felt the vibrations coming from this place.

.....

The roiling waves of force reached Linley as well, but Linley only stood there like an idiot, not moving at all. He allowed the waves of force to buffet him as they pleased.

Linley just stood there like an idiot, his tears flowing down without stopping.

"Ah...ah...ah..." Linley seemed to have forgotten how to speak, and his entire body trembled with panic and heartbreak as he roared into the sky.

Linley fell to his knees.

A sense of utter heartbreak, of his heart being ripped to shreds, consumed Linley.

Linley's mind suddenly began to swim with images of him and Doebling Cowart together.

.....

That first time he had seen that ray of light transform into an old man with white robes, white beard, and white hair. The child-Linley had shouted in astonishment, "You...who are you?"

"Hello, kiddo. My name is Doebling Cowart. I am a Saint-level Grand Magus of the Pouant Empire!" That was the first time Doehring Cowart had interacted with Linley.

....

"Grandpa Doehring, why aren't you talking? How is the strength of my affinity for earth elemental essence?" The first time Linley had been tested for his talent as a magus.

"Good. Extremely good. Your affinity for earth elemental essence is extremely high." Doehring Cowart's face was wreathed in smiles. "Based on what I know, only perhaps one in a thousand magi would have as strong an affinity for earth elemental essence as you. Truly." Doehring Cowart's praise had caused child-Linley to be unspeakably excited.

A Saint-level Grand Magus of the era of the Pouant Empire. A young child. And so, under the tutelage of this Grand Magus of the Pouant Empire, the child embarked on the road to being a magus.

.....

Stonesculpting using the Straight Chisel School method. Training within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Under the tutelage of the experienced Doehring Cowart, Linley had progressed and matured at an astonishing rate.

But when Linley had become the center of attention for everyone...

...no one knew that behind him stood the spirit of a Saint-level Grand Magus of the era of the Pouant Empire.

....

"Linley. In the future, you'll have to rely on yourself." Grandpa Doehring had fondly rubbed Linley's head one last time.

After casting that world-shaking forbidden spell, 'Heavenly Meteor's Descent', Grandpa Doehring had faded away.

"Linley. Goodbye."

"Remember this. Live well."

.....

Linley's mind swam with images of the time he had spent with his Grandpa Doehring. That kindly, forbearing old man who had taught Linley so much, had long since become someone whom Linley couldn't bear to be apart from.

"No...no...."

Linley shook his head repeatedly.

He wasn't willing to believe it. Grandpa Doehring had truly passed away. What's more, his very soul had dissipated upon his death.

"Impossible. Grandpa Doehring, come out. Come out." Linley stared at the Coiling Dragon ring, howling nonstop at first, before his words took on begging tones as his tears splashed against his ice cold scales.

Blood continued to leak out of Linley's body, but Linley didn't feel anything at all.

"Grandpa Doehring."

Linley so dearly hoped that once more, that ray of white light would shine forth from the Coiling Dragon ring and transform into the white bearded, white haired, white robed Grandpa Doehring. Linley simply couldn't believe that Grandpa Doehring had died, just like that. Never to be by his side again.

He had been together with Grandpa Doehring since he was a child.

Since then, Linley had never been separated from Grandpa Doehring. Never!

In the depths of his heart, Linley had truly become accustomed long ago to Grandpa Doehring's presence. Even when Linley had been imprisoned within the Radiant Temple, he hadn't felt as alone or as helpless as he did now.

His heart had always been steady...because behind him, he had the support of Grandpa Doebling.

But now...

Grandpa Doebling had left forever. Forever!

"Why. Why." Linley's voice was shaking. "Heaven, first my mother died, then my father died. Why. Why did you have to take even Grandpa Doebling away as well?"

"WHY!!!" Linley raised his head, howling towards the heavens.

His voice echoed in the sky.

"Ah...ah...." Linley fell to his knees, powerless. He began to sob madly, but no matter how hard Linley cried, that kindly old man would never appear again.

He had died and left forever.

"Grandpa Doebling."

Linley felt more feeble and fragile than he ever had before. It was a spiritual fragility. No father. No mother. And now, even Grandpa Doebling, who had always been by his side, had left.

The only one left by Linley's side was Bebe, who had never even known about Grandpa Doebling's existence.

"Boss. Hey, Linley, Boss!" Bebe nudged Linley, somewhat frightened.

Linley turned his head to look at Bebe.

"Bebe." Linley suddenly pulled Bebe into his arms.

"Boss, just now, you were calling out for a 'Grandpa Doebling'. Who is Grandpa Doebling? Just now, I sensed a terrifying spiritual energy burst. What was that?" Bebe was totally baffled.

Linley's heart was shot through with agony once more upon hearing Grandpa Doebling's name.

He lowered his head to look at the Coiling Dragon ring on his finger. But...Grandpa Doebling would never come out from it again.

"Rustle." Suddenly, a series of extremely light sounds could be heard. Linley turned his head to look.

Within the giant craters created by the meteors, a violet-robed figure was struggling to crawl out. Not only him. The other five men were also slowly struggling to crawl out as well.

Heavenly Meteor's Descent – An earth-style forbidden spell.

If a Saint-level Grand Magus were to use this spell, the six of them would have been dead without a doubt. But Doehring Cowart was a Saint-level Grand Magus who didn't have a single shred of mageforce.

Based on the laws of magic, mageforce was the generals commanding the army of soldiers known as elemental essence. Through mageforce, spiritual energy was able to command these soldiers to form powerful magical spells.

What Doehring Cowart had done was to consume the spiritual energy within his very soul, using this powerful burst of spiritual energy to directly control the elemental essences and execute the forbidden spell, Heavenly Meteor's Descent.

But because he had no mageforce, even though he consumed all of his own spiritual energy, the power of Doehring Cowart's spell was only 10% – 20% of a normal Heavenly Meteor's Descent. Despite that though, even 10% to 20% of the power of a forbidden spell had smashed those six Special Executors to the brink of death.

Watching those six violet robed figures crawl out, Linley's heart was suddenly filled with unbridled, boundless, unquenchable rage.

"Ah!!!!!" With a scream, Linley charged like a bolt of lightning towards one of the violet robed figures. The Special Executor, seeing Linley charge towards him, was so terrified that his eyes turned as round as the moon.

"Ah!!!!!" Exerting force with his arms, Linley ripped the Special Executor into two halves with his bare hands.

"Die." Linley physically ripped off the head of another Special Executor.

"Haaaargh!" Linley's sharp claws pierced into the chest of a third Special Executor, ripping his heart out and crushing it to pieces with his claws.

"Go die!" Linley latched onto the throat of the fourth Special Executor with his teeth, ripping his throat out.

He wanted to eat their flesh and drink their blood!

"Ah!!!!" Linley's figure suddenly appeared next to the fifth Special Executor. The heavily wounded Special Executor, unable to defend himself, could only watch in terror as Linley ripped him apart into two pieces by his legs.

As for the sixth Special Executor...

"You...you..." The heavily wounded sixth Special Executor, upon seeing the terrifying scene before him, saw Linley charge towards him like a demon from the Infernal Realm. He was so terrified that his body began to shake, and then he collapsed dead from fear.

Although the sixth Special Executor was already dead, Linley still smashed a vicious punch at his head, exploding it.

Watching this, Bebe was somewhat frightened.

The warriors watching from far away had been scared stupid as well. They had never imagined that a human could be so vicious, so brutal, so terrifying. This was especially true because of how Linley currently appeared. His body was covered in broken scales, and blood dyed his entire form red. Even his dark gold eyes were dimly flashing red.

"Boss, you...you...what's wrong?" Bebe was worried.

After Linley had brutally killed all six Special Executors, he suddenly sat down on the ground, his energy gone. He sat there, staring into nothing, with no clue as to what he was thinking.

"Boss." Bebe pushed Linley frantically.

Linley suddenly raised his head, but he was unable to restrain his tears from coming out again. He then lowered his head, burying it against his legs and beginning to cry once more.

.....

Those six giant meteors had turned the entire area around for hundreds of meters into rubble. Those six violet-robed men had all been killed by that demonic freak.

But then, that demonic freak suddenly put his head against his legs and began to sob.

.....

There were nearly ten thousand onlookers now, watching from hundreds of meters away. None of these people could understand what they were seeing.

"That demon is crying?"

All of them were astonished.

"That demon seems...seems really sad." A young person said uncertainly to a nearby friend of his. That friend started, then nodded slowly.

None of the onlookers moved any closer. They had seen the terrifying scene of just moments ago. Even the combatants of the eighth rank knew exactly how much stronger this person in front of them was.

"The demon is crying?" Yale, George, and Reynolds had just gotten here, having travelled quite far. Hearing these words, they all started.

"Out of the way! Out of the way!" Yale shouted angrily.

Immediately, the guards of the Dawson Conglomerate began to push aside the various onlookers. Yale, George, and Reynolds ran frantically towards the center of the battlefield.

But upon reaching the epicenter, all of them were stunned.

Everything within several hundred meters had been turned to rubble. Looking at the six craters, one could imagine how terrifyingly powerful those six giant meteors had been. And just looking at the corpses of those six men, one could imagine how brutal the person who had killed them was.

The demon's body, covered with broken scales, was sitting there, sobbing.

Upon seeing Bebe by the side of the 'demon', and that adamantine heavy sword which had been tossed to the ground, Yale and the others became all the more certain that this was Linley.

"Third Bro." Yale, George, and Reynolds immediately rushed over.

By now, Monroe Dawson had arrived as well. He immediately ordered his subordinates, "Quick, dispose of those six corpses, then leave immediately. Don't let anyone know that the Dawson Conglomerate had anything to do with this." As he spoke, Monroe Dawson immediately left as well.

"Third Bro." Yale, George, and Reynolds all called out with worry.

Back during Linley's assassination attempt on Clayde at Fenlai City, Yale had already guessed that Linley was capable of transforming into a Dragonblood Warrior. He had informed Reynolds and George as well. And now, seeing Bebe as well as the discarded adamantine heavy sword, they naturally were certain that this was Linley.

Linley's body shook slightly.

Raising his head and glancing besides himself, Linley saw Yale, George, and Reynolds. Linley finally spoke. "You guys..."

"Let's go, quick." Yale immediately urged. "You just killed Special Executors. If the Radiant Church finds out, it'll be a disaster for you." Yale immediately helped Linley up.

Linley allowed himself to be raised to his feet.

"Bebe. Let's go." Linley hugged Bebe, then headed out.

Yale was startled, because he noticed that Linley didn't pay any attention at all to his adamantite heavy sword. He couldn't help but call out urgently, "Third Bro, your heavy sword."

"Heavy sword?" Linley turned his head. After a moment, he seemed to understand, and he walked over, picking his heavy sword up.

Just then, the subordinates of the Dawson Conglomerate arrived as well, and they quickly disposed of those six violet robed Special Executors' corpses.

"What's wrong with Third Bro?" George said quietly to Yale and Reynolds.

Yale shook his head as well, confused. "No idea. Bebe seems to be fine as well. Why then does it seem as though Third Bro just suffered a worse blow than that time when he had his heart broken? He seems so downcast that it is like he has lost his soul.”

Linley allowed the Dawson Conglomerate’s men to lead him away, as they crept away via small alleyways and arrived at a mysterious residence.

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 24, Stillness

Within the dark, quiet residence, there was only Reynolds, Yale, George, a few dozen female attendants, and a few dozen guards. All of them were here for Linley.

Beneath branches of hanging grapes, George, Yale, and Reynolds were standing around a stone desk.

“Boss Yale. What do you think is going on with Third Bro?” Reynolds face was filled with confusion as he said helplessly.

Yale shook his head. “I don’t know either. It’s been ten days since Third Bro has come here, and in these past ten days, Third Bro hasn’t had any of his usual energy. He isn’t even training, nor does he joke around and laugh with us anymore. He’s always off by himself.”

George nodded as well. “In the past, no matter what happened, Third Bro wouldn’t stop his training. But now he seems to have transformed into a totally different person.”

“So who can tell me what exactly is going on with Third Bro?” Reynolds gnashed his teeth. “It would be great if I knew.” Yale sighed resignedly.

The thing which hurt their heads the most was that they had no idea what had caused Linley to become like this. He no longer trained, nor did he joke around with the three of them. He was always off by himself, looking as though he had lost his soul.

He had become like this for no apparent reason whatsoever.

As the dear bros of Linley, how could they not be worried?

“Third Bro must have suffered some sort of tremendous shock.” Yale sighed quietly. George and Reynolds were all startled for a moment, then they fell silent. They couldn’t help but think back to what they had seen that day.

Thousands of observers surrounding a circular area where everything for hundreds of meters around had been reduced to rubble. Within that disaster area, those six astonishingly deep craters and fallen meteors.

Linley, in full Dragonform, had brutally massacred those six Special Executors, then sat down and began to cry. He had been sobbing like a child. “I’ve never seen Third Bro this heartbroken, this fragile.” Yale said in a low voice.

George nodded as well. “Third Bro is very tough. Even when he suffered heartbreak from breaking up with Alice, after completing the ‘Awakening From the Dream’ sculpture, he headed directly for the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts to engage in more training.”

“Right. Even when his father died, Third Bro had managed to endure and hold on. But this time...” Reynold simply couldn’t understand.

They were all certain that their beloved bro was in a fragile state right now, but none of them could find a reason why.

Next to a murmuring creek in the back courtyard of the residence, Linley was sitting on top of a decorative polished stone. He stared at the creek, not moving.

Bebe was standing on the stone as well, right next to Linley.

Utter silence. The only sound that could be heard was the murmurs of the flowing water.

Although Linley's eyes were aimed at the creek, his thoughts were still with Grandpa Doebling and the time they had spent together.

How he had played around with Grandpa Doebling as a child.

How Grandpa Doebling had strictly supervised and trained him as a young man.

In the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, how Grandpa Doebling had lectured him time and time again to be careful without growing tired of it.

With each memory swimming to the surface, Linley felt his heart grow still.

"After my father died, I thought that I was now very lonely. But I didn't realize that in reality, I was very fortunate. No matter what happened, Grandpa Doebling was always behind me, supporting me, consoling me, encouraging me, reminding me..."

“But why didn’t I realize this in the past? Why didn’t I treasure the time I had spent together with Grandpa Doebling?” Linley’s heart was filled with agony.

Grandpa Doebling had never made any excessive requests of him, but he had never considered about how Grandpa Doebling had felt. He hadn’t truly valued the time he had spent with Grandpa Doebling. Perhaps subconsciously, he had believed that Grandpa Doebling would forever be with him within the Coiling Dragon ring.

“Coiling Dragon ring? Grandpa Doebling was always inside the Coiling Dragon ring by himself. It must have been very painful and miserable for him to always be alone in there. Grandpa Doebling probably also hoped that I would chat with him often, right?” Only now did Linley think of these things.

But...

In the past, Linley usually would only ask for Grandpa Doebling’s advice when he met with some insurmountable difficulties. He would very rarely actively seek out Grandpa Doebling just to chat.

He only took, without giving back.

“Why is it that only after I have lost, that I now understand how to cherish?” Linley’s body began to tremble. How he hoped that Grandpa Doebling would return and would be by his side again.

Unfortunately....

This was impossible.

Grandpa Doehring was dead. Dead and gone forever.

Linley could feel his heart clenching, as though it were contorting. His entire body was convulsing with pain. But there wasn't a hint of pain on Linley's face.

Deep in Linley's heart, he even began to think...

If he could just die now from the pain, then he would have escaped from it all.

"Boss." Bebe's voice rang out in Linley's head. Linley turned to look at Bebe. Bebe's beady little black eyes were staring at Linley, a look of concern in them.

"You...you are thinking about that Grandpa Doehring again?" Even Bebe only learned after Doehring Cowart's death that Linley previously had a ghost Saint-level Grand Magus by his side.

Linley nodded.

Bebe mentally spoke to Linley. "Boss, can you...can you tell me all about that Grandpa Doehring?"

Looking at Bebe, Linley nodded slightly, then reached out and held Bebe in his arms, hugging him. He began to tell Bebe all about Doehring Cowart. "That year, I was eight years old. There were two Saint-level combatants who had appeared at Wushan township...."

Standing outside the gate to the back courtyard, Reynolds and the others quietly watched as Linley hugged Bebe while seated on that smooth, polished decorative stone.

"I feel extremely miserable myself, seeing Third Bro like this." Reynolds sighed softly.

Yale and George were both silent.

"We have to think of something." George's eyes suddenly sharpened, became fierce. "No matter what, we can't let Third Bro just collapse like this."

Yale and Reynolds both nodded.

"Second Bro, do you have any ideas?" Reynolds and Yale looked at George.

George said, "We have no idea what has caused Third Bro to become like this. But there are a few things that we can extrapolate." George said gravely, "Third Bro's clan was the Dragonblood Warrior clan. As a clan which once dominated the entire world, the members of the clan naturally wish to revive their clan to their former glory."

Yale's eyes lit up. "Right. Third Bro values his clan highly. For the sake of acquiring his ancestral heirloom, the warblade 'Slaughterer', he was even willing to auction off 'Awakening From the Dream'."

"Exactly."

George nodded. "My theory is, the reason why Third Bro was always so hard on himself in training was because he had something important to him that was driving him. Most likely, restoring his clan to its former glory was that motivating impulse. Third Bro has worked hard for so many years now. He definitely wouldn't give up that easily. We have to use this to agitate and encourage him."

"Agitate him? Would that work?" Yale was a bit suspicious.

George said helplessly, "Do we have a better method of helping him?"

"We'll use this method." Reynolds harrumphed. "I can't stand watching Third Bro continue to act like this any longer. Let's go. The three of us will go talk with him. Let's see what exactly is going on."

"Fourth Bro, let Second Bro do the talking. The more you talk, the more you screw things up." Yale reproved.

Knowing his own temperament, Reynolds nodded. George, Yale, and Reynolds looked at each other, then walked towards Linley.

After listening to Linley's story, Bebe was quiet as well. He was also very heart-sick, heart-sick for Doehring Cowart's death. Suddenly, Bebe felt people approaching them from behind. He leaped out of Linley's arms and looked towards that direction.

It was Yale, George, and Reynolds.

But right now, having just finished the tale of Grandpa Doehring, Linley was lost in his memories once more, and didn't even realize that people were approaching him.

Yale, George, and Reynolds glanced at each other, all sighing internally. Linley was an expert. Normally, Linley probably would've noticed the three of them before they had even entered the courtyard. But now, all three of them were right behind Linley, and yet Linley didn't react at all.

"Third Bro." Yale spoke.

Linley trembled, then slightly turned his head to look at the three of them. His eyes were very calm. "You guys came." After speaking, Linley turned his head back towards the creek, continuing to stare at the water.

Yale, George, and Reynolds immediately walked to stand next to the boulder Linley was sitting on.

"Third Bro." Yale suddenly grabbed Linley by his shoulders, forcing Linley to look at him. "Third Bro, do you remember those things which had happened at the Ernst Institute, and what you often said to me?"

"Forgot." Linley said calmly.

Yale stared. "Forgot? Third Bro, you often put me down, saying that I don't work hard or train hard, and that in our dorm, I would be the weakest out of us four, despite physically being the largest."

Back when the four of them were dorm-mates, naturally they would often joke with each other.

But Linley remained silent.

George looked at Yale, nodding slightly. Yale released Linley's shoulders, and then George walked in front of Linley, saying solemnly, "Third Bro, I want to ask you. You have trained so bitterly for all these years. What was it all for?"

Linley started.

He couldn't help but think about how he had been focused on training, ever since he was young.

"For the clan." Linley finally responded.

Next to him, a hint of delight appeared on the faces of Yale and Reynolds. George immediately said, "Then let me ask you this. As you are now, are you behaving responsibly towards your clan?"

Looking at George, Linley smiled bitterly. In a dreary, desolate voice, he said, "My father's dead. My mother's dead. Tell me. What's the point of working hard on behalf of the clan?"

Linley rose to his feet, walking towards the back courtyard.

Yale, George, and Reynolds all stared at Linley's back, then exchange stunned looks.

"Pointless. Everyone is dead. What's the point of doing my best?" Linley's desolate voice said desolately, before he disappeared past the door.

Fifteen days.

Linley had stayed within the residence for fifteen days. During these fifteen days, Yale and the others had tried everything they could think of, but no matter what they did, Linley remained as he had.

George, Reynolds, and Yale were seated together, drinking unhappily.

"What should we do? What exactly should we do? We can't just watch as Third Bro drowns in this abyss of despair." Reynolds angrily smashed the wine cup against the floor.

Yale and George both shook their heads as well.

These past few days, they had tried everything they could. They also asked Linley what had caused him to become like this, but Linley didn't say a word, remaining silent.

What could they do?

“When I see how silent Third Bro is, I really worry about him. My heart hurts. Third Bro, alas...” Yale grabbed the bottle of wine and poured it directly into his mouth, drinking half of it at a swig.

They had grown up alongside Linley, and their love for each other was even greater than that between real brothers. How could they just watch as Linley collapsed like this?

Seated on a chair within his room, Linley stared at the Coiling Dragon ring on his hand. Linley could clearly recollect how Grandpa Doehring looked each time he came out of the ring.

But that scene would never, ever play out again.

On Linley’s other hand, he was wearing a second ring, an interspatial ring. After Clayde had died, the ring and its contents had become items without an owner. When he had been engaging in battle against the six Special Executors, the blood from Linley’s body had covered the ring long ago, and it naturally had become personalized and bound to him.

But...

These past fifteen days, Linley hadn’t so much as glanced at this interspatial ring or its contents. His mind was elsewhere. Even when he didn’t actively dwell on it, his thoughts would always turn to scenes of him together with Grandpa Doehring. How Grandpa Doehring had looked when stroking his beard, or how he had looked when he was sternly instructing Linley. All sorts of memories, all of them so clear and vivid.

"Why. Why. Even Grandpa Doebling, the last person I had, was taken away?"

After having lost Grandpa Doebling, Linley had also lost his strongest source of support. He felt more fragile and more lonely than he ever had before. Linley tightly held Bebe in his arms. In that quiet little room, he continued to sit there, alone...

Book 7, Heaven and Earth Turned Upside Down – Chapter 25, Departure

At the borders of the Kingdom of Hess was an army numbering over 800,000 soldiers. On a vast expanse of ground, military camps dotted the land like a series of mountain ranges, limitless and without end. This enormous army was, however, quite organized.

But in front of the military camp, there was a vast expanse of empty land.

“Hey, Uncle Rand [Lan'te]. If the army of magical beasts attack, will we be able to hold?” An armored young man who looked to be in sixteen or seventeen said in a soft voice.

Next to him was a muscular, bearded man. Removing a small flagon of liquor from his pouch, he took a small swig, then laughed loudly. “Relax. This time, in addition to the elite troops of our Kingdom of Hess, the knights of the Radiant Temple have been sent by the Radiant Church, along with many lord magi. Don't worry. The spells of magi are quite powerful.”

“Right.” This was the young man's first battle. Hearing the words of the veteran, he felt slightly steadier.

But that muscular man was sighing to himself inside. Because he, in fact, had seen how vicious and powerful magical beasts were. If thousands or tens of thousands of magical beasts charged towards them, the only way humanity would be able to survive was by paying a price in blood.

“Roaaaar!”

Suddenly, a low growl could be heard coming from an extremely far distance.

“Uncle Rand, I think I heard something.” The young man was growing nervous.

“It’s fine.” Rand said loudly, but suddenly, Rand squinted and looked to the south. Atop that barren, empty plain, a countless number of thickly clustered dots could be seen.

“Magical beasts. A horde of magical beasts!”

From another part of the military camp, a shrill cry rang out. Instantly, the entire military camp began to move. From the highest ranking generals to the lowest level soldiers, everyone heightened their vigilance.

The entire 800,000 man army was preparing to do battle.

“So, so many!” Many human soldiers, upon seeing the horde of magical beasts off in the distance, couldn’t help but suck in a cold breath. From far away, countless Vampiric Iron Bulls had formed into a series of formation lines. Their muscles knotted, they were charging towards the humans at high speed.

There was well over ten thousand Vampiric Iron Bulls.

"Rumble, rumble." The Vampiric Iron Bulls charged wildly, causing the very ground to shake. The eyes of each and every Vampiric Iron Bull had turned red, and their bodies were emitting flames. They looked like a sea of fire.

The shaking earth. The endless sea of flame.

"Swish!" "Swish!" "Swish!"

Suddenly, the sky became filled with many translucent, azure-colored javelins. These javelins fell down upon the Vampiric Iron Bulls like the rain.

"The lord magi!" Many human soldiers exulted.

"Puchiii!" Every single javelin possessed astonishing power. As one of the water-style's pure water-element spells, they were extremely powerful against fire-type magical beasts.

These icy javelins descended, either piercing into the ground or into the bodies of the Vampiric Iron Bulls. "Puchiii!" Some of the icy javelins penetrated directly through the internal organs of the Vampiric Iron Bulls, who roared in fury, ran a few steps more, then collapsed.

One Vampiric Iron Bull after another died, but the vast majority of them continued to charge forward. Even if they had suffered some light injuries, they would only grow more furious.

Fresh blood stained the ground.

"Snooort!" The Vampiric Iron Bulls roared angrily.

"Archers! Ready...Fire!" The officers shouted loudly.

Instantly, the skies were filled with countless arrows. The thickly clustered arrows arced down from the heavens in a dense wave.

One sharp arrow after another struck the Vampiric Iron Bulls, but their tough, knotted muscles easily deflected many of the arrows.

The tactics which human armies used against other human armies wasn't necessarily effective against magical beasts.

"Pikemen, formations!"

One heavily armored and thickly muscled warrior after another strode forward, all holding steel pikes. Assuming a defensive formation, they quietly awaited the onslaught of the Vampiric Iron Bulls. "Snoooooort!" The red-eyed Vampiric Iron Bulls charged forward.

Countless steel pikes were there to welcome the Vampiric Iron Bulls, but the Vampiric Iron Bulls only lowered their horns and continued to charge forward while roaring. Like a solid flood, they slammed viciously against the pikes.

"Puchiiii!" The Vampiric Iron Bulls were skewered by those steel pikes.

The people capable of wielding steel pikes were all at least warriors of the third rank. In addition, all of the pikemen were mutually supporting each other in their bristling pike formation, borrowing and lending strength as needed.

The first wave of Vampiric Iron Bulls were not able to break this defensive line. But behind them, more Vampiric Iron Bulls continued to charge.

The battle between the army of magical beasts and the army of men was extremely fierce. The army of beasts was composed of more than just Vampiric Iron Bulls. There were also packs of Windwolves, and also elite prides of the even more terrifying Fire Lions. There were also Landwyrms, Velocidragons, and more...

But the human army wasn't weak either. In addition to the ordinary common soldiers, they also possessed some truly powerful magi who hadn't yet made their moves. In addition, the Radiant Church had also sent a number of magi of the seventh, eighth, and even ninth ranks. There was also a division of elite Knights of the Radiant Temple...

The battle raged for three days, and in the end, the human army was forced to retreat. In just three days, the human side had lost over 300,000 soldiers, and the number of wounded was even more staggering. But the magical beast's army had suffered high casualties as well.

However, both armies seemed to have a tacit understanding, as neither side made use of their Saint-level combatants. The Saint-level combatants only watched from afar, and didn't act.

Hess City was in a state of chaos.

This battle at the border had resulted in the human army retreating a hundred kilometers at once. They were now extremely close to Hess City, and many of the people within Hess City had made the decision to evacuate.

Hess City. The quiet manor where Linley was residing.

"Yale, we're leaving immediately. Quick. Don't waste any more time." Monroe Dawson shouted. "I expect that the human army won't be able to hold for many more days. The flames of war are about to engulf Hess City."

Yale nodded. "Understood, father."

"But Third Bro, he..." Yale was still concerned about Linley. George and Reynolds, by Yale's side, were both worried as well.

Monroe Dawson frowned. "How about this. You go try to persuade him one final time. No matter what though, we must leave tonight." After he spoke, Monroe Dawson turned and left.

Yale, George, and Reynolds looked at each other.

Finally, the three of them headed in the direction of Linley's room. As soon as they entered the rear courtyard, they saw Linley sitting on a chair next to a stone table, calmly staring at the straight chisel in his hand. Seeing this, Yale, George, and Reynolds didn't feel happy or excited at all.

For the sake of wanting to help Linley wake up, they would often place the straight chisel there, along with sculptures. But Linley didn't seem to have any desire at all to sculpt. Each time he saw the chisel, he would think back to how Grandpa Doebling had painstakingly trained him to sculpt.

He could still remember how proud and majestic Grandpa Doebling had looked when he had first imparted to Linley the secrets of the Straight Chisel school. At that moment, Grandpa Doebling really had the regal bearing of a grandmaster.

"Third Bro." Yale walked directly over to him.

Linley raised his head to look at Yale. A smile formed on his face, but he said nothing.

"Third Bro, the army of magical beasts is about to break through the borders. The human side has already been forced to retreat a hundred kilometers. It's only a matter of time before they break into Hess City. We have to leave." Yale said solemnly. "Leave?" Linley was briefly startled. "Oh. Got it."

Seeing how Linley was acting, Reynolds, the most hot-tempered of the four, grabbed Linley by his clothes. Staring straight into Linley's eyes, he angrily shouted, "Third Bro, what the hell is wrong with you? Speak! Why have you become like this? The person whom I, Reynolds, admire most in this world is you. I often brag to others about you. But now? Look at yourself! Look at what you have become!"

"Admire me?" Linley said self-mockingly. "Admire what?"

"I heard Boss Yale say that because of the enmity between you and Clayde, you were willing to throw away everything to be able to kill him. You dared to act and you dared to accept the consequences. As your brother, I admired you! But now? You killed Clayde, then you killed six Special Executors of the Radiant Church. Isn't this something you should be proud of? Why have you become like this?" Reynolds was truly furious now.

Next to him, George frowned.

"Third Bro." George suddenly shouted at Linley.

Reynolds and Yale both turned to look at George. Linley looked at him as well.

"Third Bro, why did you kill those six Special Executors?" George asked with a shout. George suddenly realized...even if Linley were to kill Clayde, there was no reason for Special Executors of the Radiant Church to try and kill Linley.

After all, Clayde was no longer one of their kings. "They wanted to kill me." Linley said in a low voice.

"Why did they want to kill you?" George had a feeling that he had touched upon the reason behind Linley's depression.

"Because it was the Radiant Church who killed my mother." Linley said calmly.

Standing next to Linley, both Yale and Reynolds were both surprised, but a flash of insight suddenly appeared within George's mind. He immediately roared, "The Radiant Church killed your mother? But you, Third Bro, aren't going to seek revenge? What, are you afraid?"

"Not seek revenge?"

Those three words seemed to have struck Linley like a lightning bolt.

"Right. It was the Radiant Church." Linley's dull eyes slowly began to sharpen.

"If it wasn't for the Radiant Church constantly searching for pure souls to offer to the Radiant Sovereign, then Clayde wouldn't have given my mother to the Radiant Church, resulting in my mother's death."

"If it wasn't for my mother's death, my father wouldn't have died."

"If my father was alive, why would I go seek revenge? How could Grandpa Doehring have died as a result? What's more, Grandpa Doehring died as a result of helping me against those six Special Executors."

Linley began to feel hatred in his heart.

"This was all due to the Radiant Church!!! Radiant, radiant, haha! The Radiant Church is radiant? If it was radiant, then why would they murder people with pure, innocent souls and offer them to the Radiant Sovereign?" Linley's heart began to beat with hatred.

The Radiant Temple's actions were really too vicious.

Because of their viciousness, a series of tragedies had occurred, and his own life was one of those tragedies.

"Boss." Bebe saw that Linley's face was growing firm. He was worried that Linley would be rash. He mentally said, "Boss, the last words that Grandpa Doebling said to you were that he hoped you would live well."

Linley's heart trembled. How could Linley forget the final words which Grandpa Doebling's had said just before his soul had dissipated.

"Bebe, don't worry. I will never act rashly again. I will endure...the entity I will act against is the Radiant Church, rather than one specific individual. I know my own limits." Linley's eyes had grown firm and hard.

Seeing the changes in Linley's eyes and expression, Yale, George, and Reynolds couldn't help but feel ecstatic.

In recent days, Linley had always seemed so lost, so distant. He had never looked as resolved as he now did, and his eyes had never been so firm.

"Boss Yale. Second Bro. Fourth Bro. I've decided to leave." Linley made his decision.

"Third Bro, you..." Yale and the others were surprised.

"Don't worry. I'm fine." Linley laughed, giving each of his three bros a punch to the chest. Yale and the others began to laugh as well. Seeing Linley like this, they felt much more relieved.

Wearing a warrior's uniform, carrying the adamantine heavy sword on his back, and with Bebe on his shoulders, Linley left by himself.

After leaving the chaotic city of Hess, Linley headed towards the east. After half a day, Linley arrived at the border to the outer regions of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Seeing the boundless Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, a hint of a smile appeared on Linley's face.

"Radiant Church, just wait. There will come a day when I will pull you out by the roots." Linley's gaze was extremely firm.

He lost his father. He had lost his mother. He had lost Grandpa Doehring.

The only one Linley could now rely on was himself.

"Boss, are we going to cut through the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts?" Bebe was confused.

Linley laughed, shaking his head. "No. First, we go to the core regions of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, and then we'll head straight north, until we reach the very end." "That's a distance of ten thousand kilometers!" Bebe was somewhat stunned. "And the core regions have a lot of extremely powerful magical beasts." Bebe was absolutely shocked that Linley wanted to travel in the core region of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts for ten thousand kilometers.

"If not, how shall I train? I haven't yet mastered the correct way to use the heavy sword. If I can't even master the heavy sword and use it properly, how will I deal with the Radiant Church?"

Linley immediately strode forward, entering the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. And with this, Linley began the longest period of training in his entire life...

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 1, Thunderbolt

The central regions of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts rarely saw humans passing through. Here, magical beasts of the seventh to ninth ranks could appear at any time. Most likely, only warriors of the ninth rank would dare trespass here. But Linley, upon arriving at the central region, began to embark on a northwards journey, along the central lines of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Such an incredible journey was something which even most combatants of the ninth rank wouldn't be so wild as to attempt.

Linley was only wearing a pair of raggedy hempcloth pants. His upper body was bare, and he was barefooted as well. On his back, he carried the adamantine heavy sword. Step by step, he continued on this path which few dared tread.

As always, Bebe stood on Linley's shoulders, scanning the nearby area.

"Rustle, rustle."

Linley walked through a thick layer of dried leaves, his face calm. His backpack, Bloodviolet, straight chisel, and other clothes were all stored inside the interspatial ring. Within Clayde's interspatial ring, aside from that enormous fortune of 2.2 billion gold coins worth of magicrystal cards, there were also dozens of precious items. Even the least valuable of them was worth millions of gold coins. The wealth accumulated by the royal clan of Fenlai over centuries was indeed a terrifying figure.

But to Linley?

Wealth was merely a worldly possession. What he truly valued was his own strength. Hadn't the Dawson Conglomerate been willing to directly offer him a hundred million gold coins to join them? And this was just based on the mere possibility that Linley would reach the Saint-rank. To truly invite a Saint-rank to join, the price would be astronomical and astonishing.

From this, one could tell how important one's personal strength was.

Although Linley was in the core regions, Linley still quite sensibly avoided a region where he couldn't detect any magical beasts for tens of kilometers around. For such a large place within the core regions of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts to be devoid of magical beasts most likely meant that the region was the territory of a Saint-level magical beast. Although Linley was self-confident, he still didn't want to irritate a Saint-level magical beast.

Cutting his way through brambles and thistles, Linley wasn't travelling at a particularly high speed.

"Everything needs to start from the basics." Linley was extremely pragmatic. Every day, he carried the adamantine heavy sword on his back. Slashing, chopping, piercing, upward swinging. Linley continuously practiced with every possible move, trying nonstop to raise his attack power.

Linley didn't train using only one method either.

He would often ponder how to train next. Using the scant information in his clan's records regarding how some of his ancestors had trained, he tried to form a correct training regime for himself.

The correct way of training was to not aim too high and too far right away.

The dawning spring, the flourishing summer, the cool autumn, the freezing winter. No matter what season it was, Linley continued to only wear those tattered pants, which had been ripped countless times due to his Dragonform transformation. His upper body remained bare.

Linley had discovered something...

When he was barefooted, he could more clearly sense the thrumming pulse of the earth. Standing on the ground, his heart was as steady as the vast earth itself. Linley's usage of the adamantine heavy sword also began to embody the weight of the world itself.

His upper body was bare.

Feeling the movement of the air against his body, Linley felt as though his entire being had become part of the wind itself. Wind, by its nature, was invisible and formless. When using the Bloodviolet flexible sword, Linley felt that he was wielding it with greater and greater ease.

Because of this, Linley now emanated an aura that was both stable and immovable as well as graceful as the wind. These two auras should have been opposites, but the strange thing was, coming from Linley, they felt very natural and innate.

Focusing primarily on the heavy sword, secondarily on the flexible sword, and also sparing some time for stonesculpting. At night, Linley would be in the meditative trance. Linley's entire life had entered a very particular regime of training.

Sometimes, when he saw massive waterfalls crashing down from the top of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Linley would feel excited and leap into the waterfalls, training beneath the water.

Seeing those long, pure rivers, Linley would often wade into their waters.

When he saw boulders atop mountain peaks, if Linley felt struck by inspiration, he would directly climb onto the top of the peaks and carve out a statue, perhaps spending several nights on each one.

He did whatever he wanted.

Linley's mind and spirit were more natural and more at-ease than they ever had been before. Training under these conditions, Linley totally forgot the passage of time. He only felt that his strength was improving every single day, and every single improvement made him feel happy and moved.

The path of training was a long, winding one.

This was a hard road to travel, but on this path there were constant new breakthroughs, making one feel gratified and moved.

Linley began to grow a beard, and his originally short hair began to grow long as well. His eyes, previously filled with a proud aloofness, had become calm and tranquil, due to the influence of being in touch with nature for so long.

Only occasionally while training would his eyes become terrifyingly sharp.

Linley's temperament, as well, had become molded by nature to become more stable. Without Doebling Cowart's guidance, Linley had no one to rely upon. Naturally, he continued to develop and mature even more.

.....

"Rumble."

Water thundered down from the hundred-meter high waterfall, smashing down against the deep pool below, spraying water everywhere.

Right next to the waterfall, there was a large boulder sticking up from the ground.

There was a person seated cross legged atop the boulder, with a black heavy sword resting atop his legs.

It was early dawn. The sky was just beginning to lighten. Within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, one of the things Linley enjoyed doing was enjoying the clear dawn air.

"Ah..." Linley opened his eyes.

He glanced behind him, and saw Bebe curled up right next to him. Bebe's two little claws were stuck directly into the stone itself, so as to make sure there was no possibility he could roll off and fall.

"Bebe, time to move." Linley said with a laugh.

Bebe opened his eyes lazily, glancing all around himself. Then he shook his head, clearing it of the last remnants of sleep, and stood up. "Boss. I'm hungry."

"Let's go. We'll eat later." Linley leaped off the boulder. Moving as gracefully as the wind itself, Linley traversed several dozen meters with that leap, landing on the opposite shore of the pond. Also jumping off the boulder, Bebe transformed into a black streak, finally landing next to Linley's feet.

A man and a magical beast once more began their voyage.

But before they had gone too far, Linley's footsteps suddenly halted. Bebe looked questioningly at Linley.

"There's a magical beast nearby." Linley said mentally.

Bebe stared. Bebe could now be considered an early-stage magical beast of the ninth rank. Generally speaking, there were very few magical beasts that could draw near without him sensing it. But this time, he hadn't sensed anything.

With his feet pressed against the earth and his ability to sense the wind, it would be difficult for anything moving nearby to not attract Linley's attention.

"This magical beast's movements are light and graceful. I can't sense its movements on the earth at all. But when it moves, it causes vibrations in the wind." Linley said mentally.

Bebe nodded.

A Golden Tattooed Panther was latched onto a tree trunk, not moving at all. Panthers could be considered one of the fastest type of land-based magical beasts.

In particular, the Saint-level Electrobolt Panther's movement speed made it an incredibly terrifying Saint-level magical beast to deal with.

Golden Tattooed Panthers were magical beasts of the seventh rank. But as a panther-type magical beast, it naturally possessed the high speed which all panthers were known for. Its explosive, short distance pouncing speed was even superior to magical beasts of the eighth rank.

The Golden Tattooed Panther suddenly exerted pressure with its four limbs.

"Swish."

It leapt atop another tree. Panthers were extremely skilled at running and leaping about on tree tops, and were very well known for that as well. From within the dense leaves, the Golden Tattooed Panther had already seen that distant human figure.

The Golden Tattooed Panther waited quietly. Waited for the human to draw near.

Indeed, the human and the black Shadowmouse were beginning to come nearer.

"A black Shadowmouse? Not a threat." Magical beasts of the seventh rank possessed very high intelligence. The primary focus of the Golden Tattooed Panther was that human. The aura that human emitted had already raised the Golden Tattooed Panther's caution level. But the Golden Tattooed Panther had the feeling that this human shouldn't be too powerful.

Indeed, in his base form, Linley was only a late-stage warrior of the seventh rank.

Generally speaking, when a magical beast of the seventh rank fought a human of the seventh rank, the magical beast would have the advantage.

"Swish." Leaping off from the tree trunk, the Golden Tattooed Panther transformed into a vicious golden blur, gracefully soaring towards Linley.

The seemingly totally unprepared human, suddenly....

As fast as lightning, drew that adamantine heavy sword from his back while retreating! At the same time, he chopped down with that sword against the Golden Tattooed Panther with tremendous power.

Already in mid-leap, there was no way for the Golden Tattooed Panther to change its trajectory. The only thing it could do was to do his best to move his head away.

"Bam."

Flashing out like a lightning bolt, the adamantine heavy sword viciously slammed against the Golden Tattooed Panther's body. Where it landed on the Golden Tattooed Panther's body, a deep crevice appeared. The sounds of bones shattering could be heard.

With that 'bam' sound, the Golden Tattooed Panther's body crashed to the ground. It lay twitching there, blood pouring out of its mouth. But within ten seconds, the Golden Tattooed Panther moved no more.

Linley gracefully resheathed his adamantine heavy sword.

"Bebe, our breakfast today will be panther flesh." Linley said casually.

To Linley and Bebe, this was just a very ordinary event. Within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, they would kill several magical beasts every day.

If an expert at using the sword had been present, they would clearly be able to tell that Linley, despite only being a late-stage warrior of the seventh rank, was able to utilize this 3600 pound heavy sword at an extremely high level. Not only did the weight of the heavy sword not hinder Linley, Linley was even able to make use of its weight to make the speed of the heavy sword's blows faster.

When chopping, he could actually chop a magical beast of the seventh rank to death at one blow. This power was simply astonishing.

Linley and Bebe began to roast panther flesh in the middle of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

"Boss, how powerful is the most powerful attack you can now use with that heavy sword? A few days ago, you said you had a breakthrough." Bebe asked.

They had been in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts for over a year now. During this year, Linley's mind had become one with nature, and he had completely immersed himself in his training. This year and a half of training had improved his abilities at an extremely rapid pace.

"My most powerful attack? Hard to say. Speaking in more general terms, I should be able to fight most magical beasts of the eighth rank in human form alone." Linley said confidently.

This wasn't arrogance. This was confidence in his own power.

"The panther meat smells so good." Bebe sniffed the air with his nose.

"Hrm?" Linley frowned, then suddenly laughed. "Bebe, when we roast meat, we often attract attention from magical beasts. Only, this time, this magical beast seemed to be quite a slow and clumsy one."

After waiting a good while, Linley and Bebe finally saw a magical beast appear.

A Velocidragon.

"Velocidragon?" Linley began to laugh. Linley was now quite familiar with Velocidragons. Despite being magical beasts of the seventh rank, they possessed extremely powerful defense. Although both were of the seventh rank, a Velocidragon's defense was far more formidable than that of a Golden Tattooed Panther. But in turn, the Golden Tattooed Panther was far faster than a Velocidragon.

"Boss, you say that your attack power is really high now. Do you think you can chop a Velocidragon to death with one sword stroke?" Bebe suddenly said.

The scales of a Velocidragon were nearly half a meter thick, and the bones of its skull were extremely hard and dense. Although Velocidragons were fairly slow, their defense could match an ordinary magical beast of the eighth rank.

"One sword blow? I haven't tested it yet. Let me give it a try."

Linley drew the adamantine heavy sword from the sheath on his back, then began walking step by step towards the Velocidragon.

The Velocidragon was two stories tall and nearly twenty meters long. Compared to this enormous creature, Linley was nothing more than a small speck.

"Groooooowl." The Velocidragon roared angrily at Linley.

But wielding the adamantine heavy sword in his hands, Linley continued to walk towards the Velocidragon, one barefooted step at a time.

Suddenly....

Linley's movements sped up dramatically as he charged towards the Velocidragon. Letting out an angry roar, the Velocidragon sent its draconic tail whipping towards Linley. The Velocidragon's tail was an extremely quick weapon.

“Clang.” Linley’s adamantine heavy sword suddenly moved at high speed and blocked the draconic tail.

Despite the great lashing force of the Velocidragon’s tail, Linley leapt off the ground, borrowing the force of the tail to fly over the Velocidragon.

“Uh, this is a human?” The Velocidragon was surprised to discover that the man in front of him had wielded that adamantine heavy sword as easily and as naturally as the grass bowing from the wind. And now, that man was smashing directly down at his head with the sword.

The Velocidragon was extremely confident. Its skull was, after all, the toughest part of its body.

Indeed...

When that agile, flowing black heavy sword touched his skull, it posed no danger to the Velocidragon at all. But all of a sudden, just as it touched the skull, an incredibly powerful force exploded from the sword. Like a sudden flood bursting through a dam, that astonishing power poured out all at once. It only heard a ‘crack’ sound, and then everything went dark.

Bebe watched this scene in astonishment.

Linley had only struck the skull, the toughest part of a Velocidragon’s body, with a single blow from his sword. And then, the Velocidragon’s head had split open like a fragile egg, with brain matter and blood pouring out. The massive, powerful body of the Velocidragon slumped to the ground, as Linley gracefully landed as well.

“Boss! Wow! You are that powerful now?” Bebe ran over excitedly.

Linley laughed. “Over the past year, I have been able to almost perfectly merge my own strength with my Dragonblood battle-qi. And then, based on what I have learned from my connection to the earth, I broke past the simple levels of using ‘strength’ and ‘battle-qi’. I have arrived at the level which the ancestors of the Baruch clan described as ‘wielding the heavy as though it were light’. Only now, I have managed to develop this technique: ‘Thunderbolt’.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 2, The Howling Worldwolf

The most basic underpinnings of training with the heavy sword lay in combining battle-qi along with physical strength in utilizing it.

Right after the adamantine heavy sword had been forged in the city of Hess, when Linley had used the adamantine heavy sword to attack the violet-robed Special Executors, he was not capable of combining his strength and his battle-qi to use the heavy sword in a meaningful way.

The heavy sword was not meant to be used with pure brute force.

It lay in conserving every little bit of strength to allow the heavy sword to reach its maximum possible velocity, while at the same time combining physical strength and battle-qi to reach the most optimal level possible.

After spending more than a year, Linley had finally become able to wield the adamantine heavy sword as easily as though it were his hands, without wasting any strength at all. Despite a limited amount of strength and battle-qi, he was able to raise the power of the adamantine heavy sword to an extremely high level.

But this was still just the basics.

Above this basic level was the second level, a different realm of possibilities. This was something Linley had suddenly awoken to when he saw the crashing waterfalls within the mountain grotto.

To wield something heavy as though it were light was easy to say, but hard to do.

In truth, it required one to be able to perfectly control one's battle-qi and physical strength. And then, one could suddenly unleash all of one's power, like the unending, cascading waters of the waterfall. The power that erupted from a blow such as this was extremely great.

This was the principle underneath Linley's 'Thunderbolt' technique.

But this was easier said than done. It required an extremely solid grasp of the basics. If one didn't have enough control over one's strength and battle-qi, even after one understood the principles of this technique, one still wouldn't be able to utilize it.

"As powerful as that? Boss, is this the most powerful way to use the heavy sword?" Bebe said in surprise.

Laughing, Linley shook his head. "Not even close. Based on the information contained within my clan's records, the way of using heavy weapons can be described as having three levels. The first is to master and perfect the basics. The second is to be able to wield something heavy as though it were light. And the third is known as 'impose'."

"'Impose'?" Bebe was a bit confused. "What is that?"

"I don't know either." Linley shook his head. "After all, my clan's records, aside from the Secret Dragonblood Manual, primarily consists of general descriptions of the history of my clan and some stories of my ancestors. With regards to that ancestor who was able to 'wield something heavy as though it were light', there were only a few lines describing his power. That record also mentioned that the third level was 'impose', but what exactly 'impose' is, it didn't describe in detail, so I don't know either."

Linley didn't understand.

Could 'impose' be referring to an imposing manner?

But when wielding the adamantine heavy sword, how much could an imposing manner possibly add to attack power?

"I haven't had that moment of enlightenment yet. No way to understand it." Linley shook his head.

Linley knew very well that he had not yet in fact mastered this level of 'using something heavy as though it were light'. Because the most important part of the 'Thunderbolt' technique was to suddenly release all of the power available at the last moment.

How would one further increase the power of this technique?

Right now, Linley was suddenly releasing all of his strength and battle-qi in a brute force manner, but Linley knew that this was a stupid, crude method.

"Pity that there's no signposts on the path of training." Linley chuckled, then ceased his idle speculations.

Deep autumn. The prime, virgin forests of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts were covered with yellowing leaves.

This was the late autumn of year 10001 of the Yulan calendar. Linley had already entered the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts for more than a year and a half, but he had only travelled five or six thousand kilometers thus far.

He spent most of every day in training, progressing only a few dozen kilometers at most in his journey.

Late at night, not a sound could be heard. Within the central areas of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, beneath a giant tree which would take five or six men linking hands to embrace the trunks of, Linley was quietly sitting cross-legged in the meditative trance.

Slowly...

The skies began to brighten. Linley opened his eyes, a hint of a smile on his face.

The light, pure dawn wind was blowing. Several leaves slowly spun about and fell down. Watching these leaves fall, Linley was silent.

"Boss?" Bebe casually opened his eyes. Questioningly, he said, "You woke up? Why didn't you wake me?"

Actually, every day, when Linley woke up, Bebe would wake up as well. But every day, Bebe would wait for Linley to wake him up before he would be willing to open his eyes. Today, though, Linley hadn't called him.

"Bebe, I seem to have made a breakthrough." Linley suddenly said mentally to Bebe.

"A breakthrough?" Bebe immediately jumped to his feet. He asked with excitement, "What sort of breakthrough have you had?"

Linley laughed. "My spiritual energy has finally reached the level of a magus of the eighth rank."

"A magus of the eighth rank?!" Bebe immediately yelped in surprise.

That winter, when he was sixteen years old, Linley had crafted the sculpture 'Awakening From the Dream', and the rapid improvement he had gained over those ten days and ten nights had resulted in Linley's spiritual energy strengthening tenfold, arriving at the level of spiritual power possessed by a late-stage magus of the seventh rank.

He was sixteen years old that winter, and already at the late-stage seventh rank!

From then until now, three years had passed.

While he had been at Fenlai City, Linley's spiritual energy hadn't improved that fast, and based on that rate of improvement, Linley probably would've needed five or six years to advance from the late-stage of the seventh rank to the eighth rank. But this year in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Linley had totally submerged himself into nature, and each time he had engaged in stonesculpting, he had been so natural and unrestrained.

His rate of improvement in spiritual energy was quite noticeable.

Right now...

Linley's spiritual energy finally reached the eighth rank as a magus.

"Boss, how powerful are spells of the eighth rank?" Bebe said curiously.

"You'll find out if you are willing to give it a try." A hint of a smile was on Linley's face. Bebe stared at him, then said proudly, "Come. I, Bebe, am not afraid of magical beasts of the eighth rank, much less a spell of the eighth rank."

Linley immediately begin to chant the words to a spell.

Shortly afterwards, a large amount of earth elemental essence began to rapidly solidify and condense near Linley. The mageforce in Linley's body, as well, was beginning to rouse.

"Whoosh." A wind suddenly arose in front of Linley, catching and tossing up all the fallen leaves around him. An angry howl could suddenly be heard, as an earth-colored, three-meter tall wolf suddenly appeared in front of Linley. This massive wolf was three meters tall and ten meters long. All the muscles on its body seemed as tough and gnarled as steel, and its four limbs were filled with power.

Earth-style spell of the eighth rank – the Howling Worldwolf!

“Hooooooooowl!”

The Howling Worldwolf let out an enraged snarl, then charged at Bebe, but Bebe only playfully stood there with confidence, staring at the Howling Worldwolf.

“Swish!” Suddenly, an Earthen Spear Array erupted from the ground beneath Bebe.

“Whoah!” Bebe let out a cry of surprise, leaping into the air.

The Earthen Spear Array hadn’t managed to hurt Bebe in the slightest, but at this time, the Howling Worldwolf had arrived next to him. Bebe immediately let out a shrill screech, and his body suddenly enlarged.

“Hooooooooowl!”

Fangs bared and maw bloody, the Howling Worldwolf bit down at Bebe, while Bebe also bit angrily at the Howling Worldwolf. With a ‘crunch’ sound, Bebe ripped apart the throat of the Howling Worldwolf.

But the Howling Worldwolf didn't seem to be hurt at all as it slashed at Bebe with his fierce claws.

"Whap!"

Bebe was knocked flying, smashing against the ground, creating a minor crater. Bebe immediately crawled out, staring angrily at the Howling Worldwolf. Just then, the Howling Worldwolf had carried a tremendous amount of power in its claws.

"Bebe, this Howling Worldwolf isn't a magical beast. It's an earth-element construct, totally composed of mageforce and elemental essence. It has no vital weak points." Linley's voice rang out playfully.

Bebe instantly understood.

To a construct created solely from mageforce and elemental essence, whether you bit it on the tail or at the throat, there really was no difference in terms of damage done.

"Shkreeeee!"

Bebe was truly furious now. Transforming into a black blur, he flew at the Howling Worldwolf, which ripped towards Bebe with its fangs. But Bebe dodged its attack, and then raked the Howling Worldwolf with his claws. In the blink of an eye, Bebe had raked the Howling Worldwolf nearly a hundred times, forcibly bringing his opponent to the breaking point.

"Bam!" The Howling Worldwolf's body suddenly began to grow brighter, and then the blink of an eye, it exploded.

Bebe was knocked flying by the force of the explosion, smashing hard against a nearby tree, snapping the tree in half, then falling to the ground.

"Bebe, what do you think?" Linley knew exactly how powerful Bebe was. This bit of offensive force wasn't enough to hurt Bebe.

Bebe quickly ran over to him. In a wounded voice, he said, "Boss, that Howling Worldwolf's offensive attacks weren't lower than an ordinary magical beast of the eighth rank. And it doesn't have any weaknesses either. What a freak. Even when it was about to die, it engaged in a suicidal explosion."

When its body was about to collapse, a construct formed from mageforce and elemental essence would naturally explode.

A dual-element magus of the eighth rank. Now, even in human form, Linley would still be considered a truly formidable person. The power of eighth rank spells was very astonishing.

For example, the 'Brutal Tornado' wind-style spell. This Brutal Tornado spell could easily annihilate an army of thousands of soldiers. In truth, even the attack of the Howling Worldwolf would destroy most small armies. The Howling Worldwolf possessed astonishing defensive powers. Only a freak like Bebe would be capable of so easily penetrating the Howling Worldwolf's defense.

The Howling Worldwolf was extremely fast and possessed astonishing defensive powers. And, it had no weak points.

One could imagine how much havoc it would wreak upon an army.

“To a kingdom, a magus of the eighth rank is more important than an army with 10,000 soldiers.” Linley understood this logic. And magi of the ninth rank, in turn, were more important than an army of 100,000 soldiers. As for Saint-level Grand Magi, they were more important than an army of a million soldiers.

By casting a single forbidden spell, ‘Annihilating Tempest’, an entire army of a million soldiers would instantly be destroyed.

Linley’s elemental essence affinity was exceptional. Naturally, he didn’t need too much time to refine more mageforce. Given the additional support provided by the Straight Chisel School of sculpting, Linley didn’t need to spend too much time training himself as a magus.

And since he could Dragonform now, the speed of his training as a warrior was many times faster than before as well.

His adamantine heavy sword in hand, Linley was walking atop a large mountain. He casually swung and chopped the adamantine heavy sword in every direction. Whap. Slap. Every movement was very natural and graceful.

But whenever the adamantine heavy sword touched any boulders, the boulders would immediately shatter.

Either they would shatter into dozens of pieces, or they would explode, or they would turn to dust...

Linley constantly tested himself and tested out how to have his 'Thunderbolt' technique release more power. How to, using the same amount of battle-qi, increase the effectiveness of his attacks.

"Whew." Sensing that he had used up over half of his Dragonblood battle-qi, Linley immediately sheathed his adamantine heavy blade.

With a flip of his hand, Bloodviolet appeared in his grasp.

Linley immediately began to leap about, the Bloodviolet flexible sword in his hands flashing every which way gracefully. The strength of the Bloodviolet sword lay in its speed and its ability to attack unpredictably.

"Swoosh!"

The Bloodviolet sword slashed in the direction of a small nearby tree. Halfway there, though, Bloodviolet suddenly curved like a serpent, and in a flash, it wrapped itself around the tree. With another violet flash, the tree was cut in half.

With a quiver, the Bloodviolet sword suddenly began straight again.

"Swish." The Bloodviolet sword stabbed forward. Its sharp edge wreathed with a greenish-black light, the sword easily plunged straight into a nearby stone wall.

"Hrm?"

Linley suddenly frowned, pulling out Bloodviolet. He stared at the Bloodviolet sword suspiciously. "Inside the sword...what in the world..." Just then, Linley had been focusing his spiritual energy on Bloodviolet, controlling its fluctuations and contortions. As he had done so, he suddenly had discovered an aura that made his heart tremble with fear.

"Can it be that?" Linley's heart suddenly clenched.

Previously, when he had been in that dangerous situation in the Radiant Temple, the Coiling Dragon ring had emitted a tremendously powerful burst of power. This Bloodviolet flexible sword was also a divine artifact, but it wasn't as powerful as Linley had thought it would be. Linley had always been wondering if there was some secret contained within this Bloodviolet flexible sword.

Linley immediately focused his spiritual energy inside Bloodviolet, carefully probing it from within.

In the past, Linley also tried to do this before he had reached the eighth rank as a magus, but he hadn't been able to find anything. But now, he was a magus of the eighth rank.

"Hrm?" Linley's spiritual energy finally seemed to detect something.

A bloodthirsty, crazed aura suddenly came into contact with Linley's spiritual energy. Linley suddenly seemed to see a boundless sea of blood. Countless corpses. An endless number of bones.

That crazed, bloodthirsty, violent aura directly invaded Linley's spiritual energy, and then, as fast as lightning, it began to pervade Linley's very soul...

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 3, A Slaughter

That endless sea of blood was filled with countless white skeletons, and all sorts of different corpses. Some of the corpses belonged to ten meter tall giants that were covered in scales with two horns sprouting from their heads. Others had white skeletons that glimmered with a faint gold color...

"Ah..."

Linley's eyes began to turn red, as he suddenly began to emit a terrifying, baleful aura. That baleful aura somehow seemed to take physical form as a faint, bloody mist began to emanate from around Linley's body. And surrounded by that baleful aura, Linley seemed like he was a fiendish god.

Bebe, not too far away from Linley, naturally could feel that oppressive, baleful aura.

Shocked, all the fur on Bebe's body stood straight up, and Bebe could clearly feel that all of his muscles were quivering, and his blood was pumping faster. Even his claws were shaking, not entirely under his own control.

Terror.

Terror the likes of which he had never felt before!

"Bo-, Boss, what's going on?" Bebe said frantically.

Right now, Linley was still in control of himself. Only, after being pervaded by that baleful aura, Linley felt a powerful desire to go out and kill.

"This Bloodviolet is?..." Linley forcibly suppressed his desire to kill, lowering his head to stare at the sword.

"Hiss..." Linley could see that in his hands, Bloodviolet was glowing with a devilish red light that flowed, as though blood was flowing on and through it. The entire Bloodviolet sword was shuddering slightly. Linley could feel the intense desire of Bloodviolet to kill! Kill unceasingly!

But right now, the more strongly Linley tried to suppress the urge to kill, the more powerful that urge grew. Linley's eyes began to turn more and more red.

"Ah!!!" Linley let out a wild howl.

As though he had transformed into a tornado of movement, Linley ran down the mountain. In his hand, Bloodviolet was flashing everywhere like lightning. Every place Linley passed by, the trees and the stones were all transformed into rubble and debris.

Seeing Linley's wild charge, Bebe stood where he was hesitantly for a moment. Bebe had truly been terrified by that baleful aura, the likes of which he had never felt before. But for the sake of his Boss...

"Grrr!" Bebe ground his teeth, then suddenly flew down the mountain as well.

....

Not too far away from the mountain Linley had been on was a clear pond of water. There was a pack of Goldmane Mastiffs living next to the pond. Goldmane Mastiffs were pack type creatures, unlike the solitary panthers or tigers. Generally speaking, panthers or tigers might band together for major battles, but in their day to day lives, these types of magical beasts would generally live separately. But Goldmane Mastiffs were different.

Goldmane Mastiffs had a strong pack mentality and were adept at teamwork.

Goldmane Mastiffs possessed extremely powerful claws. This pack of Goldmane Mastiffs numbered over a hundred. Although Goldmane Mastiffs were magical beasts of the eighth rank, even your average magical beast of the ninth rank wouldn't dare provoke such a pack. They definitely were a local power to be reckoned with.

Right now...

These Goldmane Mastiffs were either lying in rest next to the pond, or casually strolling about, or perhaps frolicking and swimming in the water. This wasn't yet the time for them to hunt for food, and given their strength, they never feared that they would lack for food.

But many Goldmane Mastiffs suddenly looked cautiously up the mountain. Given their alert senses, they could easily sense that something living was moving towards them at high speed. The Goldmane Mastiffs which had been lying down all stood up, staring coldly at this creature which was moving towards them.

Goldmane Mastiffs were three meters tall and six meters long. Their entire bodies were covered with golden fur, and they seemed lion-like. But their eyes radiated a strange golden glow.

"Grrrrrrrrrr." The pack of Goldmane Mastiffs suddenly began to growl.

They finally saw the creature which was provoking them. It was a human wielding a devilish violet sword whose body was wrapped up with a red light. These extremely intelligent Goldmane Mastiffs suddenly felt at ease again. It was just a human. Unless this human was at the Saint-level, he wouldn't be able to do anything to them.

But suddenly...

When the human drew close enough for that red mist to cover them, all of the Goldmane Mastiffs suddenly felt terrified like never before. This terrifying aura was far more powerful than even the aura of a Saint-level magical beast. Under this oppressive, baleful aura, all of the Goldmane Mastiffs felt as though their limbs were no longer under their own control, and one after another knelt down in terror as they lowered their proud heads.

"Blood...blood..."

Linley was doing his best to remain clear-minded, but he could feel the intense desire of Bloodviolet to drink blood. After having roused the baleful aura contained within Bloodviolet, Bloodviolet had to be sated by drinking enough blood.

"Swish!"

Transforming into a violet ray of light, Bloodviolet passed straight through the neck of one of the Goldmane Mastiffs. A meter-high mastiff head flew off.

Linley's speed was simply too fast.

No. Accurately speaking, Bloodviolet's killing speed was too fast. Only after it had chopped through eight Goldmane Mastiffs heads did the first head fly off. And only now the remaining Goldmane Mastiffs, who had all been kneeling in terror, wake to their senses.

"Hoowwwl!" Nearby, the largest of the Goldmane Mastiffs forced itself to stand up, then raised his head up and began howling angrily. But despite this, its limbs were still trembling, and its eyes were still filled with disbelieving fear.

Their intelligence, however, was very high.

These Goldmane Mastiffs all knew that this human emitting this terrifying aura was going to kill them all. Even though they were terrified, they were still going to resist.

Having drank so much fresh blood, Bloodviolet emitted a joyful sound.

“Die! Die!” The more he killed, the more Linley felt as though the desire to kill was consuming him. Right now, the only desire he had was to kill.

The remaining hundred or so Goldmane Mastiffs didn’t dare to directly face Linley. All of them turned tail and ran.

“Swish!” Linley’s Bloodviolet sword chopped towards the head of another Goldmane Mastiff.

Knowing that it wasn’t going to be able to flee, this Goldmane Mastiff turned back and opened its mouth, biting down at Linley while breathing flames from its mouth. Instinctively, Linley’s body became covered by his azure-blackish Dragonblood battle-qi, which protected him and blocked the flame breath of this Goldmane Mastiff.

When the violet sword drew close to the Goldmane Mastiff’s head, the Goldmane Mastiff could clearly sense that the baleful aura this violet sword was emitting was now several times stronger than before. This terror, the likes of which it had never felt before, caused its limbs to go soft. Even the energy being generated by the magicite core in its body had come to a halt, and it just stood there, allowing the violet sword to cut its head off.

Surrounded by a baleful aura that had taken physical form, Linley constantly chased after and killed one Goldmane Mastiff after another.

These local tyrants, the Goldmane Mastiffs, were now truly panicked.

They had no idea where this fiendish god had come from. That baleful aura was now so strong that even their bodily functions were being affected. Even if they wanted to fight, their bodies were no longer under their total control.

Blood sprayed everywhere.

Hacked limbs and severed heads flew everywhere...

In the blink of an eye, thirty Goldmane Mastiffs had died on the spot.

"Boss, boss!" Bebe called out frantically.

Bebe could sense the state which Linley was currently in. He was terrified that in the future, Linley would have permanently transformed into a constantly slaughtering madman. Slowly, Linley's form slowed its movements.

"Bebe. I'm fine." Linley's voice rang out in Bebe's mind.

Bebe immediately ran over. Bebe could clearly see Linley's bare upper body, his forehead covered in sweat, and that faint layer of red on his skin. Right now, Linley's eyes were closed, and his chest was rising and falling like a blacksmith's bellows.

"Whew..."

Letting out a long breath, Linley finally opened his eyes. Linley's eyes had now returned to their normal clarity.

"Boss, you...what happened to you?" Bebe said worriedly.

With a hint of lingering fear, Linley looked at the Bloodviolet sword in his hands. Right now, Linley was very certain that this Bloodviolet sword had been a slaughterer's sword, and that it had killed an extraordinarily high number of people. Linley even suspected that the endless sea of blood, bones, and corpses that he had sensed earlier had all been the handiwork of Bloodviolet.

But those corpses...Linley didn't even recognize most of them, or what races they belonged to.

"Is there a race of humans with the heads of bulls? Can it be that these are the legendary minotaurs from other planes?" Linley thought to himself questioningly. From his books, Linley had seen references to minotaurs before, but there were no such creatures in the Yulan continent.

But many of the other corpses, Linley had never seen or heard of, even in the books and records he had read.

For example, those massive giant creatures that were ten meters tall, covered with thick black scales, and had two massive horns sprouting from their foreheads. The aura emanating from their corpses alone filled Linley with dread. Linley had the feeling that those massive creatures definitely were not one whit weaker than some of the Saint-level magical beasts he had seen.

But there were innumerable numbers of corpses of those giant creatures!

It was true! Those corpses of creatures which were no weaker than Saint-level magical beasts could be seen everywhere in that boundless sea of blood.

"Who was the previous owner of this Bloodviolet sword? He actually killed this many powerful combatants." Linley was secretly shocked. He was absolutely certain that this sword definitely came from one of the Higher Planes, because the Yulan continent simply never had this many powerful combatants.

As he thought back to how he had originally acquired Bloodviolet, Linley understood something. This Bloodviolet Godsword truly did not originate from the Yulan continent.

With a thought, Linley absorbed Bloodviolet into his interspatial ring.

"Whew. Unless it is absolutely necessary, I definitely cannot activate the baleful aura hidden within this Bloodviolet sword again." Linley had already made up his mind about this.

At this time, Bebe leaped onto Linley's shoulders.

"Boss. What just happened?" Bebe asked.

Linley laughed as he looked at Bebe. "Bebe, do you remember how we discovered that magical formation back when we were in the Foggy Valley? At that time, Grandpa Doehring had said that the mysterious magical formation was even more complicated and mysterious than Saint-level magical formations. And Bloodviolet was used to support that magical formation. At that time, we suspected that Bloodviolet wasn't as simple a sword as it appeared to be. And indeed, that is the case."

Bebe immediately listened alertly.

"This Bloodviolet Godsword most likely has experienced endless amounts of murder and slaughter, and also killed many powerful combatants, including those of the Saint-level, or even higher! And precisely because that is the case, within this Bloodviolet sword there is a terrifyingly powerful baleful aura. Once it has been activated and agitated, even those Goldmane Mastiffs quaked and knelt down in fear. But despite having its positives, it also has its negatives. Once it's been activated, Bloodviolet absolutely must be fed blood. Otherwise, Bloodviolet will refuse to obey my intentions and won't obediently go into my interspatial ring."

Bebe nodded.

"Boss, this Bloodviolet sword really is terrifying. Just then, that baleful aura even made me tremble with fear as well, and my limbs were shaking too. In a situation like that that, even though I'm a magical beast of the ninth rank, I perhaps would've only been able to use half of my power." Bebe said honestly.

As for magical beasts of the eighth rank, when oppressed by that baleful aura, they probably wouldn't even be able to use a tenth of their power.

When the baleful aura within Bloodviolet was activated, the opponent's own power would be impacted and drop. If even a magical beast of the ninth rank would be influenced so dramatically, one could easily imagine how useful this sword would prove to be in battle.

"But being possessed by that cruel, vicious, wild, murdering urge really is not a good feeling. Once the baleful aura is activated, I absolutely must kill a large number of living creatures before that wild, cruel, murdering urge is sated." Linley had just experienced that urge, so he knew full well what it was like.

Unless it was absolutely necessary, it was best not to activate that baleful aura.

"Alright, Bebe. Let's collect the magicite cores and continue."

"Magicite cores? Wow, so many." Bebe excitedly went to collect the magicite cores.

After collecting the cores of those several dozen Goldmane Mastiffs, Linley and Bebe continued on their journey, letting the corpses of the Goldmane Mastiffs remain there. In the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, once dead, even the most powerful of magical beasts would be no more than food for other animals.

Their discovery of this secret contained within Bloodviolet was nothing more but a side event.

Linley continued his lifestyle of training. Every day, he would travel around ten kilometers, with most of his time spent training. As far as how the heavy sword was meant to be used, almost every day, Linley would have a new insight. Linley was totally immersed in that wondrous feeling of training and improving.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 4, The Black Shadow

The first snow of that winter was a major one. Many places in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts were covered with snow as well. Various tracks could be seen clearly, some belonging to humans, and as well as magical beasts of various sizes.

“What a large blizzard.”

Linley still wore only those ragged hempcloth pants, his upper body bare. Although the temperature was so cold that even rapidly flowing water would freeze, Linley didn't fear it in the slightest.

Barefooted, Linley continued to stride forward.

“Boss, it should almost be the time of the Yulan Festival, right.” Bebe guessed.

After having been in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts for so long, Linley didn't even have a rough idea of what day it was. Although Linley did have a pocket watch, the watch was only capable of keeping simple time, and didn't track dates.

“Should be around that time.” Linley nodded.

After having been in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts for around two years, Linley's prowess as a warrior had increased at a fairly rapid rate. He was at the peak-stage of the seventh rank now. But in terms of using the heavy sword, his skill in wielding his adamantine heavy sword was immeasurably higher than it was originally. In particular, after becoming a dual-element magus of the eighth rank, when he used his magic and his warrior skills simultaneously, his power was raised to a very high level.

"Hrm?" Bebe and Linley both turned to look back.

Not too far away, two sturdy warriors dressed in leather armor and holding weapons were running frantically, seemingly panic-stricken. Seeing that it was other humans, Linley continued on his path. The Mountain Range of Magical Beasts had a large number of human experts training within it, and in these past two years, Linley had encountered quite a few humans. With respect to the humans in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Linley had a simple principle – Don't irritate others.

After all, plenty of people were here with the intention of taking the magicite crystals in other people's bags for themselves. Because Linley had an interspatial ring, he didn't have to carry his bag with him. Thus, there were very few people who had the desire to act against Linley.

"Wait, wait!" A frantic shout from behind.

But Linley didn't pay them any mind at all, continuing to walk forward. Those two people ran quite fast, and they quickly overtook Linley. When they drew near, Linley immediately halted and turned around.

"What do you want?" Linley stared coldly at those two men.

Linley could tell that these two were not weak. However, a human's level of power was hard to judge at a glance. Linley was fairly cautious in dealing with these two.

"Us?" The two sturdily built men exchanged glances, and then forced out awkward smiles towards Linley. One of them, a one-eyed bald man, said apologetically, "We don't have any bad intentions. Only, the core regions of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts are too dangerous. We two brothers...would like to travel with you, friend. That way, we can help each other out. Wouldn't that be safer?"

The other bald man started momentarily, then quickly nodded repeatedly. "Right. The core region is very dangerous. If we travel together, we can help each other out. How about this? Once we all leave the core regions and leave the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, we'll go our own ways."

"Not interested."

Linley frowned. Turning back, he continued on his journey forward.

Linley wasn't that easily fooled youngster of the past. He could tell that these two were clearly lying. Helping each other out in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts? What a joke. These two people definitely didn't have any good intentions in wanting to travel with him. Linley didn't want to cause any trouble, and couldn't be bothered to kill these two either. Naturally, he wouldn't want them to travel with him.

Seeing how bluntly Linley refused and continued on his journey, these two bald men glanced at each other. Hesitating only slightly, they immediately rushed over again.

"Wait, friend, please wait." The two bald men caught up again.

Linley couldn't help but frown as he turned his head to stare coldly at these two.

The two men looked awkwardly at Linley. The one-eyed man said apologetically, "I'm so very sorry, but we two really would like to travel alongside you. Don't worry, once we leave this place, we'll definitely show gratitude to you."

Linley glanced at each man.

"If you want to follow, then follow." Linley said calmly.

After having been in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts for so long, Linley was quite experienced now. If these two insisted on travelling with him, then let them. Linley was confident in his own ability to deal with them. After all, Linley had Bebe with him as well, on his shoulders.

"Thank you, thank you." Those two bald men said gratefully.

Immediately, those two moved together to walk alongside Linley. At the same time, they constantly scanned the area around them, a hint of dread in their eyes.

"Friend, we hail from the O'Brien Empire's southwest district administrative province. Where are you from?" The one-eyed bald man seemed to want to have more friendly relations with Linley.

Linley's eyebrows twitched.

The O'Brien Empire?

Linley knew very well that if he were to cut directly through the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, he would be able to arrive in the territory of the O'Brien Empire quite quickly.

"Why so many questions?" Linley glanced at the man. "If you want to follow, then follow. Don't make a sound."

"Alright, alright." The one-eyed bald man nodded repeatedly.

They could tell that Linley definitely was no ordinary person. It wasn't too strange for him to be only wearing hempcloth pants in the winter, but what was quite amazing was that a human in the core region of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts could be so calm and unhurried.

It was as though this dangerous region was nothing more than a flower garden to him.

"Big brother." The bald man pulled at the arm of the other, one-eyed bald man. In a low voice, he said, "Big brother, do you think we'll be able to preserve our lives?"

The one-eyed bald man looked at their surroundings in fear, then said in a low voice, "Don't over-think things. For now, let's follow this mysterious fellow. If we follow him, we might have a chance."

"Right." The first bald man nodded. But in his heart, he still felt fearful.

Up ahead in front of them, Linley was walking very naturally. Linley noticed that the two men behind him were whispering, but Linley had a feeling that these two men were not the type to try and act against him.

After a while, Linley took a rest.

Each day, Linley would only travel ten kilometers. The rest of his time was spent in training. The two men behind him became truly frantic when Linley rested so soon.

"Why have you stopped?" The one-eyed bald man said frantically.

"Hrm?" Linley glanced unhappily at the two men.

The younger man hurriedly laughed. "Milord, this is still the core regions. Wouldn't it be better for us to hurry out of the core regions before resting?"

Linley frowned, then spoke. "Don't annoy me. If you want to follow me, then follow. If you want to go, then go. As for me, if I want to stop, I'll stop. If you keep kicking up such a fuss, then don't blame me if I kill you both."

The two bald men exchanged glances, then laughed awkwardly.

"Sorry, sorry."

The two immediately retreated slightly, no longer daring to disturb Linley.

"These two are acting in a strange way." Linley glanced at these two men. These two men said that they wanted to leave the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, but they insisted on following him. If he didn't leave, they wouldn't leave either.

Why did they insist on following him?

He didn't know these two men at all.

Linley sat down cross-legged, placing the adamantine heavy sword across his legs. But just at this moment, Linley suddenly felt a tinge of fear in his heart....

"Swish!"

Linley suddenly turned his head. A black shadow suddenly flashed in front of him, then disappeared.

"Ah! Ah!" From far away, a terrified cry could be heard, but after two or three cries, it fell silent. Only now did Linley realize that of the two bald men, only one was left now. The one remaining was the one-eyed bald man. As for his younger brother, the man was gone now. Next to the man, there was a pool of blood.

“Ah! Ah! No, no!” The one-eyed bald man seemed to have suffered some sort of unspeakable shock, as he began to scream.

Linley solemnly rose to his feet, and Bebe began to grow cautious as well.

“Boss, that creature is extremely fast!” Bebe mentally spoke solemnly. “We’ve been in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts for a very long time. This is the fastest creature we’ve encountered yet. I couldn’t even clearly see if it was a man or a magical beast.”

Linley hadn’t been able to see it clearly either.

That creature’s speed was simply too fast. In terms of movement speed, it was even a bit faster than Bebe.

“What exactly was that? Bebe has entered the ninth rank now, and we have spent quite some time here in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. But in terms of speed, we’ve never met anything that was faster than Bebe.” Linley began to feel suspicious.

Bebe’s speed was his greatest strength.

It was hard to find a magical beast able to outspeed Bebe, even amongst the ninth rank.

"What was that strange creature? Could it have been a Saint-level creature?" Linley felt a slight shock. Saint-level magical beasts would naturally be fast. It would make sense for it to be faster than Linley.

Linley immediately turned his head to stare at the one-eyed bald man.

Right now, the eyes of the one-eyed bald man were filled with fear, and his mouth was continuously muttering something. Every so often, he would look around in fear, as though in terror of being attacked again.

"Ah!!!" Feeling himself being grabbed, the one-eyed bald man couldn't help but scream in terror.

But when he came to his senses and looked behind himself, he saw that it was Linley who had grabbed him by his clothes.

"Speak. What is going on." Linley stared at him accusingly. "Otherwise, I'll abandon you here and travel by myself."

"No, no, don't abandon me." The one-eyed bald man directly fell to his knees. "I'll talk. I'll talk."

Seeing this, Linley couldn't help but frown.

He had heard long ago that the O'Brien Empire was a major military power. The people of the O'Brien Empire deeply venerated the War God, and thus many of the citizens of the Empire would train in the path of the warrior. Powerful warriors were extremely proud. For this bald man to be able to enter the core region of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, he clearly wasn't weak either. Even if he wasn't a warrior of the seventh rank, he must be a warrior of the sixth rank at least.

But the one-eyed bald man had just fallen to his knees, showing no spine at all.

"Milord, you don't know how terrible these recent days have been. They've, they've been like a terrible, terrible dream." The one-eyed bald man's eyes were beginning to fill with tears.

Linley immediately began to listen closely.

"This time, myself, my younger brother, my wife, and a group of friends formed a squad to enter the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts and begin our training. We hoped to acquire some magicite cores as well. To people like us, who had entered the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts for more than five times, this was an ordinary trip. But we didn't expect..."

The bald man's entire body was trembling. "On the third day after we entered the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, just as we entered the inner regions, we entered a nightmare."

"This squad of mine had six warriors of the seventh rank, and two magi of the sixth rank. As long as we stayed within the inner regions of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, there shouldn't have been any danger. But who would've thought...that we would encounter a terrifying monster."

"Monster?" Linley frowned.

"The first time we encountered it, it immediately ambushed us, killing one of my good friends, just like how it acted just now." The one-eyed bald man's entire body was shaking. "I was furious, because this monster was simply too fast. We couldn't even tell what it looked like. Only after hearing our friend's miserable cries did we know that we were under attack. And then, seeing the blood on the ground, we realized that our friend was most likely dead."

"At the time, we all believed that magical beast was only able to attack from ambush, and didn't dare to face us directly. Clearly, it wasn't that strong. In our fury, we even thought about killing it to gain vengeance. But at first, we couldn't find the monster."

The one-eyed bald man took a deep breath, calming his agitated heart before continuing. "But that very night, shortly after we finished dinner, the monster came again." As he spoke, the lone eye of the man opened wide. Clearly he was very nervous.

"This time, like the previous time, that monster ambushed and carried off one of our magi. But this time, it carried the magus only a few dozen meters away before beginning to eat him. Right in front of us, the monster began eating our squad's magus."

"What did this monster look like?" Linley immediately asked.

"It looked like a panther whose body was almost totally pitch black." The one-eyed bald man said.

“Totally pitch black body? The eighth ranked magical beast, Blackstripe Panther?” But saying this, Linley found that he didn’t believe it. A magical beast of the eighth rank couldn’t possibly reach such an astonishing speed. Not even a panther, a land-based magical beast of incredible speed.

“It wasn’t a Blackstripe Panther. Our squad was fairly experienced, and we know that Blackstripe Panthers are covered in extremely dense straight black stripes, while this monster’s body was covered in curved black stripes that looked like a decorative pattern.”

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 5, The Mysterious Black Panther

Linley was beginning to frown.

He, too, had never heard of such a creature. There were several types of panther-type magical beasts, but one which was entirely pitch-black and covered with dense black wavy lines which formed decorative patterns, was totally unheard of.

Generally speaking, creatures that one had never heard of must not be underestimated.

The one-eyed bald man said, "That monster decided to eat the meat on the face and the legs of our magus right in front of us, one large bite at a time. Watching this, we were all furious, and we instantly charged forward to attack it.

"However..."

The bald man shook his head. "What we didn't expect was that the monster was far too powerful. We originally thought that the reason it attacked from ambush, then slipped away was because it was weak. However...when our entire group attacked it, it only heavily wounded us."

"Heavily wounded?" Linley questioned suspiciously.

"Right." The one-eyed bald man said in fear and anger. "That monster definitely was capable of killing us all, but it didn't. It only heavily wounded us.

"We originally thought that we still had a chance of living, only to find that the monster was focused on us now. Each day, it would take away two of our people. Sometimes, it would take them away, while other times, it would just eat our friends not too far away from us."

Linley's heart trembled.

He knew that magical beasts were highly intelligent. The magical beast that this one-eyed bald man had encountered clearly was extremely powerful and extremely intelligent. Most likely, this magical beast was a perverted creature.

"We wanted to flee back, but each time we tried to head away from and out of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, that monster would come again and heavily injure us again."

That one-eyed bald man laughed bitterly. "We simply weren't able to escape the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Each day, that monster would come and take away one or two people. In the blink of an eye, our twelve person squad only had six left."

"Having already seen this happen several times, my wife finally broke down mentally when the monster once again began to eat our friends in front of us. She begged me. Begged me to kill her."

The one-eyed bald man laughed bitterly. "You have no idea the terror

we felt after those three days. All of us were at the point of collapse. My wife was fairly weak, even weaker than me. Faced with this terrible choice, in the end, I finally made the choice to put my wife out of her misery."

"You killed your wife?" Linley frowned.

"Yes. I killed her with my own hands." The one-eyed bald man said painfully. "But the very day I killed my wife, we encountered several other people, one of whom was a major figure in our Southwest Administrative Province. A combatant of the ninth rank named Pruitt [Pu'lu'te]."

"We had been at the brink of despair and collapse. I killed my own wife, but right afterwards, a combatant of the ninth rank appeared. How do you think I felt?"

The one-eyed bald man's entire body was shaking. "I almost went mad. Truly. I almost killed myself, I was in such pain."

Linley could totally imagine how, when overcome by despair and mentally broken down, one would personally kill one's wife, so as to not allow one's wife to suffer the fate of being eaten alive, one bite at a time. But then, after killing one's wife, a combatant of the ninth rank appeared?

This sort of contrast was definitely capable of driving someone insane.

"I was filled with pain, but my other friends were very happy, because they knew that we now had a chance. A combatant of the ninth rank! That was someone whom only the Saint-level would surpass. We told our story to him, and Lord Pruitt immediately promised to dispose of this beast for us.”

“When that monster once more came for us, Lord Pruitt immediately made his move.” A strange expression was on the face of that one-eyed bald man. “Just one blow. The monster took a blow from Lord Pruitt head on, then smashed Lord Pruitt’s head open with a blow from its paws.”

Linley’s heart shook.

It was actually able to take a blow from a combatant of the ninth rank head on? Its speed and defense were both incredibly terrifying. A monster like this definitely couldn’t be underestimated.

“This time, the monster was extremely excited. Right before our very eyes, it suddenly transformed, increasing in size from two meters tall to nearly five meters tall and ten meters long. It devoured Lord Pruitt with one gulp.” The one-eyed bald man said in terror.

The look on Linley’s face changed.

“Able to change its size?” Linley was truly shocked.

All Saint-level magical beasts were capable of changing their size. They could easily make themselves much larger or much smaller. But of course, a very small number of magical beasts of the ninth rank with extremely high natural talent could do this as well.

For example, Bebe was capable of changing his size slightly.

In other words...

This magical beast was either a Saint-level magical beast, or an extremely talented magical beast of the ninth rank.

"It wouldn't be a Saint-level, would it?" Linley's heart was somewhat unsettled. Although Linley was very self-confident, he still didn't have any hopes of dealing with a Saint-level magical beast at all.

That one-eyed bald man laughed painfully. "Just like that, the monster continued to torment us, eating two of us each day. In the end, only my younger brother and I were left. We continued to flee along the core regions, hoping in vain that this monster would engage in battle with some other powerful magical beast, giving us a chance to flee. But clearly, no magical beasts were capable of stopping that monster."

Linley nodded.

He now totally understood.

But this one-eyed bald man didn't have any good intentions towards Linley, insisting on following Linley. Clearly, this was out of the hopes that Linley would protect him. Acting like this showed that this man didn't care about whether Linley lived or died at all.

The expression on Linley's face grew hard.

"Milord, I...I had no other choices." The one-eyed bald man knew what Linley was thinking. He hurriedly said, "I have kids. My second brother had kids as well. We didn't want to die."

"Do you think I want to die?" Linley said coldly.

Just based on what that one-eyed bald man had said, Linley had a general sense of how powerful this monster was.

It was faster than Bebe, and wasn't hurt from a sword blow from a combatant of the ninth rank.

Just based on these two points, Linley couldn't help but feel nervous. What's more, that was only the power that had been revealed. What was the true level of power possessed by this monster?

Was it a Saint-level magical beast?

Linley couldn't be certain. If it was a Saint-level of magical beast, then even if he and Bebe joined forces, they still wouldn't be a match at all.

"You didn't want to die, so you pulled us under water as well?" Linley felt extremely dissatisfied.

"Bebe, let's go."

Linley immediately sped up his footsteps, heading forward. The one-eyed bald man continued to follow Linley. Linley couldn't help but turn his head and stare at him coldly.

This bastard was still following?

Clearly, that monster had its mind set on that one-eyed bald man.

"Milord, you...please save me." The one-eyed bald man's eyes were filled with a beseeching look.

But his actions only made Linley dislike him more and more. This man was selfish, only caring about himself. He didn't care about others at all.

"Even a ninth rank combatant died. Do you think I'm a Saint-level combatant?" Linley suddenly drew the adamantine heavy sword from his back, and the one-eyed bald man was frightened into beating a hasty retreat.

"If you continue to follow me, then don't blame me for being merciless to you." Linley said coldly.

Linley was now a peak-stage warrior of the seventh rank, and a middle-stage warrior of the ninth rank in Dragonform. Although he was somewhat more powerful than when he was in Hess City, in Hess City, Linley was only capable of fighting that warrior of the ninth rank, Kaiser, to a draw.

Right now, it would be very difficult for Linley to be able to kill a combatant of the ninth rank in one blow.

But that monster had easily done just that, killing a ninth ranked combatant.

Risking his own life for a person he didn't even know? Was that worth it?

Linley returned his adamantine heavy sword to its sheath, then left by himself. The one-eyed bald man just stood there, not daring to follow. He only stared with despair and hatred at Linley's back.

"Ah!!!"

After walking less than a hundred meters, an agonized scream came from behind him. Linley immediately turned to look back.

On the snow ground, there was a black panther that was two meters tall and nearly four meters long. The black panther had, in its maws, the body of that one-eyed bald man.

"Save...save me!" The one-eyed bald man was still alive.

Linley's attention was totally focused on the black panther. The black panther's body was covered with a large number of wavy, patterned lines. It was quite beautiful, actually. And right now, that black panther's cold eyes were currently looking at Linley with curiosity.

Clearly...

The black panther was playing a game. The previous game had just come to an end, and now, Linley had become the next victim in its game.

"Save me!" The one-eyed bald man stared at Linley, begging Linley with his eyes.

But that black panther just bit down viciously. With a crunching sound, half of the one-eyed bald man's waist was bitten off, and his intestines began to slide out. The one-eyed bald man spasmed on the ground a few times, not dying right away.

The black panther walked forward gracefully, stepping on the one-eyed bald man's chest with its sharp paws.

"CRUNCH!"

The one-eyed bald man's chest caved in, and seconds later he stopped moving.

The black panther looked at Linley with interest, and then it began to slowly, gracefully move towards Linley. It must be said that its graceful stride was indeed quite beautiful to behold.

"Bebe. Prepare to ambush him. This time, we're going all out." Linley could tell that this unidentifiable panther-type magical beast now had its eyes set on him. Instead of allowing this creature to ambush him as it pleased, it was better to engage it head on.

Linley drew the adamantine heavy sword from its sheath, staring at the black panther.

"Hmph." Linley's body began to transform. Cold, sharp horns erupted from his forehead, while black scales quickly covered his entire body. That sturdy tail erupted from behind him as well, and his knees, elbows, and spine became lined with sharp spikes.

In the blink of an eye, Linley had totally Dragonformed.

The black panther, seeing this human suddenly transform into a strange, human-shaped aberration, couldn't help but be startled. Its sleek, glossy hair immediately rose up in caution.

One was a Dragonblood Warrior.

The other, a mysterious panther-type magical beast.

"Come." Wielding the adamantine heavy sword in his hands, Linley didn't move at all, just standing there on the snowy ground. As stable and unmoving as a mountain.

The black panther's body began to crouch down slightly. It was gathering its power!

"Whoosh!"

His dark golden eyes locked onto the black panther, this time Linley was just barely able to see the black panther's movements. In the blink of an eye, the black panther had crossed the hundred meters distance between them and arrived in front of him.

"WHAP!"

Moving as fast as lightning, Linley's draconic tail swung at the black panther's body. In terms of speed, the attack speed of Linley's tail was actually much faster than the black panther's movement speed.

The black panther was knocked back over ten meters onto the snowy ground.

But immediately upon landing, the black panther let out a deep growl as it stared at Linley with its cold eyes. This time, the creature was clearly going to attack at full power. With a leap, the black panther charged at incredible speed, so fast as to make one's heart tremble.

Linley could clearly tell that there wasn't a single hint of blood on the black panther's body.

The draconic tail of a middle-stage Dragonblood Warrior of the ninth rank wasn't able to injure it at all.

The adamantine heavy sword of Linley swung downwards, chopping as fast as lightning. Black light seemed to flow off the blade of the adamantine heavy sword. The black panther actually dared to swing a paw to directly claw at Linley's adamantine heavy sword.

"CLANG!" Linley's adamantite heavy sword was actually deflected to the side by the black panther's paw.

"Slash!"

The other paw slashed against Linley's arm. On the black scales covering Linley's arm, a rather deep scratch could be seen, and two scales had been split open as well.

The man and the magical beast had each exchanged a blow. They immediately separated.

"Growl...growl..." Standing in the middle of the snow, the black panther stared coldly at Linley. He now saw Linley as a serious opponent. Just now, his attack hadn't been able to totally rip apart that scaled defense and tear off Linley's arm. This made the black panther very surprised.

Linley stared at the damage done to his scaly armor.

Most magical beasts of the ninth rank were not capable of breaching Linley's defense. But just now, that panther had been able to rip two scales apart.

The black panther's body suddenly increased in size, transforming from two meters tall to five, and lengthening to ten meters as well. That black tail of the panther was waving around like a whip. The panther continued to stare coldly at Linley.

"Growl..."

This enormous creature once again charged towards Linley.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 6, Another Transformation

“Boss.” Bebe’s voice rang out in Linley’s mind.

Holding the adamantine heavy sword with one hand, Linley leapt backwards in an arcing dodging pattern. At the same time, he mentally said, “Bebe, don’t panic. Let me first have a good fight with this mysterious black panther. If I can’t beat it, you can make your move against it. You are my secret weapon.”

Bebe, understanding, rapidly retreated to one side.

Right now, Linley had been filled with a growing urge to do battle. Despite having spent this much time in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, he hadn’t yet encountered an opponent who required him to truly use all of his power. Saint-level beasts were too powerful, while Linley could now totally dominate ordinary magical beasts of the ninth rank through his higher speed.

Only, this mysterious black panther was even faster than Linley.

“Growl!” The enormous black panther landed on the ground, cold gaze fixed upon Linley.

But Linley only had a hint of a smile on his lips.

“It increased in size, but no doubt its speed is now slower.” Linley could clearly tell that this black panther's speed had dropped by 20% to 30% just now. With the support of the wind-style Supersonic spell, Linley was totally confident in his ability to deal with it.

But Linley also understood something.

With greater size came lesser speed...but most likely, the black panther's offensive abilities had just greatly increased. Even in its normal form, the black panther had been able to rip open two of Linley's scales. Linley no longer dared to allow the black panther to land any more claw attacks against him.

With a 'swish', that mysterious black panther once more pounced towards Linley at high speed, arriving in front of Linley in mere moments.

"Whoosh."

Right at this moment, Linley suddenly slid down on the snow beneath the black panther, passing below it while simultaneously stabbing at the black panther's chest with his adamantine heavy sword.

"CLANG!"

Linley's heavy sword once again slammed against the sharp claws of the panther. Although the black panther's speed had decreased with its increased size, the attack speed of its paw strikes was still astonishingly fast.

"Swish!" That seven or eight meter long black panther tail ripped through the air, viciously slashing towards Linley.

Linley kicked off powerfully against the ground with his right foot, launching himself towards an enormous nearby tree. As he arrived, Linley kicked viciously against the massive tree with both legs.

"CRACK!" The tree was broken in half and fell down, while its dense array of branches also smashed everywhere.

With astonishing speed, Linley used the bounce-back force to dive back towards the mysterious black panther, while at the same time, gripping the adamantine heavy sword with both hands in a vicious downward stroke against the black panther.

"Slash!" The adamantine heavy sword moved so fast that it ripped through the air, creating an ear-piercing, howling sound.

But right at this moment, the black panther turned its head to stare at Linley, staying there without moving, allowing Linley to strike it at will. Clearly, this black panther understood that after having transformed to a larger size, it would no longer be able to rely on its speed to suppress Linley.

"Swish!"

The adamantine heavy sword in Linley's hands suddenly seemed to lose all weight and force, floating gracefully downwards at an astonishing speed. The tip of the sword, however, was beginning to tremble.

"Bam." The adamantine heavy sword collided against the black panther's body.

A look of surprise appeared in the cold, arrogant eyes of the black panther, because this sword blow seemed to have no force behind it at all. Without hesitating in the slightest, it sent its seven or eight meter long tail slashing fiercely towards Linley.

"Thunderbolt." Linley's formerly calm eyes suddenly seemed to spit lightning bolts.

The black panther suddenly felt as though that adamantine heavy sword which had just touched its back suddenly exploded with a terrifyingly powerful blast of force. The force was like the eruption of a volcano, blasting out power wildly and at high speed.

"BAM!"

The black panther felt its limbs grow soft, and its body was pressed down by a significant amount. Its glossy black fur suddenly began to ripple like the waves of the sea.

"Growl!!!!" A small amount of blood leaked out from the corner of the black panther's mouth.

This level of 'wielding something heavy as though it were light' required perfect coordination between physical strength and battle-qi. It wasn't just raw, brute force; rather, it was concentrating all of the rushing power and unleashing it at one blow. Although the black panther possessed astonishing defensive capabilities, with its fur neutralizing more than half of the offensive power, a significant amount of power still entered its body, causing the black panther some internal injuries.

“Whap!”

That whip-like black tail of the black panther landed viciously on Linley's body, smashing apart the armored scales on Linley's waist and sending Linley flying.

Just as Linley was about to smash into the top part of the trunk of another large tree, Linley suddenly stretched out his right hand and plunged his claws into the tree trunk like a grappling hook. Hanging onto the trunk, Linley looked down from his position at the upper trunk of the tree.

“As I thought. Once it transforms to a large size, its offensive power increases greatly.” Linley looked at the shattered scales on his waist and the fresh blood leaking from beneath it. He now understood much more about this mysterious black panther. “As for its defense, however, it didn't increase that much.”

When it transformed to a larger size, the black panther's defense didn't change much. Its speed dropped, and its attack power increased.

“It seems as though my ‘Thunderbolt’ technique is still effective against it.” Linley was very satisfied with the effect of his ‘Thunderbolt’ attack.

This black panther possessed a terrifyingly powerful defense. Even the explosive power unleashed by 'Thunderbolt' was largely blocked by its extremely tough black fur, and the fur itself seemed to be totally undamaged.

If Linley were only to use raw, brute force and battle-qi against this black panther, he probably wouldn't be able to wound it at all.

"Time to use my magic."

Linley began to mumble the words to a magical incantation. Right now, Linley was hanging around thirty or so meters up above the ground off that tree trunk, while the black panther was staring up at him coldly from below. Seeing that Linley didn't come down, this peak-stage, highly intelligent magical beast of the ninth rank, came to a snap decision.

If you aren't coming down, I'm coming up!

"Swoosh!" That five-meter tall, enormous black panther suddenly flew into the air, leaping directly towards Linley. With its astonishing springing force, it cleared thirty meters with a single bound.

Linley's heart was as tranquil as water.

Despite seeing the enormous black panther fly upwards towards himself, he still continued to chant the words to his spell. Only, he slapped the trunk of the tree with his right hand, sending himself flying upwards at an incline at high speed.

The tree which Linley had just slapped instantly split apart by the force of that blow.

“Crash!” The tree toppled to the ground towards the panther.

This tree was enormous enough that when it was falling, it took up half of available space. To the physically small Linley, it didn’t prove a problem at all, but the enormous panther was forced to slash at it with its paws and rip it in half.

Seizing this moment, Linley finally completed the magical incantation he was chanting.

Wind-style spell of the eighth rank: Airwings!

Seeing this, the enormous black panther instantly howled with fury. It actually pounced once more towards Linley at high speeds, as Linley flew higher.

“Bam!” Although the black panther had increased in size, it was still extremely dexterous and agile, capable of leaping dozens of meters at a single bound. Borrowing force against the tree trunk, it continued to leap higher and higher up the trees.

But after five or six leaps, the enormous black panther had reached the top of the tallest tree, while right now, Linley flew high above the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts with his translucent wings.

“Now, time for me to thrash you.” Linley saw that the enormous black panther had already leapt towards him from the top of the tallest tree. But now, with nothing to grab on, the black panther had no choice but to allow its body to fall down.

Just as its body began to fall...

“Whoosh!” Linley suddenly spread his wings and rocketed downwards at an astonishing speed.

Through using the astonishing downwards speed granted to him by the Airwings spell, Linley quickly arrived next to the falling enormous black panther. The enormous black panther glared angrily at Linley, but in mid-air, it had nothing to latch onto.

“Haaaaaaaargh!” Linley suddenly activated all of the Dragonblood battle-qi in his body.

Reaching the absolute maximum limit of Dragonblood battle-qi power in an instant, and with both hands gripped tightly around the adamantine heavy sword, Linley delivered a vicious mid-air chop against the falling black panther, which had nowhere to dodge.

“CLANG!” The black panther’s sharp claws once again clashed against the adamantine heavy sword.

But Linley only confidently swung his adamantine heavy sword against it again at high speed. At this moment, the dancing adamantine heavy sword in Linley's hands had seemed to become one with the wind, slashing down more than ten times against the falling black panther in the space of one second.

With each sword blow, he executed the 'Thunderbolt' technique.

"Bam!" "Bam!"

After blocking the very first strike, the black panther's body had begun to accelerate its downward falling speed. But using his Airwings spell, Linley was still able to match the black panther's rate of descent. One sword, then another, then another..

The black panther felt as though each sword stroke of Linley's was more forceful and heavier than the last, and each sword stroke unleashed the same explosive, flood-like burst of power, causing its internal organs to shake.

After taking over ten blows, the body of the enormous black panther was smashed all the way into the ground by Linley.

"BOOM!"

An enormous crater appeared, and cracks appeared in every direction on the ground. The roots of the massive trees around them began to emerge from the ground, uprooted from the force of this collision.

In the middle of the crater, the enormous black panther spat out a large mouthful of fresh blood, and even a hint of blood could be seen coming out of its fur. These repeated blows by Linley's heavy sword had caused even the black panther's fur to be unable to withstand all of the attack force.

"Black panther." Linley stood in midair, over ten meters above it. His translucent wings fluttered. "I know that you understand the human tongue. I'll give you a chance. As long as you submit to me, I'll spare your life."

Right now, Linley really wanted to tame and acquire this magical beast.

Linley had been in sore need of a good mount this entire time. And, even more importantly, this black panther was an extremely superior creature, especially after it transformed in size. Its enormous, two-story tall body, combined with its astonishing speed and defense made it an absolute war machine.

"Growl!"

The enormous black panther stood up, staring coldly at Linley. Its deadly eyes were filled with boundless wrath. Its head was still raised proudly. How could it possibly submit so easily? But right now, the black panther understood that this human warrior in front of it wasn't the prey it had thought he was. For a warrior to possess such terrifying power and also be able to use a high level wind-style spell such as 'Airwings' was an expert which was extremely rare in the human world.

"Are you willing to submit?" Linley shouted from up high.

As far as magical beasts were concerned, only martial force could make them submit and subdue them. And the higher the rank of a magical beast, the more difficult it was to make them submit.

"Groooowl!" The enormous black panther let out an angry roar.

"If you won't submit, then I'll beat you until you do!" Linley was very confident.

When combining his magic with his warrior abilities, his power could rise to an astonishing level. Right now, due to the pair of translucent Airwings on his back, Linley was in total control of the battlefield.

"Swish!" Linley once more dived downwards.

The movement speed of the pair of translucent wings was higher than that which four limbs provided. In the blink of an eye, Linley appeared in front of the enormous black panther as he once more smashed downwards viciously against it with his adamantine heavy sword.

But the black panther only retreated over ten meters at high speed, then pounced forward again.

Flexing his translucent wings, Linley began to dodge about very agilely in the air while constantly chopping downwards with his adamantine heavy sword. Every sword carried with it a terrifying force, capable of flattening a hill.

"Bam!"

The enormous black panther's body was once more struck by the adamantine heavy sword and knocked flying. Blood had matted its glossy black fur with a red color. Linley stood confidently in midair, ready to strike another blow at the black panther at any moment with his adamantine heavy sword.

"Will you submit?" Linley said in a solemn voice.

The black panther once more rose to its feet, staring coldly at Linley. Suddenly...the black panther's body began to shrink. It once more shrunk down to a height of two meters and a length of four meters...but the strange thing was, this time, the black panther's entire body began to glow with a hazy black and white light.

"What on earth?" Sensing danger, Linley quickly flew a bit higher using his translucent wings, cautiously staring down.

That black and white light disappeared. The black panther's body, previously covered with a large, dense amount of black stripes, now only had a few thick black stripes on its upper body, while the fur on its four limbs had turned as white as snow.

Seeing this, Linley sucked in a cold breath. "Blackcloud Panther? The legendary Blackcloud Panther?"

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 7, A Battle of Speed

The most powerful panther-type magical beast would probably be the Saint-level magical beast, “Electrobolt Panther”, a lightning-type magical beast. It was so incredibly fast that other Saint-level beasts simply couldn’t compare to it.

But the most secretive, most mysterious panther-type magical beast would be the ninth-ranked magical beast, ‘Blackcloud Panther’.

According to records, the last time a Blackcloud Panther appeared was over a thousand years ago. Despite so many years having passed, the amount of information which people had managed to collect regarding Blackcloud Panthers remained very scarce.

Blackcloud Panthers were magical beasts of the ninth rank, and extremely fast. Their bodies were covered with just a few black stripes, but their four limbs were snow white, as though they were travelling within a cloud. This was why people gave them the name, ‘Blackcloud Panthers’.

But with regards to what special abilities the Blackcloud Panthers had, or what element they were, the records had no information.

“Most likely, all of the experts who encountered Blackcloud Panthers lost their lives. As for those Saint-level combatants who knew the truth about Blackcloud Panthers, perhaps they intentionally did not reveal any information.” Linley knew very well that many of the more powerful organizations held secrets which were closely guarded. Even spells of the seventh rank would not be revealed. From this, one could imagine how secretive these organizations were.

....

Within this densely forested area in the core region of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, the Blackcloud Panther was exchanging stares with Linley, who was floating in mid-air with translucent wings on his back.

"Blackcloud Panthers can change their size as well as their appearances. They truly are quite mysterious." Linley didn't dare to relax at all.

The Blackcloud Panther stared coldly at Linley, its icy eyes filled with fury.

"Swish!"

In the blink of an eye, the Blackcloud Panther crossed the fifty meter gap between itself and Linley. Compared to before, when it was in its first form (normal size and covered with wavy black stripes), it was almost 50% faster.

For its speed to increase by that much prevented Linley from being able to dodge, and the Blackcloud Panther landed a vicious blow against Linley's chest. Immediately, the scales on his chest shattered. "Crack!" With a cracking sound, fresh blood leaked out from behind the scales.

"Whoosh." Linley immediately activated his translucent wings, rapidly rising higher into the air.

"What incredible speed." Linley felt shocked in his heart.

The Blackcloud Panther, in its first form, was slightly faster than Bebe. In its second form, the large form, the speed of the Blackcloud Panther decreased by 30%, roughly on par with Linley. In its third form, the one it was in right now, it was 50% faster than the original form.

At this current speed, it could cross a hundred meters in the blink of an eye.

How utterly terrifying!

"Grooowl." The Blackcloud Panther raised its head to look up at Linley, its eyes filled with arrogance.

Linley slowly flapped his translucent wings, but didn't descend yet, merely hovering. Linley knew very well that once he descended, he would find it very difficult to deal with the Blackcloud Panther's speed.

"Boss, my turn!" Having watched for so long, Bebe could no longer hold himself back.

"Shkreeeeeech!"

With a terrifying, high-pitched shriek, Bebe transformed into a ferocious black blur, charging at the Blackcloud Panther. The Blackcloud Panther, which hadn't paid any attention to Bebe at all, was now shocked by Bebe's speed.

"Supersonic!" Linley immediately cast this supportive magic spell.

He cast the supportive Supersonic spell directly on Bebe. In the past, Bebe had never encountered any magical beasts of the ninth rank faster than himself. Thus, Linley had never seen the need to cast Supersonic on Bebe. But now, Linley finally did so.

In truth, this Supersonic spell was generally used by magi to increase the power of warriors in their squad.

"Swish!" Aided by a Supersonic spell of the eighth rank, Bebe's speed instantly increased by 30%.

"Slash!" The Blackcloud Panther clawed at Bebe with its fierce claws.

But with his speed increased 30% by the Supersonic spell, although Bebe was still slightly slower than the Blackcloud Panther, the difference wasn't too huge. More importantly, Bebe was extremely small and nimble.

Bebe constantly changed the direction he was moving in.

"Shkreeech!" Bebe suddenly sped up, pouncing towards the Blackcloud Panther. In mid-pounce, Bebe's body suddenly enlarged, and then Bebe swiped viciously at the Blackcloud Panther with his paws.

Staring coldly at Bebe, the Blackcloud Panther clawed viciously at Bebe with its own paw as well.

"Slash!"

"Slash!"

Both magical beasts landed blows on each other. Bebe's claw managed to leave a clear mark on the body of the Blackcloud Panther, and fresh blood began to seep out. But although Bebe was knocked flying as well, he just flipped up to his feet and stood back up, not harmed at all.

"Hrm?" Linley's eyes turned round in surprise.

"Bebe's attack power is about on par with mine. So how could Bebe so easily wound it?" Linley was shocked.

Linley knew very well how powerful Bebe's defense was. After all, when they had been in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts last time, Bebe was just an early-stage magical beast of the eighth rank, but he could withstand the dying blow of an Armored Razorback Wurm without perishing. Now that Bebe had entered the ninth rank, his terrifyingly strong defense was even more powerful than Linley's. Linley didn't find it surprising at all that Bebe was uninjured. But the strange thing was, the defense of the Blackcloud Panther had just dropped.

"Ah! I understand."

Linley suddenly understood the special characteristics of the three forms of the Blackcloud Panther. The first form was a balanced one in terms of defense, speed, and offense. The second, giant form, prioritized offense at the expense of speed. As for this form, the third one, although it raised speed to an astonishing level, its defense dropped in turn.

Right now, the Blackcloud Panther and Bebe were staring at each other. The Blackcloud Panther could feel that it was bleeding, and it was beginning to worry...because this freak of a magical beast in front of it hadn't been hurt at all.

"Blackcloud Panther." Linley spoke.

The Blackcloud Panther looked up at Linley.

Linley didn't speak to the Blackcloud Panther as though it were an inferior life form. Rather, Linley spoke to it as he would a creature of equal intelligence. "Blackcloud Panther, in your current form, you should possess great speed but low defense. In this form, you aren't even able to overcome Bebe."

"Growl." The Blackcloud Panther snarled unhappily.

The Blackcloud Panther then stared at Bebe, and from its jaw came a series of strange growls. Bebe was startled for a moment, and then let out an enraged growl of his own.

"Boss. This Blackcloud Panther can speak the tongue of us rodent-type magical beasts." Bebe said mentally to Linley.

Linley knew very well that Bebe was born understanding the rodent language. But the languages of other magical beasts were different; each different type of magical beast had their own language.

Some extremely long-lived magical beasts, however, were skilled at communicating using the languages of other types of magical beasts.

This Blackcloud Panther was a peak-stage magical beast of the ninth rank. Not only did it know many languages of other types of magical beasts, it also understood the human tongue. Only, it was unable to reproduce the human sounds due to physical reasons. Only upon reaching the Saint-level, when it could begin to alter its body, could it speak the human tongue.

"What did it say?" Linley asked.

Bebe and the Blackcloud Panther engaged in a discussion through growls and angry snarls. Suddenly, Bebe and the Blackcloud Panther seemed to get into an argument, as the fur on both magical beasts stood up straight.

"Growl!!"

"Shkreeech!"

The two magical beasts suddenly began to engage in a wild battle, as their shadows flashed against each other again and again. Fresh blood began to fly everywhere...

Their angry growls unabated, the two magical beasts exchanged blows at high speed, and the trees and boulders nearby suffered the brunt of their fury.

The trees toppled. The boulders shattered.

Every place these two magical beasts crossed through turned into a debris-strewn area.

Suddenly, the two beasts separated again. Bebe hunched down, growling as he stared at the Blackcloud Panther. The Blackcloud Panther stared at Bebe in the same manner, as though facing a fierce opponent.

But the Blackcloud Panther's body was covered in blood.

With its defense lowered, it was unable to resist Bebe's claw attacks. And in terms of speed, boosted by the Supersonic spell, Bebe was only slightly slower than it was.

Bebe growled angrily towards the Blackcloud Panther.

The Blackcloud Panther roared back towards Bebe.

"Boss, this Blackcloud Panther isn't willing to submit. It says that you simply don't have the ability to defeat it on your own." Bebe said mentally to Linley. "Boss, let me kill it."

Right now, the Blackcloud Panther was extremely frustrated.

If it used its first two forms, its speed was inferior to its opponent and it would be trampled. But after increasing its speed by entering its 'wind-style form', its defense was lowered.

The Blackcloud Panther knew that the human opponent was capable of flight.

The speed one could reach flying was definitely greater than the speed one could reach through running on all fours. In terms of short term bursts, it could exceed Linley in speed. But if it were to flee, Bebe and Linley would definitely be able to easily catch up to it.

"Blackcloud Panther, you think I can't beat you?" Linley said loudly.

The Blackcloud Panther immediately raised its head arrogantly as it looked at Linley. In close quarters combat, the speed boost provided by the translucent wings couldn't be put on full display. It didn't fear Linley at all.

"Fine." Linley nodded.

And then, Linley began to mutter the words to another spell as well, causing the Blackcloud Panther to be suspicious. But as a wind-type magical beast as well, the Blackcloud Panther wasn't afraid of Linley having access to any particularly powerful wind-type spells. In addition, it knew that if it were to now flee, Linley would be able to catch up to it.

"Thruuumm."

Centered around the body of the Blackcloud Panther, a circular area a hundred meters in circumference suddenly began to glow with a layer of earth elemental essence. These earth elemental essences were throbbing with a certain frequency.

The Blackcloud Panther suddenly felt a terrifyingly powerful gravitational force tug at it, causing it to hunch over. Even the blood inside its body as well as its heart were affected, causing it to feel rather dizzy.

Earth-style magic – Supergravity Field!

The Supergravity Field created by a magus of the eighth rank was able to increase the local gravity by a factor of eight. This increased gravitational field's effect wasn't as simple as say adding 1000 pounds of weight to a man who already weighed 200 pounds. The eight-fold gravity also impacted the heart, the spleen, and the other internal organs.

An ordinary person might be able to carry 100-200 pounds of weight.

But under a double-strength gravitational field, his heart might not be able to stand the pressure and might break down.

After all, although the external muscles were easily trained, it was very hard to train internal organs such as the heart. At the very least, the rate of training the internal organs was much slower than the external muscles.

Suddenly ambushed by a field of eight-fold gravity, the Blackcloud Panther couldn't help but feel dizzy.

Not giving it a chance to recover, Linley, his entire body covered with earth elemental essence, charged in, and began to wildly unleash upon the Blackcloud Panther...vicious punches and kicks!

Yes, he didn't use the adamantine heavy sword!

Only his fists and his feet!

"Growl!" The body of a magical beast of the ninth rank was extremely sturdy, and very soon, it became used to the greater gravity. But under the influence of an eight-fold gravity, it didn't even have half the speed it previously had.

"Swish!" "Swish!"

"Bam!"

A kick landed hard against the Blackcloud Panther's waist, and then Linley rushed to the opposite side, landing a vicious punch on the Blackcloud Panther's body and sending it flying back in the other direction.

In ten short seconds, the Blackcloud Panther had been thoroughly ravaged by Linley's punches and kicks. Its current speed was totally insufficient for escaping the confines of the Supergravity Field. And what's more, Bebe was watching intently from the side as well.

"Do you submit?"

"Do you submit?"

.....

While shouting loudly, Linley wildly continued to whale away at it with his fists and feet. Linley was beating this peak-stage magical beast of the ninth rank, the Blackcloud Panther, into a state where it couldn't resist at all. One mouthful after another of blood was leaking from its mouth.

"Groooooowl!" The Blackcloud Panther suddenly let out a howl of grief and anger.

"Boss. He submits."

"Bam!" Linley's fists were moving too fast, and he landed one final punch on the Blackcloud Panther's skull, smashing it to the ground.

Laughing, Linley looked at the Blackcloud Panther, which was on all fours, pressed against the ground. Under the influence of the eight-fold gravity, the blood flowing through the veins of the Blackcloud Panther had grown sluggish as well. And now, after having been beaten wildly by Linley in such a manner, the Blackcloud Panther had become quite dizzy.

"Do you submit?" Linley laughed as he looked at the Blackcloud Panther.

Although Linley was laughing, under the total Dragonform transformation, Linley's eyes were still that calm, emotionless dark gold color. And how could one tell that Linley was smiling beneath all of those scales on his face?

The Blackcloud Panther raised his head to look at Linley, paying particular attention to the translucent wings on Linley's back. His heart trembled. He was afraid of being brutalized by Linley yet again. Immediately, it nodded. And in fact, he really had mentally submitted to Linley's display of prowess. For a combatant to be so powerful as a warrior and as a magus was more than enough to force it to submit.

Smiling, Linley immediately began to set up a soul-binding magical array!

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 8, Leaving the Mountains

Virtually all magi knew how to set up a soul-binding magic array. But in terms of actually setting one up, there were certain requirements. Generally speaking, only upon reaching the seventh rank as a magus did one have sufficient spiritual strength to set it up.

A nearly translucent pentagram was floating in mid-air.

And then, the pentagram magic formation flew towards the head of the Blackcloud Panther, who didn't resist at all, allowing the magical formation to enter his mind. Suddenly, both Linley and the Blackcloud Panther could feel that their spirits were now interconnected.

This was not the same as the 'bond of equals' which Linley and Bebe shared.

In the 'bond of equals' between Linley and Bebe, both of their souls had become intermingled. With this soul-binding magic array, however, was formed solely from Linley's spiritual energy. When the Blackcloud Panther accepted the soul-binding compact, naturally Linley was the master.

"Master." The Blackcloud Panther was extremely respectful.

Linley looked at the Blackcloud Panther. "What is your name?" Linley knew that some high-class magical beasts had names of their own. For example, that Armored Razorback Wyrms which Linley had encountered in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts' Foggy Valley had been named Sartius.

The Blackcloud Panther's voice sounded in Linley's mind. "Master, my name is Haeru [Hei'lu]."

"Haeru?" Linley memorized the name.

"Haeru, tell me about your transformation abilities." Towards this topic, Linley felt quite a bit of interest.

The Blackcloud Panther nodded. "Master, it is because I am a dual-element magical beast of both darkness and wind elements. In my brain, I have two magicite cores; one is darkness element, the other is wind element. Normally, I am in my first form, where my defense, offense, and speed are all equal."

"When I rely primarily on the energy from my darkness magicite core, my body will increase in size and my attack power will go up, at the expense of speed. When I rely primarily on the energy from my wind magicite core, I will be in this form, the wind-style form, with great speed but weaker defense."

The Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, said honestly.

Linley now understood.

So Blackcloud Panthers were dual-element magical beasts of wind and darkness, and this current form was the wind-style form. The giant form was the darkness-style form, and only the original form was the 'normal' form.

"I had originally thought that Haeru's current form was his normal form." Linley snickered to himself.

Linley suspected that the person who had written the records which Linley had read regarding Blackcloud Panthers had only seen this wind-style form, and thus mistook this as the only form of the Blackcloud Panthers.

"Growl!" Bebe ran over, growling in a low voice towards the Blackcloud Panther.

The Blackcloud Panther began to chat with him as well.

"Looks like our journey will be more interesting in the future." A hint of a smile was on Linley's face.

.....

Alongside his two magical beast companions, Bebe and Haeru, Linley continued his daily training regime. Linley immersed himself in the world of sword-training. Every so often, Linley would have some new insights regarding how to use his heavy sword.

Spring left, autumn came.

In the blink of an eye, another year had passed.

That fall in the second year, the temperature had dropped to a murderous low. Linley was seated cross-legged beneath an ancient oak, training. The Dragonblood battle-qi had suddenly begun to boil, causing his blood vessels and his heart to once again begin to change and transform.

In addition, within Linley's dantian, the Dragonblood battle-qi had finally begun to change as well. Excited, Linley let out a laugh. He had finally broken past the late-stage of the seventh rank and reached the eighth rank. He had become a warrior of the eighth rank!

As a warrior of the eighth rank, upon totally Dragonforming, Linley's power was now at the peak-stage of the ninth rank.

There was a significant difference between a peak-stage ninth rank warrior and an early-stage ninth rank warrior.

"When I was in Hess City, it was hard for me to even break past the armor of an ordinary magical beast of the ninth rank. But now, even without using the adamantine heavy sword, I can kill most magical beasts of the ninth rank." Linley was extremely confident.

A peak-stage Dragonblood Warrior of the ninth rank could definitely vanquish a peak-stage magical beast of the ninth rank.

Aside from Saint-levels, perhaps there was nobody in the world who could threaten him anymore.

“Only, the higher level of using this adamantine heavy sword, this so-called ‘impose’ level...what is it?” Linley began to frown. Right now, Linley had completely mastered the technique of ‘wielding something heavy as though it were light’.

He walked barefooted on the ground.

Linley continued on his path of training, constantly harmonizing himself with the pulsing thrum of the earth and the indistinct ebbs and flows of the wind. In turn, Linley’s spirit became purified by nature, becoming more agile and graceful.

....

Winter arrived.

In the morning, a great blizzard had descended, covering the entire world with blankets of falling snow. Standing in the middle of the snowstorm, Linley stared up at the snowflakes falling from the sky. His heart was very peaceful.

Suddenly, Linley sat down cross-legged, placing the adamantine heavy sword across his lap. His upper body was still bare, and he still wore that ragged pair of hempcloth pants.

The snow settled on top of Linley’s body, but Linley didn’t notice it at all.

Time passed. The snow continued to fall from morning until nightfall, covering the entire area with a layer of snow as thick as one’s foot.

Bebe and Haeru had hidden themselves underneath a large pine tree, where they watched Linley.

"Impose."

Linley's eyes opened. Within them, there was a hint of a smile. Raising his head to stare in front of him, he saw that the snow had ceased to fall. Although it was almost dark, the entire world had been painted a light white color by the snow.

"Groooooowl!" From far away, the roar of a magical beast could be heard.

A Glacial Snow Lion was striding on the snow. Apparently having discovered Linley, it began to draw close to Linley, one step at a time. Watching the Glacial Snow Lion draw near, Linley didn't seem to react at all.

"Swoosh!" With a mighty leap, the Glacial Snow Lion pounced towards Linley.

Linley watched as the Glacial Snow Lion pounced towards him. Very casually, he grabbed the adamantite heavy sword that had been lying in his lap and chopped directly towards the Glacial Snow Lion.

"Rumble!" The moment Linley swung the adamantite heavy sword, space itself seemed to suddenly be compressed in the area around the sword, in the direction of the Glacial Snow Lion.

Terrified, the Glacial Snow Lion wished to flee, but the entire area around it was compressed by that pressuring force. It had nowhere to run.

Facing this heavy sword, it had no choice but to take it head on.

"Bam!"

The heavy sword slammed against the Glacial Snow Lion's body. The Glacial Snow Lion's entire body trembled momentarily, then suddenly disintegrated into a pile of flesh and blood.

"So 'impose' refers to 'imposing' one's will on the heavens and the earth, to the point where even space itself can become used to constrict someone. Haha..." Linley laughed.

After having experienced that huge blizzard, Linley finally entered the third level of wielding heavy weapons; the 'impose' level. Only, Linley understood that he had just barely begun to grasp this level.

"To be able to so quickly grasp the 'impose' level, I really must give thanks to my training as a stonesculptor as well as my insights as a magus." Linley felt very happy.

Because he was a magus, Linley's soul could more clearly sense the throbbing pulse of the earth as well as the flows of the wind. His soul was capable now of becoming one with nature. In addition, this entire time, Linley had been extremely focused on his training and had accumulated a great deal of experience. This allowed Linley to finally surpass that initial barrier and enter the 'impose' level of wielding the heavy sword.

In terms of power, the 'impose' level was far more terrifying than the level of 'wielding something heavy as though it were light'. It was also far more profound and mysterious.

....

Spring. Year 10003 of the Yulan calendar. The northernmost edge of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts was only a few kilometers away from the North Sea. In fact, from the northernmost point in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, one could see the vast, endless expanse of water known as the North Sea.

Between the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts and the North Sea, there was a corridor which linked the Holy Union and the O'Brien Empire together. Almost every day, large numbers of people passed through this wide road.

Virtually everyone, be it the merchants of the O'Brien Empire, the merchants of the Holy Union, or others, passed through this corridor.

However, the citizens of the O'Brien Empire, when facing the citizens of the Holy Union, felt a sense of natural superiority. This was because the O'Brien Empire was the most powerful Empire in the entire Yulan continent. What's more, it possessed the 'War God'. In the war-loving O'Brien Empire, virtually every citizen was proud to belong to the O'Brien Empire.

Right now, on the wide corridor, there was a merchant caravan with hundreds of people that were camping and resting. Many people were currently eating.

"Old Hett [Hei'te]."

A young man riding on a carriage chuckled at a chubby man next to him. "You've made a fortune on this latest deal."

"Haha." That middle-aged fatty laughed contentedly. "Petrie [Pi'te'li], you are a smart young fellow. If you continue to work for me, in three years time, you'll be able to buy a manor in your hometown, then buy a few beautiful serving maids and hire a few manservants. You'll be able to live a happy life as an estate owner."

"Three years? Shit, in three more years I probably will have lost my life." The youngster swore. "A new person like myself is always assigned the most dangerous tasks. Alas...in one year, I'll go back home, buy a beautiful girl, and enjoy life. Estate owner? That'll depend on whether or not I have that good fortune."

The middle-aged fatty began to laugh. "You are a newcomer. Of course it falls on you to take on the most dangerous tasks. However, that means you get a large share as well. Oh, right. Petrie, this time in our caravan, there's a very beautiful girl. As we are headed the same way, we are escorting her."

"Are you talking about Miss Jenne [Zhan'en]?" The young fellow's eyes instantly lit up. "If I had a woman like that, I'd be willing to work for ten more years. That figure. That aura. Oh, man..."

"But she clearly is a noble, and that old servant of hers isn't weak either." The middle aged fatty chortled.

"Can't I at least fantasize?" The youngster said unhappily.

The middle aged fatty began to laugh, but then he suddenly looked towards the south. "Hrm? Petrie, look. Someone is coming out from within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts." Petrie immediately looked south towards the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

Dressed in an ordinary blue warrior's uniform, a man carrying a heavy sword on his back was walking out from within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. His long brown hair just barely reached his shoulders. By the looks of it, he was nearly two meters tall.

By his side was a black panther that was nearly as tall as he was, and on the back of that black panther was a black Shadowmouse.

"What is that black panther?" Petrie said in astonishment.

Staring with wide eyes, the middle-aged man said, "Don't cause a ruckus! I've heard that all panther-type and lion-type magical beasts are very powerful. Generally speaking, they are at least magical beasts of the sixth rank, or even higher."

Immediately, Petrie no longer dared to make a sound.

Right at this moment, the brown-haired man began jogging towards their caravan with long strides. The caravan guards immediately became alert. The person coming towards them was clearly a powerful warrior.

.....

Right now, Linley was in an excellent mood. After three full years of hard training, he had finally left the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

"The Northern Sea is indeed vast." This was the first time Linley had seen the North Sea, and the sight of that enormous, boundless sky-blue sea stunned Linley, filling him with awe.

Seeing the resting caravan in front of him, Linley jogged in that direction.

"Hey, friend, what do you want?" A heavily bearded guard shouted out loudly. Smiling, Linley replied, "I'm headed for the O'Brien Empire. I hope you can take me along with you."

The heavily bearded guard looked at Linley, then turned towards a middle-aged, golden-haired man next to him. After exchanging a few words, he said to Linley in a loud voice, "That's easy. Twenty gold coins, and we'll take you with us."

"Fine." Linley agreed very readily. He immediately pulled out a small sack of gold, counted out twenty gold coins, and handed it over.

This outfit Linley was currently wearing had been stored in the interspatial ring, ready for just an occasion such as this. In his interspatial ring, Linley naturally had prepared quite a few things.

"Hey, friend, since you already have a mount, do you plan to ride in a carriage, or on this panther?" The heavily bearded man asked warmly.

"In a carriage, I suppose." Linley said.

"Fine. You can go get inside that cart in the back. That one right there, the flat cart with two people in it." The heavily bearded man pointed as he spoke. Actual covered carriages were rather expensive, and in this caravan, the majority of the soldiers all rode in flat carts.

"Sure." Linley agreed quite casually.

As he walked over to and reached that flat cart, the two men already in the cart, previously engaged in conversation, were immediately terrified by Haeru, who was walking alongside Linley. Panther-type magical beasts were generally high class magical beasts, after all.

"Ah, friend, please, sit." The two men were incredibly friendly.

Linley entered the cart. The cart had mattresses made of hay inside, which were covered by a thick cotton cloth. As Linley sat on top of a hay mattress, Bebe jumped right onto Linley's shoulders as well.

"Come, friend, have some wine." The slightly older one of the two men warmly offered.

"Thanks." Linley accepted the wineskin and took a large gulp.

"Hey, everybody, get ready. We're about to start moving again!" A loud voice rang out, and all the people who had got off their carriages for a rest immediately got back into their carriages.

The caravan began to move forward again, embarking once more on its journey towards the O'Brien Empire...

Travelling on this seemingly endless, winding road, this caravan with hundreds of people didn't move at too rapid a pace. All of the guards of the caravan maintained a careful eye in the direction of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts at all times.

There were two major sources of danger on this road. The first was the magical beasts in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. The second was bandits. Because this road which was hundreds of miles long was controlled by neither the Holy Union nor the O'Brien Empire, there naturally were many bandits here.

"Squeak. Squeak." The carriage wheels squeaked rhythmically, and Linley lay back, enjoying the strong liquor in the wineskin.

"It's been three years since I've touched alcohol. This rough liquor feels even more enjoyable to me than those exquisite wines the Jade Water Paradise used to have." Though he laughed, Linley was sighing in his heart as well. Meanwhile, by his side, Bebe was very enjoyably munching on pieces of roasted meat.

The older of the two soldiers whom Linley was sharing this cart with said, "Friend, my name is Lowndes [Lang'si]. This is my younger friend. His name is Luther [Lu'de]."

Linley was slightly startled. He understood that these two wished to know his name, but Linley knew that his name was already on the Red List of the Radiant Church as someone who must be killed on sight.

"You can call me 'Ley'." Linley said with a laugh.

"Ley, what level of magical beast is this panther of yours?" That young fellow named Luther immediately asked enthusiastically. "This magical beast's fur is so smooth. Riding on such a magical beast really would be so majestic! I think it must be at least a magical beast of the seventh rank."

"All you need to know is that he is a high-class magical beast." Linley said casually.

The Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, who had been loping alongside the cart, suddenly fixed Luther with its cold eyes. Seeing Haeru's gaze, Luther immediately was so frightened that he could only smile weakly in response.

Everyone in the Yulan continent knew that magical beasts possessed intelligence which was no less than that of men. They definitely couldn't be treated like domesticated household pets. If you tried to, the results would be disastrous.

"The two of you belong to the Holy Union? Or to the O'Brien Empire?" Linley asked.

Linley knew very little regarding the O'Brien Empire.

"We are both from the O'Brien Empire." Lowndes said with a chortle. "Ley, how about you?"

“This will be my first trip to the O’Brien Empire. I’ve long heard that the O’Brien Empire has a tremendous martial spirit, but have never experienced it for myself.” Linley said calmly.

Both Luther and Lowndes lived by the edges of their blades. They possessed quite good insight, and could easily tell that Linley was an extremely powerful person. After all, in order to be able to subdue a powerful magical beast, one had to be able to totally dominate it with power first. Only then would it submit.

“Ley, we citizens of the O’Brien Empire greatly revere powerful combatants. No matter where you go, you will be received with great courtesy, given your power.” Lowndes said with a chuckle. “Ley, if this is your first time visiting the O’Brien Empire, do you know much about it?”

“Aside from knowing that the O’Brien Empire has seven administrative provinces and knowing about the War God, I don’t know much.” Linley laughed.

As the most militarily powerful of the Four Great Empires, the O’Brien Empire’s territory was also the largest amongst the six major powers. Each of those seven provinces was significantly larger than a kingdom.

“Ley, let me explain. Our Empire has a large number of experts. Even combatants of the ninth rank don’t dare to be arrogant in the Imperial Capital. After all, the War God’s College is settled down atop one of the mountains just outside the Imperial Capital.” Lowndes explained enthusiastically.

“The War God’s College?” Linley had no idea what this was.

Next to him, Luther hurriedly said, “Ley, you absolutely must be aware of this. The highest, most holiest training site in the entire O’Brien Empire is the War God’s College. Every hundred years or so, or sometimes every few hundred years, the War God will accept a single disciple whom he will personally teach. The number of direct disciples he has is extremely few, but eight or nine out of every ten people whom the War God accepts as a disciple will become a Saint-level combatant.”

Hearing this, Linley was truly stunned.

Previously, he was under the impression that the O’Brien Academy was the most elite training academy in existence, but now, clearly, this War God’s College was far superior to it.

“But it really is too difficult for one to be accepted as a disciple by the War God. Even the honorary disciples whom he doesn’t personally teach will only see one added to their number every two years or so.” Lowndes sighed.

Just one disciple every year or two, and an honorary one at that.

This acceptance rate was even lower by far than that of the Ernst Institute. But one could understand if one thought about it. After all, this had to do with taking the War God as one’s teacher and master. The War God...an entity who had surpassed the Saint-level over five thousand years ago.

"Therefore, Ley, in the future, if you meet anyone from the War God's College, you have to be careful. Even if they decide to kill someone, usually no one will interfere." Lowndes advised.

Linley understood.

The War God, O'Brien, was the founding Emperor of the O'Brien Empire. Although he had abdicated long ago, his influence in the O'Brien Empire was much higher than the reigning Emperor. The War God O'Brien absolutely was the backbone and main pillar of the entire O'Brien Empire.

"Right. Have you heard of any geniuses appearing recently in the O'Brien Empire?" Linley suddenly asked. What Linley was thinking was, "The density of Dragonblood in the veins of Wharton was even higher than mine, hence he could naturally become a Dragonblood Warrior. His potential should be higher than mine as well. By now, Wharton should be seventeen. He should be very famous in the O'Brien Empire."

Given the speed at which a Dragonblood Warrior trained at...

Generally speaking, in a few decades, they could reach the Saint-level. If one trained hard, one would be able to reach the ninth rank within twenty years, and the eighth rank within ten.

Wharton's innate talent definitely should be enough to stun the Empire.

"Prodigy? Are you talking about Olivier, the Prodigy Sword Saint?" Lowndes asked.

"The Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier?" Linley had never heard this name before. "Why is this Olivier known as the Prodigy Sword Saint?"

Next to him, Luther hurriedly said, "Ley, if in the Empire, someone hears you say that you don't know who the Prodigy Sword Saint is, they will laugh at you. Do you know how old Lord Olivier was when he reached the Saint-level?"

He was a Saint-level combatant?

"How old?" Linley actually was extremely calm. He was a member of the Dragonblood Warrior clan, who generally could reach the Saint-level in a few decades. Generally speaking, those so-called Prodigies would still need nearly a century.

"Forty seven!" Luther said worshipfully. "Lord Olivier was a combatant of the ninth rank by age thirty, and by age forty seven, entered the Saint-level. And three years ago, that year when the Holy Union and the Dark Alliance suffered the 'Apocalypse Day', Olivier entered the Saint-level."

Linley nodded slightly.

It seemed as though that cataclysmic day had been dubbed the 'Apocalypse Day'.

"No wonder I haven't heard of him." Linley understood now. When this person's fame became widespread, Linley had just entered the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts and embarked on his three years of toilsome training.

That Luther clearly worshipped this Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier. He hurriedly said, "Ley, let me tell you something. When Lord Olivier reached the ninth rank, the War God actively reached out to him and invited him to become his student. But Lord Olivier refused. He wanted to walk on his own training path."

Linley couldn't help but begin to admire this Olivier. A War God who had surpassed the Saint-level long ago wanted to accept him as a disciple, but he actually refused. Indeed, only a man with supreme confidence could do such a thing.

"This is the first person to refuse the War God in all of history." Luther said worshipfully. "Ley, at first, many people thought that Olivier was insane and insulted him. But...Lord Olivier wasn't just bragging. Three years ago, when Olivier entered the Saint-level, he immediately challenged the Stellar Sword Saint, Dillon."

"Dillon?" Linley frowned.

Linley could still clearly remember that when those two Saint-level combatants did battle in the skies above Wushan township, one of them had been the Stellar Sword Saint, Dillon. The other was a Saint-level Grand Magus, Rudi. These two names had been forever engraved in Linley's mind.

"Right. Lord Dillon, the Stellar Sword Saint, has been famous for a long time, and he has been a Saint-level combatant for nearly a century. Olivier had just entered the Saint-level, and he immediately went to challenge Dillon. Many people thought that Olivier was too brash and arrogant. But the day of their duel..."

Luther's eyes were filled with awe and worship. "Within three sword strokes, the Stellar Sword Saint, Dillon, had been defeated. To be able to defeat the Stellar Sword Saint, Dillon, as soon as he entered the Saint-level was something which stunned everyone. Only now, due to his power, was he publically acknowledged as a genius."

Linley, too, was filled with admiration.

In the past, he had often discussed powerful combatants with Grandpa Doehring. Linley knew very well...that there was a large difference between early-stage Saints, middle-stage Saints, late-stage Saints, and peak-stage Saints.

Dillon had reached the Saint-level nearly a hundred years ago, but he was defeated in just three sword strokes by the Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier. Linley had to admit that Olivier was incredibly powerful. What's more, he had only been forty seven years old.

For someone to reach the Saint-level at forty seven years of age, and be so powerful.

Even the Supreme Warriors wouldn't be much better than this.

.....

Chatting with these hired soldiers who travelled everywhere, Linley learned a great deal regarding the O'Brien Empire, giving him a good sense of the area.

By nightfall, the caravan once more came to a halt.

Campfires were lit everywhere, and all sorts of wild roasted dishes were brought out. Linley followed Luther and Lowndes to a campfire, where they began to roast chunks of leg meat.

Linley suddenly turned to look in the direction of Haeru. Right at that moment, a young nobleman dressed in a suit was standing next to the Blackcloud Panther, looking excitedly at it.

"What a beautiful panther." The young nobleman's eyes were shining like gems as he stared at the Blackcloud Panther. He even stretched his hand out, intending to touch him.

The Blackcloud Panther was a peak-stage magical beast of the ninth rank. He was extremely arrogant. How could he allow an ordinary person to touch it?

The Blackcloud Panther suddenly swung its head , fixing its cold eyes upon that young nobleman. Unhappily, he began to let out a menacing growl. "Groooooowl."

"Ah!!!" Terrified, the young nobleman quickly retreated, falling on his back as he did. His face was white with fear.

"Haha." Luther, Lowndes, and Linley all began to laugh.

At this time, the brocade door to a nearby carriage was pushed open, and a young woman dressed in a light violet dress immediately jumped out of the carriage, frightened. "Keane [Ji'en], Keane, what happened?"

Seeing this woman, Linley's eyes suddenly lit up.

This full-body dress was rather tight, revealing her lithe, slim little waist, as well as making her chest swell all the more. As she ran, her long hair fluttered about.

That slender figure was one of the top three female figures Linley had ever seen. Judging by her appearance, she should be seventeen or eighteen years old.

"Big sis, big sis!" That young noble clutched this lady in terror.

Haeru, the Blackcloud Panther, let out another dissatisfied growl in the direction of the young nobleman. This terrified the young noblewoman so much that her face instantly turned white as well.

"Don't be afraid. Haeru won't hurt you." Linley called out, laughing.

"Haha, Miss Jenne, you need to take good care of your little brother. This powerful magical beast isn't one of your household pets. If he pisses it off, it might eat him. Hahaha!" Lowndes laughed loudly.

These words made the faces of both Jenne and the young nobleman turn white.

Jenne pulled the young nobleman to his feet, and then quickly curtsied in apology. "Sorry, sorry."

"No need to apologize to us. This black panther is Ley's. You can apologize to him." Luther joined the fun as well.

Jenne glanced at Linley. Clearly, she wasn't good at interacting with people. Her face immediately turned red upon looking at him. "Lord Ley, so sorry."

"It's fine. In the future, just make sure your little brother doesn't irritate Haeru anymore." Linley laughed. It had been a long time since he had met a girl who was so easily embarrassed.

Jenne immediately pulled the young nobleman by the hand in the direction of that nearby carriage.

"Amusing, amusing." Linley laughed, raising the wineskin to his lips for another swig.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 10, A Single Sword

"Ley, what do you think of that Miss Jenne? She's quite something, isn't she?" Lowndes said with a quiet chortle.

"She is quite something." Linley nodded in praise.

Next to them, Luther walked over. "She isn't just 'something'. In all these years I've been roaming about, I've seen countless beautiful women. But Miss Jenne...heh heh...she's absolutely tops. Ley, are you interested in Miss Jenne?"

Linley blinked in shock.

Lowndes also glanced at Linley with a wink that all men understood. "Ley, it's quite normal for powerful people to have beauties with them. If you don't seize the opportunity, after you leave the caravan, you won't have another chance."

"You two..." Linley didn't know whether to laugh or cry.

Alice had long ago caused Linley to seal off his heart with respect to romantic love. And right now, Linley wasn't yet at the stage where he was ravenous and would just go chasing after every beautiful girl he saw.

"Miss Jenne and her little brother just came out." Luther suddenly said in a soft voice.

Linley turned to look. Indeed, Miss Jenne and her younger brother Keane were headed towards a campfire, which was currently manned by her elderly servant.

That young noble, Keane, couldn't help but turn to look at the Blackcloud Panther again.

The Blackcloud Panther immediately revealed its gleaming, cold fangs. Keane was so terrified that he tightly clutched his sister's hands. Miss Jenne, as though sensing something, turned to look in Linley's direction as well.

Nodding somewhat apologetically at Linley, Miss Jenne led her little brother to sit next to the campfire.

"Big sis, that magical beast is so handsome!" Keane's eyes were as bright as gems and filled with longing. "It'll be great if one day, I too have a powerful magical beast."

The old servant chuckled. "Young master Keane, taming a magical beast is no easy feat. To tame a powerful magical beast, you must totally subdue it, and to subdue it, you must defeat it head on. From what I know, the weakest type of panther-type magical beasts are all of the seventh rank. That Lord Ley is a truly powerful combatant."

"The weakest is a magical beast of the seventh rank?" Keane sucked in a cold breath. "Grandpa Lambert, is it as powerful as you, Grandpa Lambert [Lan'bo'te]?"

In Keane's mind, the person he worshipped the most in the world was his Grandpa Lambert.

When him and his sister were in the Holy Union, they had no one to rely on at all. The entire time, it was Grandpa Lambert who had protected them. If it wasn't for Grandpa Lambert, those nobles in the town they lived in would've sent people long ago to seize his sister. He had personally seen Grandpa Lambert shatter a noble's guard's shield with one punch, then easily defeat ten guards.

"Me? I just have a bit of ability. He could kill me in one blow with ease." Lambert chuckled, rubbing Keane's head. "Young master Keane, when we arrive in the O'Brien Empire, you must be careful. There are many experts in this world. I'm only able to protect you in places like those small towns. But when we reach the big cities..."

"It's fine! This time, we're going to assume the position of city governor, right?" Keane arrogantly raised his little head up high. "When I'm the city governor, who will I fear?"

Looking at Keane, Jenne couldn't help but also affectionately pat Keane on his little head. "Keane, in the future, you will be a majestic city governor."

"Of course." Keane was very confident.

.....

Slowly, most people in the caravan began to drift off to sleep. Only a few mercenaries remained awake in a defensive perimeter around the caravan. Linley was seated cross-legged on the ground, the adamantine heavy sword placed on his lap as always.

Linley didn't know how the ancestors of his clan had trained in the third level of using the heavy sword, the 'impose' level. But Linley's training method was to allow his soul to become one with the great earth and one with the boundless wind.

The earth possessed a wondrous throbbing pulse of its own.

That unique pulse had its own unique rhythm, which Linley submerged himself into. As for the boundless wind which filled all the skies, it had a deep, intimate connection with space, which was also an important part of being able to understand the essence of the 'impose' level.

Submerged within nature...understanding nature...

In this state, Linley didn't notice the passage of time at all. By the second half of the night, when the vast majority of the caravan was asleep, only a few hired mercenaries maintained their watchful vigilance.

"Rasp, rasp."

Deep night. The cold wind was blowing, and it rustled against the tips of Linley's hair. Linley's closed eyes suddenly opened, and then he sheathed the adamantine heavy sword onto his back.

"Get up." Linley patted Lowndes and Luther twice each.

Lowndes and Luther were both mercenaries who lived by the edges of their weapons. They slept very lightly. Immediately, they woke up. Lowndes and Luther quickly saw that it was still midnight.

"Ley, it's late at night. Why aren't you sleeping?" Lowndes was a bit unhappy, but he didn't dare to complain.

"Bandits are coming." Linley said casually.

"Oh."

Luther's eyes were drifting closed again, but then suddenly they snapped open. Staring at Linley in shock, he said, "Ley, what'd you say? Bandits are coming?"

"A group of roughly a hundred or so bandits are approaching us from approximately three hundred meters in front. They're slowly making their way here." Linley continued.

Just then, Linley had been communing with the throbbing pulse of the earth and the flows of the wind.

Linley could clearly feel those hundred or so feet coming from hundreds of meters away. Naturally, under normal conditions, Linley wouldn't have been able to detect them so early. But after having become one with nature, he naturally was far more sensitive.

Luther was frightened.

"Don't stand there like an idiot. Wake up all of our brothers." Lowndes was far calmer.

"Oh. Got it." Luther immediately left to wake up one mercenary after another, while Lowndes went to warn all of the mercenaries who were on guard.

Being woken up from their sweet dreams in the middle of the night, the mercenaries were naturally all unhappy.

"Bandits coming." But that phrase was enough to shock them into scrambling up.

"Where are they?" Staring in all directions into the pitch black night, the awakened mercenaries couldn't even see the shadow of a bandit. All of them began to grow unhappy.

The leader of the mercenaries, a heavily bearded man, grabbed Lowndes by his shirt. "You said there are bandits. Where?"

"Not me. It was Ley who said there are bandits." Lowndes hurriedly explained.

"Oh?" The heavily bearded man was shocked. With regards to this expert whom they picked up mid-way through their journey, just by looking at that black panther, the heavily bearded man knew that this was no one he could afford to offend. For an expert to make this claim, he clearly wouldn't just be playing a prank.

And just at this moment, the heavily bearded man could also begin to hear the extremely soft sounds of stealthy footsteps coming from afar.

Given the heavily bearded man's power, he could make out the sounds quite clearly now.

"Bandits. Prepare, prepare!" The heavily bearded man's terrifying roar immediately woke everyone up. Even many slumbering merchants as well as their carriage drivers were woken up.

These hundred or so mercenaries lined up in an orderly fashion.

"Haha, Big Beard Malone. I didn't expect you to be so alert. You've made some progress over these years. Looks like our ambush failed. We'll have to make a frontal attack then." A loud laugh could be heard, and then a figure dressed in black appeared in front of the caravan.

"It's you?" The heavily bearded man's face changed as he stared at that one-eyed, golden-haired man.

McKinley [Mai'jin'li], the One-Eyed Viper. In this long road which nobody controlled, this name was a very famous one. This person was famed for both his viciousness as well as his power.

"Waaaaa!" An infant in the caravan behind began to cry.

"Bandits!" Many people began to panic.

"QUIET!" The heavily bearded man roared angrily. Many people in the caravan immediately began to arrange themselves in groups, making sure that everyone was together. A number of youngsters armed themselves with weapons, preparing to resist.

The heavily bearded man looked at the one-eyed golden-haired man. "One-Eyed Viper, don't push things too far. How about this. I'll offer you five thousand gold coins for you and yours to allow us past. Deal?"

"Five thousand gold coins?" The one-eyed man laughed coldly. "Malone, do you take me, McKinley, to be a beggar? Listen up. A hundred thousand gold coins, and I'll let you go. Otherwise...hmph."

The faces of all the mercenaries sank.

A hundred thousand gold coins? Their compensation for this escort mission was only sixty or seventy thousand gold coins. If they were to offer a hundred thousand gold coins, they would be paying out of pocket. After all, according to the mercenary escorting rules, once they accepted an escort mission, even if they had to pay off some bandits, the mercenary company would have to pay out of pocket.

"One-Eyed Viper, don't go overboard. You should be satisfied to earn 5000 gold without a single man of yours dying." The heavily bearded man hefted his battleaxe. "Otherwise. We'll just have to see who is stronger." Big Beard Malone was quite confident. In the past, he had battled against McKinley, and they were about equal in strength. He believed that with the ambush a failure, McKinley wouldn't dare to risk everything in an all-out assault.

"That's how it should be. Brothers, attack!" McKinley shouted in a high voice.

Instantly, all of the bandits drew their weapons and, howling angrily, began to charge. This really did completely shock Malone.

"Swish!" "Swish"! "Swish!"

The archers on both sides began to release their arrows without mercy, but in a small-scale skirmish like this with only a hundred people on each side, archers didn't have too great an impact on the overall battle.

"Malone, die!" McKinley charged forward, a sharp polearm in his arms. Leaping into the air, with all his might, he delivered a tremendous blow against Malone.

Malone swung his battleaxe upwards, unwilling to show any weakness.

"Thruuum." The dark aura covering the polearm suddenly dramatically intensified.

"BAM!"

Malone felt his hands grow numb, and he couldn't help but take a few steps back.

"You...?" Malone stared at McKinley in astonishment. He knew exactly how powerful McKinley was. In terms of frontal assaults, his own weapon held an advantage over McKinley's. But just then, the opponent had an advantage over him. This...

"Your guess is correct. I've already entered the eighth rank as a warrior." McKinley's face was filled with arrogance.

"No wonder you weren't worried about making a frontal assault at all." Malone now understood.

"Boss, there's a pretty woman here." A voice suddenly rang out.

McKinley immediately turned his head and saw Jenne, her face pale from terror and shock. Right now, Jenne was frantically protecting her little brother. The pitiable look on her face was quite stirring indeed.

"Haha, that woman is mine!" McKinley immediately grew excited.

....

The mercenaries were battling against the bandits. A bandit decapitated a mercenary, and then was run through the chest by another mercenary's sword.

"Retreat, retreat!" Malone bellowed as he quickly retreated. All of his mercenaries retreated with him as well.

"Lord Ley, I beg of you, please rescue our caravan." Malone said respectfully towards Linley, begging him for aid. Right now, the mercenaries had formed into a circle, with all the merchants and the others inside the ring. Linley and Malone were both located at the outermost layer of the circle.

Faced with Malone's plea, Linley nodded once.

"I'll only help you deal with the leader." Linley said. Malone instantly was so excited that his eyes shone. If McKinley was killed, how could they be afraid of those remaining bandits?

Jenne was tightly holding her younger brother near the campfire.

"Sis, that mercenary captain seems to be begging Lord Ley." Keane's eyes were glowing as he watched all of this. Jenne turned to look at Linley as well.

Linley was standing in the middle of the road, calmly looking at the bandits.

"fk off!" Wielding his polearm, McKinley charged forward at high speed. He was advancing at an extremely fast speed, and his body was also flickering from left to right, as though he had transformed into two separate figures, making it difficult for one to determine who the real

McKinley was, and which was the illusion.

Illusionary Blade!

This was the trademark special skill of McKinley, the One-Eyed Viper!

"How laughable." Linley, having already reached the level of 'impose', held techniques of this level in absolutely no regard at all.

"Die!" A terrifying, ferocious gleam appeared in McKinley's eye.

Linley drew the adamantine heavy sword from its sheath on his back. This drawing motion carried with it an astonishing, imposing aura, as though all of the space around it had suddenly become frozen.

The adamantine heavy sword chopped towards McKinley in a very simple manner.

McKinley immediately wanted to dodge, but to his terror, he discovered that the space around him seemed to have become suddenly compressed and locked. In that moment, not even sound could escape from the area.

He had nowhere to dodge, and in fact, he couldn't even see anything else. His eye could only watch as the adamantine heavy sword drew closer and closer.

He wanted to raise his polearm to block, but he felt as though he had been mired in an endless pit of quicksand. The polearm felt as though it weighed ten thousand pounds, and was extremely slow.

"Bam!"

The adamantine heavy sword landed against McKinley's body. Suddenly, McKinley's entire body, from head to toe, transformed into meat pulp. The bandits, the mercenaries, Jenne, Keane, and the others all stared in astonishment, their mouths hanging open.

"The rest of those little bandits are for you to handle." Linley replaced his sword into its sheath as he spoke calmly to Big Beard Malone.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 11, Hands

Under the glow of the campfires, everyone's faces were half-lit, half-shadowed. The smell of blood still infested the area, but now, the men on both sides of the battle only stared in shock at that corpse that had been transformed into a pile of flesh and blood, then at Linley and the adamantine heavy sword he carried.

A combatant of the eighth rank had been killed in one sword stroke...

This...

Was hard to believe!

"My brothers, let's kill these bandits!" Big Beard Malone was the first to react, and he immediately shouted in excitement. "Kill these bastards and avenge our slain comrades!"

Hearing this roar by Big Beard Malone, all of the bandits woke up as well. Their leader, the One-Eyed Viper, McKinley, was killed in one stroke. Even if the mercenaries weren't there, Linley alone could lay waste to them all with that heavy sword.

"Vengeance! Vengeance! Kill!" The mercenaries' eyes were blazing as they were suddenly filled with confidence. One after another charged forward, weapons at the ready.

"Flee, quick!"

The bandits shouted loudly, as they all began to flee, forgetting everything else. The archers of the mercenary company immediately began to nock their bows. Staring coldly at the backs of the fleeing bandits, one sharp arrow was shot out after another. "Swish." "Swish." Six bandits were hit by arrows and fell to the ground.

In the blink of an eye, the seventy or so remaining bandits disappeared into the darkness.

The mercenary company didn't engage in pursuit for too long, chasing after them for only a hundred or so meters before returning. After all, their prime responsibility was to protect the caravan.

"Whew."

The many merchants and travelers in the caravan all sighed in relief. But at this time, the faces of the mercenaries were quite ugly to behold, as they began to collect the corpses of the ten or so comrades who had died.

"Everyone, you can get back to your rest." Malone said loudly.

Quite a few mercenaries had been wounded as well, and had to rest and be treated. Those hundreds of people in the caravan began to calm down, each returning to their own places. As long-time travelers, they often experienced such events, and wouldn't be too shocked or concerned now.

.....

One campfire after another was lit, and the ten or so mercenary corpses were buried within the desolate earth at the sides of the road. Mercenaries who lived by the edges of their blades could die at any time. And once they died, their bodies would all be buried thusly, with the other mercenaries at most bringing some keepsakes of theirs back home for them.

Leaning against a large tree by the roadside with the adamantine heavy sword on his back, Linley quietly watched everyone else.

"Lord Ley." Many of the caravan merchants ran over, expressing their gratitude towards Linley. Many of them even wanted to give gold coins to Linley as a gift, but Linley respectfully declined them all.

"Brothers, a good journey to you!" Malone roared loudly.

All of the mercenaries present were standing in front of the graves. In unison, they bowed deeply towards the graves. In the lives of these mercenaries, death was a common occurrence. After paying their respects, all of them returned to their normal positions.

The captain of this mercenary company, Big Beard Malone, headed towards Linley with Luther and Lowndes alongside him. Very gratefully, he said, "Lord Ley, thank you. If it wasn't for you, our mercenary company..." Malone fell silent, shaking his head.

"Ley, thank you so much for saving our mercenary company." The young

Luther said gratefully.

Linley's initial warning to them as well as his assistance at the end had both been utterly invaluable in saving the mercenary company.

"No need." Linley said with a calm laugh.

"Lord Ley, here is ten thousand gold coins." Malone withdrew a magicrystal card from his pockets. "This magicrystal card is an un-bound one, and has ten thousand gold coins within it. Lord Ley, you must accept it. If it wasn't for you, not only would our mercenary company have failed our mission, we most likely would've all died as well."

Linley shook his head with a laugh.

"Ley, please accept it," Lowndes immediately urged. Mercenaries were usually quite magnanimous. These people who spent their lives living by the edges of their blades generally held in high regard the codes of valor, brotherhood, and friendship.

"Do I look like someone who needs money to you?" Linley looked at the three of them.

Within his interspatial ring, Linley had twenty two magicrystal cards, each with 100 million gold coins. 2.2 billion gold coins! Even the Dawson Conglomerate wouldn't be easily persuaded to bring out such a vast fortune at once.

Some of the clans in the Four Great Empires were very powerful and very wealthy, but no matter how powerful they were, they couldn't compare to the wealth of a royal clan.

After all, those extremely large and powerful clans in the Four Great Empires still had to pay an enormous amount of taxes each year to the Emperor.

By comparison, the ruler of the Kingdom of Fenlai, compared to those major clans, had much more power in his own domain. The wealth that had been built up over thousands of years was a frightening sum indeed.

After hearing Linley's words, Malone was briefly startled, but then didn't press it. He didn't dare to keep squabbling with a powerful combatant such as Linley. And in addition, it truly wasn't easy for his mercenary company to make a living either.

"Captain Malone, go take care of your mercenaries. I see that quite a number of them suffered serious injuries." Linley said.

"Then Lord Ley, I leave you to your rest. I'll take my leave now." Malone said respectfully. Powerful combatants were treated with respect no matter where they were.

The campfires blazed. Many of the people in the caravan weren't able to fall asleep. Many of them hunched over campfires. Aside from a minority who had managed to fall asleep, most were talking about what had just happened. Every so often, glances would be sneaked towards Linley. Clearly, the topic of their conversation was Linley.

Right now, Linley was seated cross-legged, attuning himself to the vast, boundless earth, as well as the wind which spanned the skies.

After having spent three years training in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Linley had learned quite a bit about the proper way of training. Both warriors and magi, in the end, had to learn how to understand and become attuned to nature.

For example, just now, both Linley and McKinley were warriors of the eighth rank.

But in terms of true understanding, McKinley was still on the most basic level of attack, while Linley had already reached the third level, and was able to 'impose' in battle. This 'imposing power' was the power to impose upon the heavens and the earth to constrain his enemies. When he struck out with his sword, he had disrupted the entire surrounding space.

The difference between the two of them was too great. For him to be killed in a single stroke wasn't strange at all.

"If I had not trained within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts and forgot about everything besides training for three years, no matter how long I stayed in Hess City, I probably wouldn't have been able to rise to another level of understanding." Linley mused to himself.

Many of the people in the caravan were discussing Linley, but Linley didn't pay any attention to them as he quietly meditated.

"Ley, Lord Ley?" A nervous voice rang out next to Linley.

Hearing this voice, Linley turned around. It was that young nobleman, who was standing up as straight as a ramrod. Keane. A hint of a smile appeared on Linley's face. "Keane. Right? What is it?"

Hearing Linley call him by his name, Keane felt very proud. He said quietly, "Lord Ley, I have a request."

"Sit first, then talk."

Linley's attitude made Keane relax just a little, and he sat down next to Linley. His eyes filled with worship, he said to Linley, "Lord Ley, just then, your sword blow was so powerful. I've been bullied ever since I was a kid. I want to be a powerful warrior as well. Can you teach me?"

Linley was startled.

Warrior training wasn't a matter of just a few days. It required many years of accumulated hard work, as well as good natural talent. It also required good instructors. Only when all three criteria were fulfilled could a powerful combatant be produced.

"That's a bit difficult, and I don't have enough time to train you." Linley laughed.

Keane hurriedly nodded, waving his hands frantically. "No, Lord Ley, I don't need to learn too much. I don't need to be too powerful. I just want to learn that sword stroke you used just now. Just that one sword stroke."

As he spoke, Keane even pantomimed the actual sword blow.

"Just that one sword stroke?" Linley didn't know whether to laugh or to cry.

Although that sword stroke of his had seemed easy, it had required over ten years of hard training as well as changes to both his mind and spirit. Only then was he able to understand this 'impose' level. Not even most warriors of the ninth rank were able to grasp any level of 'impose', much less those of the eighth rank.

According to the Baruch clan's records, that ancestor who wielded the heavy warhammer, upon reaching the Saint-level, was still only capable of reaching the level of 'wielding something heavy as though it were light'. Only after being at the Saint-level for more than ten years did the ancestor begin to understand how to 'impose'.

Magi found it naturally easier than warriors to become one with nature.

For a pure warrior to truly understand and comprehend 'impose' was far more difficult than a dual-class combatant such as Linley, who was both magus and warrior.

"Is it very....very hard? I'm not afraid." Keane said.

"Keane." A gentle voice called out, and Jenne rushed over, dressed in light blue and holding some clothes in her hands. She said towards Keane with concern, "The night is growing cold. Bundle up."

Keane pouted, shaking his head. "No."

Jenne couldn't help but frown, but there was nothing she could do.

Keane continued, "Big sis, look, Lord Ley is only wearing a thin shirt. I'm already wearing a lot, and you want me to wear even more?"

Linley couldn't help but let out an unexpected laugh. This Keane was actually comparing himself to him? Even in the most freezing of winters, Linley wouldn't feel cold, much less now.

"Keane, bundle up." Linley said.

Linley's words seemed to have more of an effect than Jenne's. "Oh." Keane accepted the clothes from Jenne, then put them on. Jenne gratefully looked at Linley. "Thank you, Lord Ley."

Linley smiled and nodded.

As Jenne and Linley exchanged glances, Jenne immediately blushed red slightly.

But Linley, quite by accident, noticed Jenne's hands. When he saw them, he was quite surprised. From what Linley could tell, Jenne was without question a young noble lady, but Jenne's hands seemed rather coarse.

"Keane, don't disturb Lord Ley for too long. Lord Ley needs to rest as well." Jenne smiled apologetically towards Linley, and then she went back to her own carriage, face still slightly red.

Linley looked at Keane.

"Keane, does your sister often do chores at home?" Linley was very curious. Most noble ladies had hands that were extremely tender and soft. In terms of both bearing as well as clothing, Jenne was definitely a noble lady, but her hands...

Keane nodded. "Right. Lord Ley, you probably can't tell from the way I've dressed, but I feel really awkward in these clothes. It's been a long time since I've dressed this formally." Keane tugged at his collar. "Actually, my sister and I were living in an ordinary mountain village. Only Grandpa Lambert was there to take care of us. Big sis usually had to do most of our family chores."

"Oh?" Linley was beginning to grow curious. "But your sister's demeanor doesn't seem like that of an ordinary village girl."

Keane nodded. "Of course. Our father was the governor of a prefecture-level city and had an exceedingly high social status. When we were young, we stayed in the governor's mansion. But when I was six, my mother, my sister, and myself were forced out by our aunt. Thus, my mother took my sister and I back to her home. My big sis, when she was young, received all the education that a young noble lady should have, and when we left our father's home, she was already ten. So she naturally continued to maintain the noble customs which had already become ingrained within her. But I was young, and my mother was never in good health. Grandpa Lambert couldn't take care of both of us by himself, so big sis often had to do housework. Big sis can do anything!"

"I remember in the heart of winter, big sis' hands had begun to split from the cold, but she'd still cook for me. I wanted to help, but she wouldn't let me." Keane bit his lips, eyes starting to turn red. "This time, when I take over the position of city governor, I definitely won't let big sis do any more chores. I'm going to let a huge number of servants take care of sis."

Hearing this story, Linley couldn't help but admire this Jenne, who outwardly looked so fragile and so shy.

"You are going to take over the position of city governor? Didn't your aunt expel you though?" Linley asked.

Keane didn't hide anything. "At first, my aunt used every method available to her to make us leave, so as to guarantee that her son would be the next city governor. Unfortunately...that garbage son of hers did nothing but drink and fool around. Immediately after my father died, that piece of trash felt delighted as he had nothing to fear now, and became even more dissolute. From what I heard, not too long ago, he died in the arms of some woman. After he died, naturally the position of city governor falls to me."

Keane looked at Linley with excitement. "Lord Ley, please teach me. Once I become city governor, I'll definitely give you a really, really high position!"

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 12, Blackrock City

Right. A kid who had lived in a small village after the age of six would naturally be very innocent. Linley felt that Jenne was quite innocent as well.

Through that short conversation, Linley had already learned a great deal about this little fellow, Keane.

At the same time, Linley more or less also understood what was going on with him and his sister.

“Assume the position of city governor? I’m afraid it won’t be that easy.” Linley thought to himself. Compared to these two innocent siblings, Linley could see much more deeply.

The highest level of city in the O’Brien Empire was the imperial capital, followed by the provincial capitals of the seven provinces. Beneath the level of the provincial capitals were the prefectural cities, then ordinary cities, and then countryside villages.

The status of a governor of a prefectural city was actually quite high.

How could the position of governor of a prefectural city be so easily acquired by an innocent countryside-raised child?

.....

After training the entire night, when Linley next opened his eyes, it was already dawn.

"Lord Ley, by nightfall tonight, we should be at the border cities of the Empire." Lowndes chortled. "Lord Ley, let's eat breakfast together."

"Alright."

Linley and Bebe headed over to them. As for Haeru...the food there wasn't nearly enough for him. Late last night, Haeru had entered the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts and only returned after having eaten a good, full meal.

Within a carriage not too far away from Linley.

"Sis, I'll get off first." Keane happily hopped off the carriage.

Lambert looked at Keane, who had not a care in the world. He shook his head mentally, and then looked at Jenne. Lambert knew very well how innocent and how kind Jenne was.

"Miss, don't rush off just yet." Lambert squeezed out a smile.

"Grandpa Lambert, what is it?" Jenne looked questioningly at Lambert with her big eyes.

Lambert said, "Miss, you saw as well how we met with bandits on the way. When we reach the border cities, we'll have to separate from the caravan. By then, I, an old man, along with you and the young master will be all alone on the road. If we meet with any bandits on the way, I might not be able to overcome them."

Jenne couldn't help but to think back to that bloody scene of attacking bandits from the previous night.

"Right. Then what should we do?" Jenne was a bit nervous.

Lambert laughed. "Miss, didn't you notice that Lord Ley? Even the leader of those bandits was killed by Lord Ley with a single sword stroke. As long as Lord Ley is willing to protect you, you definitely won't be in any danger."

Jenne was eighteen years old, after all. She wasn't as irresponsible as Keane.

"Grandpa Lambert, if I try to invite a powerful combatant like that to assist us, do you think he will agree?" Jenne looked at Lambert.

Lambert laughed encouragingly. "Don't worry. Just tell him that you and Keane are the children of the governor of the prefectural city of Cerre [Chi'er], and that this time you are returning for the purpose of Keane assuming the governorship. If he can guard you on your way back, once you arrive at Cerre, you will definitely thank and reward him heavily. Remember...don't tell him too much. Don't tell him that in the past, you were living in a small village. Just tell him what I told you now."

Lambert knew very well that if Linley became aware of the details of their situation, he probably wouldn't agree.

"Oh."

Jenne didn't even notice that there were some slight differences between the truth and what Lambert had just instructed her to say.

"Go, and remember what I told you. Act sincerely." Lambert encouraged.

"Okay." Jenne nodded. Taking a deep breath, she summoned her courage and descended from the carriage.

Watching Jenne leave the carriage, Lambert secretly sighed. "Alas. Madame, even on your death bed, you weren't willing to swallow your anger. You insisted on having Jenne and Keane go assume the position of city governor. Lord Count Wade [Wei'de] is already dead, but the senior madame probably won't so easily allow Keane to assume the position of governor."

"If we had a combatant of the ninth rank protecting us though, then we will have a good chance." Late at night, Lambert had heard others whisper that McKinley had already reached the eighth rank as a warrior. But Linley had been able to easily kill him in one blow. As Lambert saw it, Linley should therefore be a warrior of the ninth rank.

.....

The wind was blowing. After eating to his content, Linley was relaxing comfortably for now, as they would depart again soon.

"The O'Brien Empire. Mm. We should be there tomorrow." Linley was reclining on his cart, lazily awaiting their departure. But right at this moment, from the corner of his eyes, Linley suddenly saw someone approaching.

"Jenne?" Linley sat up curiously.

Somewhat cautiously, Jenne was walking over to him. Seeing Linley sit up and look at her, Jenne forced out a small smile. "Lord Ley, hello."

"Miss Jenne, hello." Linley was a bit confused. Why had this Miss Jenne come?

Jenne just stood there hesitantly for a moment, not knowing how to start.

"Miss Jenne, is there something I can help you with?" Linley asked preemptively.

Jenne's face turned slightly red. Clearly, she was very nervous. "Lord Ley, it's like this. My younger brother and I are journeying to my father's prefectural city. My younger brother is going to assume the position of city governor. But we're afraid that the journey to the city will be dangerous. Therefore, we were hoping...hoping to ask you, Lord Ley, to protect us."

Getting this all out in one breath, Jenne began to stammer a bit.

Linley had a basic understanding of the general geography of the O'Brien Empire. His younger brother, Wharton, was in the southernmost administrative province of the O'Brien Empire, known as the O'Brien Administrative Province.

Linley himself currently was in the Northwest Administrative Province of the O'Brien Empire.

From the northwest province to the southernmost province was a journey that would most likely take a year and a half or so. But of course, if Linley hurried along the way by riding on the Blackcloud Leopard, he could cross a thousand kilometers per day and arrive within ten days.

But Linley was in no rush.

His younger brother was in school at the O'Brien Academy. Why the need to rush over there? Right now, the most important thing for him was training and raising his own strength as much as possible.

"Protect you? For how long?" Linley asked with a laugh.

"Not too long," Jenne hurriedly said. "The city of Cerre is in the Northwest Administrative Province. From here to there, it should only take us around ten days or half a month or so. When we get there, I will definitely thank you and reward you heavily."

"Thank and reward me?"

Linley was sighing to himself. Based on Linley's experience, he knew very well, how could the position of city governor of a prefectural city be so easily taken by a pair of innocent siblings who had no powerful backers at all?

"We'll give you lots of gold coins." Jenne looked hopefully at Linley.

Jokingly, Linley said, "Oh? How many gold coins?"

Jenne gritted her teeth. "Ten thousand gold coins? What do you think?" Jenne had been living in the village since she was ten. Normally speaking, one or two gold coins could last for quite a while in a place like that. She knew that the prefectural city was a wealthy place, and she believed that although ten thousand gold coins was an astronomical figure, the prefectural city should be able to support it.

"Ten thousand gold coins?"

That previous night, the mercenary captain had wanted to offer Linley ten thousand gold coins as a token of his thanks as well. But frankly, even aside from the wealth in Linley's interspatial ring, each of Linley's sculptures, given his status as a master sculptor, would be worth over a hundred thousand gold coins.

"Is that not enough?" Jenne stuttered.

Linley looked at Jenne. "Miss Jenne, generally speaking, how much did you and Keane spend each year in the village?"

"In the village?" Jenne was startled. Lambert had just instructed her repeatedly not to say that in the past she had lived in a village, but Linley had already known about it.

Jenne said honestly, "A few dozen gold coins each year. After all, we had to pay for my mother's medical treatment. Right. Lord Ley, I don't have that much money on me right now, but in the future, I will."

Linley had to admit that she really was an innocent girl.

"So, um, actually, you know, it should be fairly safe inside the Empire's borders. Grandpa Lambert probably was just over-thinking things. Um. I should leave." Jenne felt rather awkward, and began to just blurt out random things.

"No. I just wanted to ask, right now, how many gold coins can you pay up front?" Linley asked.

After hearing that her prefectural city was in the Northwest Administrative Province, Linley had already made up his mind to help them, as it was on the way for him. After all, he was going to pass through the Northwest Administrative Province enroute to the O'Brien Administrative Province.

"Right now? I have around ten gold coins on me." Jenne withdrew a small pouch in her purse. "Uncle Lambert has a few more coins on him also."

Linley accepted the pouch, retrieving a single gold coin from it.

“Done.” Linley placed this gold coin into his own pouch. “From this moment forward, I’ve accepted this escort mission. But of course, this gold coin is just your down payment. When your younger brother becomes the city governor, I’ll collect the remaining 9999 gold coins.”

Jenne was wildly overjoyed at her success.

“Thank you, thank you.” Jenne was so excited that her little face turned pure scarlet.

.....

The caravan began to move forward once more, and the Blackcloud Leopard once more began to lope alongside Linley’s cart. At the same time, Haeru looked suspiciously at Bebe and growled, “Bebe. Master accepted an escort mission for just ten thousand gold coins?”

Even a hundred thousand gold coins wouldn’t be enough to invite an expert like Linley to help out.

Just by killing a magical beast of the eighth rank, Linley would be able to procure a magicite core of the eighth rank that was worth 500,000 gold coins. Generally speaking, it was difficult for combatants of the eighth rank to kill magical beasts of the eighth rank. Only combatants of the ninth rank were able to kill magical beasts with confidence.

growled back to the Blackcloud Panther.

Growling to each other, the two magical beasts conversed in the language of magical beasts. Seeing them chatting to each other, Linley chuckled, continuing to sit quietly in the cart.

"Squeak, squeak."

The cart's wheels rhythmically squeaked, constantly moving forward. By the time the sun went down past the mountains, this caravan finally arrived at a border city of the O'Brien Empire.

Riding on the cart, Linley's body swayed back and forth as he watched the distant city grow closer.

This was a pitch-black city that looked as if it were an enormous magical beast that had taken the land for itself. The walls of the cities were over thirty meters tall. Only powerful combatants would be able to scale such heights.

"Blackrock City. The 'wall' of the O'Brien Empire in the Northwest Administrative Province." Linley had long since heard of this famous city.

Historically, there were quite a few major battles that had been fought at Blackrock City. Although many years had passed by, when they drew near Blackrock City, they could still see the dark red color staining many of the enormous black stones making up the walls of the city. These were dried bloodstains that had accumulated over countless years and battles.

"Everyone, we'll part ways here." Malone shouted loudly from outside the city walls.

Based on their mission requirements, their mercenary company was only responsible for delivering the caravan to this location. Immediately, the various merchants and travelers began to drive their carriages or carry their bags towards the city gates.

"Big brother Ley!" Keane called out from his carriage.

On the journey over, Keane had learned that Linley was going to escort them. Immediately, he grew even closer to Linley, and Linley, in turn, told Keane to just address him as 'big brother'. After all, Linley was only 21 years old.

"Let's go together."

Linley led his two-meter tall, four-meter long black panther directly towards the city gates. The previously lazy-looking guard, seeing Linley's black panther, was so scared that he immediately took a few steps back.

Panther-type, tiger-type, and lion-type magical beasts were all high-class magical beasts. Even the weakest panther-type magical beasts and lion-type magical beasts were generally of the seventh rank.

Right now, in a time of peace, the security at the gates wasn't too strict.

The gate guards didn't even inspect Linley, directly allowing him entrance.

"My heavens, what rank of magical beast is that black panther? When it looked at me, my heart almost stopped from fear." A gate guard cried out loudly in fear.

An older gate guard next to him lowered his voice and said, "Lower your voice. From what I know, the weakest type of panther, the Golden Tattooed Panther, is a magical beast of the seventh rank. This black panther is at least a magical beast of the eighth rank."

....

"Wow! Blackrock City is so developed!" Keane's eyes were shining.

On the main streets of Blackrock City, Linley, Keane, and Jenne were walking side by side. Jenne was wearing a peaked cap on her head, pressed down firmly and with a veil in front of her face. After all, Jenne's beauty could cause a great deal of trouble.

"He thinks THIS is developed?" Bebe squeaked on Linley's shoulders.

Blackrock City was a city meant for war. Although it was fairly developed due to traders, there was no way it could compare to the now-lost Holy Capital, Fenlai City. Even when compared to Hess City, the capital of a kingdom, there was quite a big difference.

"Careful." Linley's body suddenly turned into a blur as he flashed in front of Jenne and Keane.

"Swish." "Swish."

With a wave of his right hand, Linley snatched two arrows out of the air.

"You think you can run?" With a wave of his hands, Linley sent the two arrows going back the way they came, piercing through the throats of the two distant men who were preparing to flee.

"Urk..."

Those two men clutched their throats in shock, and then collapsed, dead.

"Ah!" The previously calm street began filled with screams, and many people began to run about in a panic. "Let's go." Linley said to the stunned Jenne and Keane.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 13, Persuasion

“Move, now!” That old servant, Lambert, reacted quickly as well, immediately urging them to leave.

Totally baffled and confused, Jenne and Keane were tugged by Lambert and Linley away from this area. After all, given that people had just been killed on the streets, the city guard would soon arrive.

Linley wasn't afraid of the guards, but dealing with guards while also escorting Jenne was an extremely annoying task.

Aside from Linley and his group, many others around them were running away and fleeing wildly as well.

It was nightfall, and it should have been the most bustling time for this major road in Blackrock City, but in the blink of an eye, this part of the road became totally deserted. Nobody was within a hundred meters of those two corpses.

“Captain, what should we do?”

Seated next to a window within a private room in a hotel, two men were staring down at the scene below. One of them had long red hair, with a face that looked as though it had been carved with a knife. But right now, he had a sinister look on his face as he listened to the nearby subordinate query him.

"I didn't expect these two country bumpkin siblings to have such a powerful helper." The red-haired man said coldly.

"Captain, that man even has a black panther. Panthers are all high-class magical beasts. For the likes of us to deal with such a powerful combatant...will be difficult." A burly, broad-chested man beside the captain said in a quiet voice.

The red-haired man was frustrated as well.

Per the orders of the senior madame, they came to kill these two bumpkin siblings. Per their intelligence, only the old servant with these two bumpkins posed any threat. But he was only a warrior of the sixth rank. In the O'Brien Empire, which was filled with experts, a combatant of the sixth rank was nothing.

Perhaps in some villages, a warrior of the sixth rank was powerful. But the leader of this squad which had been sent out per the senior madame's orders was himself a warrior of the seventh rank.

"A black panther...why haven't I ever seen this type of panther before?" The red-haired man was frowning. As an expert of the seventh level, he knew quite a bit about magical beasts.

Panther-type magical beasts included the Golden Tattooed Panther, the Blackstripe Panther, and others.

But this black panther with wavy black stripes was something he had never seen.

"That brown-haired man is clearly the master of this black panther. He is, at the very least, a combatant of the eighth rank." The red-haired man thought back to the scene of Linley suddenly snatching the arrows out of the air, and as he did, he shivered.

Arrows moved at an extremely high speed.

To be able to react and immediately move in front of Jenne and Keane, and then snatch the two arrows out of the air was something even most warriors of the eighth rank couldn't do.

"Captain?" The burly man next to him asked quietly.

The red-haired man turned to look at him. In a cold voice, he said, "Hmph. That brown-haired man is extremely powerful. For this mission, we can't fight them head on. Arrange for some people to keep watch on them secretly. I refuse to believe that expert will neither eat nor sleep. He can't always be together with those two siblings."

"As soon as that brown-haired man and those two are separated, immediately have our men kill the two." The red-haired man issued his order.

"Yes, Captain!" The burly man nodded and immediately left the room.

The red-haired man turned his head back, once more staring below through the window. Those two corpses still lay on the street with the arrows through their throats. The mounted city guards were just now rushing over.

.....

On the second floor of an ordinary hotel in Blackstone City, Linley, Jenne, Keane, and Lambert were seated in a private room. Even Bebe had a seat of his own. As for Haeru, he was lying down on the ground, his eyes contentedly half-shut.

Right now, Jenne and Keane's faces were both still rather pale.

"Just...just now, I was so scared." Keane's eyes were still filled with terror.

Ever since he was young, Keane had lived in a countryside village. The most violent struggles he had ever seen were just some of the young men getting into serious fights with each other. How could he ever have experienced something like what he just saw?

Although on the road here, they had suffered a bandit attack, the bandits were fighting against the mercenaries, and hadn't harmed them yet. But this time, the opponents had come for his life and his sister's life.

Jenne's eyes were filled with a hint of terror as well.

"Jenne, Keane, don't be afraid." Linley laughed as he consoled them.

To Linley, a small event like this couldn't even impact his mood at all. In the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, he was constantly on guard for magical beasts laying in ambush for him.

And thus, within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Linley learned how to keep his heart as tranquil as water, come what may. How could a small event like this disturb him?

"Young master, young miss." Lambert consoled as well. "We're fine now. Don't worry. Fortunately, we had Lord Ley with us today. Otherwise, things would have been terrible. Young master, young miss, you absolutely must offer your thanks to Lord Ley."

Only now did Jenne and Keane recover from their panic.

"Big brother Ley, we really owe you our thanks this time." Keane said gratefully, and his eyes were glowing. "Big brother Ley, just now, you waved your hand and snatched the two arrows out of the air, and then with another wave...those two guys were dead." Keane was indeed a child. In his excitement, he had totally forgotten his fear.

Jenne looked gratefully at Linley as well. "Thank you, big brother Ley."

Towards Linley, Jenne felt gratitude from the bottom of her heart.

That first time she had seen Linley, Jenne had felt that he was a mysterious, powerful expert, an amazing person who commanded a mighty magical beast as well.

In particular, when Linley had agreed to escort and protect them, he had only taken a single gold coin. Although Linley said that he would collect the other 9999 when Keane became the city governor, Jenne, being an eighteen year old adult, knew when someone was acting out of kindness.

“No need for thanks. I agreed to protect you. This is nothing more than what I’m supposed to do.” Linley frowned. “What’s going on though? As soon as you entered Blackrock City, people tried to assassinate you? Who exactly have you offended?”

Keane was instantly baffled.

Jenne was confused as well. “I...I haven’t offended anyone.”

“Then who has enmity with you two?” Linley continued to ask.

Jenne was quiet for a moment, then said, “Right, if we talk about enmity, perhaps the only one with enmity towards us is my aunt.” Right at this moment, the old servant, Lambert, immediately interrupted their conversation. Laughing towards Linley, he said, “We don’t have any enemies. Their aunt just has some disagreements with them, that’s all. Lord Ley, no need to worry about these annoying things. Let’s all eat.”

Linley glanced at Lambert, then laughed and nodded. “Fine, let’s all eat.”

In truth, ever since Keane had told Linley about himself and his sister, Linley had a rough idea as to what was going on. This assassination attempt showed that clearly, it was because the main wife of the departed city governor didn’t wish for Jenne and Keane to assume the position of city governor.

But Linley didn't say these things openly.

.....

That very night, the two siblings, Lambert, and Linley each retired to their own rooms. They had reserved a private, stand-alone villa.

Darkness descended.

Linley's room was totally dark. Linley sat cross-legged on his bed, his heart totally calm as he quietly attuned with the throbbing pulse of the world and the flows of the wind.

Occasionally, when Linley had some insights, he would rise to his feet and casually swing his heavy sword.

....

"Squeak." Dressed in her sleeping clothes and her long hair unbound, Jenne walked towards the room of her old servant, Lambert. "Grandpa Lambert, are you sleeping yet?"

The door opened very quickly.

"Miss, quick, come in." Lambert immediately opened the door for Jenne, then closed it after Jenne entered his room.

"Miss, what is it?" Lambert asked.

Jenne stared at Lambert. "Grandpa Lambert, tell me. Why does someone want to kill me and my younger brother? Is it my aunt?"

"Why would you think such a thing?" Lambert's heart trembled.

Jenne said stubbornly, "Grandpa Lambert, don't treat me like a little kid. The day my younger brother and I left the village, I thought we would be making a joyful return as we went to assume the position of city governor. But now, I understand. Aunt and her people won't allow us to take the position over. The people who tried to kill us just now definitely were acting on her behalf. I can't think of anyone else."

Lambert looked at Jenne and let out a long sigh.

"Fine, miss. I admit, your suspicions are correct." Lambert said resignedly.

Jenne started.

"So it really is..." Jenne murmured.

Jenne look at Lambert. "Grandpa Lambert, why didn't you tell me and my younger brother from the start?"

"Sigh." Lambert shook his head. "What would be the point? Even on her death's bed, your mother couldn't let go of this grievance. She insisted on having you and your little brother go take over the governor's position. I know that given your temperament, you wouldn't go against your mother's dying wish."

"Right. I'll carry it out, even if it costs me my life." Jenne nodded stubbornly.

"Since this is the case, it was better to let the two of you travel happily. In addition, I was trying to come up with ways to protect you two as well. If we hadn't encountered Lord Ley, I would've come up with other ideas here in Blackrock City, so as to allow you two to safely reach Cerre City." Lambert said honestly.

Living in the village, Jenne and Keane's lives weren't happy at all.

The nobles of the village all lusted after Jenne's beauty, while Keane was often bullied as well. Even if Jenne and Keane had known how dangerous this journey would be, they still would've made this trip.

After all, once Keane assumed the governorship, his destiny would be totally transformed.

"Grandpa Lambert, will this trip be very dangerous?" Jenne had a very complex look on her face.

Lambert let out a deep sigh. "Originally, I didn't think it would be too dangerous, but now, it seems as though that aunt of yours has really made up her mind to be vicious. She's arranged for assassins as far away as Blackrock City. Most likely, the road to Cerre City will be very dangerous after all."

"Then, Grandpa Lambert, why didn't you explain clearly to big brother Ley?" Jenne stared at Lambert.

"We can't." Lambert shook his head. "After your father died, your aunt virtually took total control over Cerre City. She has quite a few experts under her control. If you openly ask your big brother Ley to fight against the power controlling a prefectural city, I'm afraid that he won't do so for the sake of you and your brother. After all, it is extremely dangerous."

The real power controlling a prefectural city possessed an astonishing amount of power.

Such a power should have several combatants of the eighth rank. Of course, combatants of the ninth rank weren't very likely. Even one would be astonishing. After all, combatants of the ninth rank usually served the managing clan of an entire Administrative Province, or the Emperor himself. To serve a governor of a prefectural city...unlikely.

However, assassins didn't have to rely solely on brute force. Poison, traps...all of these were possible.

"Very dangerous?" Jenne paused for a moment. "Grandpa Lambert, get some rest." As she spoke, Jenne left Lambert's room.

But after leaving Lambert's room, Jenne didn't immediately go back to her own. Rather...she headed for Linley's.

"Knock, knock, knock." Three raps on the door.

"Come in." Linley's voice rang out, while a lantern was lit inside the room.

Jenne pushed the door open and entered.

Linley left his bed and took a seat on his chair. Smiling, he said, "Miss Jenne, it's very late. Is there something you need?"

"Big brother Ley." Jenne sat down. Taking a deep breath, she mustered up all her courage and said to Linley, "Big brother Ley, I have to tell you something."

"What is that?" Linley looked at Jenne.

Jenne said apologetically, "Actually, Keane and I have been living in a countryside village this entire time, and it has been a long time since we had seen our father. We aren't familiar at all with Cerre City, and we might not be successful in our attempt to take over the governorship of the city."

Jenne really was an extremely compassionate girl. Knowing how dangerous it was, she decided that she didn't want Linley to suffer these risks alongside them.

"Oh." Linley only said this in response.

But in his heart, Linley sighed to himself. This Jenne really was a pure, innocent girl.

Seeing Linley's reaction, Jenne thought that Linley didn't understand. She hurriedly explained, "Big brother Ley, originally, with regards to assuming the governorship, my thought was that either we would succeed, or we would fail and go home. But it looks like it won't be that simple. There are people out to kill us, and most likely, they were sent by our aunt. In the future, she'll probably use even more vicious means against us. If you stay by our side, it will be dangerous for you too."

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 14, Repeated Assassination Attempts

“Very dangerous?” Linley began to laugh. “How dangerous, exactly?”

Seeing Linley’s reaction, Jenne couldn’t help but nod frantically. “Extremely dangerous. My aunt is currently in control of Cerre City, and her authority is on par with that of a city governor right now.”

Jenne said somewhat awkwardly, “Big brother Ley, I am so sorry. I didn’t tell you these things earlier. There’s no need for you to risk yourself for me. It isn’t worth it.”

“Haha....”

Linley laughed. “Not worth it? I don’t have anything else to do right now either. Escorting you along the way is just a matter of course. As far as the ‘danger’ is concerned? I have a much better understanding than you of whether or not it will be dangerous. Alright, Jenne, go back and get some rest.”

“Big brother Ley.” Jenne stared at Linley, somewhat stunned.

“Go back.” Linley said with a faint smile.

Jenne cast a grateful glance at Linley. “Thank you, big brother Ley.” But then, Jenne looked solemnly at him. “However, big brother Ley, I really don’t want you to risk yourself for my sake.”

“Go back to sleep.” Linley intentionally hardened his face, ‘barking’ at her.

“Oh.” Like a scolded child, Jenne nodded obediently, then turned and left via the door. Actually, in her heart, Jenne was feeling quite happy right now. She was, after all, an eighteen year old child. When such a girl saw such an outstanding young man treat her so well, of course the girl would feel happy. Jenne didn’t truly want to separate from Linley.

After walking outside the door, Jenne suddenly turned her head.

Jenne smiled beautifully. “Big brother Ley, when you harden your face like that, you look really grim and scary.” And then, like a playful child, Jenne fled down and away from Linley’s room.

Watching her flee, Linley didn’t know whether to laugh or to cry.

Taking a deep breath, Linley calmed himself down, then returned to his bed, quietly seating himself in the meditative position as he began to train his spirit. No matter when or where he was, Linley would always seize every possible moment for training.

Linley would never forget about seeking vengeance for his parents.

Could never forget about the death of Grandpa Doehring!

Could never forget that right now, he had a goal set for himself –

Destroying the entire Radiant Church, root and stem!

“There will come a day...” Linley’s resolve was extremely firm. Right now, he desired neither authority nor status. All he wanted was to be able to train in peace.

.....

In another stand-alone residence facing this hotel complex, there was a room where a lamp had been lit the entire night. The grim red-haired man sat alone in that room, six others surrounding him.

“If we succeed with this initiative, everyone will benefit. But if we fail... you all know how cruel Madame Wade can be.” The red-haired man said calmly.

The six men’s hearts were all filled with fear.

Madame Wade was heartless and vicious. When Count Wade had been alive, virtually everyone in Cerre City knew that although Count Wade was the city governor in name, in reality, the true governor was Madame Wade.

Even Madame Wade’s son always felt frightened and cold when facing her.

Unfortunately, her son was dead now.

Per the rules, the successor to Count Wade as city governor should be his son. But how could Madame Wade so easily allow those two countryside-dwelling siblings to take the position?

"Captain, don't worry. We definitely won't fail this time. Although that expert is very powerful, he can't always be protecting them." One of the six men said with force and determination.

The others all nodded as well.

"Fine. I've already arranged for this hotel's owner to be bribed. On the third floor of the hotel, there are two rooms which are facing the siblings' residence. When the time comes, the four of you shall take up those two rooms. The other two will come with me. Remember, we will make our move as soon as we see the opportunity to, but our primary target is the boy." The red-haired man reminded.

After all, right now, Keane was the first in line for succession.

Jenne was a girl. It would be much harder for her to become the city governor.

"When the boy comes out, we move. After killing him, if we have the chance, we can kill the girl as well." The red-haired man said coldly.
"Alright. Let's go wait. Perhaps the boy will need to make a trip to the bathroom at night. That will allow us to complete our mission easily."

"Yes, Captain!"

Per the red-haired man's orders, four of the six men immediately left the residence, heading directly for the hotel and for the two rooms on the third floor that had been prepared.

A curved moon was hanging in the sky tonight, and moonlight cast a gentle glow upon the world.

The archers that the red-haired man had brought on this trip were the elite archers of Cerre City. They should have been able to easily shoot a weak, unprepared boy from the distance of fifty or sixty meters.

"Captain, what should we do?" The other two men asked, standing by the red-haired man's side.

The red-haired man said calmly, "Your mission is...if those four do not have a chance to kill the boy, dress up as hotel attendants and deliver breakfast to them. When you near the boy, immediately kill him with one hit."

"Captain!" The two immediately became frantic.

Order them to dress as attendants to go assassinate the boy? But that powerful combatant with the black panther companion was right there. Even if they succeeded, would they be able to survive?

"Hmph."

The red-haired man looked coldly at them. "The two of you have no options. When the eight of you came with me, your families were all taken into custody by Madame Wade. Once your mission fails, not only will you be doomed, your families are finished as well. But if you succeed, even if you die, your families will be treated well."

Both men's faces turned white.

"The two of you should know what type of person Madame Wade is, and what type of person I am." The red-haired man said mercilessly.

Although this red-haired man was nominally their captain, in reality, he was nothing more than Madame Wade's loyal hound. He was merciless when killing people.

"But of course, if the other four succeed, then there'll be no need for the two of you to risk your lives." The red-haired man said calmly, "Right now, you two should pray. Pray that the War God blesses you."

Both of them were silent.

They were so-called 'elite' soldiers from the army. But how could small figures like them possibly struggle against Madame Wade? And what's more, the red-haired man was keeping his eyes on them.

.....

Right now, there were four archers based in the third floor of the hotel. All of them were lying in ambush in their separate rooms. In each room, one was resting, while another was on watch. They had to stay in top condition, and once Keane stepped out, they would immediately awaken the other person.

The night slowly passed on.

This night, Keane didn't take a single step out of his room. The sky began to brighten, and the fresh morning air freshened the minds of the four archers considerably.

"Squeak."

The door opened.

"He's coming out." The archers on watch in each room reminded their partners.

The four archers in the two rooms all felt their heart-rates speed up. All of them secretly looked out the window in the direction of Jenne and Keane's residence.

"It's the girl. Don't be impatient. Wait." The archers were waiting quietly.

.....

Pushing the door open, Jenne's face was wreathed in smiles. After knowing that Linley wouldn't leave and would continue to protect them, although she knew the path ahead was still perilous, Jenne still felt very happy.

"Ah. What nice, fresh air." Jenne closed her eyes, taking a deep breath of the fresh morning air.

And then, Jenne began to walk in the direction of her younger brother's room. In a clear voice, she called out, "Keane, time to get out of bed. Don't be lazy-a-bed'." As she spoke, Jenne knocked on the door.

Hearing Jenne's voice, Linley opened his eyes, ending his training. As for Haeru, Linley's Blackcloud Panther who was sleeping at the foot of Linley's bed, he didn't even bother to open his eyes.

Still wearing his sleepwear, Keane opened his door. Rubbing his eyes sleepily, he muttered, "Sis, why are we getting up so early? I haven't woken up yet. It's been a long time since I've had a good sleep."

Right at this moment, the eyes of the archers in the third floor of the hotel lit up.

"Target acquired."

The four archers simultaneously nocked their bows, preparing to fire.

.....

"Young miss, young master. You two have gotten up quite early." The old servant, Lambert, pushed his door open as well.

"Good morning, Grandpa Lambert." Jenne said warmly.

Keane just pouted, still rubbing at his eyes. "Grandpa Lambert, it isn't that I got up early, it's that big sis woke me up."

Right at this moment.

"Fire!"

From one of the rooms in the third floor, an archer let out the order in a quiet voice. Simultaneously, two of the archers rose to their feet, their bows appearing in view of the window.

"Swish!" "Swish!"

Two sharp arrows shot out simultaneously. At the same time, the two archers from the other room shot their arrows as well.

"Swish!" "Swish!"

Two arrows in front, two arrows behind. In the blink of an eye, they ripped through the air, arriving directly in front of Jenne. Two of these arrows were aimed at her, while the other two were aimed at Keane.

At this moment...Linley was still in his room. The old servant, Lambert, was over ten meters away from the two siblings. Given his speed, there was no way he would be able to block in time.

"Young miss!" Lambert could only cry in alarm.

Jenne and Keane both felt the danger coming and turned their heads to look. But all the two siblings saw, as though in slow motion, were those arrows growing closer and closer to them.

The metal arrows sliced through the air with a ear-piercing hissing sound.

"Clang!" "Clang!" "Clang!" "Clang!"

Four sounds in a row.

.....

Jenne and Keane both stood there, frozen with shock. Next to them, Lambert was also frightened stiff. With a 'squeak' sound, the door to Linley's room swung open.

"Bebe, all yours."

Bebe was standing directly in front of Jenne and Keane. Just then, in the blink of an eye, Bebe had easily blocked four arrows in a row.

After the ambush attempt yesterday, Linley had expected this band of assassins to try again today. Thus, he had ordered Bebe to stand guard all night outside, just to be safe.

Given Bebe's physically small size, when he hid amidst the grassy areas in the courtyard, not even Jenne and Keane would notice him, much less the archers.

"Boss, just watch." Bebe excitedly licked his lips.

"Swoosh"

A cruel black shadow suddenly flashed through the air. A height of ten or so meters was nothing to Bebe, who jumped directly through the open windows. When the archers who had just failed with their sneak attack saw the little black Shadowmouse, their hearts shook and they immediately attempted to flee.

But before they had a chance to leave their rooms, Bebe had entered.

His two claws flashed forward, and two archers immediately collapsed in pools of blood. Bebe then smashed hard against the wall, going straight through the hole he had created into the other room.

The two remaining archers were hurriedly fleeing as well.

Turning, they saw a black blur flying towards them. The two of them didn't even have the chance to call out. "Slash!" "Slash!" The sounds of two claws ripping through jugulars could be heard.

Bebe disdainfully looked at the two corpses on the ground, then immediately turned and left via the window, returning to the courtyard. From start to finish, only a few seconds had passed.

"Bebe, nicely done." Linley praised with a laugh.

Bebe delightedly raised his head up high. At this moment, the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, growled unhappily towards Bebe. "Hmph, if I had gone, I would've been even faster."

Bebe immediately growled unhappily back at the Blackcloud Panther.

Linley couldn't be bothered trying to placate the two of them. Instead, he walked towards Jenne, Keane, and Lambert, who were still in states of shock. They had escaped from life-and-death encounters twice in two days. Although in the past, the two siblings had often been bullied, they had never been in such danger.

"Everything's fine now, everything's fine now."

Linley lightly patted Jenne on her shoulder. With a "Wah!" sound, Jenne suddenly burst into tears, hugging Linley. Next to her, Keane began to blubber as well, also charging forward to hug Linley.

Linley had no choice but to console these two siblings.

After the two of them had calmed down, Linley asked the nearby

Lambert, "Lambert, you made our breakfast arrangements already, right?"

"Yes. In a bit, the hotel will probably send people with our breakfast."
Lambert looked at Linley with the utmost gratitude in his eyes.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 15, The Apothecary

After experiencing yet another assassination attempt, Jenne and Keane both truly understood how dangerous this trip to Cerre City would be. They were at risk of dying at any moment. Unconsciously, both of them turned towards Linley.

“Big brother Ley, what should we do in the future?” Jenne looked at Linley as she asked this question, her heart filled with worry.

Right now, both Keane and Jenne felt as though they were lost within a boundless haze, unable to see the future. They didn’t know what would happen if they persevered.

Looking at this pair of innocent siblings, Linley consoled them, “Don’t worry. I’m confident in my ability to deal with an acting city governor of a prefectural city.”

Right now, Linley had reached the eighth rank, and was a peak-stage combatant of the ninth rank when Dragonformed. The Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, was also a peak-stage magical beast of the ninth rank, and Bebe’s power was no lower than that of Linley and Haeru’s either.

If this man and these two magical beasts attacked together, if no Saint-level combatants appeared, no matter how many people came, they would not be able to stop these three.

Hearing Linley’s words, Jenne and Keane couldn’t help but begin to worship Linley.

Although up till now, the two of them still had no idea as to how powerful Linley truly was, in their eyes, Linley was an amazing, mysterious individual. As for Lambert, upon seeing all this, he felt gratified as well. As long as Jenne and Keane could live a safe life, he would be happy even if he had to die. For such an expert to be willing to help these two countryside-raised siblings without quibbling about anything else was more than enough for this old servant to be filled with gratitude.

"Knock!" "Knock!" "Knock!"

A knocking sound could be heard from outside.

"I'll get it." Lambert chortled. "It is probably the attendants bringing breakfast."

"Let's get ready to eat." Linley chuckled as he led Jenne and Keane to the living room. Lambert opened the gate to their residence, and two attendants pushing two food-laden trolleys entered.

"Deliver these to the living room." Lambert chortled as he instructed them.

"Yes, sir." The two attendants were extremely meek as they each pushed their trolleys inside. But as they moved in, they glanced at each other, a hint of determination in their eyes.

In this assassination attempt, regardless of whether or not they would succeed, they definitely would die.

They knew that Linley, that powerful expert, was still present. Either Linley or his black panther could easily kill them.

....

Within the living room, Linley was seated at the head of the table. Jenne and Keane were seated at the sides. The two attendants smiled meekly as they pushed the carts into the room.

"Sir, miss, where should we place this whole roast sheep?" The attendant opened one of the lids.

"Place them over there." Linley gestured at the stone floor nearby the table. The Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, was resting next to that table. Smelling the roasted meat, he raised his head.

For Haeru, an entire roast sheep was nothing more than a light breakfast.

"Yes, sir." The attendant very obediently placed that huge lamb-covered tray onto the floor. Bebe immediately ran over as well. With a swipe of his sharp paws, he ripped off one of the roasted lamb's legs.

Haeru stared at Bebe, and then he too went over and began to bite off large chunks of the roasted sheep.

"Sir, please enjoy." The attendant placed a tray in front of Linley, and then put another tray in front of Jenne.

At the same moment, the other attendant was placing a tray in front of Keane.

Currently...

The two attendants were to each side of Keane. Keane wasn't suspicious at all, and happily picked up his knife and his fork as he prepared to enjoy this sumptuous meal.

The two attendants exchanged glances. As though they were psychically connected, they suddenly reached out at the same time towards Keane. Their four hands were formed into claws, piercing at Keane's chest, head, and throat.

Four hands attacking at once!

Ordinary warriors of the fifth and sixth ranks could shatter stones with a single blow. Even warriors of the fourth rank could shatter thick wooden planks.

The vital points of a weak child like Keane probably couldn't withstand a single blow, whether it was at his head, his chest, or his throat.

They were simply too close.

The two attendants were simply too close to Keane, and they attacked from too close as well. At such a close range, even a warrior of the eighth rank wouldn't be able to react before Keane was already dead.

Linley let out a cold snort.

A dazzling violet light suddenly flashed, then disappeared. Ear-piercing screams could be heard as the four limbs of the two attendants fell to the floor.

"Ah!!" Jenne was so scared that she jumped to her feet.

"Young master!" Only now did Lambert realize what had almost happened. He angrily kicked the two attendants into the walls, causing the walls to shake.

Those two attendants were moaning in pain. They only exchanged glances, despair in their eyes.

"You...how..." One of them stared at Linley disbelievingly.

They had been less than half a meter away from Keane. Although they were only warriors of the fourth rank, at such a close distance, they didn't even need more than a brief instant to kill Keane.

In such a short period of time, even an expert shouldn't be able to react fast enough.

But not only did Linley manage to react, he had been able to cut all of their arms off.

"Surprised as to why I was able to react in time?" Linley looked calmly at the two of them. "How would ordinary attendants have arms like yours?"

The two of them looked at their severed arms.

The people under the command of that red-haired man were all elite archers. As elite archers, they would often train, causing the veins and muscles in their arms in particular to be protruding.

The two attendants exchanged glances, their eyes filled with despair.

What's more, their arm sockets were constantly leaking blood. Very soon, the two of them would definitely die of blood loss. But they knew... having failed their mission, even if Linley spared them, their captain and Madame Wade wouldn't spare them.

"Don't pay them any mind. We leave now." Linley stood up.

Jenne and Keane, having experienced two assassination attempts already, didn't have as huge a reaction to this third one as they had before. Keane said softly, "Big brother Ley, what about breakfast? Should we wrap it up and take it with us?"

"No."

Linley shook his head. "Be careful about the food you eat in the future. I suspect all this food is poisoned."

"Poisoned?" Keane looked at the food in his plate, terrified.

"Squeak!" Off to the side, Bebe suddenly began to squeak at Linley. Looking at Bebe, Linley couldn't help but begin to laugh.

"Yeah, yeah, you aren't afraid of poison. Alright?" Linley said resignedly.

Magical beasts and humans were very different, biologically. Many magical beasts contained venomous parts and sacs within their bodies to begin with. The poisons which humans feared, they might not fear at all. The more powerful a magical beast was, the stronger their natural immune system was. In addition, since magical beasts generally resided in pristine, untouched forests, they often interacted with various natural toxins from a young age. Thus, one generation after another, magical beasts' resistance to poisons would increase.

.....

Linley's group left the hotel very early in the morning. The red-haired man watched Linley's group depart from afar, his face exceedingly ugly to behold.

"Ley?" The red-haired man muttered. "Where did such a powerful expert come from? And why must he travel with these two countryside-raised siblings?"

The red-haired man was extremely unhappy.

This mission to assassinate Keane and Jenne was originally quite simple. That old servant, Lambert, simply wasn't powerful enough to do anything. But this originally simple mission suddenly became extremely difficult once that mysterious expert got involved.

"Nothing for it. I have to report to the Madame." Knowing how powerful Linley was, the red-haired man didn't dare to take any more risks.

.....

As the most militarily powerful empire of the Four Great Empires, the O'Brien Empire had an extremely thorough communication system sustained primarily by a special communications corps who used Bluewind Hawks.

Every single prefectural city in the O'Brien Empire had quite a few Bluewind Hawks who were controlled solely by the communications corps. Bluewind Hawks were extremely intelligent. They recognized roads and, under the orders of their owners, could take a letter to any place at all.

But only the governing clans of the O'Brien Empire had the authority to use these Bluewind Hawks. Most commoners, and even most nobles, didn't have that authority. And of course, the army had its own stand-alone communications system.

Carrying the seal of the city governor of the prefectural city of Cerre, the red-haired man requested Blackrock City to send a Bluewind Hawk towards the city of Cerre.

....

Flying in a straight line in the air was far faster than running on the road. Not long after Linley's group had left Blackrock City, the Bluewind Hawk arrived at Cerre.

The prefectural city of Cerre. This was a fairly large city.

In the Northwest Administrative Province, it was one of the top ten cities. At this moment, within the castle that was reserved for the city governor, the mood was very dark and very sinister.

The master of this castle was Madame Wade! An infamously cold, grim, arrogant person.

"Sis, sis!"

Two middle-aged men came running into the rear flower garden. At this moment, Madame Wade was enjoying the radiant sun while being tended to by two serving women.

"What's wrong, my two dear brothers?" Madame Wade lifted her head up as she looked at the two men.

"Sis, this is the mail that just came by courier. This mission was a failure." The slightly chubbier of the two men said.

"Failed? How could Kerde [Ke'de] be so useless?" Madame Wade took over the letter. Reading it, she began to scowl, confused. "A mysterious expert who has a black panther as a magical beast companion?"

Per what the red-haired man, Kerde, was saying, that black panther was at least a magical beast of the eighth rank, and that mysterious expert was at least a combatant of the eighth rank, and perhaps even the ninth.

Madame Wade suddenly felt that the letter was extremely heavy.

"Sis, what should we do?" Madame Wade's eldest brother, that chubby man, asked. Madame Wade's second brother also looked at her hopefully.

Madame Wade frowned as she considered the issue.

"My two brothers, please request the services of Apothecary Holmer [Huó'er'mo]." Madame Wade said calmly.

"Holmer? That old freak?" Her second brother immediately cried out in surprise.

Madame Wade said coldly, "According to Kerde's investigations, this mysterious 'Ley' fellow is at least a combatant of the eighth rank, perhaps even of the ninth. I don't have the ability to kill a combatant of the ninth rank face to face. It's best to have Apothecary Holmer take care of this affair. After all, Apothecary Holmer has killed a combatant of the ninth rank before.”

“But Holmer...” Madame Wade’s eldest brother hesitated as well.

“Hmph. If the two of you keep on acting like this, you’ll never accomplish anything. Even if I kill Keane, if you two act like this, do you think you will be fit to be city governors?” Madame Wade snorted coldly.

“Fine, sis. We’ll go speak to Apothecary Holmer right now!” Madame Wade’s two older brothers submitted to her.

.....

‘Apothecary Holmer’ was a title which Holmer had given himself.

Others viewed Holmer as a murderer, but Holmer viewed himself as an Apothecary.

And indeed, Holmer’s abilities in preserving life were quite high. Holmer was almost three hundred years old now. For a warrior of the sixth rank to live for nearly three hundred years was nearly impossible, but Holmer had done so. What’s more, Holmer looked as though he was in quite good shape. This was because Holmer often used various bizarre concoctions, allowing his three-hundred year old body to be as strong and healthy as a young man’s.

In front of Holmer, Madame Wade's two brothers were still rather nervous.

"Apothecary Homer, it would be best if you act quickly." Madame Wade's eldest brother urged. "Our people will deliver you to your target."

"Haha, first give me a down payment. I'll head out right away afterwards." Holmer laughed loudly.

"Down payment?" The two brothers looked at each other.

In the prefectural city of Cerre, the two of them had never been treated like this before. But after learning a bit about Holmer, the two brothers didn't dare to irritate this elderly, self-proclaimed 'Apothecary'. Once this old man got angry, no one knew how many people might die as a result.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 16, The Yulan River

The greatest river within the Yulan continent was, without a doubt, the Yulan River. The Yulan River's main stream flowed through the O'Brien Empire, the Yulan Empire, the Rhine Empire, and the Rohault Empire. Its countless tributaries were densely spread across each of the four empires.

It would be fair to say that the Yulan River nourished and gave life to over half of humanity.

"What a wide river." Seated on the deck of a multi-level ship, Linley stared with awe at the vast, turgid waters of the Yulan River.

This ship had been employed by Linley for his usage alone.

He spent ten thousand gold coins to have it take the group directly to the harbor nearest to Cerre City. That harbor was less than a hundred kilometers from Cerre.

As Linley had explained it, if they continued on their originally planned route, who knows how many more assassination attempts they would have to endure? It was better for them to directly commission a boat to take them southwards through the Yulan River.

This boat had been commissioned by Linley on the spot. Linley didn't believe that the people who worked on this ship all belonged to Madame Wade's forces. Madame Wade's influence did not, after all, hold much sway near Blackrock City.

"Big brother Ley." Jenne came out of the ship's cabin.

In the middle of this river, the wind was very strong. It blew against Jenne's long hair and long dress. Smiling, Jenne looked at Linley. Walking next to him, she sat down as well. "Big brother Ley, to think that originally, I had wanted to employ you for ten thousand gold coins." Jenne said these words with quite some embarrassment.

To Jenne and Keane, ten thousand gold coins was an enormous sum of money.

But how could they have imagined that Linley would go ahead and specially commission the services of this ship? The amount of money it cost to specially commission a large ship such as this was quite high. Although the distance between Cerre and Blackrock was not that high, the cost was ten thousand gold coins. And what's more, this was an extremely discounted price that they had given Linley as a show of respect to him, a powerful combatant who had a black panther for a companion.

So far, Linley had taken only a single gold coin out of the ten thousand gold coins he had been promised as his 'hiring fee'.

But by now, Linley himself had already spent ten thousand gold coins. It wasn't strange for Jenne to be embarrassed. Jenne and her brother had wanted to pay for the boat themselves...but of course, they currently had no money.

"Jenne, don't you think that the scenery here is quite beautiful?" Linley walked to the end of the deck, which was surrounded by protective steel chains.

Linley rested his hands against the steel chains, looking at the surroundings.

The rolling waves of the Yulan River could be seen for kilometers about. At its widest, the Yulan River was several kilometers wide; at its narrowest, it was still hundreds of meters wide. This was the 'mother river' for the entire Yulan continent. Who knows how many people it had given life to? The recorded history of the Yulan continent had stretched back for hundreds of thousands of years.

"This Yulan River must have existed for hundreds of thousands of years as well."

Gazing at the turgid river waters, Linley couldn't help but imagine what it would've been like, hundreds of thousands of years ago. As he lost himself within this massive, boundless river, Linley felt his heart become unbounded as well.

"The people and kingdoms from hundreds of thousands of years back have turned to dust long ago. Compared to the endless march of history, where kingdoms and empires rise then collapse, personal grudges and enmities are so meaningless and small."

Facing this vast river, Linley had a very strange feeling.

“Right now, the Yulan continent has six major political entities. The Four Great Empires, the Holy Union, and the Dark Alliance.” Linley’s heart was extremely calm.

Ever since he was young, Linley’s goals had been to realize his father’s dreams, and to stand at the highest levels of training and power.

But after his father died, Linley’s heart had fallen into a dark abyss. He had embarked on a road to revenge, a road of slaughter...and on this road, Linley had lost his Grandpa Doehring.

The three years of training he had spent in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts and his communing with nature had allowed nature to cleanse his soul. His heart was now as calm as still water, and he had transformed, like a butterfly emerging from the cocoon.

“Only by reaching the pinnacle of power can one realize one’s dreams. Despite being such an enormous organization, when the Holy Union came face to face with that Dylin, didn’t they choose to retreat?”

Linley had total confidence in himself.

“There will come a day when I, too, will reach those heights.” Staring at the raging waves, Linley felt nothing but great ambitions, as boundless as the river.

....

The captain of this ship had an extremely easy life. Although the rapids of the Yulan River were rather fast, it was still far safer than the sea. The captain even had time to casually chat with his sailors.

“Hey, did you guys see that black panther?” The captain said delightedly. “That’s a magical beast. You just wait and see. My own son will tame a magical beast of his own soon.”

“Captain, that’s a panther-type magical beast. Do you think your son could tame one of those?” The nearby sailors began to laugh. There wasn’t too much of a social stratification between a captain and his sailors. Both were men who made their livings on the sea.

The captain sighed emotionally. “High-class magical beasts. I really admire those people who can tame one. I remember how last year, when we went to the imperial capital, I saw the War God’s College accept new honorary disciples. Wow. You have no idea how many experts were there. Some were mounted on enormous magical beasts, while others were seated on flying magical beasts...so many experts all rushed there, struggling to be the one to qualify for that sole slot. Those battles and those movements between the experts...all I saw were blurs. They were too fast, too fast.”

The sailors all began to make wild boasts about the experts they had seen before.

In the O’Brien Empire, every single child wanted to become a powerful combatant, with being recruited by the War God’s College being their ultimate goal.

....

Linley was seated meditatively on the wooden deck, allowing the wind to blow against him. His adamantite heavy sword was on his legs. His eyes closed, Linley was quietly attuning with the boundless vastness of the Yulan River's waters.

"The power to impose is the power of the heavens, the power of the earth, the power of the boundless oceans." Linley's spirit had totally become one with the wind. He almost felt as though he could sense the vast riverbed of the Yulan River as well as the boundless land surrounding it.

Naturally, he could also sense that rushing river as well.

The ship continued to sail forward. They did stop occasionally in their journey so as to allow everyone to have some food, but Linley remained in the meditative posture on the deck, not eating at all.

In the blink of an eye, six days had passed.

"Sis, is big bro Ley gonna be ok? He hasn't eaten or drank anything." Keane pointed at Linley, who was still in the meditative posture, as he worriedly asked Jenne.

Jenne was somewhat worried as well, but she shook her head helplessly. "I don't know either. That Bebe won't let us get near him though."

"Don't worry." The captain of the ship walked over, chuckling. "Those high-level experts aren't like us ordinary folks. To them, even traversing a precipice ten thousand fathoms deep is of no issue. Not even a million man army can stop them. I've heard of people who, in the course of their meditative training, neither ate nor drank for months. At their level, not eating or drinking for months is actually quite normal." Although the captain used the word 'normal' when he spoke, a trace of envy was in his eyes.

Hearing the ship captain's words, Jenne and Keane began to feel even more astonished.

"Can it be?"

Suddenly, a murmur could be heard. Jenne, Keane, and the captain all turned their heads towards Linley, and when they did, they were shocked.

Holding the adamantine heavy sword in his hands, Linley jumped directly into the river.

"Big brother Ley!" Jenne shouted in alarm.

The three of them immediately ran over to the deck. Running to those locked steel chains, they stared down. To their amazement, they saw that Linley was currently standing on top of the water, the adamantine heavy sword in his hands. He floated up and down with the waves, but didn't sink down at all.

This sight stunned them all and left them gaping in shock.

Mid-air flight was something only a person at the Saint-level could do.

"Earth...fire...water...wind..." Linley murmured in a quiet voice, and then suddenly, he thrust his adamantine black sword towards the sky. As the adamantine heavy sword shot up, it seemed as though a hole had been pierced in the sky, as a dreadful, screeching howl could be heard from the air.

At the same time, all the water surrounding Linley suddenly erupted skywards like a geyser.

"Haha." Linley laughed loudly and happily, and then his body could be seen constantly moving and spinning about amidst the waves. The river water seemed to follow Linley's movements, as the heavy sword constantly shrieked and howled with each stroke.

All the river water in an area of a hundred meters around Linley had gone wild.

Sometimes, the water would all rise tens of meters into the sky, while at other times, they would form a giant whirlpool. Other times, the water would shoot out like sharp arrows in every direction, while at other times, it would just circle around Linley....

"Clang." A crisp, clear sound rang out from the heavy sword entering its sheath.

Those wild waters suddenly calmed down. In the blink of an eye, the Yulan River once more returned to its ordinary state, with just a few lingering effects. Striding on the waves, Linley didn't sink down at all.

But this time, Linley wasn't using his wind-style magic to counteract the effects of the weight of the adamantine heavy sword.

Rather, he was using his new insights on how to 'impose'.

"This 'imposing' force was the force of the heavens. It is also the force of the enormous earth and the boundless seas." A hint of a smile was on Linley's face. With a gentle leap, Linley vaulted back onto the deck of the ship.

This entire time, Linley had been focusing on understanding 'impose' through his affinity to earth and wind. But over the course of these six days of meditation, Linley was able to sense the movements of the waves, and he also remembered the blazing passion of the fire elemental essences in fire-style magic.

Dense, graceful, pliable, and passionate.

When these aspects of these four elements were merged with each other in a sword stroke, they could make the universe move. This was what 'impose' truly meant. In the past, Linley's understanding of 'impose' was nothing more than the most rudimentary of understandings.

"Big brother Ley, just now, what were you, what was...?" Keane was very excited, but he didn't know what to say.

Jenne was looking at Linley with awe as well.

What Linley had just done had truly stunned them. Even the captain, who was well-travelled and worldly, had never seen such an awesome spectacle.

"Just training." Linley said with a calm smile.

Although in the records of his clan, the highest level of using heavy weapons was this third level of 'impose', Linley suddenly had a certain feeling.

'Impose' was not the end of the road.

There was something even greater than it.

After reaching the 'impose' level, and in particular, after his soul could become attuned to nature, Linley always had this feeling...that there were even more profound truths awaiting him. Linley could dimly sense them, but he had no way of actually comprehending them.

"Battle-qi and brute strength are only the most basic of building blocks. In order for one's attacks to become more powerful, having a deep grasp of these profound principles is extremely important."

You might possess the power to lift something that weighed a million pounds, but if your movements were too stupid and clumsy, you might only be able to unleash 10% of your total power.

After training hard, you might be able to unleash 30%.

Experts would be able to unleash 70%.

But what Linley wanted to do was to unleash 100%. And, borrowing from the 'imposing force' of the universe itself, strike blows that were more powerful than he himself was physically capable of.

"Jenne, Keane, how far are we from the shore?" Linley asked.

"We are another day off," the nearby captain replied.

Linley nodded, then instructed, "How about this. Let's not get off too close to Cerre City. Let's get off at the harbor one stop removed from Cerre City."

"Yes, Lord Ley." Although the ship captain didn't understand the reason, he still agreed.

.....

Linley's choice to travel by river had thrown all of Madame Wade's forces into a state of confusion. That red-haired man, Kerde, in the end had managed to learn that Linley's group had travelled by ship and were advancing through the Yulan River.

No matter how powerful Apothecary Holmer was, he couldn't just leap past a river that was hundreds of meters across at its narrowest and get onto the opponent's boat, right? Even if he was able to get on the boat, they would no doubt be highly suspicious of his intentions.

Thus, they could only lie in ambush at the port, as if they were waiting for a hare to fall into their snare.

However...

Based on their calculations, the ship should've already arrived by now.

"What's going on? Shouldn't they have arrived yesterday?" Apothecary Holmer was resting in a commoner's house in a town that was located quite near the port.

"Master Holmer, please wait a bit longer." Madame Wade's subordinates were extremely frantic as well.

Suddenly, the door to the residence swung open, and one of Madame Wade's subordinates rushed in. He angrily said, "Master Holmer, they didn't stop at this harbor; they stopped at the previous one. They have already reached a small city named Redsand which is quite near Cerre. Most likely, they will reach the prefectural city of Cerre by tonight.

"They are arriving tonight?" Apothecary Holmer was startled.

"Quick, we need to head out immediately." Apothecary Holmer immediately ordered, and the entire group frantically hurried back in the direction of the prefectural city of Cerre.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 17, Poison Gas Fluttering in the Wind

The city of Redsand was a small one, and there were only a few tens of thousands of people within it.

When Linley's group left the boat, they headed directly towards the prefectural city of Cerre. On the way there, they stopped by Redsand City, preparing to have a quick lunch.

In a private room in the second floor of a hotel, Jenne and Keane both had excited smiles on their faces.

"Haha, by tonight, we will reach Cerre City. By then, we'll have much fewer troubles." Keane chortled.

Jenne nodded as well. "Once we reach Cerre, our aunt probably wouldn't openly move against us, right?"

"Jenne, Keane, things won't be as easy as you think." Linley laughed calmly. "Once we reach Cerre, it will actually be even more dangerous. Your so-called aunt isn't as timid and fearful as you seem to think she is."

When women decided to be venomous, they could be extremely terrifying.

During his three years in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Linley had encountered all sorts of cruel, vicious people. Jenne's aunt was totally capable of having Keane killed within Cerre City, and in a manner which didn't implicate her at all.

"Really?" Keane was somewhat afraid now. After all, he was a fourteen year old boy.

Linley laughed. "But don't worry too much. There's no need for us to rush to Cerre City this afternoon. Let's have a good rest in Redsand City first. Tomorrow morning, we will head out."

"Tomorrow morning?" Jenne and Keane both looked at Linley.

"If my predictions are correct, the people your aunt undoubtedly stationed at the river have already discovered that we disembarked one harbor early. They should be able to calculate that we would arrive at Cerre City at around nightfall. Thus...there is an 80% to 90% chance that they will be waiting for us there, tonight."

Linley could easily deduce such simple stratagems.

As long as one could think things through from another's perspective, one could easily lead them by the nose.

"Let's rest up and recover our strength. Tomorrow morning, we head out." Linley laughed loudly. "There's no rush right now. Let's have a good lunch."

Jenne and Keane revealed hints of smiles on their faces.

....

Indeed, as Linley had predicted, Apothecary Holmer and his group had headed directly for Cerre City. Madame Wade's people in Cerre City had received this information as well.

On the walls of Cerre city.

Madame Wade was leaning on a parapet, staring outside the city. Behind her were her two brothers as well as Apothecary Holmer. As for the city guards, they had all scattered at her command.

"Mr. Holmer, I'll have to trouble you to wait here tonight for a while." Madame Wade turned her head towards Holmer, smiling.

Apothecary Holmer knew his own limits.

He personally wasn't that powerful. The most powerful weapon available to him was his poisons. Naturally, he wouldn't want to offend this malicious person in front of him, who was the true power in Cerre city.

"Madame Wade, don't worry. Those siblings definitely will not live to arrive at Cerre city."

Holmer was very confident. "Even if they have an escort who is of the ninth rank, hmph. As long as he hasn't reached the Saint-level, I am confident in my ability to deal with him. But of course...he can't already know who I am."

If a combatant of the ninth rank were to recognize him and activate his battle-qi, the battle-qi would be sufficient to easily repel the poison.

"Mr. Holmer, all these years, you've resided here in Cerre City. You aren't a person who likes to show yourself either. How many people could have possibly seen you? What's more, I've heard that you, Mr. Holmer, possess the ability to change your appearance?" Madame Wade laughed as she looked at Holmer.

Holmer laughed happily. Stroking his beard, he said, "Haha. Madame Wade, change my appearance? You praise me too highly. All I do is to use some medicinal concoctions to change the color of my skin and hair. And then a little makeup...even people who know me, as long as they don't carefully inspect me, won't be able to recognize me."

Madame Wade smiled as she nodded. "Then I leave everything in your hands, Mr. Holmer. Tonight, I will stay in the nearby hotel and await your good news."

Holmer laughed confidently.

....

But as time went on, Madame Wade, who was in that hotel nearest to the city walls, was beginning to grow confused. Because quite soon, the city gates would close for the night.

The rule of Cerre City was that at ten o'clock sharp, the gates would be shut.

But Jenne and Keane's group still had yet to arrive. Based on Madame Wade's information, Jenne's group had arrived at Redsand City by lunchtime. Even if they travelled slowly, they should've reached here by now.

Ten o'clock arrived.

Those enormous city gates began to slowly close as a large number of guards pushed at them. Apothecary Holmer, who had meticulously prepared for this battle, descended from the walls with a belly full of anger. Madame Wade also walked out of the hotel.

"Madame Wade, what is this?" Holmer was truly upset now.

After receiving the news, he had run all the way back from the harbor to the city. The bumpy, long ride was quite miserable for this 300-year old Holmer.

And then, he had stood up there on the walls for half the night, with the icy wind blowing at him the entire time.

And now, the city gates were shutting. But no one came.

"Who knows what is going on with that group of people. I'm afraid they might have taken a rest at Redsand City. Mr. Holmer, why don't you rest here at the hotel tonight? Let's see what tomorrow brings." Madame Wade was not in a good mood either.

"That's the only option we have right now." Holmer was extremely disgruntled.

....

The next dawn, just as the city gates opened, Holmer began to quietly wait for them to arrive. By 9 o'clock in the morning, Holmer was truly furious.

Holmer rushed down from the city walls and charged directly into the second floor of the hotel.

"Madame Wade. If they aren't coming to us, I'll go to them." Holmer said directly. "Give me some men, at least one of whom recognizes those two siblings."

Madame Wade approved of this idea. "Alright. Then I'll have to trouble you, Mr. Holmer, to make this trip."

"This time, I really have to give these people a taste of my power." Holmer said quietly, his eyes filled with a murderous look.

After purchasing a carriage in Redsand City, Jenne and Keane entered the carriage, with the old servant, Lambert, being the driver. As for Linley, he rode on the back of his Blackcloud Panther, Haeru.

Haeru was more than two meters tall and very broad-backed. His fur was very smooth and soft as well.

Riding on the Blackcloud Panther, Linley couldn't feel any bumps in the road as well. The ride was far more comfortable than that of a horse or a carriage. What's more, the Blackcloud Panther ran up mountains as easily as it ran on prairies.

"Big brother Ley. What time is it now?" Keane poked his head out of the carriage and asked Linley.

Linley glanced at him. "Don't be impatient. It's only ten o'clock. We most likely will arrive at Cerre City by eleven o'clock."

The Blackcloud Panther which Linley was riding on was very awe-inspiring. Everyone on the road who saw Linley all moved aside early on to allow Linley the right of way.

"Giddyup, giddyup!"

From far away, the sound of hoof steps could be heard. Soon, three mounted knights could be seen in the distance, but as soon as they saw Linley, all three were terrified and came to a halt.

"What a massive panther." One of the knights sighed, staring at the black panther Linley was riding.

"Stop staring. Let's move." The other knight said.

Just at this time, another stallion trotted past them. This stallion was ridden by a kindly looking old hunchback with pure white hair. The speed of the old man's horse was fairly slow, and it clip-clopped its way forward.

"Haha, look at him. He's so old, but still rides a horse. Haha..." One of the knights laughed loudly.

"Let's go. We have business to attend to."

The three knights laughed calmly, continuing on their way. Right at this time, that hunchbacked old man raised his head to glance at Linley's group. This hunchback immediately understood.

Per their pre-arranged agreement, if they encountered the targets, the knights would say, "Haha, look at him. He's so old, but still rides a horse." What's more, Holmer also knew that the mysterious expert had a black panther as a pet.

....

"Those three knights don't have any knightly chivalry at all." Keane, who had seen all this through the window, said unhappily once the three knights left.

But Linley frowned as he stared at the hunchback.

The hunchback rode the horse in a manner that did indeed inspire concern. Just from the look of him, one could tell that he was extremely old. Although the horse wasn't moving too fast, the hunchback continued to sway back and forth on the horse's back, as though he could fall off at any moment. His legs didn't seem to be too firmly clamped on the horse's back either.

Right at this moment, a carriage appeared from behind the old hunchback as well.

"fk off, you old fart." One of the knights cursed loudly. The hunchback immediately whipped his horse, moving it to the side of the road.

"Ahhh!"

When the horse was roughly ten or so meters away from Linley's group, the old hunchback swayed again and fell off his horse.

"The old grandpa fell off!" Keane, seeing this from through the window, immediately pushed open the door to come out and help.

But just as the old man fell off, a light blue wave of gas emanated from his body. That light blue gas was extremely thin and light, so much so that if someone wasn't specifically looking for it, it would be quite hard to discern.

The wind just so happened to be blowing from the east, and it blew the gas directly towards Linley. But of course, the first people to be impacted by the poison gas was the people in the carriage which had just passed by.

"Crumple."

One knight after another collapsed from their horses to the ground, fresh blood leaking out of their noses.

"Hrm?" Linley also felt that something in his body seemed off, and his head felt a little dizzy.

"Not good. Poison." Attuned to the wind, Linley could clearly sense that a light blue poisonous gas was wafting in his direction. By now, Linley had already taken two breaths of it.

The Dragonblood battle-qi in Linley's body immediately rose up, absorbing all of the poisonous gas in Linley's body, with none of it harming him at all.

This poisonous gas was a poison which Holmer had specially designed to be used against humans, based on human biology.

But Holmer could never have imagined that Linley was very different, biologically speaking, from ordinary people. Within his veins was the bloodline of the Dragonblood Warriors, an ancestral bloodline that was many times more exalted than even the bloodlines of magical beasts. In the past, even the magicite core of the Armored Razorback Wyrms had been absorbed and consumed by just the small amount of Dragonblood that was in Linley's veins at that time.

Normal people simply couldn't imagine or understand the special abilities and attributes of each of the Four Supreme Warriors.

This sort of poison gas couldn't hurt a Dragonblood Warrior at all.

"Wind."

Based on his mastery of wind elemental essence granted to him by being a wind-style magus, Linley immediately controlled the air around him to blow the wind backwards. The poisonous gas immediately blew back towards the east. By now, the squad of knights that were between the 'hunchback' Holmer and Linley had all died.

The poisonous gas blew back towards Holmer, but he didn't dodge. He was not afraid of his own poisons. But what he was afraid of...was Linley.

"Giddyup, giddyup!" Holmer suddenly became quite agile, leaping back onto his horse and then sending it galloping east as fast as he could.

"Haeru." Linley said in a cold voice.

"Swooooosh."

The Blackcloud Panther's speed was terrifyingly fast, many times faster than an ordinary stallion.

In the blink of an eye, he traversed several hundred meters, and actually passed by Holmer, landing in front of him. All that had been visible during this motion was a black blur.

Seeing Linley suddenly appear in front of him, Holmer immediately grew frantic.

"My friend, I was paid by others to do this. If you are willing to spare me, I will give you as much gold as you wish." Although Holmer was more than three hundred years old, he didn't want to die yet.

Thinking back to what just happened, Linley still felt afraid.

Fortunately, he had managed to react in time and blow the poison gas back before it had entered the carriage.

"Poison gas? Are you a necromancer?" Linley looked at Holmer.

"Necromancer?" Holmer was startled, then shook his head. "No. I'm an apothecary. My friend, I am quite wealthy. Ten thousand gold coins? Twenty thousand? Or perhaps, a hundred thousand?" At a time like this, Holmer was still trying to save money.

But Linley couldn't even be bothered to speak to him.

"Haeru, deal with it."

Linley hopped off the black panther, heading back towards the carriage. As for the Blackcloud Panther, he revealed his sharp fangs, and then pounced directly towards Holmer.

“Ah! A million! Ten million! Ah!!!!” Before Holmer had even finished calling out, he had been flattened by a single blow from the Blackcloud Panther’s massive paw.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 18, The Prefectural City of Cerre

The desolate wilderness.

The tens of people escorting the carriage were all dead. The black blood oozing from their bodies made the scene all the more sinister. Holmer, in turn, had been smashed to death by a single blow from Haeru. Jenne and Keane, who had watched this all from the carriage, were totally stunned.

“Big brother Ley.” Keane called out in alarm. Jenne’s face was rather pale as well.

Just as Linley was about to respond, that old servant, Lambert, who was driving the carriage suddenly called out in surprise as he stared at the corpse of Holmer. “Him! He’s the deadliest killer in Cerre City, Holmer. That old freak who styled himself an apothecary.”

“Holmer? Grandpa Lambert, who are you talking about?” Keane looked at Lambert.

Lambert took a deep breath. “Young master, young miss, this Holmer was an extremely dangerous individual within Cerre City. In the past, when I was serving your mother in the city, I encountered him a few times. At the time, Count Wade had mentioned this Holmer to your mother as well. This Holmer is an extremely skilled user of poisons. Although he is only a warrior of the sixth rank, he once killed a combatant of the ninth rank.”

Only now did Jenne and Keane understand.

Linley, listening to the side, nodded as well.

“This Holmer is extremely greedy. Most likely, his actions this time were at the direction of the senior madame as well.” Lambert’s face was extremely solemn. “The senior madame really has her mind set on killing you!”

“With big brother Ley, we have nothing to fear!” Keane was very confident. Jenne also looked confidently at Linley.

“Enough. Let’s head out immediately so we can arrive sooner at Cerre.” Linley said directly. Linley’s group immediately made haste towards the prefectural city of Cerre, leaving behind a cloud of dust on the desolate road.

The prefectural city of Cerre. This was a city with around two to three hundred thousand people. Its red walls stretched off into the distance. In terms of architecture, the buildings of Cerre tended towards the ornate.

Keane pushed open the door to the carriage. Seeing the beautiful, majestic city in front of them, Keane’s heart was filled with boundless ambition. His eyes lit up, and he said, “From this day forth, I shall be the master of this prefectural city.”

Outside the city gates.

"Black panther?" When the gate guards saw Linley's mount from the distance, they had immediately called out to the other guards nearby, "Quick, someone go speak with the madame. The person she spoke of is arriving."

"Okay."

A gate guard immediately ran towards the hotel located nearest to the city gates, rushing up to the second floor. At this moment, there was a warrior stationed outside the stairway. Seeing that it was a gate guard who was running this way, the warrior allowed him passage.

"Madame Countess." The guard fell respectfully to one knee.

"Madame Countess, the expert riding a black panther which you spoke of has arrived. There is a carriage behind him."

"What?" Before Madame Wade had reacted, the two brothers of her who were standing behind her called out in alarm.

Madame Wade frowned. "Leave for now."

"Yes." The guard respectfully withdrew.

Right now, both of Madame Wade's brothers were growing frantic. Her eldest brother hurriedly said, "Sis, they actually survived their journey to Cerre. Can it be that Holmer, that old freak, failed?"

"Hard to say."

Madame Wade was frowning. "Perhaps that expert with the black panther who was escorting those two countryside-raised siblings didn't come on the main road from Redsand City. Perhaps they intentionally took a detour and caused Holmer and the others to miss them."

Hearing her words, her two brothers couldn't help but nod.

Indeed, it was very possible that their opponents had craftily taken a roundabout path enroute to Cerre City.

"Then what should we now do?" Madame Wade's two brothers looked at her.

"Go down and welcome them." A hint of a smile was on Madame Wade's face. "My two darling children have returned, after suffering for so many years. They are finally back. As their loving aunt, how can I not go welcome them?"

And as she spoke, Madame Wade headed down the stairs.

Right as they walked out of the main door of the hotel, Madame Wade saw the tall and sturdy man with a heavy sword on his back who was riding a handsome black panther, as well as the familiar face of Lambert.

"Oh, Lambert, long time no see." Madame Wade immediately called out in a high pitched voice.

Linley, Jenne, Keane, and Lambert all swung their heads to look at her. Lambert started, then respectfully said, "Senior madame."

Madame Wade laughed warmly. "These two children should be Jenne and Keane. Jenne is even more beautiful than before, and she looks more like her mother now as well. Keane isn't the child that he used to be either. He's even more handsome now."

Jenne and Keane could both recognize Madame Wade.

Although nearly eight years had passed, Madame Wade's appearance hadn't changed much, with the exception of a slight wrinkle at the corner of her eyes.

"Senior madame." Jenne and Keane both paid their respects.

"Wonderful, wonderful. And there's no need to stand on courtesy." Madame Wade chortled, then looked at Linley. "And this is?"

"This is big brother Ley." Keane hurriedly answered.

"Ley?" Madame Wade's eyelids flickered, then she laughed. "Oh, Mr. Ley. I imagine it must have been you who protected and escorted them to Cerre City. I absolutely must thank you on behalf of Jenne and Keane. Come, let's all go to the castle. Tonight, I am going to arrange a magnificent banquet for my two poor little children."

The castle of the city governor was a square block, and was quite an imposing sight.

"What a useless fellow." After hearing the news which the messenger knights had delivered, Madame Wade was even more furious.

Holmer had been a chess piece that she had trusted.

But now that Holmer had failed, Madame Wade felt extremely frustrated.

"With that Mr. Ley present, it will very hard for me to kill Keane." Madame Wade was extremely angry. "Poison? The poison used by ordinary poison experts won't be able to escape detection. Assassins? How many can deal with this Ley?"

Madame Wade's eyes slowly sharpened.

"Looks like there's only that one method left." The worry disappeared from Madame Wade's eyes. The only thing left was confidence and callousness.

Within the enormous dining room of the castle, the giant glass chandelier had been lit, casting its resplendent, bewitching light upon the room. All of the nobles of Cerre City were present today.

"I've heard that Count Wade's son has returned. I wonder how Madame Wade will deal with this."

"Who knows? But Madame Wade definitely will not give up her authority."

"Madame Wade is extremely vicious. Sadly for her, her baby boy died in the arms of a woman. What a joke." The various nobles chatted in soft tones.

Whom amongst them did not know that Madame Wade was a tyrannical, domineering woman? But since they lived in Cerre City, at most they would mock her in private. They didn't dare to publicly offend her.

"Madame Wade has arrived."

Instantly, all of the gossiping nobles ceased their discourse. They all turned to look towards Madame Wade, who had just descended from the stairway. Madame Wade still looked as stately and arrogant as she ever had.

Madame Wade enjoyed the attention of the people present. She tilted her head up slightly as she descended.

"Everyone." Madame Wade laughed. "Today is a joyous occasion. Those two poor children of mine, who have suffered outside for eight years, have finally returned today."

At this time, two more people suddenly appeared at the stairway.

One was a young man wearing a black gentleman's suit, while the other was a golden-haired young lady wearing a white, full-bodied dress. They came out together, and the eyes of many nobles lit up.

Although Jenne was dressed very simply, when matched with her appearance, her figure, and her kind, innocent demeanor, she was a soul-stirring sight. Many young nobles present made up their minds to go over later and ask who that girl was.

"Jenne, Keane, come." Madame Wade called out to them warmly.

Jenne and Keane walked down the stairway together, standing besides Madame Wade. Madame Wade called out warmly, "This is Jenne. Look, what a beautiful girl she is. And this handsome young man is Keane." Madame Wade sighed emotionally. "Jenne and Keane have finally escaped their bitter lives. But their mother, my dear sister..." Madame Wade's eyes grew red, as though she were about to cry.

"Senior madame, if the second madame knew how much you cared about her, she would undoubtedly be very moved." An ancient voice rang out, and Lambert walked in with Linley by his side.

Madame Wade glanced at Lambert.

Lambert was previously the second madame's most faithful servant. Even after the second madame had fallen into dire straits, he continued to follow her without complaint.

Jenne and Keane felt extremely unhappy as well.

They knew that the reason for their mother's deaths and those eight bitter years they had suffered were all caused by this senior madame in front of them. Jenne knew how to hide her thoughts, but the fourteen year old Keane ridiculed angrily, "Senior madame, why didn't you ever come visit us during these eight years? We've missed you so terribly."

Madame Wade's facial expression didn't change at all. She sighed, "All these years, I've been working on behalf of Cerre City, and I've never had time. Every time I think about this, I feel I've mistreated the two of you."

Linley suddenly laughed and said directly, "Madame Wade, Count Wade has now passed away, and Keane is his successor. The reason he has returned this time is to assume the position of city governor. Madame Wade, I wonder if you have already decided on a date for Keane to assume the city governor's position?"

Everyone in the dining room fell silent upon hearing these words.

All of the nobles present knew that the main act of the play was starting.

At the same time, all of the nobles stared at Linley in puzzlement. They didn't know where this youngster had come from, for him to dare to so boldly and directly say these words.

"Mr. Ley." Madame Wade's face grew hard, and she said coldly, "As their aunt, I must thank you for escorting Jenne and Keane to Cerre City. But the question of Keane taking over the governorship is an internal affair of our clans. It isn't very appropriate for you, an outsider, to get involved, is it?"

Keane immediately refuted, "And who says big brother Ley is an outsider?"

"If he isn't an outsider, what is he?" Madame Wade's face was very cold.

Keane was startled, then he looked up at Linley and said, "Big brother Ley is, is, is my sister's fiancé. How could he be an outsider?"

"Fiancé?" Madame Wade was flabbergasted.

Jenne was flabbergasted.

Linley was flabbergasted.

"Fiancé?" Linley immediately looked at Keane. Keane only winked at Linley. Linley immediately understood what Keane meant.

Right at this moment, Jenne's face turned red.

"How about that?" Keane arrogantly tilted his head up. "My brother-in-law to be is qualified to discuss this, isn't he? Aunt, my father is dead, as is my elder brother. I am now the primary successor."

Madame Wade was silent.

All of the people present looked at Madame Wade. Keane's position as primary successor to the governorship was indisputable and protected by imperial law. They wanted to see how Madame Wade would handle it.

"Haha, Keane, what's the rush?" Madame Wade laughed. "Your father is dead, and you are his only surviving son. Naturally, you are his primary successor. The governorship is yours, of course. No one will take it from you."

Linley looked suspiciously at Madame Wade.

Linley wasn't alone. Everyone's hearts were filled with suspicion. Madame Wade wasn't the sort to so easily give up.

"Then thank you, aunt." Keane smiled. "Then when shall I assume the governorship?" Madame Wade chuckled, "No rush, no rush. Right now, Keane, you aren't of age yet. How about this. In two years, when you reach the age of maturity, you can assume the governorship."

"Two years later?" Keane stared.

Madame Wade was beaming. "Keane, be a good boy. You aren't of age yet. You don't have enough ability to manage a city. Don't worry. Two years from now, you will definitely be the governor of the prefectural city of Cerre."

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 19, Search and Seizure

Assume the governorship two years from now? Who knows what would happen within these two years? How could Keane endure two years under the rule of Madame Wade?

"I think I already have the necessary ability." Keane said firmly.

Madame Wade's face turned slightly more solemn. "Keane, be calm. You are still only a child. The governor of the prefectural city of Cerre is in charge of hundreds of thousands of citizens. Right now, you aren't capable of assuming this heavy responsibility."

At this time, Jenne, who was next to Keane, spoke. "Aunt, imperial law makes no requirements with regards to a person having to be of the age of maturity before assuming a governorship."

Madame Wade looked at Jenne.

Not backing down in the slightest, Jenne stared back at Madame Wade. The two women of different ages just stared at each other.

"True." Madame Wade laughed. "Imperial law does not openly state that one must be of age before assuming the governorship of a city. However..."

Madame Wade seemed a bit saddened. "Not long ago, after your father passed away, when the clan learned about this news, they had originally planned to let your elder brother assume the governorship. But alas, my poor child..."

"After they learned that Keane was only fourteen, the clan ordered that as the prefectural city of Cerre was one of the important prefectural city's of the Northwest Administrative Province, and is located very close to the provincial capital of Basil [Ba'si'er], the management of Cerre is an important matter. The clan ordered that Keane must be of age before assuming the governorship."

"The clan?"

Jenne and Keane were both startled.

Hearing this order from 'the clan', both Jenne and Keane were caught off-guard. As a collateral descendant of the Jacques [Jia'ke'si] clan, Jenne and Keane knew what it meant for the clan to issue an order.

"Aunt, did the clan truly issue such a decree?" Jenne stared at Madame Wade.

Madame Wade frowned as she looked at Jenne. "Jenne. Do you think I would dare to make a false decree on behalf of the clan? Mm. Before Keane is able to assume the governorship, all matters in the prefectural city are for me to manage."

"As the future governor, I have the authority to select my own steward." Keane called out unhappily.

Madame Wade stared coldly towards Keane.

Right at this time, Linley, who had been silent the entire time, suddenly spoke. "Madame Wade. The clan that you spoke of didn't issue the order for you specifically to be the steward of the city on behalf of the governor, did they?"

Madame Wade was stunned.

No matter how daring she was, she didn't dare to fabricate an order from the clan.

Jenne and Keane were both members of the Jacques clan by blood, while the Jacques clan itself was one of the most powerful, flourishing clans within the O'Brien Empire.

The entire Northwest Administrative Province, one of the seven great provinces of the O'Brien Empire, was under the management and control of the Jacques clan.

Jenne and Keane's father, Wade Jacques, was only a collateral descendant of the Jacques clan, not a lineal descendant. If it wasn't because of the support of the Jacques clan, how could a coward like Wade Jacques have assumed the position of city governor?

But now, Wade was dead.

In the eyes of the Jacques clan, the prefectural city of Cerre naturally would have to remain in the custody and management of the Jacques clan.

Although Madame Wade had married Wade Jacques, she herself did not, after all, carry any Jacques blood. It wasn't likely that the Jacques clan would allow Madame Wade to assume the position of Stewart of the city of Cerre.

"Hmph, if it wasn't for those old relics in the clan..." Madame Wade was inwardly hateful.

No matter how formidable Madame Wade was, there was no way she could compete against the clan. A single word from them could turn her, a noble lady, into a beggar.

"I'm not of the age of maturity yet, but my sister is. I will send people to the provincial capital of Basil. I trust that the elders of the clan will allow my sister to be the steward of the city, rather than you!"

Keane said forcefully.

There was no way that the enmity between Jenne, Keane, and Madame Wade could be resolved.

In just a few words, it had been totally exposed for everyone to see at this dinner. After all, Keane and Jenne's mother had been hounded to her death by Madame Wade. Jenne and Keane, as well, had been the victim of repeated assassination attempts at Madame Wade's orders on this trip.

“Fine. Fine. If you have the ability to do so, go ask the clan. I really want to see for myself if the clan will hand the stewardship of the prefectural city of Cerre to an eighteen year old girl!” Madame Wade raised her chin, speaking arrogantly.

Keane’s face was filled with stubbornness as well.

A young man at fourteen years of age was at his most rebellious. The more arrogant Madame Wade was, the more Keane would retaliate against her. Keane believed that the clan would definitely stand on his side. He was, after all, a member of the clan.

After the dinner banquet.

Linley, Jenne, Lambert, and Keane were all together. After asking a few questions, Linley finally realized how enormous and powerful the Jacques clan of Jenne and Keane was.

And their father, Wade Jacques, was nothing more than a collateral descendant and not part of the ruling line.

The true ruling branch of the clan had an astonishing amount of power. The entire Northwest Administrative Province was under their control, and what’s more, the control was hereditary. The Jacques clan had already managed the Northwest Administrative Province for around a thousand years.

“The imperial clan of the O’Brien Empire really is very confident, to allow a single clan to manage one of his provinces for a thousand years.” Linley sighed in amazement.

The amount of territory a province controlled was greater than the amount of territory the Kingdom of Fenlai had.

To allow a clan to manage a province for so long was to allow a clan to easily accumulate an astonishing amount of power. This was a common reason for eventual rebellion and an empire breaking down.

But the imperial clan of the O’Brien Empire was extremely confident.

Because...they had the War God, as well as the large number of powerful combatants of the War God’s College. Additionally, the two most important administrative provinces in the O’Brien Empire, the ‘Central Administrative Province’ and the ‘O’Brien Administrative Province’, were both under the control of the imperial clan.

“As long as the War God is present, not a single clan dares rebel. Even if the War God doesn’t intervene, the disciples his War God’s College had admitted over the past thousands of years now constitute an astonishingly formidable force.”

Linley understood.

In the face of absolute power, those so-called armies were just a joke. Armies were only used as a show of force for the commoners. Only Saint-level combatants could truly determine the fate of a nation.

"The Jacques clan must be extremely powerful, after having managed the Northwest Administrative Province for a thousand years." Linley said to himself.

"Hmph, that venomous woman. I refuse to believe the clan will support her." Keane said angrily.

Lambert only chuckled. "Young master, don't worry. If the clan were likely to support her, she wouldn't have acted the way she did tonight."

Indeed.

Right now, Madame Wade was both very angry and very frustrated. "How dare those two countryside siblings be so wild and arrogant? It's a pity that I didn't send someone to kill them years ago. If I had, I wouldn't have so many problems today."

In the past, Madame Wade had believed that her own son was sure to be the next governor of the prefectural city of Cerre.

But she didn't expect that her son would die so early.

"Holmer, that fool. Three hundred years of life were wasted on an idiot." Cold light glittered in Madame Wade's eyes. "Over the course of three hundred years, Holmer must have accumulated quite a bit of wealth."

....

Late night. Cerre City was very peaceful.

Holmer's residence was located in the east district of Cerre. It took up an extremely large amount of land, and had many beautiful female servants. Holmer was quite a lecherous man.

Suddenly, many hoof steps could be heard.

Two guards at the gate of Holmer's residence looked suspiciously towards the outside. Instantly, their faces turned pale. A large number of armored city guards had clustered around the main gate.

"Open the gate." A tall, arrogant knight clad in white metal armor and riding a fine stallion called out loudly.

Madame Wade and her two elder brothers were there as well, smiling as they watched. Holmer's clan didn't have any experts. With his death, his clan had become a piece of fresh meat which anyone could take.

The main gate slowly opened.

"Milords, why have you come here so late at night?" A middle-aged man ran out in a state of partial undress. He had just come running from his bed.

"Madame Countess." He suddenly saw Madame Wade was here, and his heart instantly shook.

Madame Wade said coldly, "Based on our evidence, Holmer is under suspicion of having attempted to assassinate Keane, the successor to the governorship of Cerre. All members of Holmer's clan are to be arrested, and all of the clan's possessions are to be searched and seized."

Hearing these words, the man's legs couldn't help but feel soft, and he fell to his knees.

"No! Madame Countess." The middle-aged man said hurriedly. "My grandfather was invited by your two brothers..."

"You dare to slander a noble clan? Your crimes increase a level in severity. Kill him." Madame Wade's face turned cold.

The leading knight suddenly thrust forward with his lance, striking like a serpent from its lair. With a 'swish' sound, the lance pierced through the throat of that middle-aged man.

Madame Wade's eldest brother, putting on a brave display, called out loudly, "Everyone, hurry up!"

Those city guards immediately charged into the manor like a pack of ravenous wolves and tigers. The thing which these city guards loved to do the most was search and seizures. Because when they carried these activities out, they would always be able to secretly take a few things for themselves.

But of course, they wouldn't dare take too much, as many people were present and watching.

“What are you doing? What are you doing?!”

A hastily dressed man and woman rushed out, shouting loudly. Some of the manor guards also hefted their weapons, but none of them dared to act.

Because...they could tell that these were the city guards.

How would the private guards of a manor dare to struggle against the city guards?

“Holmer is under suspicion of having attempted to kill young master Keane. All members of Holmer’s clan are to be arrested. Those who resist, kill them.” The knight leader said coldly. When the members of Holmer’s clan heard this order, they were all stunned.

In the face of the assault by the ferocious city guards, many people were taken without a struggle.

But there were still a number of people who were unwilling to surrender, and they turned tail to flee. The soldiers of the city guard chased after them, one by one.

“That Wade-whore.” A white-haired old man said. “She asked Grandpa to help her. Now that Grandpa is dead, she’s actually coming to ransack our manor. How venomous.”

That white-haired old man left a secret room, holding three magiccrystal cards.

Holmer was three hundred years old. Of his sons, only two were still alive; the other had died of old age. The two remaining sons were the youngest ones. As for grandsons...the oldest grandchildren of his were two hundred, while the youngest were only around thirty.

"Stop!" A city guard suddenly noticed the old man.

The old man threw a handful of dust out.

"Uhhhh." The guard's face immediately turned blue. He grabbed at his throat, emitting several pained noises, then collapsed. He was dead.

With a sneer, the old man very agilely ran towards a small alleyway.

"Hold it!" A loud shout from far away.

The old man didn't pay it any heed, increasing his speed instead.

"Swish." An arrow pierced through the air at astonishing speed, howling as it pierced into the old man's back.

The handsome, golden-haired knight lowered his bow. With a cold laugh, he said, "You thought you could run? In your dreams. Go search his body and see if he has any magic crystal cards."

"Yes, milord."

....

Not only was the manor itself filled with people; a large ring had formed around the manor as well. Not a single member of Holmer's clan had been able to flee. Although some members of the clan knew how to use poison, they were far inferior to Holmer.

Within the main hall of Holmer's manor.

Madame Wade and her two brothers were staring at a pile of treasure and magicrystal cards.

"This old fart's money-making abilities were quite impressive." Madame Wade's older brother's eyes were gleaming.

Madame Wade laughed calmly. "The two of you shouldn't lust after a small amount like this. When we take over control of the city's governorship, our wealth will be far greater than this."

In the air, high above Holmer's manor.

Linley had a pair of translucent wings on his back. He was flying in the air, watching the looting and ransacking scene below in Holmer's manor.

"Madame Wade really is vicious and ruthless. This Holmer really is quite unfortunate." In mid-air, Linley laughed calmly as he watched all of this happen.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 20, The Summer Inferno

This had been a peaceful night. The miserable screams of the people of Holmer's clan being slaughtered were thus all the more jarring to the ear. Those sounds had travelled very far. Even Jenne and Keane, who were within the castle, could hear them.

"What is that?"

Keane ran out dressed in his sleepwear, while Jenne came out with her hair undone. The two siblings curiously walked out towards the direction of the castle gates. As for the extremely cautious old servant, Lambert, he had run to the castle gates already.

"By the Madame's orders, no one is permitted to leave the castle at night."

Two castle guards standing at the gate formed a cross with their spears, forbidding entry, as they spoke coldly to Lambert.

"What is going on? The two of you, move!" Keane snapped at them.

Seeing that Keane and Jenne had come, the two castle guards exchanged glances. Everyone in the castle knew that Keane was the successor to the governorship, but at the same time, Madame Wade wasn't going to easily give up her power.

"Young master Keane, Miss Jenne. We are very sorry, but the Madame has ordered that no one is to leave the castle at night. Please go back and rest." The taller of the two guards spoke.

Keane's face turned cold. "Out of my way."

The taller guard didn't budge. He only begged painfully, "Young master Keane, please don't make things difficult for us. If you force us to let you pass, you'll be killing us. We really can't afford to disobey the Madame's orders."

Keane was boiling with rage.

By his side, Jenne said to him, "Enough, Keane. Let's not make things difficult for them. They are in a very pitiable situation."

"Thank you, Miss Jenne! Thank you, Miss Jenne!" Those two guards hurriedly said. In their hearts, they felt very grateful to Jenne. Jenne was as beautiful as a holy angel, and she possessed a kindly soul as well.

Jenne asked gently, "May I ask, what exactly happened outside? I heard screaming. It seems as though there was some sort of disaster in the east district of the city."

The taller guard said in a low voice, "Miss Jenne, not too long ago, the Madame led a group of people out of the castle, and quite a large number of city guards passed through as well."

"Aunt? City guards?" Jenne and Keane were both confused.

Why was Madame Wade leading a large group of city guards so late at night?

"Miss, young master. Let's sit down and rest for now." Lambert pointed at a nearby stone bench. Jenne and Keane nodded, then walked over, the three of them sitting down.

Jenne, Keane, and Lambert were all extremely irritated.

Madame Wade's existence was like having a fishbone stuck in their throats, causing them a great deal of misery.

"That damn woman wants to use me not being of age as an excuse to try and force me to wait two years. Hrmph. Two years. Within those two years, I probably would have been killed by her long ago." Keane cursed in a low voice.

Jenne nodded as well.

The two siblings knew very well that they couldn't allow Madame Wade to continue to act as she pleased.

"Young miss, young master. The senior madame has been in charge of Cerre for quite a long time. The city guards as well as the castle guards all obey her orders. The senior madame's prestige is at a very high level. If young master Keane is unable to become the governor, it really will be very hard for us to fight against her. After all...there are too few people here who whole-heartedly support us." Lambert was very resigned.

Jenne, Keane, and Lambert were all silent.

Within Cerre, there were very few people who supported them. Perhaps even if there were people who supported them, they wouldn't dare to do so openly. In the prefectural city of Cerre, Madame Wade was like a local tyrant.

"Whoosh."

A wind began to blow.

"Who is it?!" The two gate guards cautiously raised their heads, and saw a man dressed in a black warrior's outfit and wearing a heavy black sword on his back descend from the air.

"Me." Linley looked backwards at the guards.

Instantly, the two guards no longer dared to speak. They had heard of how powerful Linley was. At these guards' level of power, they couldn't even dream of stopping Linley.

"Big brother Ley." Jenne and Keane stood up.

Linley turned to look at them.

Summer was just starting, and the temperatures at night were still fairly high. Keane and Jenne were only dressed in simple sleepwear, and their hair was all mussed.

"Big brother Ley, what exactly is going on outside? Why is it so noisy?" Keane looked at Linley and asked.

Linley said casually, "Madame Wade led a group of city guards to Holmer's clan manor and launched a search and seizure operation. Tell me, how could it not be noisy?"

"Search and seizure?" Jenne and Keane were stunned.

"Holmer's clan?" Lambert was greatly shocked as well.

Linley casually sat down on another end of the long bench. Laughing, he said, "Just wait and rest here for a bit. Very soon, you'll hear some good news."

"Good news? Can it be that she intends to give us the money she's seized from that bastard?" Keane cursed quietly.

"BOOM!"

Right at this moment, a thunderous explosion could be heard from the east. The explosive sound was so noisy, it sounded like several dozen thunderbolts going off at once. This explosion probably woke up at least half of the residents of Cerre City.

"What was that?" Jenne, Keane, and Lambert jumped to their feet in shock.

The nearby guards, as well as the castle servants and female attendants all stared eastwards as well, and as they did, they saw that blazing flames were rising into the sky from the east.

"How could there be such a large inferno? And where did that explosion come from?" Linley looked questioningly towards the east as well.

All of the people in the castle were mystified. They all waited quietly for the city guards to return, as well as Madame Wade. Perhaps they would know what was causing that huge inferno in the east, or that massive explosion.

After a while...

A chorus of hoof steps could be heard outside the castle, followed by countless shouts. Immediately following these shouts were a series of frantic knocking sounds from the gate that came as quickly as rain drops in a storm.

"Bam!" "Bam!" "Bam!" "Bam!"

The knocking sounds were frantic and ringing.

"Open the door, quick!" Angry roars could be heard from outside the castle gates.

The two gate guards didn't dare to hesitate. They immediately opened the castle gates, as Linley, Lambert, Jenne, and Keane watched.

Once the castle doors were opened, they saw that in front of the castle were a large number of knights as well as heroic warriors. Their leader was a golden-haired man who was wielding a spear.

"Out of my way!" The golden-haired man roared to the two gate guards.

But upon seeing Keane and Jenne, the golden-haired man started, then immediately said with respect, "Deputy Commander Ritter [Li'te] of the city guards pays his respect to Miss Jenne and young master Keane."

Deputy Commander Ritter could be considered the second highest ranking person in the city guard. Not too long ago, he had participated in that welcoming banquet. Naturally, he recognized Jenne and Keane.

"Mr. Ritter. What happened, to cause all of you to be so frantic?" Keane spoke.

Ritter immediately fell to one knee. He painfully said, "Young master Keane. Forgive me for being useless in my protective responsibilities. Madame Wade and her two brothers died in the explosion just now."

"Oh.....ah!?"

Keane's eyes immediately bulged out, and Jenne and Lambert were greatly shocked as well. Disbelief painted the faces of all of the nearby guards as well.

Madame Wade had died.

Just as Keane and Jenne were worrying about her, Madame Wade and her two brothers had suddenly both died. Her death only filled the hearts of Jenne and Keane with joy.

Jenne and Keane glanced at each other, their eyes filled with wild joy.

"What exactly happened? Explain clearly." Keane adopted the attitude and posture of a superior lecturing a subordinate.

The golden-haired Ritter immediately replied, "Your subordinate led several hundred members of the city guard, under the command of the Madame Countess, to launch a search and seizure operation of Holmer's manor."

"After we finished the search and seizure operation, Madame Countess ordered that all the treasures of the Holmer clan be placed within the main hall, then ordered all of us soldiers to leave, leaving behind just her and her two brothers in that hall."

Hearing this, Keane couldn't help but quietly curse, "That bitch really is shameless."

Ritter continued, "We were stationed outside capturing the escaping members of the Holmer clan, but who would've thought that suddenly, the Holmer clan's manor would catch fire. As soon as it did, everyone charged into rescue the Madame Countess."

"But we hadn't even made our way inside before we heard that terrifying explosion. Half of the building suddenly blew up and was destroyed."

Ritter said painfully, "By the time we reached Madame Countess and the other two, we found only their bodies, which had already been blown apart by the blast. All three of them were dead."

"Fine. Order people to bring my aunt's corpse here, then go back and rest." Keane directly ordered.

"Yes sir." Ritter immediately issued the order.

Everyone all understood that with Madame Wade's death, all of the authority in the prefectural city of Cerre now rested with this fourteen year old boy.

Everyone watched as Ritter's men brought the charred, blasted remnants of the corpses inside.

Only now did Keane and Jenne totally believe...that it wasn't just a dream. That detestable Madame Wade had truly died. From this day forward, their lives would no longer be lived in fear.

"Big brother Ley." Jenne suddenly came to her senses. She turned to look at Linley. "Thank you."

Lambert only now understood as well. Looking at Linley, he said with gratitude, "Mr. Ley, the good news you wanted us to hear truly was excellent news. It was the best type of news, the news that we've been saved."

"What are you talking about?"

Keane was flabbergasted. "What do you mean by mumbling about good news and excellent news? OH!!!"

Finally, Keane understood as well.

"Big brother Ley, just now, you came in from outside the castle?" Keane asked quietly.

"Yep." Linley nodded.

"Then you..." A hint of a smile was on Keane's face.

Linley began to chuckle as well. "Seeing how nervous and restless you all were, I helped you address the root of your troubles. Alright, time to go to bed and have a good sleep, so you'll have the energy to take over the governance of this prefectural city."

As he spoke, Linley turned and headed towards his own residence.

Lambert, Jenne, and Keane all were amazed. Staring at each other with shock and joy, they really wanted to scream with happiness. But of course, Madame Wade's corpse was right next to them. It wouldn't be appropriate for them to celebrate like that.

"Boss. It's done?" Bebe was lying on the ground, his eyelids drooped sleepily.

Linley chuckled. "Yep. All done."

To the current Linley, someone like Madame Wade wasn't even qualified to be considered an 'opponent'. Those small schemes that Madame Wade could come up with were nothing more than jokes to Linley.

Try whatever tricks you want. I'll just straight up kill you and resolve the issue once and for all.

"Why was there an explosion?" Bebe asked curiously.

"How should I know?" Linley shook his head. "All I did was kill Madame Wade and her two brothers, then use some fire-style magic to set the manor on fire. Afterwards...I just rushed back alone. Who would've expected that as soon as I returned to the manor, there would be such an explosion?"

What Linley didn't realize was that one of Holmer's experimental laboratories was located in that building. Many strange and bizarre chemicals and experimental materials were stored in that room. When Linley set fire to that building, he also unknowingly set ablaze some special materials, resulting in that massive explosion.

"You don't know?" Bebe was startled. "Oh. Then let's go to bed."

"Yep. Bedtime."

Linley casually climbed into his bed, then went to sleep.

Madame Wade and her brothers had suddenly died, just like that, in one night. This news shook the prefectural city of Cerre like an earthquake. And, to Jenne and Keane, this joyous news made them so happy that they couldn't sleep at all.

But to Linley, it was nothing more than a trifling matter.

Right now, the Holmer clan's manor continued to blaze merrily into the night. Many of the local city guards were frantically trying to put out the fire....

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 21, Gift

The prefectural city of Cerre administrated around ten or so other cities, as well as a large number of villages and farmers. The total population it controlled was in the millions. It would be fair to say that the prefectural city of Cerre could be considered as equivalent to a Duchy.

And the city governor of the prefectural city of Cerre could be considered equivalent the Grand Duke of a Duchy!

“About to become the city governor of a prefectural city at just fourteen years of age. This really makes one feel envious.” In many of the hotels in Cerre, countless people were discussing this event.

Madame Wade and her brothers had suddenly died in that massive fire. This caused the somewhat complicated lines of power in Cerre to suddenly grow distinct and clear.

There was no longer any question.

Keane, who possessed the blood of the Jacques clan, would definitely assume the position of governor of the prefectural city of Cerre.

“That Madame Wade went in the middle of the night to ransack someone’s home, but she didn’t expect that she would lose her life as a result. What a farce.” A red-bearded old man grabbed a large flagon of wine, laughing loudly.

"Heard she was burnt to death." Another nearby person said.

"How could she have been burnt to death? There were so many city guards around her. If she really was just burned by fire, the Madame Countess definitely would've been able to escape." A skinny man suddenly lowered his voice. "Let me tell you a secret. Madame Countess and her brothers were first killed, and then their corpses were burnt by the fire."

All the people nearby immediately turned to stare at him.

"This is the truth." The skinny man said confidently.

"All of you are full of crap." A burly man laughed coldly. "I'm an actual damn city guard, and I was there that night. Do you know more, or do I know more?"

That skinny man immediately laughed awkwardly. "Friend, I'm just kidding."

"Madame Countess and her two brothers weren't killed by fire. They probably died due to the blast." The burly man said what he believed to be the truth. "Burnt to death? Wouldn't they call for help? But the brothers in our squad didn't hear a single cry for help the entire time. What most likely happened was that the sudden explosion instantly blew them apart, so they didn't have any chance to cry for help."

All the people nearby nodded, including the skinny man.

This explanation was a very logical one.

“Forget about Madame Wade. Right now, the city governors of Cerre are that pair of siblings.” The burly man took a deep drink of liquor, then spoke loudly.

.....

Indeed. Right now, the center of attention in the prefectural city of Cerre was that pair of previously unremarkable countryside-raised siblings, Jenne and Keane.

Within the castle of the prefectural city.

“Why are there so many?” Flipping through the list of gifts in front of him, Keane also looked at the gift-filled room. He couldn’t help but be stunned.

After Madame Wade’s death, all of the nobles of the city immediately wished to draw closer to Keane now. They gave him gifts, they gave him beautiful women, they gave him powerful guards...all of these nobles knew that given Keane’s young age, their clans would probably be under the direct control of Keane for the next century at least. Naturally, they had to have good relations with him.

Jenne and Keane stared at Lambert in surprise, while Linley sipped his tea at a nearby table.

"Grandpa Lambert, this isn't a lot?" Jenne said with surprise.

Lambert shook his head. "Miss, young master. These gifts, all combined, are only worth a few hundred thousand gold coins. A few hundred thousand gold coins? Hrmph. Miss, young master, do you know how much the senior madame's net worth was? I believe it was over ten million gold coins!"

"Over ten million gold coins?" Jenne and Keane were both stunned.

They had lived for so long in the countryside. When had they ever seen such wealth? Lambert, on the other hand, had followed their mother for many years. When he lived within the governor's castle, he had seen many things.

"This is very normal. After managing millions of people for so many years, given the senior madame's avaricious nature, it would be strange if she didn't have ten million gold coins. Unfortunately, we've still yet to find where she hid her magiccrystal card. Even if we found it...most likely, that magiccrystal card was linked to the senior madame's fingerprints. We wouldn't be able to withdraw the money." Lambert shook his head helplessly.

The rules that the Golden Bank of the Four Empires had set were all to the advantage of the Golden Bank of the Four Empires.

Once a magiccrystal card had been imprinted with a fingerprint, only the owner of that fingerprint could access the contents. Even if others acquired the magiccrystal card, it would be of no use to them.

Of course...

The owner of the magicrystal card could go to a physical branch and transfer their wealth to someone else.

But if that person were to suddenly die without initiating a transfer of funds, then the assets would be claimed in its entirety by the Golden Bank of the Four Empires. In truth, the Golden Bank of the Four Empires had no choice but to do this.

The amount of gold coins stored in magicrystal cards in the world was actually ten times greater than the amount of gold coins the Golden Bank physically possessed.

But how often would extremely wealthy people, who were in possession of at least a hundred million gold coins, actually go to the bank and physically withdraw a hundred million gold coins? Even if they managed to withdraw it, physically moving the money back would be a problem. This was one of the reasons why the Golden Bank of the Four Empires dared to issue so many magicrystal cards. At the same time, the bank didn't dare to indiscriminately issue them either, because the bank was jointly run by all four empires. And behind the empires was the War God O'Brien, as well as the longest living human expert, the High Priest. No one dared to act too rashly.

"Ten million gold coins, disappeared, just like that." Keane said painfully.

He really agonized for the loss of such a sum of money.

"Young master. Being a city governor isn't just about collecting money. You have to pay for the salaries of the city guards, to renovate the city, and so on. There are multiple expenses." Lambert added.

Keane started.

"Whaaaa? Being a city governor costs money?" Keane had no idea about this.

"That is why I said these few hundred thousand gold coins don't mean much. Fortunately, the prefectural city does have its own treasury, which should have a fair amount of money inside." Lambert said.

Keane rubbed his head. "Ah. It seems as though being city governor is quite complicated and quite burdensome."

"Sis." Keane looked hopefully at Jenne. "You have to help me out."

Jenne nodded honestly. "Keane, I'll definitely do my best to help." But this simple nod of the head was the beginning to a painful, painful life for Jenne.

Right now, neither Keane nor Jenne nor Lambert knew that while they were worrying over money, the tea-drinking Linley was in possession of an astonishing fortune that had been built up by a royal clan over thousands of years. Most likely, even their clan, the Jacques clan which had managed the Northwest Administrative Province for a thousand years, couldn't match Linley for wealth.

After all, no matter how money-grubbing they were, they couldn't out-compete the royal clan of a kingdom.

"Jenne, Keane." Linley suddenly spoke. "You guys can stay here. I need to go train."

Jenne and Keane both looked at Linley. Keane chortled, "Big brother Ley, don't spend too much time training tonight. You have to remember to come for dinner. Tonight...my sister is going to personally cook."

Jenne immediately blushed.

Ever since the night of the banquet, when Keane had openly said that Linley was Jenne's fiancé, all of the citizens of the prefectural city of Cerre had really come to believe this was the case. Even the servants believe it. Naturally, this made Jenne quite embarrassed.

Suddenly, in front of the courtyard, four large chests appeared out of nowhere. The chests were all open, and they were filled with all sorts of artworks, valuable magicite cores, and some rare, highly precious materials.

"What is this?" Keane and Jenne were both stunned.

"These are the possessions of Holmer's clan. I'm not too sure what the valuation of these four chests is. Most likely, over a million gold coins. Take these as well." Linley took out eight magiccrystal cards. "These are the un-imprinted magiccrystal cards of Holmer's clan. There's eight cards in total. Each of them should have a million gold coins stored within."

Linley had overheard this information from Madame Wade's conversation with her two brothers. Only then had he learned about the value of these magiccrystal cards.

"This...this..." Keane and Jenne, and even Lambert, stared at Linley in shock.

"All combined, this should be worth nearly ten million gold coins, right? With these...you won't have to be too stingy and tight-fisted in managing the prefectural city of Cerre. Alright, time for me to go train."

Linley casually tossed the eight magiccrystal cards into the chests, then turned and left.

Jenne, Keane, and Lambert all stared at the four chests, as well as the eight runed magiccrystal cards. They didn't know what to say.

"Sis." Keane looked at Jenne.

Jenne was stunned. "Originally, when I asked big brother Ley to help us, I said I would give him ten thousand gold coins. This..."

The two siblings really had no idea as to what they should say. They had offered ten thousand gold to Linley to ask him to help them out, but he only took a single gold coin...and now, gave them this fortune worth ten million gold coins!

Ten million gold coins!

This was an extremely amazing fortune.

When the Debs clan of the Kingdom of Fenlai was at its most flourishing, its net worth was only around a hundred million gold coins. After the repercussions of the smuggling affair, their net worth dropped to around ten million gold coins, but despite that, they were still a major clan of Fenlai.

"Miss, young master, this Mr. Ley really is no ordinary person." Lambert's expression was very solemn.

Jenne and Keane both nodded.

That went without saying. How could an ordinary person so casually toss out ten million gold coins?

"Just then, when Mr. Ley waved his hands, these four chests appeared out of nowhere. If my prediction is correct...Mr. Ley is in possession of a legendary interspatial ring!" Lambert's face was extremely serious.

"An interspatial ring?" Jenne and Keane had never even heard of such a thing.

Lambert nodded. "Right. Interspatial rings are priceless treasures. In the Yulan continent, they are a proof of one's stature and power. In the legends that I have heard, even when people offered to buy one for hundreds of millions of gold coins, no one has ever been willing to sell one."

"Hundreds of millions of gold coins?!" Jenne and Keane were wide-eyed.

What would hundreds of millions of gold coins look like if you put them all in one place? They didn't even dare imagine what an enormous fortune like that would look like.

"In the entire Northwest Administrative Province, only the legendary clan leader of the Jacques clan, the governor for the entire province, has an interspatial ring." Having been in the prefectural city of Cerre for many years, Lambert knew quite a bit about the affairs of the Jacques clan.

"Are you talking about...Great-Grandfather McKenzie [Mai'ke'kan]?" Keane immediately said.

The two greatest source of pride for the Jacques clan was their first clan leader, Jacques, and their legendary clan leader, McKenzie Jacques.

In the past Jacques had been an ordinary commoner. He ended up joining the army, and was continuously promoted through the ranks, and also made major contributions to the O'Brien Empire. In the end, he even founded a new legion for the O'Brien Empire; the Jacques Legion.

As Jacques grew famous, he founded his own Jacques clan.

The Emperor even gave the Northwest Administrative Province to Jacques for his clan to manage. From this, one could tell how greatly Jacques was favored by the imperial clan.

But of course...the first clan leader was famous because of his military abilities in leading armies. With regards to how personally powerful he was, up till his dying day, he still was still just a warrior of the eighth rank.

But McKenzie Jacques was the pride of the clan. Over fifty years ago, McKenzie had entered the Saint-level before the age of two hundred.

A Saint-level combatant!

Once a clan produced a Saint-level combatant, so long as that combatant didn't perish and the clan didn't rebel, the clan's glory would never diminish.

"Great-Grandfather McKenzie, has an interspatial ring?" Keane was surprised.

"Right. And he has one only because in the past, his Imperial Majesty, the Emperor himself, personally gifted it to him." Lambert said emotionally. "The Jacques clan has always been proud of this fact. You must understand, even many of kings of various kingdoms in the Yulan continent do not possess an interspatial ring."

Only now did Jenne and Keane completely understand how rare and valuable these interspatial rings were.

"But I didn't expect...that Mr. Ley would also be in possession of an interspatial ring. No wonder...no wonder ten million gold coins was nothing to him."

Jenne and Keane felt as though they couldn't breathe.

"I thought I had a very high rank as the successor to the city governorship. I thought I could give big brother Ley a really, really important official position to serve in. But it seems as though...big brother Ley..." Keane was now beginning to understand.

The governor of a prefectural city, to the ordinary people, was someone as high above them as the heavens were.

But to experts such as Linley, it was nothing at all. He could kill one whenever he wanted to.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 22, The Vast Earth

A month later, the order came down from the clan leader of the Jacques clan; Keane was to assume the position of city governor of the prefectural city of Cerre. However, prior to achieving the age of maturity, his sister, Jenne, was to assist him in managing the affairs of the city.

“Big brother Ley, you are leaving?”

Jenne, Keane, and Lambert all looked at Linley with astonishment.

With Keane the governor of Cerre and Jenne his steward, the two of them now had comparatively relaxed lives. Just as the two of them wanted to find a way to repay Linley, he suddenly declared his intention to depart from the prefectural city of Cerre.

“Big brother Ley.” Jenne’s eyes were starting to turn slightly red.

Linley was carrying his heavy sword, and Bebe was on his shoulders. By his side was Haeru, his Blackcloud Panther. Smiling, Linley said, “In this developed, urbanized environment within Cerre City, my training is negatively influenced. I won’t be going too far. I just intend to go to a valley in the mountains near Cerre City to quietly train for a time.”

To Linley, the most important thing was still training. Linley, who was still constantly improving himself, hadn’t yet reached a bottleneck, which made training all the more important. At a time like this, he had to seize the opportunity to raise his power as much as possible.

There were records of Dragonblood Warriors of the Baruch clan reaching the Saint-level and dominating the world in a matter of decades due to intensive training.

Experts had to be able to endure loneliness.

"Valley?" Jenne and Keane both inwardly let out sighs of relief.

"Alright, if I have some free time, I'll come visit. I've already helped you as much as I can. In the future, you'll have to rely on yourselves." Linley said with a laugh.

When he looked at these two siblings, Keane and Jenne, Linley would often think of his own younger brother, Wharton. Right now, he and Wharton also had lost their parents.

"I wonder how Wharton is doing. After I finish understanding the level beyond 'impose', I'll go pay him a visit."

Linley knew very well that right now, over the course of Wharton's training in the O'Brien Empire, there was no need for him to go disturb Wharton. In addition, only by learning on his own would Wharton grow fastest.

Once Linley was by Wharton's side, Wharton would probably be unconsciously negatively impacted.

.....

East of Cerre, there was a vibrant, green mountain range with an unassuming little valley. Linley erected a wooden room here, then began to engage in quiet training.

Late at night, within the mountain valley. There was a green plain of grass, and even a little lake in the middle of it.

Linley was seated in a meditative trance close to the lake. His eyes were closed as he attuned himself to nature. By his side, there was a lit campfire, casting a flickering light across Linley's face.

Linley could feel the expansiveness of the vast earth, the flows of the wind, and the streams of water. He could feel the passion of the flames...

As a magus, especially one with exceptional affinity for both wind and earth elemental essence, Linley's ability to attune with nature was far superior to most warriors.

This was the reason why that ancestor of the Baruch clan who used a heavy warhammer as his weapon only managed to reach the level of 'impose' after entering the Saint-level. After all, it was harder for warriors to become one with nature, compared to magi.

"The 'Thunderbolt' technique learned when I reached the level of 'wielding something heavy as though it were light' contained explosive force, like the eruption of a volcano. As for the so-called 'impose', it contains the 'imposing force' of nature itself, of earth, fire, water, and wind. However..."

After meditating for a long time, Linley suddenly understood.

"The 'impose' level is merely an 'imposing force' that borrows from the strength of the surrounding, nearby nature. The level that is above 'impose' should be all-embracing. I need to pursue the most suitable avenue for this."

In the darkness of the night, Linley remained there in the meditative pose. His eyes then suddenly opened, and they were as resplendent as the stars in the night sky.

"Different weapons will need to be used in different ways. The strength of the heavy sword lies in its weight! As for this heavy sword, Bladeless, it naturally doesn't rely on a sharp edge. It openly relies on its tremendous weight and makes open, direct assaults."

Linley's spirit was dimly sensing something.

The principles of training with the heavy sword were very similar to the fundamental principles of the earth itself.

"The vast earth is dense and heavy. The vast earth is boundless. The vast earth is stable..." Linley was holding the adamantine heavy sword in his hands, but his heart had totally merged with the throbbing pulse of the earth.

The unique vibrating pulse of the earth had a one-of-a-kind, heart-shaking rhythm. Generally speaking, only people who had reached a very high level of attunement to the earth would sense it.

Linley rose to his feet.

He began to silently wield the adamantine heavy sword about. As the adamantine heavy sword danced about, Linley's own movements and the movements of his sword began to enter into a certain unique rhythm.

This was a rhythm that was like the pulse of one's heart.

"Whoosh."

The adamantine heavy sword seemed to carry a million pounds of force, as it heavily slashed through the air again and again. As Linley swung his heavy sword repeatedly, he felt as though he had totally become one with the earth. Just by training with his heavy sword, he felt as though he himself now carried the weight of the earth.

"Boom."

Linley's heavy adamantine sword suddenly pierced directly up into the air. Several explosive booms could be heard in succession. This empty stab upwards had caused the air itself to explode. This was inconceivable! This was because no matter how fast a weapon could move, it could at most cause a single sonic boom. To cause multiple sonic booms was virtually impossible.

"Hrm?" Linley's eyes suddenly lit up.

But just like that, upon becoming distracted, Linley was no longer absorbed with that near-miraculous feeling of being one with nature.

“What happened just then? I didn’t use any battle-qi, but my power split into multiple rhythmic pulses in that attack.”

Linley began to ponder this question.

When in the middle of training, people would sometimes enter into a certain state and reach an astonishing level of power. But if they weren’t able to totally understand that state they had entered, they wouldn’t be able to wield its power again so easily.

What Linley needed to do now was to constantly ponder and constantly train.

He needed to master everything and be in complete control!

.....

The sky was ocean-blue, a pure azure color without a hint of other colors. A few beautiful, lazy clouds drifted across it. Linley’s life in the valley was indeed very quiet.

The blowing wind. The rippling lake.

Right now, Linley wasn’t training. He was fishing in the valley lake. A person couldn't always be training; if they did, it could actually be counter-productive.

If he wanted to go fishing, he would. If he wanted to go to sleep, he would.

His heart had become one with the world, one with nature.

When he did train, this made his rate of improvement extremely high.

"Big brother Ley." From outside the valley, a happy voice could be heard. Linley turned and saw Jenne on a fine stallion. Behind her, there were two pretty female servants on horses. These two female servants were clearly quite talented, as their movements on their horses were those of practiced riders.

"Jenne." Linley put down his fishing pole and stood up.

Neither Bebe nor Haeru were currently present. The two of them would often go deeper into the mountains to hunt for wild beasts to eat. The beasts in this mountain range Linley had chosen to stay in were all ordinary animals. Magical beasts were extremely rare.

"Big brother Ley, these are some of the dishes that I prepared." Jenne removed a package from the back of her horse. The package was well wrapped. "You definitely can't have been eating too well here. Come, big brother Ley, have a good taste."

Jenne unwrapped the package, one layer at a time. Inside was a metal box, which was filled with all sorts of dishes as well as rice.

Linley took a sniff.

"Mmm. It really does smell good." Linley laughed.

Jenne's face immediately turned red with excitement.

But in his heart, Linley was sighing. How could Linley not tell how Jenne felt? In terms of both appearance as well as temperament, Jenne was all but perfect. But having experienced so much, it was hard for Linley to open the depths of his hearts and let anyone else in.

"Love?"

Linley sighed to himself.

He didn't have any interest in affairs of the heart. The most important thing for now was to focus on his training. Right at this moment, a scene couldn't help but suddenly flash through Linley's mind.

After Linley's father had died, all the nobles had come to pay their respects at Wushan township. That night, Delia had come to visit him. She had wanted to tell Linley that she was returning to the Yulan Empire. And that night, before she had left...Delia had kissed him.

"Delia?"

Aside from Alice, perhaps the only person Linley felt some romantic affection towards was this girl whom he had known since his very first year at the Ernst Institute, especially after the open displays of affection Delia had shown him. Although Linley had never admitted it openly, in his heart, Delia's image had been engraved in his mind.

"Big brother Ley, eat up!" Jenne said hopefully.

Linley sighed to himself. "I can't let Jenne waste her youth like this." As he thought to himself, Linley began to eat heartily while praising, "This really is excellent. The taste is wonderful."

Hearing Linley's praise, Jenne was all smiles.

"Jenne, in the future, though, you don't need to come visit me. When I am training, I don't like to be disturbed." Linley said to Jenne.

Jenne was startled.

"Oh." Jenne mumbled, then she squeezed out a smile. "Then when you have some free time, big brother Ley, come visit us in the castle."

"Sure." Linley could only respond affirmatively.

....

The days of Linley training in the mountain valley passed by very quickly. In the blink of an eye, over a month had passed. With regards to how to properly use his adamantine heavy sword, Linley had gradually begun to find the proper path.

So long as he persevered down this path, in a few years time, he definitely would be able to reach a new level that was beyond the 'impose' level!

....

Within a secluded hotel in the prefectural city of Cerre.

This hotel was very dimly lit, and the atmosphere tended towards the dark, giving the impression of dusk. Each table was arranged in a very orderly manner, and between each booth, there was a screen.

This was a very quiet hotel with a great deal of atmosphere. The first time Linley had come here, he had taken a liking to it.

The expenses here were fairly high as well.

While he was training, generally speaking, every seven or eight days, Linley would come here and drink wine while listening to the elegant, beautiful music of the hotel. Every so often, he would hear some gossip from travelers.

"It's almost July. Wharton's school year should be starting soon." Linley thought to himself.

Right now, there were quite a few customers in this hotel. All of the customers engaged in conversations were quite conscientiously lowering their voices as they spoke, but when Linley focused, he could clearly hear every word of every conversation they were having.

Suddenly, a quiet conversation attracted Linley's attention.

"Have you heard? In the imperial capital, an incredible genius has emerged. A seventeen year old named 'Wharton'." On a table next to Linley, there were three middle-aged men. They were discussing the various geniuses of the empire.

Wharton?

Linley focused his attention on them.

After having spent so much time in the O'Brien Empire, Linley had yet to learn anything regarding Wharton.

"Are you talking about that genius who popped up out of nowhere in the O'Brien Academy?" The bald man's eyes lit up. "I've heard of him too. The end-of-the-year competitions for students of the seventh grade always receive a great deal of attention. Even some students who have reached the eighth rank will participate on occasion."

As the number one warrior academy of the Yulan continent, the O'Brien Academy was divided into seven grades.

Upon reaching the seventh rank, a warrior was admitted into the seventh grade.

A warrior of the seventh rank was qualified to graduate, but many of them still elected to stay in the academy. Even some warriors of the eighth rank were in no hurry to graduate.

"Old bald vulture, you've heard this news as well? That Wharton is really...wow." A jade-haired middle-aged man sighed. "Only seventeen years old. In the past, he had never participated in any of the yearly competitions. This time, when he took part in the seventh grade competition, he actually defeated a warrior of the eighth rank to become the champion of the seventh grade class."

"What? A seventeen year old who defeated a warrior of the eighth rank? Are you serious? Is this real?" A pudgy man who had only been listening up till now suddenly spoke in shock.

The bald man glanced at him. "Of course it's real. I personally witnessed it. You have no idea. This Wharton was around two meters tall and extremely powerfully built. His physical presence alone exerts tremendous pressure on people. His weapon of choice is an extremely terrifying giant warblade. Wielding that warblade, that Wharton was actually able to defeat a warrior of the eighth rank to become the champion of the seventh grade class."

"From what I heard, for this Wharton to already be able to defeat a warrior of the eighth rank now means that he most likely will be able to reach the eighth rank himself by age twenty. In the past, the Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier, reached the ninth rank when he was thirty. This Wharton's natural ability isn't too far off." The jade-haired man praised as well, "For a seventeen year old to be able to defeat a warrior of the eighth rank is amazing. It has been a long time since the empire has produced a genius like this. He's even been publicly acknowledged as the number one genius of the O'Brien Academy, and the Emperor has already conferred upon him the title of Count."

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 23, The Cardinal

The fat man said questioningly, "Hey, according to what you two are saying, someone like this Wharton should've become famous a long time ago. Why hadn't anyone heard of him until now?"

The bald man nodded. "I was suspicious about this question as well, so I did some investigating. This Wharton, in all his time at the O'Brien Empire, had never participated in the yearly tournaments, nor did he ever duel against any experts. That's why he didn't have any fame at all."

"To have power but not reveal it." The jade-haired man and the fat man both sighed in appreciation.

"Forget about the past." The bald man was very confident. "After this seventh grade tournament at the O'Brien Academy, this Wharton is going to be the center of attention."

Within that secluded little hotel, Linley continued to sip his wine. There was a hint of a smile on his face.

"Little Wharton is two meters tall? That's a bit taller than me."

When Wharton left Wushan township, he had only been six years old. At the time, he still had his baby teeth, and was very adorable. In the blink of an eye, eleven years had passed.

"Little Wharton!"

A warm feeling swelled in Linley's heart. This was the affection and bond between siblings.

"Little Wharton's density of Dragonblood in his veins is even higher than mine. His natural talent as a warrior is higher than me as well. He defeated warriors of the eighth rank at age seventeen? Mm....I expect Wharton should have reached the seventh rank at least two or three years ago."

Linley's guesses were absolutely correct.

That year, the six year old Wharton had followed Housekeeper Hiri on the long, winding road to the O'Brien Empire. Given Wharton's natural ability, it was easy for him to enter the O'Brien Academy.

But Housekeeper Hiri understood that the Baruch clan still belonged to the Holy Union. Thus, all this time, he had made sure that Wharton would conceal his true strength and not reveal it. If Wharton shone too brightly, after graduation, the O'Brien Academy wouldn't easily allow him to return to the Holy Union.

Thus, per Housekeeper Hiri's guidance, this entire time Wharton had been concealing his strength. Although he had revealed a little when he was a child, at that time he was too young and thus no one paid attention. Once he grew up and matured, he naturally understood the importance of concealing himself.

Long years of hard training.

At the O'Brien Academy, the top warrior academy of the most military powerful empire in the world, Wharton's rate of improvement had been quite rapid.

When Wharton turned fourteen, Hillman, per Linley's instructions, had arrived at the O'Brien Academy.

Actually, by the time Hillman had arrived at the O'Brien Academy, the 'Apocalypse Day' had already happened long ago. The imperial clan and major noble clans of the O'Brien Empire all had their own unique communications systems and had known about it long ago. As the elite military academy of the O'Brien Empire, the O'Brien Academy naturally knew about this news as well.

When Hillman reached the empire, Wharton already knew that Apocalypse Day had occurred.

Hillman informed Wharton of the death of Hogg, as well as Linley's decision to seek revenge. Wharton was totally stunned. He had no idea what he should do.

With Hillman and Hiri at his side, and with the warblade 'Slaughterer' in his hands per Linley's bequeathing, Wharton made up his mind to assume the responsibilities of the clan. But in his heart, Wharton remained concerned for his big brother, Linley. Wharton didn't know what the situation was with Linley.

The distance from the Holy Union to the O'Brien Empire was simply too great. A one way journey would take at least a year.

Fortunately, afterwards the Dawson Conglomerate had gotten in contact with Wharton and sent him a secret letter.

That secret letter was written by Yale. It clearly described the enmity between Linley and Clayde, as well as the Radiant Church. It also informed Wharton that Linley was fine, but that he would embark on a long period of solo training.

After hearing this news, Wharton felt a bit more at ease.

Wharton felt all the more proud of his big brother, and that made him all the more determined to work hard, so that in the future, he would stand side-by-side with his brother. In the past, Wharton was already very hard working, but the three years after that, Wharton trained even harder. When he was fifteen years old, Wharton had reached the seventh rank as a warrior.

When he turned seventeen, Wharton believed that he had reached a certain level of attainment in the use of the warblade 'Slaughterer'. At that time, he made up his mind to participate in the yearly tournament. As a result of that participation, Wharton shocked the empire and became the most dazzling new star in the imperial capital. The Emperor himself had bestowed the title of Count upon him.

.....

Seated in the corner of the hotel, Linley was happier than he had been in a long time.

"Boss, Wharton? That's your little brother, right?" Bebe was curled up on a chair, staring at Linley with his beady little black eyes.

Laughing, Linley nodded.

"That little tyke can beat a warrior of the eighth rank?" Bebe sighed in surprise. "Boss, your little brother should be able to transform into a Dragonblood Warrior, right?"

"Naturally."

Linley was very proud of his younger brother Wharton. "Bebe, I transformed into a Dragonblood Warrior through drinking the dragon's blood of the Armored Razorback Wyrms and agitating the Dragonblood in my veins. My younger brother has a higher density of Dragonblood in his veins. He can directly become a Dragonblood Warrior. But his Dragonform isn't the same as mine."

Linley clearly remembered how the Dragonform transformation was described in his clan's records.

Once the density of Dragonblood in one's veins was high enough, after one trained according to the Secret Dragonblood Manual, one could transform into a Dragonblood Warrior. Normally, a Dragonblood Warrior's body would be covered with azure draconic scales, have an azure draconic tail, and a single draconic horn sprouting from the forehead.

Linley's transformation, however, was a Dragonform covered with black scales and with black spikes piercing from his forehead, back spine, elbows, and knees, as well as a black tail.

"A bottle of Green Jadeite for each person!" A voice which Linley was familiar with rang out in the hotel.

"This is..."

Linley seemed to have been struck by lightning. His entire body turned stiff, and then he immediately said mentally to Bebe, "Bebe, come to me. Don't reveal yourself." Linley placed Bebe onto a chair in the corner of his little booth.

This hotel was very dimly lit.

What's more, every table was separated by a wooden screen. Linley's body was almost entirely blocked by that wooden screen, and so that familiar person didn't see Linley at all.

Linley turned his head to peek out just slightly...

That pudgy figure. Those eyes which turned into slits when beaming.

"It's him."

Linley immediately pulled his head back. "Cardinal Lampson. Why is he here in the O'Brien Empire? And those people by his side aren't weak either. What's more, one of them is one of the Ascetics who appeared at the highest level of the Radiant Temple that year.”

Indeed, that Ascetic was one of the men who had worked with Heidens in setting up that magical formation. He was a powerful combatant.

There were at least two combatants of the ninth rank here; Lampson and the Ascetic.

“I don’t recognize the others, but judging from their auras, they aren’t much weaker than Lampson. Perhaps they are also experts of the ninth rank.”

Linley’s heart began to tremble.

“In a place such as the prefectural city of Cerre, why are so many experts of the Radiant Church present? Could it be...could it be that...” Linley’s heart clenched. “Could it be that my identity has been revealed?”

Linley knew that an enormous organization such as the Holy Union definitely had intelligence networks in the various other kingdoms and empires. But could their intelligence network really have deeply penetrated even a place such as the prefectural city of Cerre?

“Boss, what’s going on?” Bebe was still confused. Having been ordered by Linley into a corner, he had no idea what was going on.

Linley looked at Bebe, a hint of a smile on his lips. “Bebe, experts from the Radiant Church have arrived. There should be several combatants of the ninth rank.”

"The Radiant Church?" A murderous look flashed in Bebe's eyes.

"If they plan to act against me, I'll make sure none of them leave Cerre alive." Linley's heart was filled with a killing intent as well. Linley's current level of power was far greater than what it had been in the past.

When Dragonformed, his power was that of a warrior of the peak-stage ninth rank. And what's more, with regards to the usage of his adamantine heavy sword, Linley had also reached the peak of the 'impose' level, and had just dimly begun to sense his way to an even higher level of attainment.

Linley listened carefully.

Those people from the Radiant Church hadn't discovered Linley's presence yet.

"For this fellow's sake, we've spent two years. Finally, in another ten days or half month or so, we'll be able to go back." Lampson's voice was very soft.

Lampson was very careful when he spoke as well, not giving any hint as to the identity of 'this fellow'.

"Two years." Another black-robed man whose back was facing Linley shook his head. "For the sake of dealing with that old fellow, several of my good friends have died."

"As long as we capture him, it will all have been worth it." Lampson said.

.....

Linley frowned as he listened to their conversation.

"What do they mean?"

He had indeed killed six Special Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal, but he definitely wasn't an 'old fellow'.

"Old fellow? And they are going back soon?" Linley was beginning to understand that these people were here, most likely for the purpose of dealing with that person.

Linley began to grow curious. Who, exactly, was worth the Radiant Church expending this much effort on?

"Old fellow, what are you staring at?" One of the black-robed men snapped quietly.

"Why the arrogance?" An ancient-sounding voice spoke out. "If it weren't for the fact that you outnumbered me and used some tricks, how could I have fallen into your hands? What a joke."

Linley's eyelids twitched.

It seemed that the owner of this old voice was the person whom the Radiant Church desired to acquire.

"The Radiant Church didn't send such a large number of experts to other countries to pursue and kill me. But they did for this old man...who exactly is he?"

Linley wondered to himself.

"No matter what, and no matter who this old man is, I'll definitely rescue him." Linley laughed coldly to himself. "Being able to disrupt the important plans of the Radiant Church will make myself feel a bit better."

To totally destroy the Radiant Church and uproot it entirely was very hard.

Right now, he could only proceed one step at a time.

After waiting about half an hour, Lampson and his group of men finally left the hotel, taking the old man with them. From start to finish, Lampson and the people with him hadn't cast a single glance towards Linley, who had been hidden by his screen.

Linley walked out from his booth.

"Bebe, let's go." Linley casually tossed down a few gold pieces, immediately leading Bebe out of the hotel, following Lampson's group from behind.

Linley's understanding of the 'impose' level had already reached the peak of mastery. Just by using his knowledge of 'impose', Linley was able to stand on top of water without sinking down, something which most combatants of the ninth rank could not do. This was a higher level of understanding, which couldn't be accomplished simply through powerful physical strength or battle-qi.

Following behind Lampson's group, Linley finally managed to see who these people were.

"The Radiant Church has six people, along with that mysterious old man they have under guard." Linley had the sense that these six were all combatants of the ninth rank.

Six experts of the ninth rank, guarding and escorting a single old man. And with Cardinal Lampson personally leading the squad.

Hearing their conversation, it seemed that Cardinal Lampson's squad had spent two years on this assignment, and had lost quite a few people as well.

"Just who is this old man?" From behind, Linley managed to catch a glimpse of how the old man looked as well.

He was extremely skinny, and his white eyebrows were so long that they drooped down to his chest. Most importantly, this old man was shackled by the hands. Only, there was a piece of cloth wrapped around the manacles. Most people simply wouldn't notice it unless they had carefully inspected it. Even Linley had only noticed it after tailing them for a long time, and only because a gust of wind had temporarily blown the cloth wrapping aside for a moment.

“Hrm? Is that...” This was the first time Linley had seen this legendary tool. “Antimagic manacles?”

According to the records, anyone shackled by these antimagic manacles wouldn't be able to use any of the mageforce in their body. Even the most powerful of magi would be like an ordinary person. But these antimagic shackles were extremely expensive. This was the first time Linley had seen such a thing.

Linley slipped in and out of the crowds on the street, sometimes dodging, sometimes hiding. His movements were very graceful. Lampson and his men had no idea he was there at all.

After a while, Lampson and his men arrived at an alleyway. They stopped in front of a two-level residence. One of the black-robed men knocked on the door.

“Milord.” The door to the residence opened, and a middle-aged man came out with a bow. “Everything is prepared. Milords, please come in and rest.”

Lampson and the others nodded.

“Xartes [Ke'sa'te'si], you and your brother, stand guard on the old man. We will come relieve you later.” Lampson instructed.

Linley secretly was startled. "Even shackled by antimagic manacles, they still intend to watch him this closely? This old man really is something special." This made Linley desire to ruin the Radiant Church's plans even more.

The sky slowly grew dark. Linley remained hidden outside the walls of this residence the entire time, but up till now, he still hadn't found any opportunity or method by which he could stealthily get near that mysterious old man.

"Based on their conversation in the hotel, the Radiant Church seems to have sacrificed several powerful experts for the sake of catching this person." Linley frowned as he considered the question. "This old man is at least of the ninth rank in power."

"But he shouldn't be at the Saint-level yet. Even a large group of powerful experts of the ninth rank could at most force the Saint-level to flee. It definitely is highly unlikely that they would seize him."

Although Linley wasn't too sure about exactly how powerful that mysterious old man was, without question, that mysterious old man had the ability to deal with multiple experts of the ninth rank.

"This old man must be very important for the Radiant Church to expend so much effort on catching him. I'll definitely disrupt their scheme." Linley's eyes were radiating a cold light. "But killing these six experts of the ninth rank and preventing a single one of them from escaping Cerre is a difficult task."

Linley himself was living quite close to Cerre. Naturally, he wouldn't want his movements and his presence to be exposed.

If he was to act, he would have to kill all six of them.

“Myself, Bebe, Haeru. We are totally capable of dealing with three combatants of the ninth rank. Against six...if we use some tactics, it still isn't out of the realm of possibility. However, it's best if we release the old man first and have him ally with us. That will give us an even greater chance of success.”

Linley knew how to deal with antimagic manacles.

The power and value of antimagic manacles lay in the complicated magical rune formations etched onto them. But the materials which the manacles were made out of actually weren't that durable. Although antimagic manacles prevented the prisoner from using any mageforce and was fairly sturdy, Linley was totally confident in his ability to break them.

Linley wasn't in a rush. At this time, he mentally commanded Haeru to return to the city from within the mountain valley.

Humans and the magical beast companions they had tamed were spiritually bound. The more powerful the spiritual energy of the two was, the greater the distance the two could exchange mental conversations.

For example, Linley and Bebe could exchange thoughts from a distance of several hundred kilometers. But if they were to become separated from an even farther distance, it would no longer be possible.

As for some weak members of noble clans who used soul-binding scrolls to tame magical beasts of the first, second, or third ranks, they might not be able to communicate past a distance of just a few hundred meters.

The main issue was spiritual energy.

Linley and Haeru, as well, could spiritually communicate from a distance of hundreds of kilometers. But once the distance grew too great, they would only be able to vaguely sense the direction each was in, and could no longer send messages.

Darkness descended. It was approximately 9 o'clock at night now.

Dressed in a black warrior's outfit, Linley was hiding outside the walls of the residence, alongside the similarly black Shadowmouse, Bebe, as well as the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru. They were quietly waiting for their opportunity.

"Bebe, Haeru, the two of you stay here. Only make your move after I mentally command you two to act." Linley instructed.

Haeru and Bebe both nodded.

Linley immediately removed his black warrior's outfit, then allowed black scales to manifest on top of his skin. A black spike jutted forth from his forehead, and spikes jutted out along his entire back spine.

That draconic tail silently pierced through Linley's long pants.

Linley's eyes became a cold, merciless dark gold color.

"Remember. Await my order." Linley once again instructed Bebe and Haeru. And then, like a phantom in the darkness, Linley glided towards the courtyard.

After having mastered the 'impose' level, Linley could now move without causing any disturbance to the surrounding air.

The main building had two floors. Beside it were three rooms, the central one clearly being the place where the old man had been locked into. Because outside this room, there were two black-robed men.

Linley crept behind a manmade hill, not moving at all as he quietly awaited his opportunity.

"I refuse to believe you won't lose your focus for even a second." Linley was extremely patient.

Right now, the two black robed men were engaging in conversation out of boredom.

"Bro, after completing this mission, the two of us have to have a good, long rest. These past two years have exhausted us. I've been nervous this entire time, not daring to loosen up at all." One of the black haired men said.

“Right. On this mission, two of our Ascetics of the ninth rank died, and three Special Executors of the ninth rank as well. Eleven of us had to work together, aided by poison, and yet five of us still died. This old fellow is such a monster.”

Right now, the two black-robed men were fairly relaxed.

In order to pursue and capture this old fellow, their group had been sent out as soon as the Radiant Church had received news of his whereabouts. They had passed through the O’Brien Empire, traversed the 48 Anarchic Duchies, and entered the great plains of the far east. They had battled against this mysterious old man for months, finally capturing him in one of the Duchies of the Anarchic Lands.

But as long as they had managed to seize this old man, all their sacrifices would have been worth it.

They were very careful on their way back as well. They were afraid that the experts of the O’Brien Empire would discover them. But by now, they were halfway back, and the towns they would pass by in the future were all small ones without many experts. They shouldn’t pose much danger.

Naturally, Lampson and the others now felt slightly more relaxed.

“Bro, I’m going to the bathroom. You stand guard here. I’ll be back in a minute.” One of the black-robed men said.

The other black-robed man laughed. “I was fine before you said anything, but now that you mentioned going to the bathroom, I want to go as well. Fine, you go first, and I'll go later." Although they were a bit relaxed, they still didn't dare to have both guards be gone at the same time.

After all, if they let this old man escape, they would have committed a grave sin.

Hiding behind the manmade hill, when Linley saw the black-robed man leave, he felt a hint of surprised excitement. "Only one left. Killing him isn't a problem at all. Only...I can't let him make any noise."

Linley narrowed his eyes, while beginning to quietly mouth the words to a magical spell. 'Supersonic'.

.....

At this moment, Xartes was currently standing at his bedroom door, keeping a casual eye on his surroundings. In a mere prefectural city, Xartes, an expert of the ninth rank, still felt quite self-confident.

But suddenly, Xartes saw a black light flash in the corner of his eyes.

"What was that?" Xartes turned his head over to look.

An enormous bluish-black sword had suddenly appeared in his field of vision. The most terrifying thing was, this bluish-black sword seemed to be using all of the surrounding area to apply pressure and force on him, locking him into place!

Space itself had been totally locked!

Xartes wanted to cry out in alarm, but he couldn't make a sound. In truth, even if he had managed to shout, the sound wouldn't have managed to leak through that frozen space.

Xartes' eyes were round and bulging. Suddenly, he slammed his palm, now glowing with radiant battle-qi, in the direction of the sword.

"Bam!"

When the enormous sword struck Xartes' hand, Xartes felt as though he had suddenly slammed against a boundless, roiling flood. He wasn't able to suppress it at all.

"Boom." His hand and his arm disintegrated and liquefied, the bones in them shattering.

And then, not slowing down, the adamantine heavy sword struck Xartes on his chest. Xartes only felt his chest tremble, felt something break, and then...he felt nothing else.

In the blink of an eye. The opponent was killed.

He didn't have a chance. After Dragonforming, Linley was a peak-stage combatant of the ninth rank, and had the adamantine heavy sword for his weapon. At the same time, he had reached the realm of understanding and mastering the power of 'impose'. The two were on totally different levels.

"Hurry." Linley gently pushed the door open. As he did, he immediately saw that skinny old man with long white hair and the long white eyebrows, seated cross-legged on the floor. Hearing Linley enter, the old man casually opened his eyes while saying, "Why have you come..."

But upon seeing Linley, the old man's words immediately came to a halt.

Seeing Linley in full Dragonform, the old man stared at Linley. Lowering his voice, he said, "What plane of existence do you come from, Draconian?"

"Draconian?" Linley was startled.

Could it be that in other planes, there was a race called Draconians that looked similar to him?

"Why have you come here?" The old man said again in that quiet voice.

"To save you."

Linley was wielding his adamantine heavy sword. "Hold your arms out straight. I will break your antimagic manacles."

Although the old man was suspicious as to who Linley was, he still very obediently held his arms out. Staring at the pitch-black antimagic manacles, Linley chopped directly down with his adamantine heavy sword.

‘Wielding Something Heavy as Though it Were Light’ – Thunderbolt!

The adamantine heavy sword drifted down, as slowly and gracefully as a leaf, barely brushing against the center of the antimagic manacles. As it did, with a ‘crack’ sound, multiple cracks appeared in the antimagic manacles, and pieces of it even went flying to the edges of the room.

The old man only had to casually shake his hands, and the two halves of the already-destroyed manacles went flying in opposite directions.

“I didn’t ask you to save me, so I owe you nothing.” The emaciated, pale-faced old man stood there, staring at Linley coldly.

Linley glanced at him, but Linley’s dark gold pupils seemed to stir no fear in this old man at all.

“Do you have enmity with the Radiant Church?” Linley said quietly.

Both of them were speaking extremely quietly, and Lampson’s group in the two story building couldn’t hear their conversation at all.

“Enmity? I won’t stop until one of us is destroyed.” The old man said boldly.

"That's all I need." Linley said calmly. "Although I don't know who you are, I must tell you...tonight, none of the Radiant Church's men can be allowed to leave here alive. I don't want to reveal myself to them."

"Reveal yourself?" The old man was curious. "Which plane of existence do you come from, Draconian? Could it be that you are a Draconian from one of the Four Higher Planes? The Infernal Realm?"

Linley glanced at him. "No."

The old man began to laugh evilly. "Then let me tell you who I am, first. My name is Zassler [Sai'si'le]. I am an Arch Magus, a necromancer of the ninth rank. Yourself?"

Linley was truly shocked.

As a magus, Linley knew very well that there were three types of magic which surpassed earth, fire, wind, water, lightning, light, and darkness style magic. Doehring Cowart had discussed this with him before as well.

These three forms of magic were the Oracular Magic which the Radiant Church was adept at, the Life Magic which was used by the legendary High Priest of the Yulan Empire, and the extremely rare Necromantic Magic.

All three of these types of magic were extremely rare in the Yulan continent.

When Linley realized that Holmer was ambushing him, because Holmer had used poison gas, Linley had asked him if he was a necromancer. If he had been...Linley probably wouldn't have been able to bear killing him.

After all!

The Four Higher Planes had been created by the Four Overgods. These Overgods were, respectively, the Overgod of Fate, the Overgod of Life, the Overgod of Death, and the Overgod of Destruction.

The Overgod of Fate had passed down Oracular Magic.

The Overgod of Life had passed down Life Magic.

The Overgod of Death had passed down Necromantic Magic.

These three branches of magic were astonishingly powerful, precisely because they originally stemmed from the Four Overgods. As for the Overgod of Destruction, he hadn't passed down any magic at all. The followers of the Overgod of Destruction held their own power and abilities in prime reverence.

For example, the War God O'Brien was a follower of the Overgod of Destruction.

"An Arch Magus necromancer?" Shock appeared on Linley's face.

"And you?" The Arch Magus necromancer, Zassler, stared at Linley.

"Why should I tell you about myself? I didn't ask you to tell me about yourself." Linley said calmly. The Arch Magus necromancer was instantly stunned, not knowing what to say.

Right at this time, the black-robed man came back from the restroom.

"Bro, where the hell did you go?" Seeing that there was no one outside, the black robed man's face immediately changed, as he shouted loudly in anger.

Their task of watching over this Arch Magus necromancer was an extremely critical one. How could he not be furious when he saw that his brother had just disappeared without a word?

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 25, When Experts Join Forces

This loud shout by the black-robed man not only frightened Linley and the Arch Magus necromancer, it also startled Lampson and the other three experts of the ninth rank on the second floor.

“What’s going on? Why is Xartes gone?” Lampson immediately pushed open his door, walking to the second floor corridor and barking angrily.

At this time, the other three combatants of the ninth rank came out of their rooms as well.

Within Zassler’s room.

Hearing the loud shouts, the look on Zassler’s face changed. He immediately instructed the nearby Linley, “You killed one combatant of the ninth rank, but there are five remaining. I will take care of three of them. You handle the other two. Don’t tell me you aren’t able to do so.”

Zassler was quite confident in his ability to deal with three combatants of the ninth rank.

“You only need to kill one.” Linley said calmly. At the same time, Linley quietly awaited the opponents to gather outside. When they did so, Bebe and Haeru would ambush them from behind, while he and the Arch Magus necromancer would attack from the front. This pincer attack would make it even harder for their opponents to flee.

Hearing Linley's words, Zassler couldn't help but sneer, "You really dare to make all sorts of wild boasts."

"Bro!" At this moment, the black-robed man saw the corpse of Xartes. He immediately let out a howl of grief, while also noticing that there were now two men inside the room.

Like a gust of wind, the four other combatants of the ninth rank descended from the higher floors.

Lampson and the others stared at Zassler, then at Linley. The expressions on their face changed.

"Hello, everyone. Last time we fought, it wasn't as fun as it should have been. Let's play again." The Arch Magus necromancer, Zassler, beamed happily at the five combatants of the ninth rank in front of him.

"The antimagic shackles are broken." A silver-haired old expert of the ninth rank said in shock.

But Lampson was staring at Linley.

"Cardinal Lampson. Long time no see." Linley held his adamantine heavy sword in his hands, his dark gold eyes shooting a cold, merciless glare towards these men.

Almost all of the high level combatants of the Radiant Church knew about the terrifying appearance Linley had when transformed.

"Linley!"

Lampson's voice was very low, and his facial expression was dark.

"You are the Linley who killed six of my comrades?" Xartes' younger brother, that black-robed man, stared at Linley in disbelief. "How is that possible?"

The Arch Magus necromancer, Zassler, also stared at Linley in surprise. From the reaction of the Radiant Church's squad, this 'Draconian' who had rescued him apparently was quite formidable. "Oh, your name is Linley? And it seems you are even more famous than me?"

Linley just stared coldly at the enemies. "Enough talk. Let's do this."

"My men are ready. We can move at any time." The Arch Magus necromancer, Zassler, laughed delightedly. Suddenly, two golden skeletal archers manifested behind him.

Linley was startled.

He had heard that Necromantic Magic possessed the Wraith Call ability, but this was the first time he had seen it in action. These two golden skeletal archers had auras that weren't the slightest bit weaker than combatants of the ninth rank.

"Linley, you seem to be quite powerful. Let's have a little competition and see who kills more." Zassler laughed delightedly, while at this moment, three powerful, three-meter tall golden-furred zombies appeared at the door. These golden-furred zombies had jade-green eyes.

Two golden skeletal archers, and three golden-furred zombies. Each of them had the power of a combatant of the ninth rank.

Combined, they made up a force of five combatants of the ninth rank!

Lampson looked at Zassler, then looked at Linley. Grinding his teeth, he ordered in a low voice, "Retreat. We leave now!" Lampson truly did not wish to give this order.

In order to capture Zassler, they had sacrificed so much.

But once they learned the secrets of Necromantic Magic from Zassler, the Radiant Church would totally be capable of secretly raising an entire squad of necromancers.

"Bebe. Haeru. Now!" Linley mentally ordered.

"Kill."

The Arch Magus necromancer, Zassler, issued a callous order, while at the same time he began to continue mumbling the words to yet another magical spell. Although these skeletal archers and golden-furred zombies had the power of ninth rank combatants, they were only equivalent to early-stage ninth rank combatants.

He, Zassler, had two summons which he was extremely proud of.

In order to subdue these two creatures he had encountered in the plane of departed souls, he had expended a tremendous amount of effort. Zassler's lips were constantly moving as he mumbled the words to this spell. The difficulty of summoning these two departed souls was far greater than the first five.

"Flee, now! The Undead Dragon is about to arrive!" The two Special Executors, the two Ascetics, and the Cardinal all hurriedly fled from the courtyard.

But right at this moment...

"Swish!" "Swish!"

Two golden arrows split the air, piercing directly towards the two Ascetics. At the same moment, two black blurs suddenly appeared from outside the courtyard.

"Lampson. Not one of you will escape." Linley's callous voice rang out, while at the same time, Linley charged towards them like a bolt of lightning.

Linley's movement speed really was incredibly fast. As a peak-stage ninth rank combatant who had inherited the speed inherent to the Armored Razorback Wurm, was supported by the Supersonic spell, and also borrowed the 'imposing force' of the world...Linley's speed far surpassed those two Special Executors, to say nothing of the Ascetics and the Cardinal.

“Roaaaar!”

The Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, charged recklessly at one of the Special Executors, clawing and biting at him. Terrified, the Special Executor immediately chopped viciously at the Blackcloud Panther with his sword.

“Ah!” The Special Executor’s skull was caved in by the panther’s paw, while his sword hadn’t managed to injure Haeru in the slightest.

“Hrmph.” The Blackcloud Panther was filled with contempt.

In the past, Linley had used the adamantine heavy sword while at the peak-stage of the ninth rank in Dragonform, yet still hadn’t been able to do anything. In the end, he had been forced to rely on both the Supergravity Field as well as the Airwings spells before he could force the panther to submit.

In terms of defense, the Blackcloud Panther was even more formidable than Linley, and only a whisker inferior to Bebe.

“Slash, slash!”

Catching the Special Executor totally off-guard, Bebe pierced straight through his defense, driving his claws into the man’s chest and ripping the man’s heart out.

In the blink of an eye, the two magical beasts had killed two combatants of the ninth rank.

"Groooooowl!" The Blackcloud Panther turned and attacked the nearby Ascetic. The Ascetic was truly stunned. Two magical beasts had just popped up out of nowhere and killed two Special Executors.

Bebe charged towards the other Ascetic as well.

The two Ascetics and Lampson were all truly in states of shock. They specialized in light-style magic, but all magic took time to set up. The spells they could instacast wouldn't be of use against these two magical beasts.

"Lampson!"

Linley let out a loud roar. Wielding his adamantine heavy sword, like a demonic god, he chopped down with his black adamantine heavy sword, causing the very air to vibrate with the force of the blow.

Lampson discovered, to his terror, that the space above him had been totally locked in.

"Lin-"

In the moment of his death, Lampson thought back to that first time he had encountered Linley. That was the day that the sculpture, 'Awakening

From the Dream' was being auctioned. At that time, Linley was an optimistic, joyful young genius. But a few years later, Linley had become so frightening. And today, Linley was going to take his life.

"Bam."

Before Lampson's unwilling eyes, Linley's adamantine heavy sword slashed down directly on his body. At this moment, Linley managed to link together some of the scattered insights he had regarding the new level he was trying to attain.

It was like the pulse of the world itself.

Those deep tremors. Those irresistible vibrations. The terrifying force that the adamantine heavy sword was carrying suddenly transformed into a 'pulse' like rhythm which entered Lampson's body.

Lampson's entire body trembled once, and then he collapsed to the ground. Not a single wound could be seen on Lampson's body...but blood was flowing from Lampson's ear and nose.

If someone were to cut open Lampson's skin, they would discover that Lampson's internal organs had all disintegrated.

At this time, Bebe and Haeru finished off the two remaining Ascetics. This killing spree was simply too perfectly formulated. The undead creatures which Zassler had summoned, along with Linley's fearsome appearance, had actually frightened Lampson's group so much that they had directly fled, but just as they had reached the walls, they were caught totally off-guard by Bebe and Haeru, these two unspeakably terrifying magical beasts.

The end result was plain for everyone to see.

Bebe, Haeru, and Linley had killed five combatants of the ninth rank! If they counted the person whom Linley had killed at the beginning, they had killed six.

"Groooooowl."

Right at this moment, in the middle of the courtyard, the space began to rumble as a dimensional crack appeared. An enormous, black dragon's head stretched out through the dimensional crack.

Wraith Call – Undead Dragon!

"But...but..." Zassler stared at Linley, as well as his black Shadowmouse and the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru. He was totally shocked, totally speechless.

Just now, he had been very arrogant, going so far as to say that he would deal with three of them, if Linley could handle two.

But before his undead creatures had killed a single person, Linley and his magical beasts had killed all of the combatants.

"Mr. Zassler, there's no need to finish summoning this Undead Dragon, I think. Or did you want to test it out against Bebe, or perhaps Haeru?" Linley said calmly.

The leathery face of the Arch Magus necromancer, Zassler, twitched. And then, he banished the Undead Dragon back to the plane of departed souls.

"Linley, those two magical beasts of yours are indeed rather powerful. But my Undead Dragon isn't weak either. What's more, the Undead Dragon isn't the only creature I possess. I also have an Ancient Wight." Zassler sneered. "You must understand, so long as the realm of departed souls remains, the army available to a necromancer is endless."

Linley truly was frightened by Zassler's words.

Actually, in his heart, Zassler knew that taming an undead creature in the realm of departed souls was no easy feat. They had to be subdued one at a time, after all. In the past, when he had subdued this Undead Dragon, he had sacrificed many other undead creatures.

"Let's hurry up and clean up this courtyard. Don't let the Radiant Church know what happened here." Linley said immediately.

Zassler immediately began to issue orders to his undead creatures.

Those two golden skeletal archers and the three golden-furred zombies very obediently began to dispose of the corpses. They were quite efficient. Very soon, all the corpses had vanished.

"Linley." Zassler looked at Linley with interest. "From what Lampson said, it seems you are quite famous. Tell me about yourself?"

Linley glanced at Zassler. "Shut your mouth. Quiet."

Seeing Linley's absolutely emotionless golden eyes, Zassler began to laugh. "Linley, it seems as though you have quite a large grudge against the Radiant Church, am I right?"

"So what if I do?" Linley responded this time.

"What sort of grudge?" Zassler immediately asked.

"I won't stop till one of us is destroyed." Linley's voice was quiet, but it was like the sinister wind which blew in the realm of departed souls, capable of making one's soul shudder.

Zassler's eyes immediately lit up. He excitedly said, "Haha, good. Linley, it seems you have some ability. How about this. You assist me, and together, we will deal with the Radiant Church."

"Me, assist you? You be the leader?" Linley looked at Zassler.

Zassler had to admit to himself that he felt just the slightest bit uncomfortable when Linley stared at him with those dark golden eyes.

"No need to differentiate between who is the lead, and who is not. The two of us will work together." As a necromancer, Zassler's close-combat abilities were very poor. In addition, his undead creatures took a certain amount of time to summon.

Linley's dark gold eyes stared at Zassler for quite some time.

"Fine. I accept." Linley finally spoke. Linley had to admit that joining forces with a necromancer could indeed make him stronger.

Zassler immediately exulted. "Haha, wonderful. With the two of us joining forces, what have we to fear? Heidens, there will come a day when I kill you, you old bastard. Linley, who in the Radiant Church do you wish to kill?" Zassler was certain that Linley had to have had a major grudge against someone in the Radiant Church, for him to hate it so.

"Who?"

Linley shook his head. "I intend to destroy the Radiant Church and tear out its roots."

"The Radiant Church?" Zassler was truly stunned for a moment, then he laughed loudly. "Haha, wonderful, excellent! When the time comes, we will kill Heidens together and annihilate the Radiant Church!"

But Linley's face was cold and emotionless.

"Let's go." Linley led Bebe and Haeru towards the exit.

"Where to?" Zassler immediately followed.

"Do you have any destination?" Linley asked.

"None." Zassler shook his head.

Linley said calmly, "Then starting today, just follow me." As he spoke, Linley led Bebe and Haeru into the darkness. Zassler started, then mumbled to himself, "It seems that by following this Linley, the future will be quite exciting." And thus, this eight hundred year old Arch Magus necromancer followed Linley into the night.

There were no stars in the night sky, nor was there a moon.

Linley and the Arch Magus necromancer, Zassler, the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, and Bebe made their way through the secluded alleyway. At this time, Linley returned to his human form.

“Crackle—”

Linley’s ripped and torn pants were instantly consumed by flame. And then, with a flip of the hand, Linley retrieved yet another pair of pants as well as a form-fitting black shirt. In the blink of an eye, Linley redressed himself.

“Oh, this Linley kid is even more special than I thought.” Zassler’s green eyes stared at Linley. How could Zassler not know what had just happened? Linley clearly had an interspatial ring.

He, Zassler, had an interspatial ring of his own as well.

Over four hundred years ago, in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, when he was collecting undead slaves, he had accidentally raised a half-shattered skeleton that had been dead for who knows how many years. On the skeleton’s finger, there was an interspatial ring.

At the time, Zassler had been wildly overjoyed.

Based on his observations of the surroundings, Zassler guessed that this skeleton most likely had engaged in battle against magical beasts countless thousands of years ago, and then crawled into a deep valley where it had died of its heavy injuries. But after thousands of years, the local geography had changed and the valley had been sealed off.

As an 800+ year old Arch Magus necromancer, it was understandable for him to be in possession of an interspatial ring. But this young man in front of him clearly was very young. Where did he acquire one?

"Let's move, fast." Linley finished dressing himself and let out a quiet order.

"Linley, I find myself more and more curious about you." Zassler's laugh was so very sinister.

Linley glanced at him sideways. "Zassler, remember. In the future, without my permission, you are not to call me by my real name. Just call me 'Ley.'"

Zassler's eyebrows twitched. "I understand. You are afraid your identity will be revealed."

Actually, Linley's name was a relatively famous one in the O'Brien Empire as well. But this was primarily in the field of sculpture. Sculpture aficionados knew a great deal about Linley. A sixteen year old who was able to carve a sculpture on the level of the Ten Masterpieces? How could they not be filled with admiration towards him?

Unfortunately, Zassler, that old philistine, had no interest in sculpture.

They hurried along the way.

"Where are we going?" Zassler asked quietly while maintaining his high rate of movement.

"Outside the city." Linley said calmly.

"But this isn't the direction of the city gate, is it?" Zassler asked suspiciously.

"Must we leave the city by the city gate?" Linley glanced at Zassler, who immediately understood what Linley meant.

"But it isn't ten o'clock at night yet. The city gates haven't shut yet. We absolutely can depart by the city gates if we wish." Zassler objected.

"I'm not certain of the forces which the Radiant Church has in the prefectural city of Cerre. Perhaps they have people planted amongst the gate guards here. If you go by that route...it's possible that they will recognize you. After all, aside from those six experts from the headquarters of the Radiant Church, there are others who have seen you today and knew that you were heading towards that residence." Linley said calmly.

Zassler nodded.

On the way to being locked into the residence, there had indeed been another group of people within the residence, all of whom clearly were the Radiant Church's people in the prefectural city of Cerre. Originally, there were servants there to serve Lampson and the others as well.

But Lampson was extremely careful. He was afraid of the possibility that these people had been infiltrated, and thus all of the servants had been sent away.

....

Linley and Zassler quickly arrived at the high city walls. Those twenty-meter high walls were more than enough to render Zassler speechless.

"There's no way I can get over." Zassler was quite blunt.

He was an Arch Magus necromancer. His physical condition was on par with an ordinary fighter of the third rank. But for him to leap over a twenty, thirty meter high wall was impossible.

"Haeru." Linley looked at his Blackcloud Panther.

"Groooooowl." This two meter tall, four meter long, handsome black panther, Haeru, stared at the Arch Magus necromancer Zassler with his cold eyes.

"Ride on Haeru's back." Linley instructed.

Zassler no longer hesitated, immediately leaping onto Haeru's back. Standing on Haeru's neck, Bebe also gave Zassler a challenging look. Zassler, however, didn't dare contend against these two magical beasts.

He had clearly seen the results of that battle just then. Given his judgment, he could clearly tell that both the black Shadowmouse and the black panther were magical beasts of the ninth rank. Without having his undead minions ready, he, an Arch Magus necromancer, didn't dare irritate magical beasts of the ninth rank.

"Let's go."

With a leap, Linley flew into the air like an arrow, vaulting over thirty meters with a single bound, easily flipping past the wall and landing on the other side.

"Swoosh." With a mighty bound, Haeru transformed into a black blur and easily leapt past the twenty-meter high city wall.

On the wild grass outside the city.

"Whoah. This panther is quite fast." Zassler clutched his chest, letting out a shocked breath. As he spoke, he dismounted.

"Stay on." Linley immediately said. "Haeru, let's go back now."

Linley immediately executed the 'Supersonic' spell on himself. Linley quickly hurried towards their mountain valley home, moving as fast as the wind, but Haeru easily maintained pace with him.

Scant minutes later, Zassler and Linley arrived at the mountain valley.

"Starting today, you will live here. If you want to leave, it's best if you change your appearance first." Linley said calmly. Looking at his surroundings, Zassler nodded with satisfaction. "I like secluded areas. This place is very much suited for my training."

That very night, Linley built a wooden room for Zassler as well.

Late at night, when Linley was seated on the grass, preparing to quietly train, he suddenly sensed that from Zassler's wooden room, there was a dense, deathly aura emanating from within. No wonder Zassler liked secluded areas. In places where there were many people, Zassler wouldn't dare train in such an open, unrestrained manner.

"Necromancer." Thinking back to the information he had read about necromancers, Linley couldn't help but feel some fear.

Generally speaking, the older a necromancer was, the more powerful his spiritual energy was, and the more terrifyingly powerful he was. Because, with enough time, they could amass an enormous number of undead minions.

"At the courtyard, Zassler's undead minions were all of the ninth rank. Most likely, he also has an ocean's worth of middle-rank undead minions as well." Linley had heard that an Arch Magus necromancer could be considered an entire terrifying army by himself.

An Arch Magus necromancer was totally capable of summoning a massive army of hundreds of thousands of minions to do battle.

And, in wars, as long as he could kill his opponents, the necromancer would be able to create undead slaves out of their corpses, controlling the deceased warriors of his opponents. His opponent's corpses would do his bidding and wage war against his enemies.

A necromancer's army only grew with each battle.

But of course, the pre-requisite for that was that the necromancer have sufficient spiritual energy.

"In addition, I've heard it said that necromancers have more than just the Wraith Call ability or the ability to create undead slaves. I've heard that there are some unique, sinister necromantic spells."

Necromancers were most famous for their plagues.

In historical records, there was indeed a case where, because of a single necromancer, a huge epidemic had occurred, costing tens of millions of people their lives. This was also the reason why, when Linley had seen Holmer using poison, Linley had wondered if Holmer was a necromancer.

.....

Dawn. The sky slowly brightened.

The Arch Magus necromancer, Zassler, retracted his spiritual energy out of the realm of departed souls and back into his body. Opening his eyes, a small smile appeared on his face. "Yesterday really was my lucky day."

"Not only did I regain my liberty, in the realm of departed souls, I even managed to subdue a Black Knight Captain. Although it cost me one of my golden-furred zombies, the cost was worth it." Zassler was very happy.

Although golden-furred zombies were also of the ninth rank, compared to a Black Knight Captain, they were much weaker. A Black Knight Captain was roughly on the same level of power as the Undead Dragon. It could be considered a peak-stage creature of the ninth rank.

Right now, under Zassler's control were three undead minions of the peak-stage ninth rank – An Undead Dragon, an Ancient Wight, and a Black Knight Captain. At the same time, he also had available to him two golden-furred zombies and two golden skeletal archers.

Three peak-stage ninth rank minions, four ordinary ninth-rank minions.

This was the most powerful force available to Zassler. As for undead minions of the eighth and seventh ranks, he had far more. After all, in the realm of departed souls, a high-class undead could enslave many lower-ranked undead.

For example, those two golden skeletal archers controlled an army of five hundred thousand skeletons.

As for the Black Knight Captain, he had a number of Black Knights of the eighth rank under his command.

A necromancer, especially an 800+ year old Arch Magus necromancer, definitely could be considered a terrifying one-man army. This was no joke.

"Hrm?" As he walked out of his wooden room, Zassler's eyes immediately widened.

Because right now, Linley was quietly standing on top of the pond, his eyes closed. His body seemed to be feather-light, and he didn't sink down at all into the water.

"This is..." Zassler was extremely amazed.

Zassler knew very well that Linley was not a Saint-level combatant. After transforming, Linley was only a peak-stage ninth rank, while in his human form, he was most likely even weaker. But right now, Linley was standing there as though he weighed nothing at all.

"Mr. Zassler." Linley suddenly opened his eyes, a rare smile on his face. At the same time, he walked over on the surface of the pond, as easily as though he were walking on solid land.

"We can be considered allies now. I want to know a few things about the Radiant Church." Linley said directly.

Zassler chuckled, then nodded. "Even if you didn't ask me, I would tell you. Right. Before this, we should show some mutual trust in each other. I really don't know much about you at all."

"Linley. Full name, Linley Baruch. Twenty one years old. Beneath the Saint-rank, no one in the world is a match for me." Linley said calmly, but his words were extremely confident.

As a peak-stage Dragonblood Warrior of the ninth rank, he could already be considered invincible save against Saint-levels. When combining that with the adamantine heavy sword which he could use with the 'impose' level at maximum proficiency now, and more importantly with Linley's supportive abilities as a dual-element magus of the eighth rank...Linley's power could rise to an amazing level.

"Dragonblood Warrior. No wonder." Only now did Zassler understand that Linley wasn't a Draconian. Suddenly, Zassler stared. "What did you say? Twenty one years old?"

"And?" Linley looked at Zassler.

Linley knew very well that this Arch Magus necromancer was definitely a very proud person. If Linley wasn't able to totally overawe him, most likely their teamwork would be very difficult to manage.

"How is that possible?" Zassler was rather shocked. But then, he laughed. "Haha, I'm different. The older we necromancers are, the more of an advantage we have. This year, I'll be 866 years old." Zassler proudly announced his age.

"Linley, you say that you are invincible aside from the Saint-levels. I don't really believe it." Zassler said calmly. "My army of undead minions reaches into the millions, and I have three peak-stage undead minions of the ninth rank."

At this time, both sides were trying to forcibly suppress the other. In addition, by letting each other know exactly how powerful they were, they would be able to coordinate their teamwork better as well.

"Zassler." Linley glanced at him coldly. "I admit that if I were to fight against your entire army of undead, I wouldn't be able to fight through them. However, I have two peak-stage magical beasts of my own. And I've forgotten to tell you something. I'm not only a Dragonblood Warrior. I am also a dual-element magus of the eighth rank. Your human wave tactics are of no use against me."

Zassler was now totally stunned.

He could accept that as a Dragonblood Warrior, Linley could reach the peak of the ninth rank as a warrior at twenty one years of age.

But a twenty one year old dual element magus of the eighth rank was absolutely terrifying.

After all, the hardest part of magus training was cultivating spiritual energy. There was simply no way to avoid it. For a twenty one year old to have such a terrifying amount of spiritual energy was something which Zassler didn't even dare to think about.

"A dual-element magus of the eighth rank. Twenty one years old?"

Zassler murmured. "Is this the number one magus genius in all of history?"

When Linley was seventeen, he had reached the seventh rank as a magus. This was the second youngest in history.

But a twenty one year old dual-element magus of the eighth rank? This was the first in history.

"When I reached the eighth rank as a necromancer, I believe I was around four hundred years old." When Zassler thought about how old he had been, he found that there was nothing more he could say.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 27, Secrets of the Church

Zassler knew that for a twenty one year old to reach such a level meant that in the future, he would eventually leave Zassler far behind in the dust.

“We can be considered to know something about each other’s abilities now. Didn’t you want to know about the Radiant Church?” A look of self-confidence was on Zassler’s face. With regards to the secrets of the Radiant Church, he, Zassler, probably knew as much as the high level members of the Church itself.

“Speak.” Linley immediately began to listen carefully.

Zassler nodded. “Simply put, the Radiant Church’s power, on the most superficial level, includes Missionaries, Priests, Bishops, Vicars, and Cardinals. They also have the eight ace regiments of knights, as well as powerful Knights of the Radiant Temple. This can be considered their second military force. In addition, they also have the servants of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal as well as a large number of Ascetics.”

Hearing this, Linley was silent. He knew all this already.

“But aside from these overtly visible forces, they also have two hidden forces.” These words immediately aroused Linley’s interest.

Ascetics and Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal were considered their ‘overtly visible’ forces?

"These two hidden forces are extremely formidable, more powerful than any of their other forces. The first hidden force is known as the Zealots!" Zassler frowned. "These Zealots are very terrifying. They have a very strange power which is not light-style power. I can't explain it either."

This was the first time that Linley had heard the term 'Zealot'.

"And the second force?" Linley asked.

Zassler's face was solemn. "The second force is the most powerful force the Radiant Church has to offer, their true trump card. They will never use this force unless things reach the final, most critical point. These are... Descended Angels!"

"Angels?!" Linley's heart shook.

In the past, at the Ernst Institute, Linley had read quite a bit regarding Angels. The impression he had of Angels was that they were powerful, extremely powerful.

"Because of the restrictions of having fleshly bodies, Descended Angels will not be at the peak of their power. However, even the weakest Descended Angel will be a combatant of the ninth rank. Many are Saint-levels. Descended Angels are the true, most terrifying force available to the Radiant Church." Zassler sighed.

Linley's heart was filled with shock.

"Zassler, I've read about Angels before. The descriptions of the most powerful Angels say that they have the power of Deities. If the Radiant Church has a large number of powerful Angels, they shouldn't be in their current state." Linley probed.

Zassler shook his head. "No. The power of the Descended Angels will depend on the human vessels the Radiant Church provides."

"Human vessels?" Linley looked questioningly at Zassler.

"Right. Angels are unable to create dimensional rifts and directly descend into our world. Their only option is to use some special methods and descend into the body of a human. The strength or weakness of this human body will determine how much power the Angel can wield." Zassler explained.

"Linley, although this world has ninth-rank combatants and Saint-level combatants...if it weren't for their battle-qi, their physical strength would be quite a bit weaker. Normal humans can only reach the sixth rank based on their muscular strength."

Linley agreed with this assessment.

"When an Angel descends into a body with muscular strength of the sixth rank, they can at most wield power of the ninth rank. Thus, the Radiant Church needs bodies of the seventh rank, or even higher." Zassler said with certainty.

"Even more powerful bodies?" Linley frowned.

“Although normal human bodies can generally only reach the sixth rank, there are still some geniuses who are extremely powerful. Since youth, they possess boundless strength. It can be said that they are inherently powerful. These people with special natural gifts might reach the limit of the seventh rank based on muscle power alone. And a body which can naturally reach the seventh rank in power should be enough to allow an Angel to wield power of the Saint-level.”

Hearing Zassler’s words, Linley couldn’t help but frown.

Because Linley’s great grandfather had been able to train to the seventh level just based on his muscular strength. But afterwards, Linley’s great grandfather had died in battle. In the past, Linley had never questioned this, but now...

“Could it have been possible that my great grandfather was actually taken away by the Radiant Church for his body?” Linley was guessing.

In truth, all of the Four Supreme Warriors possessed tremendous innate physical gifts. All of them could train to an extremely powerful level just based on muscle strength.

Zassler continued, “This has caused the Radiant Church to scour the entire world for people with powerful bodies. The more powerful the body, the more powerful the Descended Angel will be. But it’s of no use. In this era, the Yulan continent has four Deity-level combatants. Faced with these Deity-level combatants, Saint-level combatants can do nothing but die.”

"Four Deity-level combatants?" Linley stared at Zassler in surprise. It seemed as though Zassler knew about the existence of that expert from the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

Zassler saw Linley's surprise. Laughing, he said, "The four Deity-level combatants are humanity's War God and High Priest, the magical beast who is the King of the Forest of Darkness, and the magical beast King of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts who appeared on Apocalypse Day."

"Linley, when I was being taught the secrets to Necromantic Magic, I learned...that the bodies of Deities are at the Saint-level in terms of physical strength alone." Zassler said with certainty.

A Deity-level combatant could be said to be composed of his divine body, his divine spark, and the divine power he wielded. There was no way a Saint-level combatant could injure them at all.

"Thus, in order to wield the power of a Deity, the body alone must be at the Saint-level in physical strength. Most likely, the Radiant Church is not able to manifest a Deity-level Angel. Even if high class Angels were to descend, they wouldn't be able to use their deific power, due to being restricted by their physical bodies." Zassler said confidently.

The teachings of Necromantic Magic were abstruse and profound. In addition, Zassler was over eight centuries old. He truly knew many things.

"Deity-level combatants!" Linley's heart swelled with amazement.

Any of these four most powerful experts of the Yulan continent could shake the world with their might. On the Apocalypse Day, the appearance of Dylin had caused both the Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows to flee and avoid him.

The Radiant Church had their Descended Angels. But then, what did the Cult of Shadows possess, for them to be equal to the Radiant Church for countless, untold years?

Despite that, both powers combined still didn't dare to offend that Dylin, the King of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

From this, one could clearly tell how ineffable the power of a Deity-level combatant was.

"Who knows when I will have power like that." Linley was filled with eagerness and hope towards this sort of power.

....

Zassler continued to tell Linley a great deal of information regarding the Radiant Church.

"The Radiant Church cares the most about two things. The first is finding extremely powerful bodies. The second is to find extremely pure souls." As Zassler said this, Linley's face changed.

Pure souls?

His own mother had died as a result of this.

“Supposedly, the ‘Radiant Sovereign’ which the Radiant Church worships only needs two things. The first is the worship of his followers. The second is pure souls. The purer the souls offered by the Church, the greater the gifts that the Radiant Sovereign will bestow upon them.”

By now, Linley had a good understanding of the Radiant Church.

The reason why the Radiant Church sacrificed pure souls to the Radiant Sovereign was the same reason they searched for powerful bodies. It was because they wanted to acquire powerful Descended Angels.

“Linley, in the Yulan continent, the Radiant Church has hidden reserves of power in every location. After all, the power of a religion is extremely formidable.” Zassler said with a sigh. “But in the Four Great Empires, the Radiant Church is fairly weak. In the Anarchic Lands, however, their influence is quite powerful.”

“Anarchic Lands?”

A map drifted to the forefront of Linley’s memories.

East of the O’Brien Empire, there was an area which was slightly larger than the O’Brien Empire itself. In the center of this area was an enormous forest – the Forest of Darkness.

The Forest of Darkness was thousands of kilometers wide, and thousands of kilometers long as well. This enormous forest took up half of the land in this area.

North of the Forest of Darkness, were the Eighteen Northern Duchies, roughly the same size as one of the O'Brien Empires administrative provinces.

South of the Forest of Darkness were the 48 Anarchic Duchies. The total area of these duchies was roughly half the size of the O'Brien Empire. This could be considered the most politically chaotic area in the Yulan continent, as the 48 Anarchic Duchies engaged in constant warfare.

"The Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows are the two most powerful religions in the Anarchic Lands." Zassler said.

Linley could imagine.

In the war-torn Anarchic Lands, it was only natural for those poor commoners to turn to religion for solace.

"Alright, I've talked so much that my mouth is dry. Let's eat breakfast." Zassler laughed loudly.

Zassler and Linley were both in possession of interspatial rings, and both their rings contained fine wine. Drinking wine while eating freshly plucked fruit, the two of them continued to discuss their plans for dealing with the Radiant Church.

"Oh, right. I suddenly remember something." Zassler suddenly said.

"What's that?" Linley looked at Zassler

Zassler chuckled. "This time, when I was being escorted under guard, we ran into another squad of the Radiant Church's men. This squad was also escorting a group of people."

"Who? An expert like you?" Linley asked.

If they were experts, then he and Zassler would go rescue them. After all, each of them had enmity with the Radiant Church. If they banded together, they would only be stronger.

"No. It was two adorable girls." Zassler shook his head. "Originally, when that squad and Lampson's squad met up, I saw those girls. I must say, those two girls were as innocent and pure as angels. Based on my familiarity with souls, I am quite certain that these two girls have extremely pure souls."

Practitioners of Necromantic Magic, compared with the other types of magi, were undoubtedly the most experienced when it came to souls.

"However, in the eyes of the Radiant Church, my importance far outweighed the importance of those two girls. Lampson and the others took me away at high speed, while the two girls were taken away by another squad, which was moving quite a bit slowly." Zassler said.

"So your intention is...?" Linley looked questioningly at Zassler.

Zassler chuckled, "My intention is for us to go rescue those two girls. After all, that squad didn't have many experts in it. It only had a single combatant of the eighth rank."

In the eyes of Zassler and Linley, an expert of the eighth rank really was nothing.

"How is it that an Arch Magus necromancer like you would be so kind-hearted as to go rescue two girls?" Linley looked at Zassler.

Zassler laughed. "I delight in disrupting the affairs of the Radiant Church whenever I can. And what's more, with such extremely pure souls, the two of them might be suitable for training in Necromantic Magic."

The requirements for learning Necromantic Magic were terrifyingly high.

This was why in the entire Yulan continent, the number of necromancers was extremely, extremely low. The soul was a person's most important quality, and even the Radiant Sovereign desired to acquire pure souls. From this, one could tell how important a pure soul was. In order to learn Necromantic Magic, an extremely pure soul was needed.

"You should know what trajectory they were on, right?" Linley asked.

Zassler nodded his head. "The path they took should be identical to the path that I had been taken on, unless this squad has already received word of the deaths of Lampson and his men. Only then might they suddenly change their direction.”

“Then let’s go.” Linley immediately rose.

“Groooowl.” Bebe and Haeru, who had been lying on the nearby grass, both stood up. These two magical beasts were very excited. By their nature, magical beasts were violent and barbaric, loving to do battle.

“Right now?” Zassler was a bit startled. “We’ve destroyed all trace of Lampson and his men. Even if the Radiant Church’s people discovered that the manor was empty, they probably would only think that Lampson and his men had left. They wouldn’t discover that Lampson is dead this fast. Even if they found out that Lampson and his men were dead, they wouldn’t be able to send the message to the other squad so quickly.”

“Leave nothing to chance at all. We will immediately set out on the same path that you were taken on and trace our way back.” Linley said immediately.

Zassler, helpless against Linley, could only shake his head, let out a sigh, then rise to his feet as well.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 28, Flower-Like Sisters

Dawn. The air was clear and fresh.

Ruskin [Luó'si'jin] was leading his two subordinates as they moved at high speed in the direction of the manor where Lampson and the others had settled into last night.

"I must make sure that we take excellent care of Lord Lampson and the others. A single word from Lampson could most likely get us all promoted." Ruskin was feeling rather frustrated though. "Unfortunately, it seemed as though Lord Lampson is being extremely cautious. They didn't allow a single attendant to enter the manor."

As he was thinking these things, Ruskin walked to the gate.

"What's going on? The gate isn't shut?" Ruskin frowned. He knew that Lampson and the other lords were on a very important matter. They definitely wouldn't leave the door open.

He entered the courtyard. As he did, he felt that the courtyard was a bit too quiet.

"Milords." Ruskin called out.

But his voice echoed out in the courtyard without any response.

"The two of you, look around for me. I'll go upstairs and see what I can find." Ruskin had a very bad feeling about this. He immediately headed to the second floor, where Lampson and the others' rooms had been located.

Every single door on the second floor was open. None were closed.

Entering Lampson's room, Ruskin immediately frowned. The bed was in a used state, clearly not made. At the same time, at the head of the bed, there was a backpack.

"This isn't right."

Ruskin immediately entered another room. Indeed, the bed there was also in a messy state, and a backpack was on a table. As of yet, Ruskin hadn't seen any problems...but he felt this wasn't quite right.

"Lord Lampson didn't even have the time to put on the backpack, and the same was true for the other lords as well. Could it be that something important occurred, forcing Lord Lampson and the others to immediately depart?" Ruskin frowned.

"Milord!" A frantic call from downstairs.

Ruskin's face changed, and he immediately rushed down the hallway, then jumped down directly from the balcony to the courtyard.

"What is it?" Ruskin looked at his two subordinates.

"Milord, there are bloodstains here." The two of them pointed at the wall.

Originally, Zassler had ordered his undead minions to destroy all traces of the deceased. Virtually all traces, including bloodstains, had indeed been removed. But when the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, had smashed open that Special Executor's skull with one paw, blood had splattered everywhere. Although those undead minions were very industrious and careful, there were still a few tiny traces remaining.

"Bloodstains. And the lords have all disappeared?"

Staring at the quiet courtyard, Ruskin felt as though an enormous boulder was pressing against his chest. "A battle occurred here. As for the lords, could it be that they are in pursuit?"

Ruskin knew how astonishingly powerful the six of these lords were. He didn't believe that someone could kill these six lords.

Ruskin instructed his two subordinates, "The two of you, head out immediately towards the provincial capital of Basil. Report this news back."

"Yes!"

But before the two subordinates had even reached the provincial capital of Basil, Linley's group had already encountered the second squad mid-way.

"It's them?" Linley, Bebe, Zassler, and Haeru were hiding in some tall, wild grass by the roadside.

Zassler looked at the four knights surrounding a carriage. Nodding, he said, "Right. It's them. The two girls should be inside the carriage."

"Inside the carriage?"

Linley frowned, then looked at Bebe. "Bebe, I expect that the carriage will have more than just those two girls. There should be people guarding the girls as well. Bebe, you are physically small. Your assignment will be to enter the carriage at high speed and kill those guards."

Zassler nodded. "This squad should also have six people, all men. There should be two more men inside this carriage."

"Did you hear that, Bebe? Kill the two men inside the carriage." Linley laughed as he rubbed Bebe's head.

Bebe hopped onto Linley's shoulders, lifting his little head up confidently as he squeaked at Linley. "Boss. Have I, Bebe, ever let you down?"

Linley chortled lovingly.

"Let's do this." Linley said to him mentally.

Bebe immediately grew solemn as he stared at the carriage with his little eyes. And then, he quietly snuck through the tall grass, drawing closer to the carriage...

Within the carriage, there were two beautiful, jade-haired identical twin sisters. Their eyes were slightly red and swollen, and they were staring hatefully at the two men opposite of them.

"You bastards." One of the two, the one whose eyes were slightly larger, cursed in a low voice.

The two men only smiled at them, not minding in the slightest.

"Rebecca [Li'be'ka], don't curse anymore. Cursing these pieces of garbage is a waste of energy. And to think, we believed in the Radiant Church all these years and prayed to the Lord to bring us happiness. Who would've thought that they would be this vile." The other girl's eyes were also filled with hatred.

"Big sis." Rebecca miserably clutched at her older sister's hand.

Rebecca and Leena [Li'na] hailed from the 48 Anarchic Duchies. They had followed their father in believing in the Radiant Sovereign, but who would've thought that the Radiant Church would kill their parents, then abduct them.

With their parents dead, Rebecca and Leena were now without family.

And now, their future had turned to ashes. They couldn't see any hope.

"Father. Mother." Rebecca and Leena began to tremble as they thought of their parents. All these years, their parents had protected them, no matter how much chaos and war there had been in the Anarchic Lands.

But this time...

"Leena. Take your little sister and run." Their father had tightly held onto a combatant of the seventh rank at the last moment of his life. Despite only being a warrior of the fifth rank, their father had managed to drag it out for a few seconds longer.

But unfortunately, the Radiant Church's forces were too strong.

"God, please rescue us." Leena was shouting in her heart. "So long as you can rescue us and give us a chance to seek revenge, I am willing to sacrifice everything, including my very soul."

She had watched as her parents died. She wanted revenge.

Unfortunately. God was too far away from them. How would he be able to sense the desires of these two ordinary souls?

"Slash." Suddenly, a very strange sound rang out.

Leena and Rebecca both turned in surprise. They only saw a black blur flash by. "Slash!" The sound rang out a second time, and blood spurted everywhere.

Rebecca and Leena stared in shock.

The heads of the two men who had been guarding them suddenly slumped down. Half of their neck had been cut off. They were unquestionably dead.

"Who was it?" The twin sisters stared in shock, then suddenly were overjoyed. They knew that someone had rescued them. They looked in all directions, but they couldn't see their savior.

"Squeak, squeak." A sound rang out from beneath them.

Rebecca and Leena both lowered their heads, only to see an adorable little black mouse standing there, holding his head up in a very arrogant fashion. In a very human-like manner, it used its sharp claws to stroke its whiskers.

"A rat?" Both Rebecca and Leena were confused.

Bebe immediately grew angry, and he quickly jumped up while waving his little paws around wildly. He suddenly transformed into a black blur, flashing past them.

"It was the rat?" Rebecca and Leena began to understand.

Bebe had made no noise at all when he had killed those two. What's more, the carriage wheels continually rumbled as the carriage rolled along the road. The four knights outside hadn't noticed a thing.

"Ah!"

Suddenly, a miserable scream from outside.

"Roaaaar!" A furious roar from a beast.

Rebecca and Leena looked at each other, then immediately pushed open the carriage door. The carriage driver had already collapsed, his fresh blood staining the carriage.

Rebecca and Leena quickly turned to look at the four knights.

But all they saw....

Was four devilish flashes of violet light. The three knights didn't have a chance to react before their heads went flying, while the warrior wearing black armor, Linley, landed gracefully in front of the carriage, the adamantine heavy sword on his back.

"Hello. You've just been freed." Linley said with a smile.

Seeing the powerful youngster in front of them, Rebecca and Leena were both somewhat stunned. In their eyes, those knights were extremely powerful. But it seemed as though to this youngster, those knights weren't even capable of resisting for a moment.

"Rebecca and Leena. Hello there." An ancient voice rang out. Only now did Zassler stand up from amidst the grassy field.

Seeing Zassler's bony, decrepit body, as well as his extremely long, white eyebrows, Rebecca and Leena both called out in excitement, "Grandpa Zassler!"

They had travelled with Zassler for a time under common guard, so they knew each other.

"Grandpa Zassler, who is this lord?" Rebecca and Leena both looked curiously towards Linley. Suddenly, the two sisters noticed an enormous black panther was drawing near them. The panther's cold, eerie eyes made both Rebecca and Leena feel frightened.

"Don't be afraid. Haeru, stop scaring them." Linley barked.

"Arooo." Haeru made a placating voice towards Linley, then lowered his head and moved to the side, no longer daring to go frighten these twin sisters.

"Rebecca, Leena, this is Lord Linley. He isn't any weaker than me." Zassler chortled.

"Truly?" Rebecca and Leena stared at Linley in shock.

It wasn't that they didn't believe Linley was powerful; it was that they had seen how, when Zassler was being escorted, how much the Radiant Church had valued him. His jailors had even a Cardinal in their midst. Zassler had bragged to these sisters before about how he was capable of destroying a million-man army. It was only because he was surrounded and attacked by over ten combatants of the ninth rank that he was finally captured.

“Grandpa Zassler. It was this adorable mouse who saved us.” Rebecca and Leena immediately turned their heads to look at Bebe.

Bebe was currently standing on top of the carriage. He smirked at her, and then in the blink of an eye, he scurried onto Linley’s shoulders.

“You’re talking about Bebe? This is a magical beast which Linley tamed.” Zassler laughed as he introduced Bebe. Then he looked at Linley. “Linley. Let me introduce you. The younger sister, Rebecca, has slightly larger eyes. This one is the older sister, Leena.”

Linley smiled and nodded.

“Zassler, should we send these two girls back, or...?”

In Linley’s opinion, these two girls were of no use to them. After all, no matter how pure their souls were, that didn’t mean they were very powerful.

“Grandpa Zassler, we have no place to go.” The older sister, Leena, immediately grew frantic. Begging, she said, “Grandpa Zassler, let us come with you. We know that you’ve killed the Radiant Church’s people.

We also want to seek revenge for our parents.”

“Grandpa Zassler, we’re begging you.” Rebecca also beseeched him.

Zassler was planning to take these girls with him all along, with the intention of possibly inducting the twins into the dark art of Necromantic Magic. But he had to get Linley’s concurrence as well.

“Linley, let’s just take them along with us. Leena and Rebecca can both cook. We can’t always just eat roast meat in the valley, can we?” Zassler laughed.

Hearing his words, Rebecca and Leena hurriedly said, “We can do anything. We can fry, cook, clean.”

The two of them knew that without anyone to rely on, two beautiful girls such as them would have a disastrous fate. Seeing how highly Zassler seemed to value Linley’s opinion, they knew that Linley was undoubtedly an expert as well. This would give them an even greater chance of getting revenge.

Linley glanced at the two siblings. Facing their beseeching gaze, he nodded. “Fine.”

Rebecca and Leena’s eyes were instantly filled with a radiant, joyful light.

“Let’s go. We’re going back.” Linley instructed.

Linley's group once more returned to the mountain valley, but this time with the addition of these two siblings. The four of them shared one point in common: They were filled with hatred towards the Radiant Church!

The Northwest Administrative Province, one of the seven major provinces of the O'Brien Empire, was a vast place, with tens of millions of citizens living in it. The Northwest Administrative Province's provincial capital, Basil, was the most developed of the province's cities. Within the walls of Basil alone were over a million people.

Within Basil, there were many ancient clans as well.

Count Perry [Pi'li] was a relatively unassuming noble within Basil City. But amongst the ancient clans, he had quite a bit of influence. In addition, he was an extremely amiable person who never fought with others or struggled for influence. Virtually all of the nobles of the city were on good terms with him.

"Milord Count, you've returned." The guard outside the gate to his mansion smiled and bowed.

Count Perry was two hundred years old, and all his hair had turned silvery-white. But his long beard was as resplendent as it had been when he was young. Count Perry nodded slightly towards the guard, laughing warmly, "Oh, you've gotten a haircut. This haircut suits you. Did you get it done at old Locke's [Luo'ke] place?"

Hearing the words of praise, the guard was immediately all smiles. "Right. Mr. Locke is really quite skilled."

Beaming, Count Perry entered his mansion.

"Count Perry really is a nice man." The guard sighed to himself.

Count Perry really was a very kind person. This was the opinion of virtually everyone in the city of Basil. Count Perry didn't like to kill people and didn't like foul language. His every action totally demonstrated the ethics and nobility of a noble gentleman.

He entered the inner courtyard.

Count Perry's face suddenly sank.

"What is going on? How could something like this happen multiple times?" Count Perry was very frustrated. Just a few days ago, he had received the news that Cardinal Lampson and his Ascetics and Special Executors had disappeared within the prefectural city of Cerre. And now, he had received the news that the squad that had been escorting those two girls had been killed, and the girls had vanished.

Count Perry, after becoming the person responsible for the affairs of the Radiant Church in the Northwest Administrative Province of the O'Brien Empire, hadn't encountered such a thorny problem in a long time.

"I hope Lord Lampson hasn't met with any trouble."

Perry prayed silently.

If those two girls had been saved, then they had been saved. It wasn't of major concern. But Lampson and the other five were all experts of the ninth rank, and the person they were escorting was an Arch Magus necromancer of the ninth rank. This affair was the most important affair he had ever encountered after taking on the responsibilities for the Northwest Administrative Province.

"Milord Count." A hawk-nosed, tall and skinny man with curly hair walked in. Bowing respectfully, he said, "We've already completed our investigations regarding the missing lords."

Perry immediately looked at him. "Speak, fast."

"Based on our sympathizers' reports in the province, the lords still have yet to appear in any other cities. In addition, we've activated our entire network of sympathizers within the prefectural city of Cerre, yet we still haven't found anyone who saw the lords leaving the city." The hawk-nosed man replied respectfully.

Perry stared.

"What?" Perry's heart, previously tense, genuinely began to quiver. "Lampson and the other lords couldn't possibly have remained in the prefectural city of Cerre this entire time. And if they did stay in Cerre, there would be some trace of them. Lampson and the others must have been attacked. It is entirely possible that Lampson and the others could have exited the prefectural city of Cerre late at night by leaping past the city walls."

"But even if that was the case, Lord Lampson should still have reappeared in a different city."

Perry was starting to become truly worried.

He had an extremely bad premonition.

“Could it be possible that Lord Lampson encountered the attack of a powerful foe and was killed?” Perry didn’t dare to believe it. After all, Lampson and the others were all extremely powerful. To kill the six of them would require their opponents to number multiple experts of the ninth level, or a Saint-level combatant.

Perry suddenly looked at the hawk-nosed man. In a cold voice, he ordered, “Go at your fastest speed to find old Pori. Tell him to bring his three Bluewind Hawks to my study.”

“Yes, milord Count.” The hawk-nosed man knew exactly how important this situation was.

Perry hurriedly walked towards his study, and wrote three letters regarding Lampson’s squad’s affairs. Each copy was given to a different Bluewind Hawk and addressed to be delivered to the ‘Sacred Isle’.

Ever since the Holy Capital, Fenlai City, had been destroyed, the Radiant Church set up their new headquarters on an island not too far away from the Yulan continent. They publicly announced this place as being the ‘Sacred Isle’.

.....

Within the secluded valley outside the prefectural city of Cerre.

Right now, there were four wooden rooms here. One was for Linley and Bebe, another was for Zassler, the third was for Rebecca and Leena, while the last one was for Haeru.

Dawn. The valley was very quiet and peaceful.

A pair of twin beauties, so lovely they seemed to be an illusion, were chatting and laughing while washing some clothes. These clothes belonged to them, Linley, and Zassler. Within the valley, they handled all the cooking and cleaning.

"Big sis. Do you think Grandpa Zassler gets tired from spending all his time in that room training?" Rebecca asked Leena quietly.

Zassler's wooden room was totally shrouded by a black, deathly aura. That dense, black, deathly aura made Rebecca and Leena scared to even approach it.

Leena wrinkled her nose in a frown, an adorable sight. She said consideringly, "Perhaps powerful experts all have to train very hard like that. However, I still feel more comfortable watching big brother Linley train." As she spoke, she turned to look at the distant blue pond, and Rebecca turned to look as well.

In the center of the pond, Linley was standing on the water, not sinking at all.

"Ripple, ripple."

The water beneath Linley's feet were a few centimeters lower than the water around him, because Linley was constantly releasing battle-qi from his feet, creating small waves in the middle of the pond.

Linley was wielding the adamantine heavy sword in his right hand. Occasionally, he would chop with it, while other times, he would just thrust. Every movement would cause the nearby air to tremble. It was as though the air was made of mud, and when the adamantine heavy sword chopped through it, there was a sense that it was breaking through space itself.

"This 'Profound Truths of the Earth' technique sometimes works, but sometimes doesn't work."

Linley's forehead was furrowed.

When he had killed Lampson, although Linley had slashed Lampson with his sword, the outside of Lampson's body hadn't been injured on the slightest. His internal organs, however, had all been disintegrated.

As Linley viewed it, the third level of using the adamantine heavy sword was the 'impose' level. But the fourth level, was the 'Profound Truths of the Earth'.

Through using this heavy weapon, the adamantine heavy sword, Linley was now capable of unleashing the portion of the Laws of the Earth he had come to understand. This sort of attack could, in the blink of an eye, transform all the attacking power into vibrations which would enter the opponent's body.

This sort of vibrational attack, when fully mastered, could all but ignore an opponent's defense.

After all, the throbbing pulse of the world was something which had existed since the heavens and the earth had been formed. The secrets it contained within it were extremely deep and profound.

The principles of the 'Profound Truths of the Earth' was this:

Totally convert one's attacking power into the same sort of vibrations as the throbbing pulse of the world itself. When these vibrations entered the opponent's body, the opponent's internals would also begin to resonate. The resonance would be very powerful; after all, it had been created through Linley's attack power.

The body's internal organs weren't nearly as durable as a person's external defenses.

This sort of resonance could easily annihilate the opponent's internal organs, shaking them into tiny pieces.

"However, it is incredibly difficult to transform attack power into resonating vibrations." Linley understood that the battle-qi and strength he normally used was a totally different sort of attack, compared to this sort of 'resonance wave' attack.

Only by relying on his partial understanding of the Laws of the Earth was Linley able to convert his normal attacks into this sort of 'resonance wave' attack.

Per Linley's line of thought, the more 'resonance waves' were created, the more successful the power transformation had been.

"Sometimes, I can create over ten tremors in the blink of an eye, but other times, I can't even create one." Linley's head hurt.

Linley understood that once his skill in using the heavy sword had reached this sort of level, he could already be considered as having entered the realm of using the 'Laws of the Earth'.

But Linley wasn't totally able to grasp it.

"I can't be too greedy. Right now, I shouldn't focus too much on creating as many vibrations as possible. I should focus on just one resonance wave at a time." Wielding the adamantine heavy sword in one hand, Linley's face was very solemn.

Suddenly....

The adamantine heavy sword seemed to tear the air apart as it chopped down against the lake.

The strange thing was, not a single ripple was created on the surface of the lake. But suddenly, the entire lake began to emit a strange gurgling sound...and then, as though it had been lifted by a giant, the entire surface of the lake suddenly rose up, forming a one-meter high wall of water.

"I succeeded again this time."

Linley actually wasn't too excited. He sometimes succeeded and sometimes failed when training with this 'Profound Truths of the Earth'. He wasn't able to reproduce the results with any regularity.

"Big brother Linley, time to eat." Leena stood at the not-too-distant shore, laughing as she called out to him.

"Grandpa Zassler, time to eat! Stop training!" Rebecca began calling out from outside of Zassler's wooden room.

With a flip of his hand, Linley sent the adamantine heavy sword flying into the air. When it landed, it landed neatly into its sheath. Linley had already totally mastered the 'impose' level, and the weight of the adamantine heavy sword didn't impede Linley in the slightest.

On the grass, a rectangular table had been laid out.

Linley, Zassler, Rebecca, and Leena were seated around the table.

"Linley, what are you training on? I saw that bizarre training method you were working on. I've never seen a warrior train in such a manner." Zassler said with curiosity.

Zassler had an extremely broad array of knowledge, but comparatively speaking, he didn't know much about warrior training methods.

In truth, the most important thing for peak-stage experts of the ninth rank to enter the Saint-level was to advance to a higher level of understanding. And for Saint-levels to advance to the Deity-level, they also needed to understand the various Laws of heaven and earth before they could attain a divine spark.

"I am training to gain a greater understanding. It is similar to a magus' attempts to gain insights in the nature of the elemental essences." Linley said casually.

Zassler immediately understood.

As an Arch Magus necromancer of the ninth rank, Zassler would often envelop himself with the boundless deathly aura from the realm of departed souls to try and understand the elusive and illusory Laws of Death.

"Zassler, we killed Lampson and their men. Do you think the Radiant Church will be able to swallow their rage?" Linley was still concerned about this affair.

Zassler laughed very confidently. "Don't worry. Let me tell you, the O'Brien Empire and the Radiant Church are very far apart. Even if they used flying magical beasts to send messages, they would need ten days or half a month. And if they were to send experts over, it would still take quite a while."

"But if Saint-level experts were to fly here, they would be able to travel extremely fast." Linley said solemnly.

After having killed so many of the Radiant Church's men, it was very possible that the Radiant Church would send over Saint-level experts.

"Haha, don't worry. They don't dare send any Saint-level experts. Think about it. Why didn't they send Saint-level experts to capture me, and instead send combatants of the ninth rank?" Zassler laughed loudly in delight.

Linley was curious about this as well.

If Saint-level experts had been sent after Zassler, capturing him would be very easy.

"Linley, you must understand, the O'Brien Empire is overseen by the War God. Long ago, the War God decreed that the Saint-level combatants of other nations would not be permitted to act wildly within the boundaries of the O'Brien Empire. If they came for the purpose of pleasure, that was fine, but if they were discovered engaging in acts of violence, the repercussions would be very severe."

Zassler laughed coldly. "Even if the Radiant Church had ten times the courage, they wouldn't dare go against the War God's edict."

The prestige of the War God could not be violated.

"Not necessarily."

Linley shook his head. "Didn't you just say it? 'If they were discovered engaging in acts of violence.' But what if they weren't discovered? Remember, the prefectural city of Cerre doesn't have any experts, and the War God is far away, in the imperial capital. If a Saint-level combatant suddenly appears in the prefectural city of Cerre, he wouldn't necessarily know."

Zassler was startled.

"The Radiant Church wouldn't be that insane, right?" Zassler was a bit uncertain.

"Hard to say. After all, we killed six of the combatants of the ninth rank in one breath, this time. And when they were trying to capture you, you killed several of them as well. The Radiant Church won't easily take this lying down, without a fight." Linley said solemnly.

Zassler considered this for a while, then laughed. "It's fine. Although the prefectural city of Cerre doesn't have any Saint-level combatants, Basil City does have one. McKenzie. If Saint-level experts of the Radiant Church are sent here to fight with us, McKenzie would definitely notice it. McKenzie definitely wouldn't permit the forces of the Radiant Church to act in such an unbridled manner on his turf. By then, with two Saint-level experts engaged in battle here, the War God would definitely find out."

"True." Linley began to laugh as well.

If he was able to incite the Radiant Church into a battle against the O'Brien Empire, the Radiant Church would truly have bitten off more than it could chew.

"Linley, when I was under armed escort by Lampson and the others in the Northwest Administrative Province, the people whom the Radiant Church secretly placed within the Northwest Administrative Province went to go welcome them. I remember one of them was an old man named 'Perry', who was responsible for their affairs in the province. Judging from their conversation, that Perry should belong to the provincial capital of Basil.

Zassler laughed sinisterly. "Since we're going to go to Basil anyways, we might as well dispose of that Perry fellow. Perhaps we might even discover some more secrets of the Radiant Church."

"The manager for their affairs in the Northwest Administrative Province?" Linley's eyes lit up. "Alright. We'll head out tomorrow."

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 30, The Five Year Agreement

Keane, the governor of the prefectural city of Cerre, was just a fourteen year old child. Although he had his older sister Jenne helping him, in truth, how much did Jenne know herself? Most of the time, it was still up to their old servant, Lambert, to help out.

Lambert's clothes were very sharp and creased. His combed hair was gleaming as he slowly strolled about in the interior of the castle, appearing every inch the noble.

"Why must the young miss always be thinking about Lord Ley?" Lambert was sighing to himself. Jenne wanted to go visit Linley, but after Linley had told her that he didn't like being disturbed in the middle of his training, Jenne had no choice but to stay in the castle. Unfortunately, it had been a long time since Linley had come to the castle.

As he watched Jenne slowly grow thinner, Lambert felt very heartsick.

"Lambert."

Hearing his name called, Lambert turned around and saw Linley walking in by himself, dressed in a light blue warrior's outfit. Jenne and Keane had issued orders early on that if the castle guards were to see Linley, they were to let him in immediately without need for any notification.

"Lord Ley!" Lambert was extremely happy.

"Lord Ley, wait in the main hall for just a moment. I will immediately go inform the young master and the young miss."

Within the main hall.

Linley was quietly sitting on a chair. This trip to the provincial capital of Basil he was going to make with Zassler, Leena, and her sister was most likely one where they would end up staying in the area around Basil.

After all, Linley had to be wary of the Radiant Church secretly sending Saint-level experts over. As the city of Basil had McKenzie, the Radiant Church wouldn't dare to act too wildly.

"Big brother Ley."

A surprised and happy voice rang out from the doorway. Linley turned his head and saw Jenne, her face flushed, rush in wearing a faint red dress. Her chest was rising and falling, and she was panting. As soon as she heard the news that Linley was back, Jenne had immediately ran over as fast as she could.

"Why'd you run so fast? Look at how out of breath you are. Have a seat." Linley laughed.

"Okay." Jenne very obediently sat down.

After a while, Keane and Lambert entered as well. Laughing, Keane complained, "Sis, you ran too fast. I couldn't even keep up with you."

Jenne was a bit embarrassed. She shot a vicious glare at Keane.

"Big brother Ley, it's been a long time since you last came. How long do you plan to stay this time?" Keane said to Linley.

Linley shook his head. "This time, I've come to bid you farewell. I plan to leave the prefectural city of Cerre."

"What?"

Keane and Lambert were both startled. Simultaneously, they turned their heads to look at Jenne. Where before, her face had been flushed with excitement and shyness, a stunned look was now on Jenne's face.

"Big brother Ley, where are you going?" Jenne was the first to ask.

"For now, I plan to go to the provincial capital of Basil." Linley replied.

The provincial capital of Basil and the prefectural city of Cerre were fairly far apart. Normal people would need to spend two or three days by carriage to get there.

"Big brother Ley, I'll go with you." Jenne summoned her courage and said.

Linley sighed to himself. How could he not know what Jenne was thinking? But towards Jenne, Linley felt nothing more than the love he would feel towards a younger sister. This was a familial, platonic love.

"Enough, Jenne. I'm going on business. I might encounter danger. There's no need for you to follow me." Linley refused.

Jenne shook her head resolutely. "I'm not afraid."

Looking at Jenne, Linley knew that if he didn't refuse her very openly and firmly, she wouldn't give up. Linley let out a long sigh. "Jenne, all I care about is training. Nothing else. Jenne, there's no way I can take care of you."

Linley spoke with tact, but how could Jenne not understand his meaning?

Jenne's face was somewhat pale. Since she had been eight years old, she had lived in that countryside village. The life she had lived there was both peaceful as well as harsh. On this trip to the prefectural city of Cerre, Linley had protected them the entire time, which was the only reason her and her brother had survived the trip and took over the governorship.

"Big brother Ley, I don't want to continue repressing my feelings. Big brother Ley, I know you don't like me that way. I don't want to ask too much. All I want to do is to ask that you allow me to accompany you. Big brother Ley, I'm willing to be your maidservant. As long as I can be by your side, I'll be happy." Jenne said hopefully.

Keane and Lambert were both silent.

Linley felt extremely anxious as well. Jenne really was an extremely kind girl, but...

"Jenne, there's no need for you to follow me and expose yourself to danger. Right now, you are a noble lady. In the prefectural city of Cerre, there are definitely many outstanding young men who are pursuing you." Linley said.

Jenne bit her lips, then resolutely shook her head. Her eyes were growing moist.

"Big brother Ley." Keane said. "Please agree to my sister's request. These past days when you haven't been around, she's had almost no appetite. She's grown thinner now."

Her eyes moist, Jenne looked at Linley with an appeal in her eyes.

"Jenne..."

In the end, Linley's heart softened. "Five years. I will give you five years, and you give me five years as well. Five years from now, I'll come meet you. If at that time you are still resolute in your decision, I'll agree to let you accompany me."

Time was the best medicine.

Five years from now, Jenne would have matured and her thoughts and beliefs would have changed as well. Linley believed that perhaps because Jenne didn't have parents to take care of her when she was young, she had come to depend on and love him. In a few more years, when Jenne grew more mature, her mind would change. By then, Linley wouldn't be under any pressure.

"Five years. Okay." Hope appeared once more in Jenne's eyes.

"Jenne."

Linley looked at Jenne. "Before I go, I need to tell you something. My real name isn't 'Ley'. It is Linley Baruch."

"Linley Baruch?" Jenne murmured.

"Linley? Lord Ley, you are that genius master sculptor?" Lambert cried out in surprise. Lambert had previously stayed in the Holy Union. In the Holy Union, Linley was extremely famous.

"I hope you won't reveal my presence or my whereabouts. Farewell."

Linley squeezed out a small smile, then turned and immediately strode out of the hall.

As she looked at Linley's departing back, the tears finally began to fall from Jenne's eyes. She balled her fists tightly, her nails piercing into her palm's flesh.

On the streets of the prefectural city of Cerre.

Rebecca and Leena were seated on the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru. Bebe was comfortably resting in Leena's arms, while Linley, dressed in his warrior's outfit, was walking alongside Zassler, who was in a long magus robe.

They were travelling towards the provincial capital of Basil at high speed.

The provincial capital of Basil was a huge city that could be seen from far away.

And just like that, Linley's squad drew close to and entered the provincial capital of Basil.

"No need to rush out and find that Perry right away. Let's find a place to stay first." Linley said.

Zassler nodded as well.

There were definitely quite a few people named Perry in the provincial capital. Most likely, finding the right one would take some time. Thus, Linley and Zassler went to a hotel and reserved an individual, stand-alone manor, where their party now stayed.

Two days after Linley's party had arrived at the provincial capital of Basil, the Bluewind Hawks of Count Perry arrived at the Sacred Isle of the Radiant Church.

The Sacred Isle was a lonely place, located outside the Yulan continent.

The entire Sacred Isle was only a few dozen kilometers long. In truth, in the past, this was a secret base for the Radiant Church. Now, it had been directly converted into their main headquarters.

It had a Radiant Temple that was nine floors high.

This Radiant Temple wasn't as huge as the Radiant Temple of Fenlai City, but it, too, had been painstakingly constructed by the Radiant Church, costing a great deal of effort.

On the ninth floor of the Radiant Temple.

Heidens was seated in front of a window. Through the window, he could see the boundless blue ocean waters beyond the island.

Recently, Heidens had been in fairly good mood. The squad of experts of the ninth rank he had sent out had already successfully captured the Arch Magus necromancer, Zassler. And two days ago, he had received another excellent news. In the Eighteen Northern Duchies, his forces had made a tremendous discovery – five potential vessels of the eighth rank.

Generally speaking, an ordinary person would be able to train their bodies to the sixth rank. That was the maximum limit.

Some geniuses could reach the seventh rank just by focusing on training their body.

But...in the Eighteen Northern Duchies, the forces of the Radiant Church had discovered five siblings, all exceedingly strong and durable. None of them had any battle-qi. But all of them had reached the eighth rank as warriors, just based on physical strength.

"Vessels of the eighth rank. That will definitely be enough to allow Seraphims, the Six-Winged Angels, to display their power." Heidens couldn't help but be excited. "Five bodies of the eighth rank. When the Angels possess them, they will definitely be able to transform into five peak-stage Saint-level combatants."

Early-stage, middle-stage, and peak-stage Saint-level combatants were on totally different levels of power.

Currently, the entire Radiant Church only had five peak-stage Saint-level combatants. But once those five specimens of the eighth rank were brought over, the peak-stage Saint-level experts under the Radiant Church would instantly double!

"By then, would the Cult of Shadows still be able to stand against us?" Heidens face was covered in smiles.

"Your Holiness."

"Enter." Heidens face regained its usual calm.

A Vicar walked in, respectfully presenting a letter to the Holy Emperor. "Your Holiness, this is a secret message from our supervisor in the O'Brien Empire's Northwest Administrative Province."

"Oh?" Heidens raised an eyebrow.

The supervisors in the outside areas, aside from their annual reports, would almost never send secret messages. If a secret message was sent out, then it meant that something major has occurred.

"Could it be that...?" Heidens suddenly remembered that not too long ago, Lampson and his men had just escorted that Arch Magus necromancer into the Northwest Administrative Province.

Heidens immediately accepted the letter, opening the envelope.

As soon as he saw its contents, Heidens' face sank down. "Have Lord Stehle [Shi'te'lei] come see me."

"Lord Stehle?" The Vicar was surprised.

In the Radiant Church, the leader of the Ascetics was Lord Fallen Leaf. As for the Special Executors of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal, their leader was Stehle.

Lord Stehle was only a Special Executor.

But in terms of power, he was on par with the leader of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal, Praetor Osenno. Both were peak-stage Saint-level combatants. In times of peace, the Radiant Church rarely sent peak-stage Saint-level combatants out on missions.

"Hurry." Heidens barked.

The Vicar immediately came to his senses and hurriedly said, "Yes, Your Holiness."

Watching the Vicar depart, Heidens began to frown. "So it seems Lampson's squad had arrived half a month ago in the Northwest Administrative Province. But there has been no news from our borders informing me of their return to the Holy Union. It seems...they really have been killed."

Lampson and ten other experts of the ninth rank had all died.

This setback was not a small one, but Heidens was able to maintain his calm.

After all, what the Radiant Church truly relied on was Saint-level combatants. As long as their Saint-level combatants remained, the Radiant Church wouldn't be threatened at its core.

"Lampson and the other five were escorting Zassler. Given their ability, one or two combatants of the ninth rank wouldn't be able to deal with them." Heidens frowned. "Could it have been a Saint-level combatant? The McKenzie of the Northwest Administrative Province?"

Heidens couldn't think of any other possibilities besides McKenzie.

"McKenzie!" Heidens was filled with a murderous intent.

To Heidens, those eleven combatants of the ninth rank put together weren't as valuable as a single Zassler. Zassler's true value lay not in the man himself, but rather in the training method for Necromantic Magic. As a type of magic on par with Oracular Magic, it was naturally extremely powerful.

It included maledictive spells, poison gases, plague spells, undead slaves, and the Wraith Call ability. These were all extremely powerful.

The Radiant Church didn't reject necromancers from their ranks.

So long as a necromancer was willing to serve them, they would totally be willing to give this necromancer the title of Special Executor. The dark underbelly of the Radiant Church that was the Ecclesiastical Tribunal possessed experts of all types and places.

Heidens didn't know that the person who had killed Lampson and his men was Linley. If he had known, Heidens would probably be so angry that he would jump up and down.

"Your Holiness." An ice-cold voice rang out.

"Stehle. Come in." Heidens said warmly.

Stehle was only 1.7 meters tall. In the Yulan continent, he would be considered a fairly small and skinny person. He had short white hair, and his eyes were as sharp as knife blades. Judging from his appearance, he seemed to be a middle-aged man.

"Your Holiness, is there something you need?" Stehle asked directly.

Heidens was very direct as well. "According to our reports, Lampson and his men are most likely all dead. There is a high chance that the killer is a Saint-level combatant of the O'Brien Empire."

Stehle remained silent.

"I am going to send you to the North Sea Administrative Province of the O'Brien Empire. When you get there, you will meet with another group which is escorting a number of prisoners. No matter what happens, you must ensure that those five siblings are brought back to the Sacred Isle."

"And if I encounter Saint-level combatants of the O'Brien Empire?" Stehle asked.

"Kill them, and then fly back with those five at maximum speed." Heidens said emotionlessly.

Once they used those five bodies of the eighth rank as vessels for Angels to descend into, the Radiant Church would have produced five peak-stage Saint-level combatants. For the sake of that, it would be worth it if they had to offend the O'Brien Empire. After all, even if they offended the O'Brien Empire, at worst the Holy Empire would just have to give the O'Brien Empire some sort of compensation.

"Alright. I immediately will head out tonight, at nightfall." Stehle said indifferently.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 31, Concealed by the Night

There had been no trace of Linley in over three years. It was impossible for Heidens to connect this affair with Linley. What's more, even if he did think of Linley, he wouldn't think that Linley had the ability to kill six experts of the ninth rank.

Unfortunately...

Heidens didn't know that Linley had grown, grown at a speed even faster than he had feared.

Within a secluded restaurant in the provincial capital of Basil.

Linley was seated by himself, with Bebe being his only companion. They occasionally were drinking.

"Come over here." Linley called to the waiter.

"Is there something you need, sir?" That waiter was extremely courteous.

Linley casually tossed out three gold pieces. "Let me ask you a question. If I'm satisfied with your answer, these three gold pieces are yours." This waiter's yearly salary was only around four gold pieces. His eyes immediately lit up with greed.

"Sir, please ask. I know quite a few things in this province." The servant said confidently.

In a place like this restaurant, all sorts of people would come and visit. The servant would overhear a great deal and know a great deal as well.

"I want to ask you, is there an old man named 'Perry' within this city of Basil? His hair is white, and he should appear rather dignified." Linley whispered into the waiter's ears.

The waiter immediately let out a confident laugh, and then, very conscientiously, lowered his voice in response. "You must be referring to Count Perry."

"Count Perry?"

Linley's eyes lit up.

The waiter nodded. "In the provincial capital of Basil, there's only one noble named Perry who is fairly well known. And this Perry is, indeed, an old man, so old that his hair is white. There's no mistaking it."

"Oh." Linley nodded. "Do you know where Count Perry's manor is?"

The servant nodded. "Of course. Count Perry lives on Huating Road, the third residence from the right."

"If you come with me, I'll add another three gold coins." Linley said.

After all, Linley was worried that he might get lost by himself. It was better to bring the servant with him. This way, at least he wouldn't get totally lost.

Watching Linley bring out another three gold coins, the servant immediately grew excited. "Alright. Sir, please wait a bit. I'll go talk to the boss first."

If he didn't do anything that day, at worst he would be deducted a day's pay. But by following Linley, he would be paid three gold coins.

The provincial capital of Basil. Huating Road.

Linley stared from afar at an ancient looking manor. Judging from the decaying, ivy-wrapped walls, this manor was at least several centuries old.

"Count Perry, a very kind fellow?"

Linley sneered.

This 'very kind fellow' the waiter described was the supervisor of affairs for the Radiant Church in the Northwest Administrative Province. The O'Brien Empire was extremely antagonistic towards foreign religions. If Perry were to be discovered, he would definitely be found guilty of a serious crime, to be punished by having his belongings confiscated and his clan wiped out.

Memorizing the address, Linley immediately turned and left.

But what Linley didn't notice was a man staring at him in astonishment from a distance. "Here? He actually showed up here?" The man was amazed.

"Mm. It's been three years. I didn't expect to discover him here. It looks like I'll receive that reward of five thousand gold coins." The man was very delighted.

Walking on the streets, Linley did not notice any of the ordinary commoners who weren't particularly strong. Naturally, he wouldn't have paid any attention to this ordinary warrior who was only of the third rank.

Within the courtyard of the residence behind his hotel.

Zassler was seated beneath a large tree in the courtyard. Seeing Linley enter, he laughed. "How did it go? Did you find that Perry fellow?"

"Found him. He's even a Count. His position isn't that low." Linley said.

Someone capable of becoming the supervisor of affairs for a province definitely wasn't an incapable person. He would either be a wealthy magnate or a powerful noble.

"Haha, wonderful. Then tonight, let us...pay a visit." Zassler's laughed sinisterly, his eyes emitting a hint of green light.

Linley nodded calmly.

"Rebecca, Leena." Linley raised his head to look at the two twins who had just walked in from the main hall. "Tonight, the two of you need to stay here. Don't go anywhere."

"Understood." Rebecca and Leena both nodded.

Zassler laughed in the direction of the twins. "Do as I have taught you, and enter the meditative trance. In a few days, I will begin to commence the 'Necromantic Initiation Rites' for both of you."

After having been with them for a period of time, Zassler had made the determination that these two twins were highly suited for studying Necromantic Magic.

In truth, the normal seven elements of magic (earth, fire, water, wind, lightning, light, darkness) all had fairly high requirements with regards to spiritual energy. But the higher level arts of Oracular Magic, Life Magic, and Necromantic Magic, had terrifyingly high requirements when it came to souls.

Of these three types of magic, Necromantic Magic had the highest requirements with regards to spiritual purity and soul analysis. Comparatively speaking, it didn't have much of a requirement with regards to elemental essence affinity.

"Necromantic Initiation Rites?"

Rebecca and Leena were both excited. This entire time, they had hoped they would be able to seek revenge for their parents, but they didn't have any power. But after learning Necromantic Magic, they would have sufficient power.

That night.

"Haeru. Protect Rebecca and Leena." Linley instructed.

To deal with a minor figure like Perry was an extremely simple task. Linley and Zassler would be more than enough. With Bebe present as well, there would be no chance of failure at all.

"Be careful." Rebecca and Leena said.

Zassler laughed weirdly. "In Basil, aside from McKenzie, there's no one whom I or Linley need to be concerned with."

"Let's go." Linley said calmly.

Both dressed in black, Linley and Zassler very quickly slipped out of the courtyard. The black-furred Bebe also stealthily followed the two, with none the wiser.

In the dark night, Linley, Zassler, and Bebe were walking in an alleyway.

"Huating Road must be ahead." Linley's memory was very good. Despite having a very complicated layout, Linley was able to totally memorize the layout after having walked through the city once. Linley, Zassler, and Bebe directly passed through the small alleyway and arrived at the outskirts of the walls to Count Perry's manor.

Staring at this ancient building, Zassler and Linley exchanged glances.

"Zassler, you need to be certain." Linley had never seen Count Perry before.

"Don't worry." Zassler's lips curled in a dark smile.

Linley led Zassler forward as they jumped directly past the wall. With regards to how residences were generally laid out, Linley and Zassler both had a good general idea. Usually in front was the main hall, while the second building in the back was where the owner would sleep.

But Zassler came to a stop in front of the second building as he began to mumble a magical incantation.

A short while later...

A grey smoke began to slowly drift towards the building. In a short while, the entire second building was covered by that grey fog. The fog continued to spread until it covered every single building in the residence. Watching this happen, Linley was puzzled.

Linley took a sniff of the grey fog. As he did, he felt momentarily dizzy, but then instantly recovered.

"What are you doing?" Linley said softly.

"I'm just putting the weaker people here to sleep. Upon reaching the seventh rank, a person can use battle-qi to counteract this fog. Perry is a warrior of the eighth rank." Zassler knew exactly how strong Perry was.

"Who is it?!"

An angry roar could be heard, as an old man and three middle-aged men ran out from the room. The leader stared icily at Linley and Zassler. But because of the grey mist, as well as the fact that it was late at night, they could not make out Linley or Zassler's appearance.

"Lord Count." Three more voices rang out from the courtyard, as two more middle-aged men and a young man ran over.

The Count had seven experts at his residence; five of the seventh rank, two of the eighth rank.

"Who are you?" Count Perry barked.

"Heh heh heh. Oh, Perry. You've forgotten me?" Zassler slowly walked forward, while two powerful, golden-furred zombies materialized out of nowhere.

The mist began to thin, and Count Perry could now see him clearly.

"It's you." Count Perry's eyes bulged from their sockets. He knew exactly how powerful Zassler was. Even five or six experts of the ninth rank wouldn't be able to do anything to him.

Seeing Zassler appear, Perry understood that most likely, Lampson and his men had indeed met a violent end.

"And you are?" Count Perry looked at Linley. Suddenly, he started.

Linley's appearance had long ago been distributed to every single one of the Radiant Church's supervisors in foreign locations. Compared to three years ago, Linley's hair was now a bit longer, yes, but his face hadn't changed much.

"You are Linley?" Perry was somewhat shocked.

Linley smiled and nodded. "Count Perry, good eyesight. Zassler and I have quite a few things we'd like to discuss with you on this lovely night. Zassler, let's move."

"Kill." Zassler immediately barked.

The two golden-furred zombies suddenly transformed into rays of golden light, charging at those other six men. Sudden screams of agony could be heard, as the zombies killed three of them in a blink of an eye, causing the other three to turn pale with fear.

"Clang." That young man chopped down with his sabre on the body of the golden-furred zombie, but the only effect was that his hand broke from the impact. Golden-furred zombies prided themselves on their defensive abilities.

“Groooooowl.” With a low growl, the golden-furred zombie caved the young man’s head in with a single blow.

“Bang!”

A middle-aged man kicked viciously at a nearby boulder, sending enormous pieces of rock smashing towards the golden-furred zombie. But the zombie only charged at him, fast as lightning. Those pieces of rocks continued to fly at high speed at the zombie. “Bang!” “Bang!” “Bang!” One rock after another smashed against the golden-furred zombie, and it didn’t block at all.

Each rock contained thousands of pounds of force, but unfortunately, they did nothing to the golden-furred zombies.

“Slash.”

A black blur flashed by, and that middle-aged man fell to the floor in astonishment.

“You’re too slow, you big oaf.” Bebe growled towards the golden-furred zombie, then jumped back onto Linley’s shoulders.

The golden-furred zombie’s speed could be considered the speed of a normal combatant of the ninth rank. But compared to Bebe, there was a huge difference. After all, Bebe and Haeru were magical beasts of the ninth rank which specialized in speed.

The six of them had been killed by the two golden-furred zombies and Bebe in the blink of an eye. Those zombies were, after all, departed souls of the ninth rank. Those people didn't have a chance against them.

Perry had silently maintained his composure the entire time.

When he had been selected as the supervisor for this region by the Radiant Church, he had mentally prepared for such a day. Only, what he had expected was that he would be killed by the O'Brien Empire's men. He didn't expect that it would be Linley and Zassler who killed him.

"Linley, it was you who killed Lampson's men and rescued Zassler?" Perry questioned. Before dying, Perry wanted to indulge his curiosity.

"Indeed." Linley replied succinctly.

Perry nodded and laughed. "You truly do live up to the name of being one of the descendants of the Dragonblood Warrior clan. In three years, your power has grown so much. I hope you don't expect to get anything out of me, however. I won't answer your questions." A hint of a holy light had appeared on Perry's face.

"Do you think that will do you any good?" Zassler sneered.

"Seize him." Zassler ordered coldly.

The two golden-furred zombies charged at Perry at high speed, seizing him without giving him a chance to avoid.

"Linley, help me stay on watch for a while. I am about to 'Soulscur' him. Zassler instructed Linley.

Linley started.

Soulscur? Linley had never heard of anyone being able to 'Soulscur' someone. Even the Radiant Church didn't have the ability to search and scour a person's soul. But necromancers, as practitioners of the type of magic that involved souls the most, naturally knew far more about souls than all other types of magi.

"Soulscur?" Hearing this word, Perry was shocked as well. "Impossible." He had never heard of a 'Soulscur' technique.

"Haha. Even if you were to die right now, it would be too late."

Zassler walked in front of Perry. The five fingers of his wizened, chicken-claw like hand grabbed Perry's head, while at the same time, Zassler's eyes suddenly turned a deep green color.

"Uhhhh...ahhhhh..." Perry's body began to tremble violently, while at the same time, he began to let out agonized moans.

Although Perry was already over two hundred years old, as a warrior of the eighth rank, his body was still very sturdy. But after Zassler pierced his claws into his skull, Perry's face and body began to turn ashen white, while at the same time, his body began to quiver violently, as though he were an extremely ill old man.

Linley carefully watched this sight.

"Soulscur." This was the first time Linley had seen this sort of technique performed. As one of the three most powerful types of magi, necromancers did indeed have some terrifying abilities.

After approximately two minutes had passed, Zassler's green, glowing eyes returned to their normal color.

Zassler glanced at the ashen faced Perry, letting out a sinister laugh, then released him. The two golden-furred zombies also released Perry. As for Perry, with his skull pierced by claws and his soul scoured, he was dead without a doubt. Like a pile of mud, he slumped to the floor and didn't move again.

"What do you think?" Zassler looked delightedly at Linley.

An expert like Zassler generally wouldn't feel pride upon seeing the astonishment and admiration of ordinary people. But during this period of time that he had spent with Linley, he had yet to do anything to make Linley truly admire him. After revealing this ability, Zassler was quite looking forward to seeing Linley's amazed expression.

Only the amazement of experts could satisfy Zassler's vanity.

"Very incredible." Linley sighed in honest amazement.

Souls were very amazing, mysterious things. They were the most fundamental component of a person, but people knew very little about souls. To recover a person's memory from his soul was something which Linley, at least, couldn't even begin to imagine doing.

"Heh heh heh." Zassler laughed delightedly, and then those two golden-furred zombies by his side disappeared, returning to their home in the realm of departed souls.

"Let's go."

Linley urged.

In the blink of an eye, Count Perry's manor returned to its normal calm. By now, most people here remained unconscious, while the corpses of the experts just lay there on the floor.

Within the private courtyard of their residence.

Shutting the door to the main hall, Rebecca and Leena very obediently lit the lamps as Linley and Zassler began to chat.

"What did you discover in Perry's memories?" Linley said calmly.

Zassler laughed delightedly as he looked at Linley. "Linley, in the past, I knew too little about you. I didn't expect that you were such an incredible figure."

"What did you find out about big brother Ley?" Rebecca's adorable, large eyes widened as she asked with curiosity.

Zassler laughed, his white eyebrows jumping up and down. "Rebecca, Leena, your big brother Linley has quite a reputation in the Holy Union. His proficiency in stone sculpture is nearly on the same level as the likes of grandmasters such as Proulx. Do you know? When he was sixteen years old, he carved out a special sculpture. Can you guess how much that sculpture was worth?" Zassler asked, laughing.

"Sculpture?"

Rebecca and Leena glanced at each other.

To them, sculptures were things that were very hard to make. To carve out a sculpture that was accurate and detailed was already hard enough, to say nothing of making it have a special aura.

"How many gold coins?" Rebecca and Leena asked curiously.

"Ten million gold coins!" Zassler announced.

Zassler had actually gotten all of this information from Count Perry's mind. Count Perry had received a 'kill order' from the Radiant Church regarding Linley. Naturally, this kill order had many details regarding Linley.

"Ten million gold coins, for just a statue?" Rebecca and Leena's mouths hung open, very wide.

"Not just sculptures, by the way. Your big brother Linley's talent as a magus, in the past, was the second best in history. But now, most likely in the entire history of the Yulan continent, he can be considered the number one genius. As for his talent as a warrior, you should already know." Zassler sincerely admired Linley from the heart.

Genius.

Nobody would question that he was a genius. Linley's performance had given testament to everything.

Rebecca and Leena immediately looked towards Linley, their eyes filled with astonishment and worship.

"Enough, Zassler." Linley shook his head and laughed. "Enough of these bygone affairs. Tell me what you found in Perry's mind."

Zassler nodded, dropping his smile.

"Based on the information in Perry's memory, the Radiant Church's forces in the O'Brien Empire are fairly weak. They are all in hiding. They don't dare to offend the War God, and thus in the O'Brien Empire, the Radiant Church has very few experts."

Linley nodded slightly.

"From Perry's memories, I discovered the identities of the various supervisors throughout the Northwest Administrative Province for the Radiant Church. We now can definitely shatter their entire web of power in this area." Zassler laughed evilly.

Creation was hard. Destruction was easy.

To place a group of people in an area without arousing suspicion was extremely hard.

But to destroy this web of influence only required those people be killed.

"And in the other provinces?" Linley asked.

As far as Linley was concerned, just destroying their web of influence in this administrative province wasn't enough. Only by destroying the entire operation of the Radiant Church in the O'Brien Empire would Linley be truly happy.

"If we kill all of the general supervisors and some of the important supervisors in all seven provinces, the Radiant Church's forces will be like a beheaded dragon. In addition, the Radiant Church's force structure in these areas all hinge around a single line of communication. Once the general supervisor and supervisors are dead, most likely their entire web of influence will collapse.”

The greater the blow to the Radiant Church, the happier Linley would be.

Zassler shook his head. “Just like how each supervisor in each prefectural city only reports to Perry, Perry himself only reports to the general supervisor for the entire O’Brien Empire, or the Radiant Church’s headquarters.”

“The general supervisor for the entire O’Brien Empire?” Linley’s eyes lit up.

So in the O’Brien Empire, there was a highly ranked general supervisor for the Empire? If they could seize this person and Soulscur him, most likely they would learn even more.

“Sadly, even Perry didn’t know who this person really is.” Zassler shook his head. “Perry only knew about a place he could go to exchange messages.”

Linley nodded.

But Zassler suddenly began to laugh. “But from Perry’s memories, I discovered another piece of interesting news.”

“Speak.” Linley looked at Zassler.

"The general supervisor of the O'Brien Empire issued an order. In roughly another month's time, another squad of prisoner escorts will enter the Northwest Administrative Province. The general supervisor ordered Perry to carefully assist and welcome these people and make sure their secrets were kept." Zassler's lips split into a grin. "Per this order, it seems as though they place a very high importance on this squad. This squad isn't the slightest bit less important than the one escorting me."

"Oh?" Linley's eyes lit up.

For this squad's importance to be so high meant that the people they were escorting definitely weren't ordinary figures.

"Do you know where their first point of entry in the Northwest Administrative Province will be?" Linley asked.

"It should be the prefectural city of Deco [De'ke]. Based on the initial planned trajectory, they won't pass through the provincial capital." Zassler said.

Linley nodded. He could totally understand this. The provincial capital of Basil had the Saint-level expert McKenzie present. Naturally, their route had to avoid this place.

"The prefectural city of Deco is roughly eight hundred kilometers away." Zassler was quite familiar with the geography of the O'Brien Empire.

Linley said coldly. "Eight hundred kilometers? If we rush, we can get there in a day.”

If the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, were to run at maximum speed, he wouldn’t even need half a day. But running for so long meant that he wouldn’t be able to maintain maximum output the entire time.

But if they ran at normal speeds and left in the morning, they definitely could reach there by nightfall.

“In half a month, we will head towards the prefectural city of Deco.” Linley said.

Zassler nodded as well.

Time passed. Linley, Zassler, and the sisters remained within this residence. Zassler was preparing to begin the ‘Necromantic Initiation Rites’ for the two sisters, while Linley didn’t waste any time either as he trained continuously.

Linley didn’t actually have the opportunity to witness the ‘Necromantic Initiation Rites’ first hand.

Only Rebecca, Leena, and Zassler were inside their room, as they began the ‘Necromantic Initiation Rites’. Very shortly afterwards, Zassler left the room, then instructed Linley not to disturb the two.

A full three days and three nights later, Rebecca and Leena proudly left the room.

Over the course of those three days, they had been totally attuned with the contents of the 'Necromantic Initiation Rites'. According to what Zassler said, these two sisters had very high aptitudes.

As for Linley, he continued to train in the fourth level of the heavy sword, the 'Profound Truths of the Earth'.

In the desolate wildness, a long-robed figure crossed the boundless plains like a whirlwind, flying east at high speed.

He had a skinny, agile frame, and his short hair was gleaming silver, looking like steel threads.

His entire body was covered by a black robe, and his eyes were very sharp. He stared east as he flew through the air at high speed.

"Five vessels of the eighth rank." Stehle still remembered Heidens' repeated instructions.

Those five siblings which were under armed escort could not be allowed to escape, no matter what. Five bodies of the eighth rank! Once the Angels descended, they would transform into five peak-stage Saint-level combatants.

"It has been a long time since I've killed a Saint-level combatant." Stehle's face had a hint of a cold, sinister smile on it.

Heidens had already stated that if a Saint-level combatant were to interfere, he could kill them. The Radiant Church would bear all responsibility for his actions.

The tenth morning after Count Perry's death.

Linley was seated cross-legged on the floor, not moving at all. The morning mist covered the lands. Recently, Linley's life had been very peaceful, even though Perry's death had aroused an investigation by the city guards.

But this had nothing to do with Linley and his group.

Linley suddenly rose to his feet. The adamantine heavy sword in his hands suddenly stabbed forward, and an ear-splitting howl could be heard!

A wall roughly fifty meters in front of Linley suddenly quivered, a layer of dust shaking off from it.

"Boooooom." A fist-sized chunk of wall suddenly turned into dust. The sand-like pieces of disintegrated stone slowly poured out, revealing that fist-sized hole in the wall.

No battle-qi had been shot out. Just by stabbing at the air, Linley had created a hole in the wall at fifty meters distance.

"Profound Truths of the Earth – Triple Layered Waves."

Linley gently murmured, "These most basic 'Triple Layered Waves' of the Profound Truths of the Earth have finally been completed." After leaving the prefectural city of Cerre, Linley had been pondering this the entire time.

And now, Linley had finally mastered the most basic attack of the 'Profound Truths of the Earth'; the 'Triple Layered Waves'.

When the force of the battle-qi and physical strength in an attack was converted into vibrational form, the more vibrations that were created represented a higher rate of conversion, with lower loss of power. The 'Triple Layered Waves' technique had a very high level of loss conversion, but it was already extremely powerful.

After all, it was a totally different form of attack than one utilizing battle-qi and physical force.

"Linley." Zassler was standing at the doorway, watching. "What sort of attack is that?" Zassler was quite surprised as well.

Zassler had seen attacks from Saint-level combatants.

But generally, what they did was chop out their swords, projecting battle-qi in distant attacks. But Zassler had never seen someone like Linley, who without visibly using battle-qi or any other power, could suddenly, silently, create a fist-sized hole in a distant wall. This was too bizarre.

"Even if I told you, you wouldn't understand." Linley laughed calmly.

After having mastered the most basic 'Triple Layered Waves', Linley knew that the farther up he went, the more difficult it would be and the more time would be required.

"Knock!" "Knock!" "Knock!"

Suddenly, knocking sounds could be heard from outside the door. Linley immediately walked over and opened it.

The hotel attendant said respectfully, "Sir, this gentleman wants to meet you." An amiable, middle-aged man was standing next to the attendant.

The middle-aged man glanced at the attendant, and the attendant very courteously withdrew immediately.

The middle-aged man smiled at Linley. "Lord Linley, hello."

Linley's face couldn't help but change. There were very few people who knew his identity.

"Lord Linley, no need to be too anxious. My clan's lord wishes to meet with you." The middle-aged man smiled.

"Who is the lord of your clan?" Linley frowned.

“Lord Linley, if you read this letter, you will understand.” The middle-aged man withdrew a letter from his clothes and offered it to Linley.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 33, The Four Bros' Paths

Zassler walked out from the back as well. Hearing the middle-aged man address Linley by his name, he immediately grew wary. But after he reached Linley's side, he saw that upon reading the letter, a smile appeared on Linley's face. A very happy smile.

Zassler could tell that although Linley wasn't a sinister fellow, he was rather callous, focused utterly on training.

He had never seen Linley smile in such a happy, brilliant manner.

"Zassler." Linley laughed. "You stay here for now. I need to meet a friend."

"Sure." Zassler nodded.

"Bebe." Linley shouted towards Bebe, who was sleeping on the ground. Bebe opened his bleary eyes, staring questioningly at Linley.

"Come, make a trip with me."

"Haeru, you can stay here."

Bebe delightedly raised his head up at Haeru arrogantly, then scampered onto Linley's shoulders. Happily, he mentally spoke to Linley. "Boss, what are we going to do?"

"You'll know when we get there." Linley laughed.

"Lead the way." Linley said to the middle-aged man.

Within fifteen minutes, Linley and the middle-aged man reached a lavish, large mansion. From far away, Linley could recognize the figure standing in the middle of the main hall.

"Third Bro!" That familiar voice called out excitedly.

"Boss Yale." Linley was laughing as well.

"Squeeeaaaak!" Bebe squeaked out delightedly as well. When they were at the Ernst Institute, Bebe had gotten along very well with Yale, Reynolds, and George as well. Naturally, they were quite familiar with each other.

Yale had matured quite a bit compared to three years ago. Right now, Yale was roughly as tall as Linley, nearly two meters tall. But Yale was slightly thinner than Linley, making him appear like a tall, skinny man.

That form-fitting black gentleman's suit, combined with a faint cologne, made Yale seem to have a very magnetic charisma.

"Third Bro, I've been worried to death over these past three years." Yale bear-hugged Linley.

Hugging his dear friend, Linley felt very happy as well.

In the past three years, he hadn't seen his dear friends a single time.

"I didn't expect that you would grow to be about as tall as me. These three years really have changed you." Yale sighed. Compared to three years ago, Yale didn't change that much, but Linley had.

Linley laughed loudly. "You were a year older than me to begin with. You just had a head start. Now that you are no longer growing, it's very normal that I caught up."

Bebe squeaked off from the side.

Bebe was very happy as well. It had been a long time since Bebe had seen Linley laughing and joking like this.

"Wow, Bebe!" Yale hugged Bebe, affectionately rubbing his little head. "I knew that you'd come. I've prepared some fine foods for you!"

Yale turned his head and glanced at the attendant, who understood what Yale desired. Very shortly afterwards, over ten attendants pushed food carts laden with food over.

"This is roasted meat delicacies from around the world. Bebe, have a taste." Yale laughed loudly.

Bebe's little nose sniffed the air, then his eyes immediately began to shine. Transforming into a black shadow, he charged towards those food carts. Watching this, Linley and Yale both began to laugh.

"Boss Yale, let's chat inside." Linley said with a laugh.

The two bros entered the main hall, which had been covered with all sorts of delicacies and fine wines. The two bros began to eat and chat.

"Right, Yale, what happened to the Ernst Institute?" Linley suddenly asked.

"It's finished." Yale shook his head and sighed. "The Ernst Institute was very close to Fenlai City and came under heavy attack by the magical beasts. You know, even the instructors in the Institute were only of the eighth rank at most. Most of the students were very weak. Facing all those magical beasts...how could they resist them?"

Linley nodded.

Students of the sixth year, the highest year, were just magi of the sixth rank. But the magical beasts possessed quite a few beasts of the fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth ranks. When a large number of magical beasts charged over, it really was a disaster.

"There is no longer an Ernst Institute in the world."

Yale sighed. "I, Reynolds, and George left the Holy Union three years ago. These three years, I've been running around between the O'Brien Empire and the Yulan Empire. As for Reynolds, naturally he returned to his clan, while George returned to the Yulan Empire as well. I hear that George has done quite well for himself. He's managed to enter the imperial government of the Yulan Empire."

"Entered the imperial government?"

Linley wasn't too shocked. George was, after all, a very good person at organization, and behind George was the mighty Walsh clan. Success wouldn't be too hard for him.

"And Fourth Bro?" Linley laughed as he asked.

"Fourth Bro? He returned to his own clan and was delivered to the army by his father." Yale laughed loudly. "Third Bro, just imagine. Fourth Bro in the army. Isn't that unbelievable?"

Linley began to laugh as well.

Their Fourth Bro, Reynolds, was a very lively and rebellious person. But now, he was entering the army? One could imagine how miserable he was there.

"But last year, when I saw Fourth Bro, he seemed to have changed quite a bit. He's much more mature than before, and he does indeed look like a soldier now. But as soon as he started to drink with me, he returned to his old self." Yale roared with laughter.

"Boss Yale, what about yourself? I feel that compared to before, you have even more of a nobleman's aura than in the past."

Indeed. Dressed in that black gentleman's suit, Yale's nobleman's aura could be clearly sensed by anyone.

"Nothing for it." Yale laughed bitterly. "After leaving the Ernst Institute, aside from normal magical training, I've been focused on managing some of my clan's affairs. Naturally, I had to sit through countless noble banquets. After so long, I've learned some of their mannerisms."

Linley nodded.

His three dear bros had all embarked on path which belonged to them.

Government. Military. Market.

"And what about myself?" In his mind, Linley knew exactly what his path was. "Advance on the path of training until I reach the level of the High Priest, the War God, and Dylin. Stand at the very peak of the Yulan continent!"

The absolute peak-level experts possessed all the true power in this world.

To a Deity-level combatant, everything was but a joke. No one dared to offend a Deity-level combatant. They were the ultimate forces in existence in the Yulan continent.

Linley wouldn't permit any obstacles to prevent him from advancing on this path.

Nothing would stop him!

"Third Bro, three years ago, when I went to the imperial capital, I saw your little brother." Yale suddenly said.

"Wharton?" Linley's eyes lit up.

Yale nodded with a laugh. "When I saw Wharton, he was very worried about you, since he didn't know what your situation was. I told him you were fine, and that you were just training by yourself."

"How is Wharton doing?" Linley asked.

"Don't worry, he's doing very well." Yale said with surprise, "I didn't expect that your little brother was even more muscular than you. Three years ago, he was already a bit taller than me. By now, he should be even taller. Those arms, those muscles. Damn!"

Linley laughed while nodding.

Wharton's growth was totally within his expectations. After all, every single Dragonblood Warrior in the history of his clan was extremely physically muscular. The weapons they used were the likes of the first Dragonblood Warrior's warblade 'Slaughterer', the second one's heavy pike, or the third one's heavy warhammer.

“Linley, your little brother, Wharton, really knows how to conceal himself. In the past, he had been hiding his power the entire time. But after knowing about your affairs, your little brother stopped doing so and began to slowly reveal his strength. A while ago, at the annual tournament for the seventh grade students, he shocked everyone when he defeated a warrior of the eighth rank.” Yale sighed in amazement.

Linley smiled calmly.

A warrior of the eighth rank?

Right now, Wharton was of the seventh rank, and he could also Dragonform. Once Dragonformed, he could reach the ninth rank in power.

“After becoming famous, how has Wharton been doing?” Linley asked.

“Wharton was conferred the rank of Imperial Count. Right now, he’s a rising star in the O’Brien Empire. In a few years, perhaps he will be recruited into the War God’s College.” Yale sighed. “In the future, he has a high chance of entering the Saint-level.”

“War God’s College? Saint-level?” Linley didn’t actually wish for his younger brother to enter the War God’s College.

To the venerable Dragonblood Warriors, entering the Saint-level was something which would happen without fail.

Linley chatted with Yale for an entire morning. Linley was now totally at ease, knowing that all of his bros were living good lives.

After lunch.

“Third Bro. This is a talisman of the Dawson Conglomerate. It represents your status as an elder. Take it.” Yale withdrew a black talisman.

Linley was a bit shocked. “An elder?”

When Linley was at the city of Fenlai, he had already displayed the power of an early-stage warrior of the ninth rank. At that time, Linley was only seventeen. Given his natural ability as a magus, and as well as the fact that he could transform into a Dragonblood Warrior, the elders of the Dawson Conglomerate had come to the conclusion that he would sooner or later enter the Saint-level.

Since that was the case, allowing Linley to become an ‘elder’ of the Dawson Conglomerate was definitely a worthy investment.

“Just take it, on account of us being bros.” Yale laughed.

Linley glanced at Yale. He understood that by accepting this talisman, it signified that if in the future, the Dawson Conglomerate ran into any difficulties, he would have to help out. After all, this talisman represented both power and responsibilities.

“Alright. I’ll accept it.” Laughing, Linley took the talisman. Even if he didn’t have this talisman, if the Dawson Conglomerate really ran into any difficulties, for the sake of his dear bro Yale, Linley of course couldn’t just stand by and watch.

"Thanks."

The two bros were very close. Thus, there were many words that did not need to be said.

"Third Bro. I feel as though your aura, compared to three years ago, is much more restrained. Over the course of these three years, what level of power have you reached?" Yale lowered his voice and whispered the question with curiosity.

Linley didn't hide the truth. "Beneath the Saint-level, I should be invincible."

Yale stared with slight amazement at Linley.

"Enough for now, I have to get back. I'll come visit you in a few days." Linley laughed.

The North Sea Administrative Province. Within an ordinary little city.

Within a quiet, secluded courtyard.

"Lord Stehle." A powerfully built warrior called out softly from outside a door. "It's time for us to move."

A moment later, with a creak, the door swung open. Stehle swept the man with his cold stare. "Then let's move."

"Yes." The man didn't even dare to breathe loudly.

Stehle left the courtyard. Only then did the people nearby let out relieved sighs. A glance from a peak-stage Saint-level combatant was enough to make a man's heart quail.

"Quickly." The man immediately urged.

The other men, escorting those five hugely brawny warriors, began to move as well. Those five huge warriors were 2.2 meters tall, and astonishingly muscular. Only, they were tightly bound by a dark golden rope. No matter how powerful they were, they couldn't break free from these bounds.

Their mouths had been sealed as well.

"Mumble, mumble."

The five siblings angrily tried to curse.

"Do you want to die?" One of the black-robed guards landed a vicious whip-blow on the body of one of the five siblings, but only left behind a faint white mark. "fk, their bodies are incredibly durable."

While Stehle's group was busy traversing one city after another in the North Sea Administrative Province, Linley was entrusting Rebecca and Leena into the care of the Dawson Conglomerate's forces in Basil. And then, Linley, Bebe, and Haeru set out in the direction of the prefectural city of Deco.

"This troop escorting these prisoners only have two warriors of the ninth rank. This will be easy." Travelling on Haeru's back, Zassler laughed. "I wonder who this squad is escorting."

"Zassler, the news of Perry's death should have reached the general supervisor of the Church's affairs in the O'Brien Empire by now, right?" Linley suddenly said.

"Yes, he should know by now." Zassler said. "However, they definitely wouldn't be aware that I can Soulscur."

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 34, In Dire Straits

The prefectural city of Deco was a medium sized city which held a population of three hundred thousand. As one of the cities located at the border between the Northwest Administrative Province and the North Sea Administrative Province, each day there were quite a number of people entering and leaving the city.

"We arrived."

Seeing the city off in the distance, Linley came to a halt.

This jog, traversing 800 kilometers in six hours, didn't tire Linley in the slightest. Actually, it was far, far below Linley's maximum speed. Likewise, for Haeru, the Blackcloud Panther, it was also quite an easy journey.

"We arrived. The sun hasn't even set yet." Zassler turned his head to look at the sun, still high in the western sky, and let out a sigh.

In Perry's memory, he held the exact location of the arrival, because Perry was planning to personally go to the prefectural city of Deco to welcome the party.

Linley and Zassler took up residence in a manor not too far away from the meeting place.

Having money made so many things easier!

Afterwards, Linley and Zassler began to quietly train, awaiting the arrival of the escort squad, who were going to 'fall into their trap'.

After ten or so days, after having travelled nearly two thousand kilometers on the roads of the North Sea Administrative Province, Stehle's men finally arrived at the borders of the North Sea Administrative Province.

"Giddyup, giddyup!" A man whipped his horse, urging it to go next to Stehle. He said respectfully, "Milord, we've received word that the supervisor for the Northwest Administrative Province, Count Perry, has been killed. Should we continue on our previously scheduled route?"

Stehle, mounted on horseback, was quiet for a moment, then said calmly, "Count Perry's faith and loyalty to the Lord is without question. He definitely wouldn't have betrayed the Lord. Continue on our original route."

"Yes, milord." The knight next to him acknowledged respectfully.

The knight actually wasn't concerned either.

First of all, Count Perry was indeed an extremely ardent adherent to the faith of the Radiant Church. He definitely wouldn't turn traitor. And secondly, even if they did manage to torture information out of Perry, they would at most ask about some secrets regarding the Radiant Church. They definitely wouldn't think to ask about the plans of this squad.

In addition, this squad was under the escort of Stehle. What did they have to be afraid of?

By nightfall, Stehle's squad finally reached the prefectural city of Deco. Long before Perry had died, the Radiant Church's forces in Deco had already received their orders.

They had been waiting for this squad for a long time.

"Milords, tonight, just rest for a time. Food and drink have already been prepared for you." The supervisor for the prefectural city of Deco said respectfully.

An expert of the ninth rank asked, "Recently, you haven't had any problems, have you?"

"None." The supervisor said respectfully.

"Good. You can leave now. Those attendants, after finishing preparing the food, can leave as well. We don't need them here." The expert of the ninth rank said.

"Yes." The supervisor said respectfully.

Stehle dismounted and headed directly into the residence, in search of a room to stay in. "Seqalu [Si'ka'luo], call me when it is dinner time." He shut the door.

The combatant of the ninth rank assented respectfully.

Seqalu had been the captain of this squad, but with Stehle's arrival, naturally he would listen to Stehle in all matters. Seqalu closely inspected all of those servants. Seeing that they were all ordinary people, he no longer worried.

"Bring them out." Seqalu ordered.

The five siblings were immediately brought down from the carriage. Fortunately, the carriage was quite spacious, as otherwise, those five enormous siblings wouldn't have been able to sit.

"Listen up, the five of you. If you keep shouting and making noise, the first time you do so, I'll break your arms. The second time, I'll cut off your tongues." Seqalu said coldly.

His subordinates then removed the cloth gags from the mouths of those five siblings.

The five siblings stared angrily at Seqalu, but they knew that Seqalu was the type of person who meant what he said. The five of them didn't plan to be so foolish as to make things harder for themselves.

"Seqalu, there will come the day when we five brothers will kill you." The eldest of the siblings, Barker [Ba'ke], said in a cold voice.

Seqalu only let out a chuckle.

Others might not be aware, but he knew...that in the future, these five siblings would have been transformed into vessels for Angels. As for their souls, they would have been destroyed.

"If you have the chance, I'll welcome you to try." Seqalu sneered in response.

The Barker brothers had lived in the Eighteen Northern Duchies. They were orphans who had been raised by an old man, whom they called 'Grandpa'.

Grandpa owned an ordinary restaurant and made enough to raise the five of them. Ever since they were young, the five siblings had been extremely strong. Their Grandpa had previously been a warrior in the army as well, and so ever since they were young, he had trained them. Unexpectedly, the five of them were astonishingly talented. When they were only sixteen years of age, their muscular strength alone had allowed them to reach the sixth rank. By now, the five siblings were thirty, and their physical strength had reached the eighth rank in power.

After their Grandpa had died, the five of them had joined the army.

Within their Duchy, which was one of the Eighteen Northern Duchies, these brothers were heroic figures, leading armies with impunity. In battles between Duchies, warriors of the eighth rank could be considered top-level figures. These five brothers possessed incredibly durable bodies and also very fierce attack power.

However...

In the end, they were still discovered by the Radiant Church's forces. The Radiant Church immediately had dispatched two nearby experts of the ninth rank to lead people to capture them. They had resisted, but when they did, the Radiant Church's men had wiped out all of their families.

The Barker siblings stared death at these men around them.

The five siblings previously had three wives and two children amongst them. The two unmarried ones also had women they loved, but now everything had been destroyed by the Radiant Church.

"They've arrived."

Linley had been paying attention to that particular courtyard every day. He saw that the previously empty manor was finally filled with people, and judging from the sound of it, quite a few people.

Zassler's eyes flashed with a green light for a moment. Laughing sinisterly, "We've waited for over ten days. Finally, it's time. Linley, when should we act?" Zassler looked over to him. They had definitive superiority of power. No matter when they acted, it would be successful.

"Later at night." Linley decided.

Zassler nodded as well.

The nearby Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, was pretending to hide in the grass of the courtyard. The time passed quietly, until nightfall came. The prefectural city of Deco grew quieter and quieter. By nightfall, it was almost totally silent.

Linley, who had been seated in the meditative position, suddenly opened his eyes.

"Let's go." Linley glanced at Zassler. "Be careful."

"Don't worry." Zassler laughed self-confidently. "I'm going to summon the departed souls right now." After just a few seconds, two golden-furred zombies appeared out of thin air. After a while longer, a humanoid figure wrapped in a black cloak appeared in the middle of the courtyard.

"What is this?" Linley glanced perplexedly at the black-robed humanoid.

"An Ancient Wight of the peak-stage ninth rank." Zassler laughed delightedly.

Linley nodded. His side had many powerful experts, while the opponent only had two experts of the ninth rank. What's more, they were attacking from ambush. This battle wouldn't prove to be challenging at all.

"Let's go."

Linley jumped directly over the wall, with Bebe and the Blackcloud Panther following close behind. Zassler, his two golden-furred zombies, and the Ancient Wight also followed behind Linley.

Soon, they arrived at that residence.

"Let's act separately. I'll go deal with the guards overseeing those five siblings, and then together, we'll slaughter our way through each room." Linley said in a low voice.

"Let's move."

The five Barker siblings were in one room. Outside the room were two warriors of the eighth rank standing guard. The two were fairly relaxed, casually scanning their surroundings while chatting.

"Hrm?"

The moment before their deaths, they seemed to have sensed something, as they turned to look. But all they saw were two devilish flashes of purple light.

Blood fountained out of two severed necks.

"Swish!" Bebe, Haeru, the Ancient Wight, and the two golden-furred zombies all charged towards the other rooms, while Linley hurriedly ran into the room with the five siblings.

Upon entering the room, the Barker siblings stared at this 'monster' in astonishment. His entire body was covered in black draconic scales, and spikes were emitting from his forehead and back. What's more, Linley had a pair of dark golden eyes which chilled the hearts of those who saw it.

"Who...who are you?" No matter how bold Barker was, right now, he was rather shocked.

But the only response to his question was a violet flash of sword light.

"Swish!"

Struck by Linley's 'Bloodviolet Godsword', those dark golden ropes all split apart. After having mastered the 'impose' ability, Linley's usage of the Bloodviolet soft sword had reached a new level as well.

'Impose' was not restricted by weapon.

A fist could also summon the 'imposing power' of the heavens. A sabre or a knife could as well. Bloodviolet was sharp to begin with. Now, with Linley's battle-qi permeating it, chopping through the ropes was a very easy task.

Seeing the ropes split open, the five siblings immediately understood that this man had come to rescue them. But before they even had a chance to express their thanks, suddenly....

"fk off!" An angry shout.

"Aaah!" A pain-filled scream.

The look on Linley's face changed, and he hurriedly returned to the main courtyard. He saw the black-robed Ancient Wight moaning in pain on the ground, while the stone floor of the courtyard was now covered with cracks. Clearly, these were caused by the Ancient Wight smashing into the floor. In addition, there were hints of green blood on the ground as well.

"What is going on?" Linley was shocked.

Zassler, too, was very surprised. "Not good. There's an expert here." The Ancient Wight was a peak-stage combatant of the ninth rank, and its body was extremely durable. The expert in the room was able to injure it heavily and sent it flying in just one move. This was too terrifying.

"Bebe, Haeru, come back." Linley mentally ordered.

Bebe and Haeru transformed into two black blurs as they returned to the courtyard. By this time, the five Barker brothers had walked out as well, but Linley kept his gaze focused on that room.

"Hrmph."

With a cold sneer, a short, skinny man walked out from the room. His short silver hair looked like steel wire. This man looked very cold, especially when one saw his icy gaze.

Stehle glanced coldly at the Ancient Wight. "A necromancer?"

Turning his head to look at Linley and Zassler, he sneered, "I was wondering who it was. So it's the necromancer Zassler, and that so-called genius, the Dragonblood Warrior Linley."

All the higher-ups of the Radiant Church were very familiar with Linley's Dragonformed appearance.

"Excellent. All of you are targets for the Radiant Church. Today, I'll take you all." Stehle's lips quirked upwards, a cold smile appearing on his lips.

"Swish, swish." Linley's draconic tail swished about, slapping the ground.

Suddenly, an earth-colored light covered the entire ground of the courtyard. Everyone in the courtyard felt their head momentarily grow dizzy. Zassler couldn't help but fall to one knee, but then immediately afterwards, another layer of earthen light covered Zassler, the Ancient Wight, the two golden-furred zombies, Bebe, and Haeru. They no longer were suffering from the effects of this gravitational power.

Earth-style magic – Supergravity Field.

"So it is as our reports say; not only are you a Dragonblood Warrior, you are a genius magus as well." Stehle laughed calmly. "Your gravitational field is around eight times that of normal. I didn't expect that in just a few short years, you would advance from the seventh rank to the eighth rank. Sadly, a genius such as you is going to die today."

Stehle walked one step at a time towards Linley.

"Charge." Zassler let out a low shout.

The two golden-furred zombies immediately let out deep growls, then charged towards Stehle. At the same time, Zassler and Linley's allies all fled, as if by common agreement.

A cold flash of sword light.

The two golden-furred zombies were immediately chopped in half, collapsing within the courtyard.

"You want to flee?"

Stehle, in the blink of an eye, appeared in the air in front of Linley's squad. He stood there in mid-air, wielding the longsword which he had just stained with the blood of the golden-furred zombies.

"It really is a Saint-level combatant." Zassler laughed bitterly

Actually, earlier, when they had seen the peak-stage ninth ranked Ancient Wight be heavily injured in one blow, Linley had already known that things were not good. He knew that this person was most likely a Saint-level. And now, they knew that to be a fact. Saint-level combatants were able to fly at an astonishing speed. There was no way they would be able to flee.

Linley and Zassler exchanged glances. They knew exactly what sort of situation they had found themselves in.

"I thought today's activities would have been very stress-free. Who would've thought we'd run into a Saint-level combatant?" Linley was extremely unhappy about this. His dark golden eyes stared fixedly at Stehle. "No choice but to go all out."

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 35, The Profound Truths of the Earth

The night was as cold as water.

The cold wind of the deep night blew drearily. The squad that had belonged to Stehle had been wiped out earlier. Now, only Stehle remained.

Linley's side had Linley, Bebe, Haeru, Zassler, and the five Barker brothers.

The opponent's side had only Stehle.

But without question, right now Linley's side was in the weaker position. Even fleeing would be very difficult.

"The Supergravity Field's effects are ground-based. The farther from the ground is, the less its influence is." Linley knew very well that once a Saint-level combatant were to fly several dozen meters above the ground, they probably wouldn't feel the gravitational field at all.

Right now, Stehle was hovering roughly ten or so meters above the ground.

"Even if he is impacted by the gravitational effect, at most it would be around two times normal gravity." As fast as lightning, Linley considered their options and how they could stay alive.

Zassler said in a low voice, "Linley, Saint-level combatants can fly, but much like flying magical beasts, although they can fly very fast at high speeds, their turning speeds and aerial agility is only perhaps one or two times faster than combatants of the ninth rank.

This reasoning was very simple.

Just like when humans ran at top speed. They would be able to run in a straight line quite easily, but if they were to suddenly turn left, then suddenly turn right, then suddenly run backwards and forward again, you would be lucky to reach a speed of a third of your regular maximum speed.

Linley understood this logic, but he hadn't thought of it just now. Now that he did, an idea flashed by Linley's mind.

"What, you want to resist?" Stehle was wielding that sword stained with green blood.

"Bebe, Haeru, don't leave the Supergravity Field's area." Linley's dark golden eyes stared at Stehle in the air. "Saint-level combatants are very powerful, but he is a warrior. He has no way to counteract the effects of the Supergravity Field. If he wants, he can stay in the air. Once he reaches the ground, his speed will be halved or cut to a third. By then, he won't be any faster than me, nor will he be faster than you."

Bebe and Haeru both let out a low growl.

But Zassler frowned. His speed wasn't that fast.

"Let us face him. We five brothers definitely won't allow ourselves to hinder you, benefactor." The Barker brothers called out. The five siblings' muscles began to ripple and bulge, making them seem like terrifying magical beasts.

Wielding the adamantine heavy sword in his hands, Linley stared at the mid-air Stehle. "Don't be rash."

Stehle was in no rush to act either, calmly staring down at them. As a peak-stage Saint-level combatant, how could he be worried about being unable to deal with these people?

"Speed?"

Stehle's sharp eyes stared coldly at Linley. "This tactic of yours might be useful against those who just entered the Saint-level, but unfortunately...I reached the Saint-level centuries ago. Kid, the Saint-level isn't as simple as you seem to think it is. The Saint-level isn't just about using strength to brute force things; it requires a deeper understanding."

Linley stood in front of everyone, sword in hand, staring coldly at Stehle.

This tactic was the only option available to him. Faced with a Saint-level's speed, he had no place to run. His only option was to remain in the Supergravity Field. Only then did he have a chance at life.

"Whoosh!"

Stehle suddenly shot towards Linley like a released arrow, his black robe slightly fluttering with the wind. However, that longsword of his, covered in golden light, chopped towards Linley at a very ordinary speed.

But once he struck out with his sword, a cold aura seemed to pervade the entire courtyard.

Linley instantly felt as though he had entered a frozen realm. He had been totally surrounded by that freezing aura, while at the same time, the entire area seemed to have been locked by that aura. Although that sword was moving at an ordinary speed, it chopped towards Linley with an irresistible force.

The 'impose' level!

"Hrmph." Slowly yet inexorably, the adamantine heavy sword in Linley's hands began to move.

Stehle's eyes suddenly brightened.

"Slash!" His ice-cold longsword suddenly split the air, increasing in speed tenfold. In the blink of an eye, it arrived near Linley's body.

Linley's adamantine heavy sword was like a fish in water, agilely gliding through the air to block the ice-cold longsword.

One was fast. The other, slow.

But the strange thing was, the two swords intersected.

“Ruuuumble.” There were no other sounds when the adamantine heavy sword and the ice-cold longsword struck each other. Only, the air itself suddenly shuddered. Linley’s dark golden eyes continued to stare coldly at the opponent.

Profound Truths of the Earth – Triple Layered Waves!

Stehle only sensed a strange vibration being transmitted to him, as though three deep, powerful attacks were viciously attacking his heart.

“Booom!”

A terrifying noise exploded forth from Stehle as his silver battle-qi wildly exploded forth in all directions from Stehle’s body. Every single ray of battle-qi easily shot through the surrounding buildings like needles.

“Careful!” Linley roared loudly, immediately allowing the Dragonblood battle-qi in his own body to explode forth as well, frantically trying to block that omnidirectional blast of silvery battle-qi, so as to protect the five Barker siblings behind him. But despite doing so, he wasn’t able to totally protect everyone, as several strands of silvery battle-qi still struck the five brothers on their bodies. “Slash!” Several dozen bloody lines were drawn on their bodies, but the five brothers had managed to survive.

“What astonishing defense.” Linley sighed in amazement.

Fortunately, Stehle had only accidentally exploded his battle-qi, resulting it in going in every which way. This was the only reason why the Barker siblings had not lost their lives, despite them being criss-crossed with bloody lines and wounds.

As for Zassler, in front of him was a lance-wielding knight who was wearing a suit of heavy black armor. This was the 'Black Knight Captain', one of the three primary peak-stage departed souls of the ninth rank under his command.

"Boom!"

The walls nearby all collapsed, and even the nearby manors were impacted by the vibrations. Some people were literally shaken to death by that omnidirectional blast of Saint-level battle-qi.

"Ah!"

"Help!"

The nearby folks all began to scream in panic. An explosion such as this woke up quite a few people in the prefectural city of Deco as well, and all the nearby citizens began to flee their houses.

Linley's group only stared solemnly at the mid-air Stehle.

A small hint of blood could be seen at the corner of Stehle's lips. Stehle wiped the blood off, and then stared at Linley in amazement. Finally, he sighed, "Linley, I didn't expect that you have already surpassed the level of utilizing the force of the heavens and the earth. Admirable, truly admirable.”

Utilizing the force of the heavens and the earth was what was known as ‘impose’. This was the level which ordinary Saint-levels reached.

“He received this attack of mine without any preparation, and yet he wasn’t heavily wounded.” Linley’s heart had grown cold.

Stehle stared at Linley. He sighed, “Linley, I really feel that it is a pity. The current level of insight and understanding you have reached is roughly on par with most peak-stage Saint-level combatants. Generally speaking, the reason that most peak-stage ninth ranks are unable to break through to the Saint-level is because their insights and level of understanding is insufficient. But for you, the opposite is true; you possess a very high level of understanding, but your battle-qi is far from being sufficient.

Linley himself understood this logic as well.

“For a genius such as you to die like this really is a pity.”

Stele’s eyes began to grow sharp and fierce again. In a cold voice, he said, “Linley, so as to show my respect for you, I will use my most powerful attack to deal with you; the Ice-Bound World.”

“Actually, did you really think this Supergravity Field could affect me?” Stehle sneered, and then his body began to radiate a terrifying silver light. Stehle seemed to have transformed into the sun itself as his silvery light easily encompassed an area of several hundred square meters.

"My Supergravity Field?" Linley found, to his astonishment, that the earth elemental essence he had used to create the Supergravity Field had been totally wiped away by that silvery light.

Within several hundred meters, the area was the absolute domain of that silvery light.

"A twenty one year old could actually reach such a level." Stehle continually sighed as well. Many people wouldn't be able to enter the Saint-level despite working at it for hundreds of years. But Linley?

He was only twenty one, and yet he was at such a high level of understanding.

"Bebe, Haeru, get ready to flee." Linley transmitted mentally.

"Boss." Bebe began to grow anxious.

"Don't dawdle!" Linley mentally roared angrily.

Bebe and Haeru roared with fury, but they had no choice either. Right now, neither the five Barker brothers nor Zassler knew what to say.

Linley stood in front of all of them, staring at Stehle.

"My only choice is to use the higher levels of the Profound Truths of the Earth, which I haven't truly mastered yet." Linley's dark golden eyes were fixed on his opponent's. His adamantine heavy sword was in his hands.

The 'Triple Layered Waves' of the Profound Truths of the Earth was only the basics.

This most basic 'Triple Layered Waves', Linley was able to unleash with a 100% success right now. As for the higher level attacks, Linley was much less confident. But right now, he had no choice but to give it a shot.

"Aside from the Profound Truths of the Earth, I also have that other, dangerous technique." Linley's eyes slowly began to turn red.

"Groooooowl!"

Linley hunched over. Suddenly, his dragon-scale covered legs kicked off the ground, blasting his body upwards like an enormous boulder from a catapult, smashing viciously towards the mid-air Stehle.

"Go back down." Stehle coldly swung his sword down at Linley.

"Ah!!!!" Linley suddenly howled. The adamantine heavy sword in his right hand chopped viciously at Stehle with boundless strength and fury, while at the same time, his left hand flashed with a beautiful violet light.

The divine artifact – Bloodviolet Godsword.

The same moment he had drawn Bloodviolet, Linley had sent his spiritual energy into it, activating its terrifying, baleful presence. The entirety of Bloodviolet was now totally covered by that bloody red light.

"Bam!"

With Linley at the center, a surge of red, baleful light enveloped Linley. Even people hundreds of meters away began to scream in terror, and even the five Barker siblings were so terrified that they started quivering.

"Ah!!!"

Even Zassler's heart was also filled with fear. From a distance, people who saw Linley in the air, surrounded by that baleful red aura, all felt that he definitely must be a fiendish god whom they dared not rebel against.

As for Stehle, who was closest to Linley?

Stehle only felt a terrifying baleful aura completely envelope him. This baleful aura was even more terrifying than the aura which had been given off by Dylin, the King of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. That dense baleful aura entered his body, striking directly at his mind and soul.

"Kill!"

"Kill!"

Strange voices chanted nonstop in his mind.

Stehle felt as though he had returned to his youth, when he was a young beggar. He felt the same unbounded terror he had then, when each day he would be whipped by the leader of those men.

But the hearts of Saint-level combatants were extremely resolute.

"Ah." Stehle suppressed the terror he felt, allowing the silver battle-qi in his body to explode. Under this sort of situation, Stehle was only able to utilize half of his power.

"Die!"

Linley's eyes were totally red, and he chopped down at Stehle with his adamantine heavy sword.

"Bam!" "Bam!" "Bam!"

The adamantine heavy sword collided three times with Stehle's sword. Each time, Linley's right arm went numb from the shock, to the point where his hand was beginning to split open.

"Swish!"

"Swish!"

In the same time that the adamantine heavy sword had attacked three times, Bloodviolet had slashed over ten times as well. Each of the strange attacks chopped at the same location. Although Stehle's battle-qi was very dense, the eighth sword blow had managed to pierce it. The ninth and tenth attacks actually pierced into Stehle's muscles, but Stehle's body was filled with that dense battle-qi as well.

Linley was unable to remain standing in mid-air. After delivering these ten blows, he began to sink downwards towards the ground.

"Hrmph."

Stehle's eyes had already turned cold. To be forced by a mere peak-stage combatant of the ninth rank to such a state was an absolute humiliation. Stehle let out a growl. "The Ice-Bound World!"

While following, Linley saw that in the sky, a mirage of a shadow of a sword had split space-time itself. In the blink of an eye, it reached his body. At this moment...this illusionary shadow of a sword seemed to have wiped away the entire world. In Linley's world, the only thing which existed was this illusionary sword.

Linley didn't have any time to block.

Zassler, the five Barker brothers, and those people watching from afar felt that the surrounding temperature had dropped to an extremely, terrifyingly low degree. Frost began to gather on their eyebrows.

At the same time, the longsword in Stehle's hands pierced towards Linley's heart.

But Linley didn't react at all, allowing the longsword to pierce towards him at will...

"Master!"

"Boss!"

Haeru and Bebe, these two magical beasts, could only watch helplessly as Linley was about to be killed.

This sword attack by Stehle, in terms of level, had surpassed that of the 'impose' level. If the 'Profound Truths of the Earth' of the adamantine heavy sword was one sort of special attack, then this attack by Stehle could be summarized using a single word: Fast!

"I'm going to die?" Linley was filled with resentment and an unwillingness to die. He wanted to live. He hadn't yet attained his goals.

But unfortunately, in this world, many people died at times and places not of their choosing. After all, the world didn't revolve around any person. Many events would not cater to their desires.

"Boss."

Bebe's tears had already begun to flow.

But suddenly, Bebe was stunned.

Not just Bebe. Haeru, Zassler, the Black Knight Captain, the five Barker brothers, and even the far away group of onlookers were all stunned.

"What's going on?" Everyone was flabbergasted.

Linley was standing on the ground right now, while Stehle was stabbing down towards Linley from the sky. His sword was very, very close to Linley's forehead.

But the two of them didn't move; they were frozen in position.

Even the drop of blood dripping down from Linley's injured right hand had frozen in mid-air.

At this moment, it was as though the entirety of spacetime around Linley and Stehle had suddenly frozen. Objects, bodies...everything was paralyzed.

Not just them. Bebe, Haeru, Zassler, the five Barker siblings. All of them were frozen.

Silence!

A gloomy feeling. A terrible sense of loneliness and quiet.

A look of astonishment was in Stehle's eyes.

"Master Linley. Long time no see."

A gentle, playful voice rang out. A seemingly thirty-something year old man with long black hair, dressed in a loose robe, walked over. He looked the same as he always did; as though he had just woken up.

"Stehle, right? All of you young fellows have reached the peak of the Saint-level. If I still didn't advance, I really would feel too ashamed to meet anyone." The lazy man dressed in the loose robe waved his hand. As though struck by a mountain, Stehle was sent flying backwards as though he were a meteor.

"Bam!" "Bam!" "Bam!" "Bam!"

Stehle's body slammed through over ten stone walls before finally hitting the ground.

"Linley, I haven't seen you in around three years, yes?" The indolent man beamed at Linley. At this moment, Linley suddenly felt as though he could move again. Bebe, Haeru, Zassler, and the five Barker brothers all regained their movement ability as well.

That terrifying suppressive aura had vanished.

"Lord Cesar." Linley immediately paid his grateful respects. Linley felt more gratitude towards Cesar than he ever had before. Just now, he had truly felt it was totally hopeless. The man had just saved his life. How could he not be grateful?

The person who had come was indeed Cesar. The King of Killers.

Zassler and the others all stared in astonishment, their mouths hanging open. What they had seen just then was simply too bizarre. And, faced with this man, Stehle was totally unable to resist at all.

The sound of stones rumbling could be heard. Stehle climbed to his feet. Although his face was covered in dust and dirt, he still walked over, staring with disbelief at Cesar.

"You...you...this....this..." Stehle was in total shock.

"This what? Haha, tell me. This what?" Cesar grinned evilly at Stehle.

Stehle had totally lost the demeanor and poise of an expert, only staring in Cesar in utter astonishment. He stammered, "God... God....Godrealm?!"

"Godrealm?"

Linley and Zassler were both astonished as well.

No wonder Stehle had been so astonished. Just now, when everything had suddenly been frozen in place, was the legendary power of a "Godrealm". Only a Deity-level could utilize this power.

Right now, the Yulan continent had four supreme experts – War God O'Brien, the High Priest, and the Kings of the Forest of Darkness and the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts.

But now...this King of Killers, Cesar, had his own Godrealm?

"Haha..." Cesar laughed.

"Lord Cesar." Linley and the others stared at Cesar in astonishment.

Cesar beamed as he stroked his mustache. "Don't be surprised. Stehle, you and the others have been too arrogant. Hell, your old man, Cesar, reached the peak of the Saint-level over five thousand years ago, and my speed of training was far faster than yours. I'm a genius, you know."

Cesar spat out a bit of saliva, harrumphing as he continued. "But your old man was stuck at the peak of the Saint-level for over five thousand years. If I still couldn't find a way to break through, I really would feel ashamed. Thus, two years ago, I finally broke through that tiny little barrier."

Stehle, Linley, Zassler, and the others all remained silent.

Good heavens.

Just like that, another Deity-level combatant had been born.

Linley found it understandable, actually. According to what Grandpa Doehring had said, Cesar was a person from Doehring Cowart's era, and even back then, he was a Saint-level expert. To break through after five thousand years and finally reach the Deity-level wasn't exactly something which happened out of nowhere.

"Lord Cesar."

Stehle bowed respectfully.

Any Deity-level combatant was worthy of respect. Upon reaching the Deity-level, one could ignore the existence of even empires. They were the true, highest powers of the land. It wouldn't be too hard for a Deity-level combatant to wipe out the entire Holy Union, at most risking some serious wounds.

"What is it?" Cesar looked at Stehle.

Stehle said respectfully, "Lord Cesar, all these years, the relationship between the Radiant Church and you, Lord Cesar, has been quite excellent. I wonder if Lord Cesar would be willing to join us in the Radiant Church. As long as you are willing, Lord Cesar, I believe His Holiness, the Holy Emperor, would be willing to accede to any request."

This was a Deity-level combatant.

Most likely Heidens would even be willing to resign the Holy Emperorship to him. After all, with a Deity-level combatant overseeing the Church, the status of the Radiant Church in the Yulan continent would be totally different.

"Not interested." Cesar snorted. "Hell, over these years, your old man hasn't even been willing to manage the affairs of my own 'Sabre' organization. And you want me to work on your behalf?"

Stehle let out two awkward laughs.

Right now, most likely Cesar could stand in front of the Holy Emperor, wag his finger in the man's nose, then curse at him, and the Holy Emperor wouldn't dare make a sound. This was the prestige of a Deity-level combatant.

"Lord Cesar, if you are unwilling, we won't force it. But as for this Linley... he's killed many people of our Radiant Church. Lord Cesar, would you be willing..."

"Bullshit."

Cesar kicked Stehle in the stomach, but clearly, Cesar didn't use any force with the kick. "Linley is a master sculptore on the same level as master Proulx and the others. I don't have many hobbies. One is beautiful women, the other is sculptures. You want to kill Master Linley in front of me? In your dreams."

Stehle no longer dared to say anything.

Stehle was extremely frustrated, because this mission of his had been to escort these five siblings back to the Radiant Church. Those five siblings all had bodies that were of the eighth rank in muscle power alone. Once the Angels descended into them, they would transform into five peak-stage Saint-level combatants.

"Lord Cesar, that's fine. The Church will of course give you face, Lord Cesar." Stehle squeezed out a smile. "However, those five over there are people which our Church absolutely must have. No matter what the cost, we must take them back with us. I hope, Lord Cesar, you will agree."

"Oh, those five? Take them. I don't know them anyhow." Cesar said casually.

The Radiant Church had indeed treated him quite well over the years. Thus, Cesar would give the Radiant Church face as well.

The five Barker brothers were astonished.

"Lord Cesar!" Linley said frantically.

"Linley, do those five people have some sort of very important relationship with you?" Cesar twisted his lips. "Doesn't seem to be the case. Don't bother with them, then. Just enjoy your own life. Why bother about theirs?"

This was Cesar's temperament. He travelled alone, and acted as he pleased.

"Thank you, Lord Cesar." Stehle was overjoyed.

Cesar beamed at him, then turned to look at the five Barker brothers. "Let me take a look and see who you are, that the Radiant Church would value you so highly." Cesar swept the five Barker brothers with his gaze.

The five Barker brothers were indeed very eye-catching. Those 2.2 meter tall bodies and terrifyingly muscular forms. All of them looked like enormous bears.

"The five of you had best not resist." Stehle walked over. Zassler and Linley wanted to stop him, but under Stehle's cold gaze, Zassler and Linley could only laugh bitterly inside.

How could they stop a peak-stage Saint-level combatant?

Linley had just used both the baleful aura of the Bloodviolet sword as well as the most powerful attacks of the adamantine heavy sword. Despite that, he had only given the opponent the most superficial of injuries.

"Linley, no matter what, we five brothers would like to thank you." Barker, the oldest of the five brothers, said loudly.

"These five fellows are pretty large, aren't they." Cesar's playful voice rang out.

Stehle immediately responded, "Yes, they are quite muscular."

Cesar looked at the five men. His expression, originally playful, suddenly slowly sank into a brooding look. He even began to slowly walk towards the Barker brothers, one step at a time.

"Why are you coming over?" The third of the five brothers, Hazer [Hei'sha], growled.

"Third bro, don't be rude!" Barker growled back.

"Big bro." The muscular man said unhappily.

Cesar quietly stared at the five siblings. By his side, Stehle was beginning to grow surprised. In a low voice, he asked, "Lord Cesar, what are you doing?"

"Stehle, you can leave now." Cesar said calmly.

"Then Lord Cesar, I bid you farewell." Stehle said respectfully. Then he immediately shouted towards the Barker siblings. "The five of you, walk in front."

"I said you can leave now. The five of them will remain behind." Cesar said in a cold voice.

Stehle was startled.

Behind them, Linley and Zassler were both stunned as well. Even the five Barker brothers were shocked by these words.

"Lord Cesar, you...?" Stehle stared at Cesar in astonishment. Just moments ago, Cesar had agreed to let him take the five of them away. But in the blink of an eye, things had changed.

Cesar's expression was colder and grimmer than it had ever been. He stared coldly at Stehle. "Stehle. Listen clearly. Go back and tell Heidens this. If in the future, the Church's men make any attempts on these five brothers, then don't blame me, Cesar, for not giving you face when I slaughter my way to your Sacred Isle."

Hearing these words, Stehle was totally shocked.

"If you leave now, I'll pretend nothing happened today. Otherwise..." Cesar's eyes glittered with a cold light, and a terrifying murderous aura began to emanate from him.

Cesar was the King of Killers to begin with. He specialized in assassination.

And now, Cesar was a Deity-level combatant.

Once Cesar made the decision to go against the Radiant Church, just by engaging in assassinations, he could probably kill all the Saint-level combatants of the Radiant Church without suffering a single injury.

No matter what, the Church could not afford to offend a Deity-level combatant, much less a Deity-level combatant who specialized in assassinations.

"Alright." Stehle's heart was filled with bitterness.

It was also filled with rage. Rage at how overbearing and domineering Cesar was being. But Stehle knew that the person in front of him was a Deity-level combatant. He was qualified to be overbearing and domineering. He didn't dare to show his anger or to retaliate.

"Then Lord Cesar, I bid you farewell." Stehle bowed slightly, and then transformed into a blur, disappearing from the scene.

Linley, Zassler, and the five Barker brothers stared at Cesar in puzzlement.

"In the past, Cesar was always so lazy and lackadaisical. So why did he grow so solemn upon seeing the five Barker brothers?" Linley was extremely puzzled as well.

Cesar glanced at Linley and his group. "Come with me and leave this place. There are quite a few onlookers here. And...I expect Saint-level combatants have already detected the powerful ripples generated by this battle."

There actually were no Saint-level combatants in the prefectural city of Deco.

The closest Saint-level combatant was over a thousand kilometers away. Even Saint-level combatants would take quite a while to travel that sort of distance when flying.

Linley and the others immediately followed Cesar away from the battlefield. That very night, they left the prefectural city of Deco and entered the mountain wilderness. Only then did Cesar have everyone come to a rest stop.

"We'll spend the night here for now." Cesar sighed.

Right now, Cesar didn't seem as carefree and unrestrained as he usually was. On the contrary, he seemed rather heartsick. Linley had the feeling that Cesar must have some sort of connection to those five siblings.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 37, The Undying Warriors

“Crackle.”

The bonfire was blazing. Cesar, Linley, Zassler, and the five Barker brothers sat around the campfire. Bebe was resting on Linley's thigh, while Haeru was lying behind Linley.

Camping overnight in the wilderness was fairly dangerous. But who or what could possibly threaten Linley's group? Especially with that Deity-level expert amongst them.

“Why did you save us?” The eldest of the five brothers said in a loud voice.

Linley and Zassler all turned to look at Cesar. This was a question they were curious about as well.

Cesar glanced at the five of them. He didn't respond, instead asking them a question of his own. “Your father? Your mother?”

“All our relatives are dead. As for our parents? We were orphans since we were young.” Barker replied. They were now in their thirties. To them, who had spent their entire lives in the war-torn lands of the Eighteen Northern Duchies, growing up without parents wasn't anything particular special.

After all, in those war-torn lands of the Eighteen Northern Duchies, orphans were a common sight.

"Orphans..."

Cesar let out a long sigh. "I didn't expect that after all these years, the 'Armand clan' [A'man'da] whose fame shook the Yulan continent would fall to such a state."

The five Barker brothers, Linley, and Zassler all started.

"Lord Cesar, are you saying that the Barker brothers are..." Linley had a guess as to what Cesar was saying.

Cesar nodded. "Right. These five siblings belong to the Armand clan, the clan of the Undying Warriors, one of the Four Supreme Warrior clans of the Yulan continent."

"Undying Warriors?" Barker and his siblings all stared at each other in shock.

"How is that possible?"

The five brothers rose to their feet, stunned. They were orphans since youth. How could they dare imagine that they belonged to one of the Supreme Warrior clans?

Linley had already guessed the truth as soon as he heard Cesar say the words, 'Armand clan'. After all, Linley's own clan records included information on each of the Four Supreme Warrior clans; the Dragonblood Warriors' Baruch clan, the Violetflame Warriors' Hyde clan, the Tigerstriped Warriors' Prey [Bo'lei] clan, and the Undying Warriors' Armand clan."

Five thousand years ago, these four clans indeed were extremely famous.

Aside from the War God and the High Priest, without question, the Four Supreme Warriors stood at the absolute pinnacle of human power. Although there were other so-called peak-stage Saint-level combatants, those peak-stage Saint-level combatants couldn't match the Supreme Warriors.

Power and insight; these were two mutually supporting, mutually complementing things.

For example, right now, Linley's level of understanding was very high; he had surpassed the 'impose' level, and was nearing the peak-stage Saint-level in terms of understanding. But his actual power was extremely weak. Naturally, his attack force was far weaker than that of a Saint-level combatant.

Historically, the third Dragonblood Warrior had used a heavy warhammer.

When he had reached the Saint-level, he was only at the level of 'wielding something heavy as though it were light'. But despite that, he still possessed astonishing attack force.

This was because his body possessed a terrifyingly high degree of power and battle-qi.

A person's strength and battle-qi were his most basic foundations. The higher one's level of understanding, the better one would be able to utilize those basics. For example, if your basics were at 100, but you were at a low level of understanding, your actual attack power might just be 50. But if you had a high level of understanding, you might be able to use all 100 of your attack power, or perhaps even more, reaching 200 attack power.

The Supreme Warriors, by their very nature, possessed several times more physical strength and battle-qi than other Saint-level combatants. Even if they were a bit inferior in terms of insight and understanding, their attacks would still be very terrifying. This was the natural gift of the Supreme Warriors!

There was nothing that could be done for it. They were able to gain an unfair advantage over others via their natural gifts.

"Your bodies must be extremely tough." Cesar sighed.

The five Barker brothers glanced at each other, then nodded. The second of the five brothers, Anke [An'ke], nodded and said, "It's impossible for us to train in battle-qi, but just through our muscle power, we are on the level of warriors of the eighth rank."

"Aside from the Four Supreme Warriors, how could anyone else possibly break past the natural limitations of the body and reach the eighth rank just based on their body and muscles?" Cesar shook his head and said.

Linley was now certain as well.

Only the Four Supreme Warriors were restricted to using their own special battle-qi cultivation methods and be unable to train normal battle-qi.

"Amongst the Four Supreme Warriors, the Undying Warriors have the toughest bodies. Their defense is very powerful, and their attacks are legendary as well. The only weakness is that you are a bit slow." Cesar sighed. "Barker, you and your brothers are so young, but you were able to reach the eighth rank just based on your muscles and bodies. Aside from the most physically powerful of the Four Supreme Warriors, the Undying Warriors, who could possibly achieve this?"

Linley nodded as well.

Right.

He himself was a Dragonblood Warrior, but if he were to try to reach the eighth rank based purely on physical training, who knows how long it would take? Even his younger brother Wharton, who trained in accordance with the Secret Dragonblood Manual, had only reached the seventh rank this year at age seventeen.

"Aside from the elders of your clan, I'm afraid there is no one who knows more about you Undying Warriors than myself. You are definitely Undying Warriors. There is no question about this at all." Cesar said with absolute certainty. "And what's more, the five of you possess an extremely high degree of natural talent. If you were to train using the 'Secret Undying Manual', then most likely you would have already entered the ninth rank by now."

"The Secret Undying Manual?" Barker and his brothers were confused.

Linley explained, "Barker, the truth is, all of the Four Supreme Warrior clans find other types of battle-qi to be unusable. Only by training in accordance with certain special ways can we develop battle-qi. As for your Undying Warrior clan, you can only train using the 'Secret Undying Manual'."

"No wonder we couldn't train battle-qi no matter what we tried." The fifth brother, Gates [Gai'ci], said with a sigh.

"If the five of you had been in possession of the 'Secret Undying Manual', there's no way you would have been caught originally." Cesar sighed. "The Four Supreme Warriors all possess extremely powerful attacks. Amongst them, the Undying Warriors possess the highest defense, the Tigerstripe Warriors are the fastest, the Violetflame Warriors possess the strange Nirvana Rebirth ability, while the Dragonblood Warriors are the most balanced, possessing powerful attack, defense, and speed."

Cesar was a man of Doehring Cowart's era.

This was also the era when the Supreme Warriors appeared in the world.

"Lord Cesar, why is it that you treat us so...specially." Barker said with curiosity.

Hearing these words, Cesar couldn't help but think back to the past. His expressions grew complex. After a long time, he sighed. "Your ancestor, Armand, was the dearest friend and bro that I, Cesar, have ever had."

Armand, the first clan leader of the Undying Warrior clan, was also the first Undying Warrior.

"Five thousand years ago, the Yulan continent was in the midst of what was most likely the most chaotic, most dangerous era I have ever seen. The Four Supreme Warriors appeared out of nowhere, while the War God O'Brien became famous after his titanic clash with the High Priest. The Yulan Empire fragmented, as did the Pouant Empire. The entire continent sank into a mass of fire and floods."

Linley and the others all listened carefully, even though they knew this already.

"And this was just what was going on, on the surface."

Cesar grinned at Linley. "Actually, that era was much more complicated than you can imagine. The Yulan continent had more than just our native experts. Even powerful combatants from other planes had descended to the Yulan continent."

"Powerful combatants from other planes?"

Linley, Zassler, and the Barker brothers were all stunned.

"Right." Cesar chuckled. "To you, these are all distant, far away events, but that era really was chaotic. Many Saint-level combatants lost their lives. In that era, Saint-level combatants were nothing special, because there were many powerful experts who had descended...including many Deity-level combatants."

"Many Deity-level combatants?!" Linley felt his head grow dizzy.

"Right."

Cesar nodded. "Actually, five thousand years ago, organizations in some higher planes paid a very high price so as to allow their people to enter the Yulan continent. There was a reason they did this. Linley, you simply don't know how fierce, how ruthless those battles back then were. At that time, Armand and I joined forces as we roamed the Yulan continent. Several times, I nearly died, but Armand rescued me. But of course...I helped out Armand several times as well."

Cesar fell silent at this point, as though he were reminiscing about past events between himself and Armand.

Linley was growing puzzled.

The Pouant Empire and the Yulan Empire had fragmented five thousand years ago. The War God had entered the Deity-realm and became famous five thousand years ago. The Four Supreme Warriors had also suddenly appeared out of nowhere five thousand years ago...

And now, according to Cesar, five thousand years ago, even experts from other planes had descended to the Yulan continent.

"Five thousand years ago, something incredibly major must have happened." Linley thought to himself.

"Enough of that. By the time your power reaches a certain level, even if you don't want to know, there'll be someone who will tell you." Cesar chuckled.

Linley suddenly had the sense that the Yulan continent wasn't as simple a place as he had thought it to be.

"Actually, there's no need to force many things in life. Look at me. I eat when I should and play with women when I want to. I'm as carefree as I want to be. How wonderful is that? But look at that O'Brien, and that High Priest. Don't be mistaken by their fame and glory. In reality, they are under enormous pressure." Cesar quirked his lips.

Linley, Zassler, the five Barker siblings, Bebe, and Haeru all silently listened.

Listening to Cesar, this Deity-level expert, casually discuss the affairs of the most puissant experts on the Yulan continent, Linley had a very strange feeling.

"Only after reaching the Deity-level will one have the power to move mountains at will." Linley silently thought to himself.

Cesar glanced at Linley. "Linley, let me give you a word of advice."

"Lord Cesar, please guide me." Linley said very modestly, as though he were a student again.

Cesar nodded. "I know there is a very deep enmity between yourself and the Radiant Church. But right now, you are far too weak. Even if you are able to wreck some of the plans of the Radiant Church and give them some small problems, you aren't able to damage their foundations at all. I recommend that you quietly train for a time first. I don't ask that you train to an excessively high level. But at least, after transforming, you need to be at the Saint-level. That will be enough."

Cesar had already realized that Linley possessed a very high level of understanding.

As long as Linley's level of power were to enter the Saint-level, then, aided by his deep understanding of reality, when faced with peak-stage Saint-level combatants, even if he wasn't able to win, he would still have the hope of escaping.

"Understood." Linley nodded.

"Barker." Cesar looked at the five Barker brothers.

"Lord Cesar." The five of them were extremely respectful. They now believed that they indeed were the descendants of the Undying Warrior clan. Since the man in front of them was a life-and-death friend of their ancestor, naturally they were very respectful.

Cesar nodded. "All of the Four Supreme Warrior clans have decayed. Armand's clan has now decayed to the point where even your ancestral training methods have been lost. Fortunately...in the past, during the course of the dozens of years I had spent travelling with Armand, I procured a copy of the 'Secret Undying Manual'. It should still be within the general headquarters of my Sabre organization."

Hearing these words, the five siblings' eyes shone.

They had just watched Linley transform. All of the Four Supreme Warriors had their own transformations. Even pre-transformation, the five of them had the power of warriors of the eighth rank. Once they acquired the secret manual, they would be able to transform...and by then, their power would increase enormously.

"However, there's a bit of distance from here to the general headquarters. Tomorrow morning, I plan to personally make a trip." Cesar said.

If those high ranking members of Sabre who had been personally trained by him in the past were to hear these words coming from Cesar, they probably would die from shock.

The 'Old Master', Cesar, was legendarily lazy.

There was over ten thousand miles distance from here to the general headquarters. This journey would be an extremely tiring one. For someone of Cesar's lazy nature to make such a long round trip was quite the feat.

"Thank you, Lord Cesar." Barker and his brothers said gratefully.

"No need. I hope that in the future, the five of you will restore the Undying Warrior clan's reputation and fame." Right now, Cesar was feeling quite emotional. Five thousand years ago, when he had roamed the world with Armand, at risk of dying every single day, was the most unforgettable experience in his very long life.

A night passed. The dawn came.

Nothing was left of the campfire but ashes. Linley and his squad all got up to send Cesar off.

"Lord Cesar, we will immediately return to a small town outside the prefectural city of Basil and settle down. When the time comes, you can just come find us there." Linley said.

Linley knew that Saint-level combatants could use their spiritual energy to search for people. As for Deity-level combatants, as long as you gave them a general location, it was very easy for them to find someone.

"Got it. Haha. Train hard, kiddos. I'll head off now." Cesar had returned to his usual lackadaisical, noisy mood. It was as though after that night had passed, he was back to his old self.

Linley, the Barker siblings, Zassler, and the rest of the group all watched as Cesar's figure flew through the sky at high speed, disappearing past the horizon.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 38, The Church's Strategy

After Cesar left, Linley's group immediately headed off that morning in the direction of the provincial capital of Basil. This time, they weren't in too much of a hurry. But for the five Barker brothers, who were warriors of the eighth rank, the speed at which they travelled was still quite fast.

By nightfall the next day, Linley's group arrived at a town near the provincial capital of Basil.

"This town is called Cloudpeaks Village." Zassler laughed as he introduced the town. "In the past, I spent over ten years in this small town. The people here are fairly honest and simple, and they rarely interact with the outside world. Generally speaking, very few people come here. It is quite peaceful."

Linley nodded.

What they needed was a peaceful place. This time, when he fought against Stehle, he had very nearly lost his life. Linley made up his mind that he would have to train until he was at least a warrior of the ninth rank in human form. That way, after being Dragonformed, his power would be at the Saint-level.

"If I can reach the Saint-level, then a few years later after that, when I combine my insights and understanding of the principles of using the sword with my superior speed, even if I encounter Stehle again, I'll still be able to flee, even if I can't win."

Linley had a very good grasp of the strengths of this mutated Dragonform he had.

After devouring the blood as well as the draconic core of that Armored Razorback Wurm, Linley's mutated Dragonform had inherited the strengths of the Armored Razorback Wurm; its speed and its defense.

As the five Barker brothers stared at the peaceful town, their eyes were firm and resolute as well.

"There will definitely come the day when I will get revenge for my wife and my son." Barker and his brothers also knew the state of affairs between Linley, Zassler, and the Radiant Church.

Without question, this group was now under the leadership of Linley.

This squad was completely composed of the enemies of the Radiant Church.

On the west side of Cloudpeaks Village, Linley and his people engaged in a quick transaction with some local nobles, spending ten thousand gold coins to invite many laborers to come and erect a new residence.

Ten thousand gold coins, in a countryside town such as this, was enough to build a very lavish residence.

The very next day, Linley brought Rebecca and Leena to this place.

From this day forward, Linley's team all quietly took up residence here, focusing on their training.

"Rumble."

The ocean waves crashed against the shore, throwing up countless sprays of foam. Above the jade-blue ocean waters, a human figure could be seen flying over at high speed. In a short period of time, the human figure arrived at the shore. It was Stehle.

"Things have gotten complicated now." Stehle was extremely frustrated.

The Church had placed a very high degree of importance on obtaining those five bodies. Most likely, it would even be willing to give up one of its Saint-level combatants or offend the O'Brien Empire to do so. In order to make sure nothing would go amiss, Heidens had even asked him, Stehle, to handle it.

But the result was...

Stehle stared at that distant, mighty Radiant Cathedral.

"Woosh." Stehle once more took to the air. The knights surrounding the Radiant Temple, upon seeing someone flying towards it, couldn't help but tense. Only after seeing that it was Stehle did they calm down.

Within the ninth floor of the Radiant Temple.

"Oh, Stehle's back." Heidens had already seen through his window the sight of Stehle flying back through the air. "What's going on? Why did Stehle come back alone?"

Heidens had a very bad premonition.

"Creak." Without any forewarning, the door to his room swung upon. Stehle, as cold as thousand-year glacial ice, walked in.

"Stehle, what happened? Where are they? Where are those five bodies of the eighth rank?" Heidens was frowning and he asked his questions hurriedly.

Stehle shook his head. "Your Holiness, acquiring those five bodies is no longer an option for us."

"What happened?" Heidens' face sank.

Those five bodies represented five peak-stage Saint-level combatants. Their importance to the Radiant Church couldn't be understated.

Stehle said in a low, somber voice, "Your Holiness, originally, I was escorting those five brothers along the way. But when we entered the prefectural city of Deco, we ran into two people."

"Which two people?" Heidens didn't believe there was someone capable of stopping Stehle.

"Linley, Zassler." Stehle's voice was extremely cold.

"Linley? Zassler?" Heidens was startled.

This Linley had disappeared for three years. He now appeared out of nowhere?

Heidens couldn't help but think back to three years ago. Heidens truly did not wish to kill an ultimate genius such as Linley. But he had no other choice. However, three years ago, after Linley disappeared from Hess City, no one ever found any trace of him again.

But now, Linley was in cahoots with Zassler?

"Are you telling me that it was Linley who had rescued Zassler?" Heidens' eyes lit up.

Stehle nodded. "Yes. This Linley is already extremely, extremely powerful. Beneath the Saint-level, there's definitely no one who can match him. Only Saint-level fighters or other extremely powerful fighters can defeat him."

"Six combatants of the ninth rank. He can kill that many?" Heidens found it rather hard to believe.

Stehle nodded somberly. "Your Holiness, I must inform you that this Linley has two extremely powerful magical beasts. Both of them should be peak-stage magical beasts of the ninth rank. And in addition...in terms of insight and understanding regarding fundamental principles, Linley is already nearing the peak-stage Saint level.”

“Nearing the peak-stage Saint-level?” Heidens was very shocked.

After all, the higher one’s level of understanding was already at, the harder it would be to progress to the next level of understanding. There were people who would spend hundreds of years training yet still fail to improve whatsoever.

“Yes. Linley has already surpassed the level of using the force of the heavens. His current form of attack is extremely strange and unique. What’s more, I have the feeling that right now, he has only mastered a small part of that level. Despite that, he was able to cause me a light wound.” Stehle couldn’t help but reflect on how bizarre Linley’s attack using the ‘Profound Truths of the Earth’ was.

“I’ve never encountered an attack such as that. That sort of attack wasn’t based on battle-qi, nor was it based purely on strength. It was...” Stehle paused, not quite able to find the right words to express it.

Hearing Stehle say such things, Heidens was very surprised.

An attack which could cause a light wound to a peak-stage Saint-level combatant such as Stehle was already, in and of itself, quite astonishing.

“What was so special about his attack? How would one defend against it?” Heidens immediately asked.

Stehle nodded. “His attack could pass through the exterior muscles and transmit its force directly into the internal organs. In other words, exterior layers of defense, no matter how powerful, are virtually useless."

"Oh?" Heidens frowned.

"This technique is a weapon aimed at attacking the internal organs of a person. In order to defend against this technique, the best method is to use battle-qi to internally protect all of the body's internal organs, covering them all with a layer of battle-qi."

Actually, these vibrations which Linley's attack created, when passing through material barriers, would still lose a bit of power.

But because this was a sort of vibrating wave, no matter how high your external defense was, it would still transmit its power through your defense. However, if the opponent's organs had a highly dense, concentrated layer of protective battle-qi over it, the vibrational waves would be slowly weakened by the battle-qi. By the time it reached the internal organs, its threat level would be rather low.

"There's no way to completely defend against this sort of attack. The only option is to use a high amount of battle-qi to ameliorate its effects." Stehle sighed in praise. "And, again, I have the sense that Linley has just recently begun to understand this technique. In the future, his attack will most likely be even more powerful. This can probably be classified as the strangest type of attack I have ever seen."

Stehle had a very high opinion of this technique.

This made Heidens all the more worried.

"This Linley must be killed." Heidens was now truly starting to grow worried. If Linley was to be permitted to continue to develop like this, he would pose a true threat to the Radiant Church.

"Continue. I'm sure the two of them weren't enough to stop you." Heidens said in a somber voice.

Stehle nodded. "Indeed. Both Linley and Zassler are only of the ninth rank. But just as I was about to kill Linley, a person appeared out of nowhere. Cesar. The King of Killers, Cesar!"

"Cesar?" Heidens said doubtfully. "He shouldn't be willing to dare fight face to face against the Radiant Church directly."

"Wrong. He dares." Stehle sighed. "Cesar has reached the Deity-level."

"Reached the Deity-level!"

These words were like a lightning bolt slamming into Heidens' mind, making him momentarily feel dizzy. Yet another Deity-level combatant had appeared in the Yulan continent.

"Deity-level?" Heidens stared at Stehle.

"Yes. Deity-level." Stehle nodded again.

Heidens was silent for a long moment.

"What did Cesar say?" Heidens said calmly.

"Cesar said, in the future, our Radiant Church definitely must not have any designs on those five brothers. Otherwise, he will shed all pretense of cordiality with us and slaughter his way to the Sacred Isle." Stehle's words were like a hammer to Heidens' heart.

These five vessels of the eighth rank symbolized five peak-stage Saint-level Angels.

This was too heartbreaking. Heidens didn't want to accept it.

He didn't want to accept it!!!

"Why would Cesar say such a thing?" Heidens' eyes narrowed. "Based on my understanding of Cesar, he's a man who has no interest in power or authority. He enjoys living a carefree life. He wouldn't spend a single iota of effort on a stranger."

This was indeed the case. Cesar truly didn't care about the lives or deaths of others.

"For a lazy person such as Cesar to be willing to go this far..."

Heidens' eyebrows suddenly shot up, and his eyes lit up.

"I understand now." Heidens sighed.

"What's the reason, Your Holiness?" Stehle asked.

Heidens sighed yet again. "In the records that the Church has regarding Cesar, there was information regarding, in the chaotic era of five thousand years ago, Cesar's experiences alongside his good friend Armand. The people whom Cesar truly values have always been the descendants of Armand."

"The Undying Warriors?" Stehle began to understand as well.

"Right. I've always been very surprised how five bodies of the eighth rank could suddenly appear here in the Yulan continent. But now, it makes sense. Undying Warriors. The most physically powerful of the Four Supreme Warriors."

Heidens was silent for a long period of time. His thoughts regained their normal clarity.

"We can't touch those five siblings. That is without question." No matter what, they couldn't afford to offend a Deity-level expert.

"Linley's level of talent is simply terrifying. We simply cannot allow him to live." Heidens looked at Stehle. "Stehle, Cesar didn't say that he would go to war against the Radiant Church for Linley's sake, did he?"

Stehle nodded.

Heidens smiled confidently.

"That's more like him. Although he likes stone sculptures, he definitely wouldn't go to total war against the Radiant Church for the sake of a master sculptor."

Cesar was an arrogant loner.

There were very few people for whom he would really be willing to go all out. And Linley was not one of them.

"Stehle, go and get some rest. When you leave, order someone to have Lyndin [Lan'dan] come." Heidens ordered.

"Yes, Your Holiness."

Roughly ten minutes later, the sound of knocking at the door.

"Enter." Heidens said calmly.

A tall and beautiful woman with a head of silver hair walked in. Without question, she was a woman so beautiful as to make any man go wild. But that icy beauty of hers was the type that would make others not dare to approach her.

"Your Holiness." Lyndin bowed.

Heidens immediately issued his order. "Tomorrow, take five Angels of the ninth rank with you and head directly to the O'Brien Empire. The goal for this mission is to kill Linley. In a while, I will have a scroll containing information about Linley delivered to you."

"Yes, Your Holiness."

Lyndin was a Radiant Angel who had descended into a body of the sixth rank. Although it was quite hard to find bodies of the seventh and eighth ranks, bodies of the sixth rank were quite common. Thus, the Radiant Church had quite a few Angels of the ninth rank.

"Remember, you must kill Linley, no matter the cost." Heidens instructed yet again.

Lyndin started, then expressed assent.

Angels possessed astonishing power. Even the weakest Two-Winged Angels had early-stage Saint-level power. Lyndin's true power was very powerful; however, bound by the restrictions of their vessels, they weren't able to put them on full display.

But if they were to go all out...

They were totally capable of unleashing their Saint-level power in exchange for their lives.

Most importantly...six Angels were capable of forming the legendary 'Angel Battle Formation'. With the six of them joining forces, even an early-stage Saint-level expert would most likely be killed, to say nothing of Linley.

"Go."

Heidens said calmly.

They were just six Angels of the ninth rank, after all. For the sake of killing Linley, he'd be willing to sacrifice six more if necessary. After all, Linley's natural talent had truly terrified Heidens.

"He cannot be allowed to continue to grow!"

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 39, Time Passing Slowly

The O'Brien Empire restricted the worship of other religions within its borders, and so the Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows were forced to keep their forces in hiding. If and when their forces were discovered, the O'Brien Empire would mercilessly stamp them out.

This attitude of the O'Brien Empire had caused the Radiant Church to never have the chance to expand its influence within the Empire's borders.

In important places such as the imperial capital or in the provincial capitals, the Radiant Church still managed to place quite a few forces in hiding, but in prefectural cities, they would have at most a few dozen people.

As for those ordinary cities, some places had a few people, others had none.

And the towns? No need to even mention them.

The density of their web of influence wasn't very high. Thus, the Radiant Church's forces which had been sent to locate Linley couldn't find any trace of him. They had no idea where this Linley had run off to.

Even though they didn't know where Linley was hiding, the Lyndin's team of six experts still departed from the Sacred Isle and headed towards the O'Brien Empire.

Outside Northwest Administrative Province's provincial capital of Basil. Cloudpeaks Village.

Linley, Zassler, Barker and his brothers, Rebecca, and Leena were all living here quietly. Aside from their training, Rebecca and Leena spent their time making sure Linley and the others were all fed.

The explanation they gave to the local villagers was that Linley was a noble. Zassler was his housekeeper, and the five Barker brothers were his guards.

Linley's team was located in the western side of the village, several hundred meters away from any other residences.

"Big sis, today the skeleton I summoned was so cute! It looked so silly." Rebecca and Leena were on their way back from the local market, carrying baskets of fresh vegetables.

Aside from their training, they spent much of their time cooking.

"Rebecca, don't always waste your time playing around. After summoning a skeleton, release it back. You are wasting too much time playing around with skeletons." Leena was somewhat unhappy.

Rebecca was too undisciplined. Every day, she would play around with and tease the skeletal warriors she summoned.

"I know, big sis. I'll catch up to you soon." Rebecca said in a low voice. Her sister was already capable of summoning zombies.

It must be said that both Rebecca and Leena were quite talented. They were progressing quite rapidly in the arts of Necromantic Magic.

The two of them walked to an empty spot of land. Currently, the manor which Linley had designed was still in the construction phase. And thus, Linley had erected a series of wooden cabins for them to live in for now.

"Big brother Linley's training method is so weird." Rebecca murmured.

Right now, Linley was wielding the adamantine heavy sword in one hand and the Bloodviolet Godsword in the other. In Linley's hands, the adamantine heavy sword danced about as though it was totally weightless. But Bloodviolet was the opposite; it seemed to carry a thousand tons of force with each blow.

"Wielding something heavy as though it were light, wielding something light as though it were heavy..."

Linley had a hint of a smile on his lips.

Regardless of whether he was using Bloodviolet or the adamantine heavy sword, his level of understanding could be applied to both. For example, the 'impose' level could be used with virtually any sort of attack.

Sabre, sword, staff, rod, fists, or kicks.

'Impose' could be used with any of these.

This is why using it could be described as 'calling upon the force of the heavens and the earth'.

As for the level of 'wielding something heavy as though it were light', there was no way one could use it on the Bloodviolet Godsword, because this sword was already very light. After pondering for over ten days while seated meditatively on the floor, Linley suddenly became aware of how ponderous and all-encompassing the wind which blew through the skies really was. Finally, he had his flash of insight.

The wind was invisible. When it was gentle, it could be like the kiss of a lover. But when it was aroused into a vicious storm, it could split mountains and shatter stones.

"Wielding something light as though it were heavy."

Linley hacked out with the Bloodviolet Godsword. The nearly invisible, diaphanous sword let out a thunder-like sound as out of nowhere, a tornado suddenly appeared.

"The wind-style single-combat spell, 'Dimensional Edge', is an extremely powerful one-on-one magical attack spell. The power of the Dimensional Edge spell is so great that it can hack apart the dimensional walls itself. Then...would it be possible to duplicate the effects of the Dimensional Edge through sword techniques?"

Linley considered this question.

The correct roads would all lead to the same destination, despite the path. The level above 'impose', when using the adamantine heavy sword, was achieved by Linley through using his insights regarding the Laws of the Earth.

As Linley saw it, with regards to the Bloodviolet Godsword, to surpass the 'impose' level, he would have to utilize his understanding of the 'Laws of the Wind'.

Only by selecting the correct avenue of training would one not be led astray.

Right now, Linley was quietly considering which avenue of training he should embark on. But the fundamental Laws of the universe were very profound and very abstruse. To understand them was very difficult. Fortunately, Linley has exceptional elemental affinity for both wind elemental essence as well as earth elemental essence, and thus was able to reach a very high level of attunement with nature.

But despite that, without multiple years of training and time, it would be virtually impossible to make much progress.

"Swish."

A blur slashed through the air, then landed behind Linley.

"Lord Cesar." Linley turned his head, then immediately paid his respects.

Cesar laughed and nodded. "Where are Barker and his brothers?"

"They are training in the empty space behind their room. Lord Cesar, please follow me." Smiling, Linley headed towards the area behind the room, but as he did, Cesar suddenly stared at Linley's feet in astonishment.

Although on the surface, Linley appeared to be no different from normal people, but...

What sort of person was Cesar? How could he not tell?

He could clearly sense that Linley was walking in an extremely rhythmic manner, seeming to carry with each step a certain vibration. In truth, what had happened was that Linley had immersed himself in his silent training for so long that even when he walked, his steps would also embody the throbbing pulse of the earth.

"He truly is talented." Cesar praised in his heart.

After walking for a short distance, Cesar saw Barker and his siblings. The five of them were in an area filled with countless giant boulders the size of houses, which they were using as part of their weight training. The entire area was suffused with an earth-colored layer of light.

"Haaaargh!"

The muscles on the bodies of the Barker brothers were rippling and gleaming, with the veins sticking out like snakes on their bodies, making them look extremely powerful and mighty.

"Lord Cesar." Upon seeing Cesar, Barker and his siblings immediately stopped their training.

"You five fellows really do train hard, eh?" Cesar quirked his lips in a grin. "What sort of effectiveness are you seeing from your training?"

The fourth of the five siblings, Boone [Bu'en], said excitedly, "In the past, when we were training, we didn't sense much improvement. But now that we are training in this Supergravity Field, both our muscles as well as our internal organs are strengthening and improving."

The area under the effects of a Supergravity Field would see the local gravity increase dramatically.

Higher gravity could benefit the muscles, the organs, and the entire body.

"Excellent. I made a long round trip, and brought back with me the secret manual I had copied by hand all those years ago." With a flip of his hand, a rather thin book appeared in front of Cesar.

Barker and his brothers stared at this manual, their eyes shining.

"This is the Secret Undying Manual?" The fifth brother, Gates, stared at it with wide, hungry eyes.

"Take it." Cesar began to laugh.

The fifth brother, Gates, snatched it over, his hand moving like a blur. He immediately opened the manual and began to read, with the other four squeezed together like five giant bears, craning their necks over and staring at it with eyes as big and wide as ox-eyes.

This spectacle was actually quite funny.

"Haha." Cesar began to laugh, while a hint of a smile was on Linley's lips as well. Cesar looked at Linley. In a low voice, he warned, "Linley, I can tell that these five brothers are just like their ancestors. They are rather boorish and unrefined. If they are to travel alone, most likely they will be easily duped and cheated by others. I hope you can lead and guide them."

"Lord Cesar, don't worry." Linley assented.

During this period of association with the five Barker brothers, Linley had discovered that these five men clearly differentiated between enmity and benevolence. They were very straightforward and didn't play any mind games. They'd curse out whoever they wanted to curse and wouldn't hide any of their thoughts.

Linley actually rather liked this sort of temperament. It was genuine!

"The five of them, upon training in accordance with the Secret Undying Manual, will improve at a very rapid speed. It won't be difficult at all for them to reach the ninth rank within a few years." Cesar sighed to himself.

Turning his head, he glanced at Linley. "This Linley is most likely worthy of my trust."

As far as Cesar was concerned, Linley couldn't even come close to comparing with the five Barker brothers in terms of importance. After all, these five were the descendants of the closest friend Cesar had ever made. As for Linley, he was nothing more than a sculptor whom Cesar, a statue aficionado, rather liked.

Towards Linley, he only felt appreciation.

But towards the five brothers, he felt the sort of doting love one might feel towards one's grandchildren.

Soon after, Cesar left again. After about half a year had passed, the manor was completed, and Linley and his team took up residence within, beginning a long period of quiet training.

Aside from Cesar, perhaps the only person who knew that Linley was living there was Yale.

Yale had long ago had set up a system of sending someone each month to provide news regarding the Radiant Church, basic news regarding the Yulan continent as a whole, as well as information about Wharton.

Although they were living in this village, Linley thus was still kept very well informed about the affairs of the Yulan continent.

Within a forest on the west side of Cloudpeaks Village, Linley was training by himself.

Three years.

They had spent three full years within the quiet Cloudpeaks Village. During these three years, the Radiant Church's forces had been searching fruitlessly for them. As for Linley, he had totally immersed himself within his training, and had advanced quite rapidly as well.

The wind rose, blowing the dead leaves to the ground.

Linley raised his head to look at the sky. Very high up above him, a Bluewind Hawk was flying with wings spread. A hint of a smile appeared on Linley's lips, and he suddenly thrust his adamantine heavy sword into the air.

"Boom!"

Originating from Linley's adamantine heavy sword, a series of faint cracks in space itself could be seen as a vibrational wave burst forward up into the sky at an incredibly high speed.

In the blink of an eye, the vibrating waves had traversed nearly a thousand meters.

"Boom!"

The body of the Bluewind Hawk, a magical beast of the fifth rank, shuddered, then began to collapse from the skies.

"I've finally reached the level of the 'Hundred Layered Waves'." Linley's eyes were filled with a hint of confidence. "If today, that Stehle were to be struck by me again, he most likely wouldn't get off with just a light wound this time."

Profound Truths of the Earth – Triple Layered Waves!

Profound Truths of the Earth – Ten Layered Waves!

Profound Truths of the Earth – Hundred Layered Waves!

After spending three years, Linley had already reached an extremely high level of understanding with regards to the Profound Truths of the Earth, and his attack power was now very terrifying as well.

Within a thousand meters distance, he could kill a magical beast of the fifth rank

Most likely, even an early-stage Saint-level combatant would be hard pressed to accomplish such a task. After all, battle-qi, when being transmitted through the air, would slowly be weakened by air resistance. When the distance reached a certain length, the power of the attack would be almost negligibly weak as well.

Compared to battle-qi, these 'vibrational waves' would still be weakened when passing through the air, but much, much less than battle-qi would be.

When using the Triple Layered Waves technique in the past, Linley could only kill a magical beast of the fifth rank at a distance of roughly ten meters. Any farther away, and the waves wouldn't be powerful enough to kill fifth ranked magical beasts.

But upon reaching the Ten Layered Waves stage of the technique, Linley could kill a fifth ranked magical beast within a hundred meters.

But the Hundred Layered Waves was even more powerful. Even three thousand meters wouldn't prove a problem, much less a thousand.

This was the true ace in Linley's sleeve. Unless he was in a dangerous situation, Linley wouldn't willingly use this technique.

"But how to break past the barrier for the Profound Truths of the Wind?" With a flip of his hand, Linley returned the adamantine heavy sword to its sheath, then drew out the Bloodviolet Godsword.

Over the past three years, Linley had gained some insight regarding the fourth level of using the Bloodviolet, the Profound Truths of the Wind. But his insights were only limited to the simplest level; the 'Rippling Wind' technique.

"This shouldn't be the case. Wind-style magic isn't just fast and flexible. It should also have extremely powerful one-on-one attack abilities. How, then, can one execute the 'Dimensional Edge' through sword attacks?"

Linley had a certain feeling that the effects of the 'Dimensional Edge' spell absolutely could be displayed through the Bloodviolet Godsword. But it was as though the road to that level was covered by a dense fog, leading Linley to have no idea where he should try to make the breakthrough.

“Big brother Linley, big brother Linley!” Rebecca’s clear voice rang out from outside the forest.

Linley grabbed the Bluewind Hawk by the neck and headed out of the forest with the hawk in his hands. This hawk would serve as part of dinner.

“Big brother Linley, your letter just came.” Rebecca smiled radiantly at Linley.

“Oh?”

Each month, a new letter would come. Linley tossed the Bluewind Hawk over. “Rebecca, our dinner tonight will be this Bluewind Hawk.” As he spoke, Linley accepted the letter and tore it open.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 40, Undying Warrior Transformation

Reading the information in this letter regarding Wharton, Linley couldn't help but start to frown.

"Wharton has registered for next year's selection process to become an honorary disciple of the War God's College?" Linley was rather puzzled and also rather dissatisfied. "Why does he want to enter the War God's College? Even the personally taught disciples of the War God at most reach the Saint-level. What, a Dragonblood Warrior can't reach the Saint-level on his own?"

Linley knew very well that entering the War God's College wouldn't have much of an impact on their development.

After all, Dragonblood Warriors were absolutely guaranteed to eventually become peak-stage Saint-level combatants. The Supreme Warriors were nothing to trifle with.

As for the Deity-level...

Despite the passage of so many years since the War God O'Brien had founded the Empire, not a single one of his honorary disciples or personally taught disciples had reached the Deity-level, right? The Deity-level wasn't something that could simply be taught by a Deity-level combatant.

"How could one's understanding of the Laws and principles of the world be taught? Everyone has their own insights. The road others have taken might not be suited to one's self."

Linley was somewhat unhappy with his younger brother's decision to register and attempt to become an honorary disciple of the War God's College.

However, his younger brother had grown up.

"I can't blame Wharton for making his own choices." Linley continued to read. At the very end, a hint of laughter appeared on Linley's face. "Haha, so this kid, Wharton...haha..."

The letter Yale had ordered to be delivered explained in detail the reason why Wharton had registered for the chance to be selected as an honorary disciple of the War God's College. The primary reason was because of the Seventh Princess of the Empire.

"I hope that Wharton will have a perfect, unbroken love life. At the very least, it must not be like mine was." Linley blessed his younger brother silently.

Indeed, the reason Wharton wanted to become an honorary disciple of the War God's College was because of her. Given that the master of the War God's College was the founding Emperor of the O'Brien Empire, War God O'Brien, upon entering the War God's College, it would be much easier for Wharton to wed an imperial princess.

After reading the letter, a flame emerged from Linley's hands.

"Crackle." The letter was reduced to ash.

Alongside Rebecca, Linley made his way back to their manor.

His days of peaceful training continued. Linley continued to keep an eye out for Wharton's affairs. According to the reports in the letters, the Seventh Princess of the Empire was an extremely beautiful girl, and she was also very adorable and kind. She was also doted on by her imperial father, which was why she had many pursuers.

Several of them had higher social statuses and rankings than Wharton.

However...

The Seventh Princess of the Empire was on very good relations with Wharton. She would often go out to play and joke around with him.

The next year, the competition to join the War God's College began. This was also the fourth year for Linley and his squad here at Cloudpeak Village.

"Big brother Linley, here's your letter."

Rebecca once more delivered a letter to him. Linley immediately opened it and began to read. Based on the timing of events, this letter should have information regarding the grand competition.

Given his younger brother's ability, he should be able to succeed.

"Oh? He failed?" Reading the contents of the letter, Linley frowned.

The competition to become an honorary disciple of the War God's College had resulted in a young man named Blumer [Bu'lu'mo] capturing that position. This sort of competition wasn't the type of competition where the last man standing would be given the position.

It was a series of competitions resulting in a total of ten finalists. From within these ten finalists, either the War God himself, or one of his personally taught disciples, would select the next honorary disciple.

Wharton had indeed become one of the ten finalists, but in the end, the War God's College had selected Blumer.

"Yet another genius?" Linley was very surprised.

Blumer was currently 32 years old, yet had just entered the ninth rank as a warrior. This astonishing natural talent was indeed quite incredible.

"But in terms of talent, Wharton should still be somewhat superior to him. This year, Wharton should be 21 years old, but he has already entered the eighth rank as a warrior." Linley had learned just a month ago that Wharton had entered the eighth rank as a warrior.

A 21-year old warrior of the eighth rank was very astonishing as well.

"Hrm?" Reading Blumer's background information, something caught Linley's eye.

"Blumer's older brother is actually the Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier?" Linley was quite surprised. Olivier was that genius who, immediately upon entering the Saint-level, defeated the Stellar Sword Saint, Dillon.

It wasn't impossible for an early-stage Saint-level to defeat a Saint-level who had entered the Saint-level many years ago.

What it required was a higher level of understanding and insight.

For example, Linley. Right now, his level of understanding and insight was already at the peak of the Saint-level. Only, because his physical strength and battle-qi was too low, it was impossible for him to enter the Saint-level at this time.

As soon as he reached the required amount of strength and battle-qi, he would enter the Saint-level.

This was why Linley now spent a large majority of his time training his battle-qi. He wanted to break through to the ninth rank as quickly as possible.

"I wonder how Wharton is currently feeling." Linley wondered to himself. That buck-toothed, chubby cheeked kid from years ago was now an adult.

Linley was truly filled with love and affection towards Wharton.

“The Emperor of the O’Brien Empire, if this letter is accurate, should already know that Wharton is the descendant of the Dragonblood Warrior clan. Given Wharton’s power, he clearly is capable of Dragonforming. As a Dragonblood Warrior, the imperial clan would not be disgraced by Wharton marrying the Emperor’s daughter.”

Actually, Linley didn’t really feel much respect or fear towards the so-called royal clans or imperial clans.

The only thing he feared and respected was truly powerful experts, such as the War God, the High Priest, the King of Killers, and the two Kings of the Forest of Darkness and the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. The people who stood at the pinnacle of the world.

Understanding and insight was important. Physical strength was important as well! To Linley at his current level in particular, improving his battle-qi and physical strength was something he desperately needed.

When using the same technique of ‘wielding something light as though it was heavy’, the force of Linley’s attacks were dozens of times weaker than that of a Saint-level combatant.

The same was true for the Profound Truths of the Earth.

At this time, Linley perhaps could seriously injure a Saint-level combatant if he caught him off guard, but if a Saint-level combatant were to use the technique, he definitely could cause the opponent to instantly perish.

The three vibrational waves were the same, but the strength of the vibrations was just on totally different levels. The vibrational power unleashed by a Saint-level combatant would be ten times higher.

"The basics!"

Linley sat in the meditative position on his bed, all the muscles on his body twitching as though countless worms were crawling beneath his skin. The veins on Linley's forehead were bulging outwards as well.

The azure-blackish battle-qi was rapidly circulating through Linley's arteries, each time bringing with them the unique, nourishing, strengthening effects of the Dragonblood battle-qi.

Within his dantian region.

The battle-qi had already achieved a very high degree of density. That liquefied battle-qi was constantly swirling about at a slow pace in the middle of his dantian.

"Whew."

Linley let out a long breath, and when he did, a white mist spat forth from his mouth in a line as flat as a sharp sword.

"Who knows how long it will take to advance from the peak of the eighth rank to the ninth rank." In the past four years, Linley had managed to reach the peak-stage of the eighth rank. But as always when it came to training, the most critical juncture was also the one which took the most time.

Right now, Linley, when transformed, was still just at the peak of the ninth rank.

As soon as he broke through to the ninth rank, Linley would be an early-stage Saint-level combatant when Dragonformed.

The peak of the ninth rank to the early-stage Saint-level was a true transformation. There was an enormous difference between the two levels.

"Haha...hahahaha..." Suddenly, a bout of wild laughter erupted from outside the room. Linley stood up from his bed, puzzled. "Why are the Barker brothers so happy, this early in the morning?"

At this time, the sky was just barely lit, and the world was covered by a thick fog. Ordinary people wouldn't even be able to see someone five meters away; all they would see was the fog.

"Big brother Barker, why are you guys ranting like this early in the morning? We sisters need our sleep!" Rebecca called out unhappily.

Linley's vision was far stronger than that of ordinary people's. At a glance, he could tell that the eldest of the five brothers, Barker, was so happy he couldn't control himself.

"Big bro, why are you so happy?" The other four siblings all came out of their rooms as well.

"I succeeded. I've broken through to the ninth rank." Barker excitedly said to his four brothers. "Haha, when transformed, I can finally reach the early-stage of the Saint-level."

The Undying Warriors' transformation was very similar to that of the Dragonblood Warriors in this respect. If in their normal, human form, they were of the ninth rank, once transformed, they would be at the Saint-level.

"Early-stage Saint-level?" Zassler, who had just walked out of his own room, was shocked as well.

Linley, the sisters, and the four brothers of Barker were both stunned as well.

Linley's eyes were shining.

"Barker, you've really broken through?" Linley said with uncontrollable excitement.

Barker nodded. "Yes, Lord. I truly have broken through." In the past, the Barker brothers all addressed Linley as 'Lord Linley'. Now that they were in the village, everyone was pretending that Linley was a noble and the five brothers were his guards, so naturally, they continued to address Linley as 'Lord'.

After four years, everyone had gotten used to this form of address.

After all, the five Barker brothers were very heroic, blunt figures. Their minds weren't nearly as agile as Linley's and Zassler's. The decisions of this group were primarily made by Linley.

"Let's go to the empty space in the west. Let us get a good look at your current power." Linley immediately said.

Everyone excitedly rushed out of the manor towards the empty space in the west side. Because the sun wasn't totally up yet, most of the people in the village were still sleeping. Not a single person could be seen.

"As soon as he transforms, he'll be Saint-level. Master, how long will it take before I'll be able to break through?" The Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, said with some frustration to Linley.

Haeru had already been at the peak of the ninth rank for a long time.

"Groooowl." Bebe growled angrily at him. "Haeru, don't think I don't understand what your sly intentions are. You have designs on that Saint-level magicite core the Boss has."

Linley laughed as he shook his head.

For a magical beast of the peak of the ninth rank to break through to the Saint-level usually required them to make the breakthrough on their own. But of course, if they were to consume a Saint-level magicite core of the same elemental type as their own, there was a very high chance that they would be able to suddenly break through.

But of course, there was a chance of failure as well.

“Groooowl.” Haeru growled at Bebe as well. “Bebe, I’m not like you. You’ve been growing stronger this entire time, during the past four years. But I’ve stopped.”

Exactly what sort of magical beast Bebe was, no one knew.

But Bebe was definitely a type of magical beast whose natural talent was even more terrifyingly high than Blackcloud Panthers. Although four years ago, Bebe was roughly on par with Haeru, in truth, Bebe was still growing and developing.

After these past four years, Bebe at his current level of power could easily devastate the Blackcloud Panther.

In terms of speed or defense, Bebe was extremely terrifying.

“Most likely, even a Saint-level combatant would have to spend quite a bit of effort to kill Bebe.” Linley’s heart was filled with appreciation. Four years ago, Bebe’s defense was already frighteningly high. Now, it was so high as to be unspeakable.

“Haeru, that Saint-level magicite core the Boss has is darkness-element, but you are dual-element, wind and darkness. If you eat it, the chance of failure is too high. It isn’t worth it! I’m a pure darkness-element magical beast. When I reach the end of my development, the chances of me making a breakthrough after consuming it is much higher than yours.” Bebe said arrogantly. “What, you aren’t happy? You want a taste of my claws?”

Haeru let out a growl, then fell silent.

Bebe arrogantly stuck up his little head. Haeru, this extremely arrogant magical beast, had been thoroughly cowed by Bebe.

Right at this time, Barker was about to transform.

“Bebe, knock it off.” Linley was focusing on Barker, who stood in front of everyone.

“Haha, everyone, watch carefully.”

Barker was extremely excited. With a popping sound, the muscles on his body began to constantly crackle and pop. The muscles on Barker’s body began to wildly expand, while at the same time, the color of his skin and muscles began to transform as well.

Thunderous crackles!

Barker, originally 2.2 meters tall, had now expanded in size along with his swelling muscles. In the blink of an eye, Barker had transformed into a terrifyingly large and powerful looking giant who was 3 meters tall.

Barker’s entire skin had turned into a light green color.

His skin and muscles seemed like they were made from stone, and those enormous, defined muscles clearly contained an unimaginable amount of power. Just by looking at him, one could tell this. And then, atop his light green skin, a layer of white, marble-like armor suddenly began to appear, eventually covering his entire body aside from his face. Even his head was covered by a white marble helmet.

This so-called armor and helmet was grown from his very body. It was terrifyingly odd.

And then, Barker suddenly rose into the air, flying in a circle before settling down and hovering in mid-air.

“Haha, the Saint-level. This is the power of the Saint-level.” Barker excitedly smashed his two gigantic fists together. When he did, the air itself rippled from the force of that blow.

This was a Saint-level Undying Warrior!

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 41, The Power of the Hundred Layered Waves

Surrounded by the foggy mist, Linley, the Arch Magus necromancer Zassler, Rebecca, Leena, Barker's four brothers, Bebe, and Haeru all stared at the Saint-level Undying Warrior in front of them with a mixture of astonishment and delight.

Those powerful, muscular arms and legs...

Just by looking at the Saint-level Undying Warrior, one could almost physically see the warrior's aura of power and might. In particular, that white, marble-like armor made Barker look as though he truly was a war machine.

Although the other four siblings were 2.2 meters tall, compared to their big brother Barker, they now seemed like under-age children. They only reached Barker's chest in height.

"The Saint-level. Big bro, how do you feel?" The eyes of Hazer, the third brother, were shining.

Standing in mid-air, the Saint-level Undying Warrior emitted a deep rumbling noise, and then allowed his voice to reverberate through the air. "The feeling...is of power. Unbelievable power. What's more, I can fly easily, as though it were a natural ability."

Most Saint-level combatants needed to reach a certain level of understanding and insight to fly.

But the Four Supreme Warriors were different. As long as they had enough power, the exalted, mysterious bloodlines of the Four Supreme Warriors would allow them to fly as though it were second nature to them.

It was similar to how some Saint-level magical beasts would immediately and naturally know how to fly upon reaching their age of adulthood and maturity.

This was an innate gift!

“Haha, second bro, third bro, fourth bro, fifth bro. Don’t be too stressed out. All of you are at the peak of the eighth rank, right? With just a single extra step, you’ll be at the ninth rank, and by then, after transforming, you will be like me.” Barker tried to keep his sonorous voice quiet, but he couldn’t help but express his excitement.

Seeing this, Linley also felt great excitement and joy on behalf of these five brothers, who were Supreme Warriors like him.

The Barker brothers had trained for much longer than Linley had. When they had been captured and then escorted by Stehle, they had already been over thirty years old. At that time, they had already entered the eighth rank for quite some time.

They were warriors of the eighth rank who had never trained using the ‘Secret Undying Manual’.

As soon as they did, it was only natural that they then developed at an astonishingly fast pace. After all, the power of one's body was what determined how much battle-qi could be generated, and those powerful bodies of theirs...the five of them had all reached the peak of the eighth rank. And today, Barker had broken through the last gate and reached the ninth rank.

An Undying Warrior of the ninth rank in human form, an early-stage Saint-level after transforming.

"Breaking through from the peak of the eighth rank to the ninth rank isn't hard, but it isn't easy either. I might still need several years." The fifth brother, Gates, pursed his lips.

It was hard to say when one would break through to another level.

For example, Linley was currently at the peak of the eighth rank as well. He might break through tomorrow, or he might break through in three to four years.

Barker suddenly looked at Linley. With excitement, he said, "Lord Linley, use that 'Profound Truths of the Earth' technique to attack me again."

"You want to give it a try?" Linley laughed with resignation.

One of the reasons why Linley was able to make the five of them willingly address him as 'Lord' and accept him as their leader was because Linley had totally outclassed the five of them in terms of martial force. In recent years, the five brothers had trained in accordance with the ‘Secret Undying Manual’, and after transforming into Undying Warriors, they had sparred a few times with Linley.

Undying Warriors did indeed possess an astonishingly high defense.

But the strange vibrational attacks of the ‘Profound Truths of the Earth’ were able to pierce through the armor and the muscles of the Undying Warriors, suffering only a slight loss of power before attacking their internal organs.

At that time, Linley had only used his weakest ‘Triple Layered Waves’ against them, and at a reduced level of power. But despite that, the five brothers still suffered some light injuries.

“The Profound Truths of the Earth is an extremely dangerous technique. Barker, if you really want to give it a try, then it has to be like it was in the past. I’ll start at the weakest level of power, then slowly ramp it up one level at a time. I don’t dare use my most powerful attack at the very start.” Linley said sincerely.

Profound Truths of the Earth – Hundred Layered Waves.

The power of this attack was dozens of times greater than the Triple Layered Waves. According to Linley’s calculations, it shouldn’t be too difficult for him to use this attack to kill an early-stage Saint-level combatant.

“Don’t worry, Lord. Let’s do this one step at a time. I won’t try to show off too much.” Barker’s deep voice rumbled out.

"Fine, then." Linley nodded. "You are already at the Saint-level. I'll transform into a Dragonblood Warrior as well." Linley removed his upper body clothes, then allowed his body to become fully covered with black draconic scales, with the sharp spikes coming out as well.

In the blink of an eye, Linley had totally transformed into his Dragonblood Warrior form.

"Each time I see his Lordship's eyes, my heart trembles." The fifth brother, Gates, said in a low voice. The other three nodded.

The dark golden eyes Linley had inherited from the Armored Razorback Wurm were cold and utterly remorseless.

"Barker, first, I'll use my fist to execute the Profound Truths of the Earth. If you can totally withstand it, then I'll switch to using the adamantine heavy sword." Linley said in a deep voice.

Through using his fists, he could still put the power of the Profound Truths of the Earth on full display.

Only, in terms of actual force, it would be about half of that which the adamantine heavy sword could generate.

"Alright, come. Don't take it too easy on me." Barker was full of excitement as well. Right now, his blue eyes had a hint of gold in them.

Launching off from the ground, Linley shot upwards like a vicious blur towards the mid-air Barker.

"Ten Layered Waves." Linley let out a growl.

Like a thunderbolt, his right fist smashed through the air, landing directly against the white armor covering Barker's chest. But Barker felt nothing at all as that seemingly titanic punch slammed against his body.

"Boom!" "Boom!" "Boom!"

The strange attack penetrated through his armor and his powerful muscles, then pierced through the Undying battle-qi surrounding his organs. Finally, like a warhammer, it smashed against his heart and his other organs.

His internal organs all quivered.

But then, the Undying battle-qi in Barker's body once more covered his organs.

"Haha, I'm fine. Again." Barker's eyes were shining. Linley's punch using the Ten Layered Waves had actually not been able to injure him at all. The only thing he felt was a slight tremble from his internal organs.

Linley nodded.

Indeed, if a Saint-level Undying Warrior, with their incredibly strong defense, wasn't able to take an empty-handed Ten Layered Waves blow, then Undying Warriors wouldn't be worthy of being praised as the Supreme Warriors with the greatest level of defense.

"Fine. I'll begin to gradually increase my attack power." Linley didn't waste any more words, immediately beginning to attack.

Barker knew very well that the weak point of the Undying Warriors lay in their low speed. In truth, even if he were to engage in a genuine battle against Linley, given Linley's superior speed, Linley could land one punch after another on him. The result wouldn't be too different from what he was doing right now; just standing there and letting Linley hit him.

The number of vibrations each blow caused slowly began to increase.

From ten layers, to twenty layers, to thirty layers...

"His defense truly is powerful. He's even managed to withstand ninety layers of vibrations." Linley's eyes were shining. He immediately called out loudly, "Barker, prepare to take my most powerful bare-handed blow!"

Barker waited for him there in mid-air.

Barker had to admit that just then, the ninety layered waves had caused him some injury. But due to the astonishing healing power of his Undying battle-qi, he had already pretty much recovered from that light injury.

"Hundred Layered Waves!"

Like a tempest, Linley shot into the air, his fist drawing closer and closer to Barker before finally smashing against his chest.

"Boom!" "Boom!" "Boom!" "Boom!"

Barker felt as though he had been smashed by an enormous meteor as both his body as well as his internal organs began to vibrate with a strength which he had never experienced before. A hundred vibrations occurred in the blink of an eye.

Barker felt his internal organs shudder, and he could already taste blood in his mouth.

He wanted to swallow it, but then another stream of blood was forced into his mouth by his organs. He could no longer repress it, and he spat out a mouthful of blood.

"Big bro!" Barker's four brothers immediately ran over in astonishment.

"Barker." Linley was surprised as well.

"I'm fine." After spitting out that mouthful of blood, Barker actually felt much better. "I'm not injured too badly. My Undying battle-qi should be able to totally cure this sort of minor wound in just three days or so."

Barker looked at Linley with admiration. "Lord, in terms of understanding and insight, you are on a much higher level than me.

Although my body is more powerful than yours, I'm still unable to defeat you."

The Linley of four years ago definitely wouldn't have been a match for the current Barker.

But over the course of these four years, Linley had deepened his understanding of the Profound Truths of the Earth. By enhancing his original Triple Layered Waves to the current level of a Hundred Layered Waves, he had increased his attack power by several dozen times.

"If I were to use my adamantine heavy sword, the power of the Hundred Layered Waves would be doubled." Linley said to himself. The power of the Profound Truths of the Earth, when executed by a heavy sword, was extremely great.

"If I used all of my power with the adamantine heavy sword and executed the Hundred Layered Waves attack, I could most likely heavily injure or even kill an early-stage Saint-level Undying Warrior." Linley was now very certain.

The defensive abilities of the Undying Warriors were legendary.

If even an early-stage Saint-level Undying Warrior was unable to take this attack, how could an ordinary early-stage Saint-level combatant do so?

"Any early-stage Saint-level who encounters the Hundred Layered Waves attack will most likely die." Linley felt extremely confident.

Raw power and level of insight were mutually supportive.

Compared to four years ago, Linley's raw power had not increased much. But in terms of the effectiveness of his level of understanding, he had improved by dozens of times. An ordinary peak-stage combatant of the ninth rank, upon reaching the Saint-level, would generally only increase in power by around ten times or so.

"Barker." Zassler said with a smile. "In terms of raw power, the bodies of the five of you are not one whit weaker than Linley's. Your body, Barker, is in fact stronger than Linley's. But in terms of insight and understanding, you are too inferior. Linley has already told you that his levels of understanding can be divided into four levels; ordinary attacks being the first, 'wielding something heavy as though it were light' as the second, 'impose' as the third, and the 'Profound Truths of the Earth' as the fourth. But the five of you are still at the most basic level of using raw force. Your level of understanding and insight is far too low."

Barker deactivated his transformation, returning to his normal appearance.

"In the past four years, Lord Linley has already taught us much. But we five brothers truly..." Barker laughed awkwardly.

"Old man, do you think we are geniuses? His Lordship is around twenty five years old, but has already reached the peak-stage of the Saint-level in terms of insight and understanding." The fifth brother, Gates, didn't treat Zassler with any respect at all.

Zassler glanced at Gates unhappily.

"You are physically powerful and all use heavy weapons. You should easily be able to understand the level of 'using something heavy as though it were light'. But don't be too impatient. As long as you focus on your training, one day, you will perhaps understand it." Linley said encouragingly.

In truth, Linley had a large, unfair advantage.

His elemental affinity was, after all, exceptional. As a magus, he naturally was able to more easily attune with nature and commune with it. Pairing his inborn elemental affinity with his proficiency with the sword, it was very natural for him to be able to quickly deepen his level of understanding.

"Yes, Lord." The five brothers all nodded.

The five Barker brothers all knew that right now, Linley was also at the peak of the eighth rank. As soon as he broke through to the next level, Linley would also be at the early-stage of the Saint-level in his Dragonform. Given his already-high level of understanding, by then, the difference between Linley and them would be even greater.

"We can't allow ourselves to become a hindrance to him." The five proud brothers all decided to work even harder from now on.

In the blink of an eye, yet another year passed.

The autumn wind was still howling drearily, the same as before.

Staring into the distance at the Barker brothers engaged in their training, Linley couldn't help but grin. All five of the Barker brothers were physically stronger than Linley, and Linley had paid for the Dawson Conglomerate to produce weapons for them.

Five long-handled greataxes.

Those long-handled greataxes were at least two meters long, and were astonishingly thick. In addition, the axeheads were extremely large as well. The greataxes themselves were made from the finest and rarest of materials, with each long-handled greataxe weighing an astonishing 5300 pounds.

"The fifth brother, Gates, has a relatively higher talent for insight. He was the first to understand 'wielding something heavy as though it were light'. The other four have yet to grasp it."

Although over a year had passed, aside from Barker, the others remained stuck at the peak-stage of the eighth rank and had not broken through. The only pleasant surprise had been Gates coming to understand 'wielding something heavy as though it were light'.

Zassler had spent this year in tireless training as well. This 800+ year old man had been somewhat embarrassed by the rapid increases in power by Linley and the Barker brothers, causing him to become hard working as well.

Watching the dried leaves fall from the trees, Linley suddenly felt very much at peace.

“Five years. It has been five years. I should go fulfill my end of the five year agreement as well.” Linley looked towards the northwest, in the direction of the prefectural city of Cerre.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 42, An Appointment Kept

The five year agreement. Linley still remembered his promise.

“I hope Jenne won’t be too determined.” Linley knew that even if in the end, Jenne elected to follow him, at most Linley would only be able to treat her as he did Rebecca and Leena.

Linley couldn’t reciprocate her affections.

After experiencing so much and passing one tribulation after another, the deepest part of Linley’s heart had been frozen and locked. That layer of ice covering it was very cold, very thick. To melt the hard ice surrounding Linley’s heart would be difficult. Very difficult.

But when he thought about affairs of the heart, Linley began to think about Wharton.

“According to Yale’s messengers, over this past year, Wharton and the Seventh Princess of the Empire have been quite passionate with each other. However, according to what the letter says, it won’t be easy for Wharton to successfully take the Seventh Princess as his wife.”

The Seventh Princess’s background was simply too excellent. She was virtuous, kind, beautiful, of high rank, and doted upon by her imperial father. There were too many suitors.

The only thing Linley could do was to silently bless his little brother and hope he would have a wonderful relationship.

At least, his brother couldn't end up like him.

Half a month later.

"Lord." The fifth brother, Gates, energetically sprinted over towards Linley, who had just completed a sculpture. With excitement, he said, "My big brother has also grasped the concept of 'wielding something heavy as though it were light'."

"Oh?"

With a flip of his hand, Linley stored away his straight chisel. With surprise, he said, "Barker has reached the level of 'wielding something heavy as though it were light'?"

"Right. Lord, why don't you go take a look?" Gates advised.

Linley laughed. "How about this. Gates, have everyone come to the main hall. There's something I want to tell all of you."

"Oh." Seeing Linley had something important that he wished to discuss, Gates nodded.

After a while, everyone congregated within the main hall. Many of them were animatedly talking about Barker reaching the level of 'wielding something heavy as though it were light’.

“Everyone.”

Smiling, Linley walked into the main hall. “I have an important matter I need to take care of. On this trip, I will only bring Bebe and Haeru. As for the rest of you, all you need to do is to continue to train here. If everything happens quickly, I’ll be back in a few days. If I need a bit longer, I’ll send someone with a message.”

“Lord, you don’t plan to take us along?” Gates asked loudly.

“Continue your training.” Linley laughed as he glanced at Gates. “Gates, if you can reach the ‘impose’ level, or reach the ninth rank, I will take you as well.”

Gates immediately shut his mouth. He wasn’t Linley. Reaching the level of ‘wielding something heavy as though it were light’ was already quite difficult for him. He was still just at the basic stage of this level, and had yet to even master it.

“Enough. Tomorrow morning, I leave at dawn.” Linley declared directly.

The next morning at dawn, the Barker brothers, Rebecca, Leena, and Zassler all watched as Linley, dressed in a warrior’s outfit covered by a long black robe, rode off on the back of Haeru, his Blackcloud Panther, with Bebe seated next to him. The man and the two magical beasts departed from the Cloudpeaks Village.

His long black robe fluttered in the wind. Linley's weapons had all been withdrawn into his interspatial ring.

"Using the adamantine heavy sword to execute the Profound Truths of the Earth is extremely powerful; once that technique comes out, most likely the target will perish. Normally, it would be better for me to continue using the Bloodviolet Godsword."

Linley had already reached a fairly high level of proficiency in using his Profound Truths of the Earth.

But as for the Profound Truths of the Wind his Bloodviolet sword used, Linley's level of proficiency was quite low.

Linley didn't believe that using the Bloodviolet sword was necessarily weaker than using the adamantine heavy sword. After all, the forbidden wind-style spell was the single-target spell 'Dimensional Edge'. If magical techniques could create the effects of this spell, logically speaking, sword techniques should as well.

"Bebe, I've discovered that over these years, you've continued to improve. What sort of magical beast are you, exactly?" Seated astride Haeru, Linley laughed towards Bebe.

Haeru let out a growl. "Master, Bebe is a total freak. I've never seen such a freakishly powerful magical beast. Five years ago, he was about the same as me, but now, he's much more powerful. But he still hasn't reached the Saint-level yet."

If Haeru had met the three sons of Dylin, the King of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, he would know that there were other magical beasts in the world that were even more freakishly powerful than Bebe. Those three were terrifying magical beasts of the Saint-rank had easily swallowed over a hundred enormous dragons into their bellies.

"Bebe has grown somewhat stronger." Linley chuckled. "But Bebe seems to still be growing."

Linley suspected that Bebe was not fully an adult yet.

"Heh heh, that's entirely possible." Bebe narcissistically raised his little head. "When I, Bebe, reach adulthood, maybe I'll be a Saint-level magical beast."

Saint-level magical beasts such as the Bloody-eyed Maned Lion, the Savage Worldbear, the Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape...these were magical beasts which would, as a natural part of their growth cycle, enter the Saint-level as soon as they reached full adulthood.

This was the innate gift of these Saint-level magical beasts.

"I've heard of Saint-level magical beasts. But is there such a thing as magical beasts which would naturally grow up to reach the Deity-level?" Linley sighed to himself. "Even if there are, I'll wager they wouldn't appear on planes such as the Yulan continent."

They continued on their journey. By nightfall, Linley reached the prefectural city of Cerre.

On the streets of Cerre, there were many people mounted on magical beasts. However, most of those people were mounted on low-level or mid-level magical beasts such as Windwolves or Fanged Wolves.

When Linley rode the Blackcloud Panther on the streets, the other magical beasts all prudently retreated in terror, giving him space.

Although humans, when encountering strange magical beasts, might not be able to accurately gauge the beast's strength, when a low level magical beast encountered a high level magical beast, they would easily be able to sense the difference in power.

"Hrm? A black panther?"

A very ordinary man in the streets of the prefectural city of Cerre saw Linley seated on his black panther, and his eyes immediately lit up. "He has a black panther, and he looks exactly the same as the picture. It must be him."

The man immediately grew excited. He immediately ran out of the street, heading towards a small alleyway.

At the gate to the governor's castle of the prefectural city of Cerre. As soon as Linley had seen the gate, he discovered that a large number of people were congregating around the gate, awaiting his arrival.

"Big brother Ley."

A young man and woman called out at the same time.

Linley immediately recognized them. The girl who had grown even more mature and beautiful was Jenne, while the handsome young fellow who was half a head taller than Jenne was most likely the grown up Keane.

Keane and Jenne ran over excitedly.

The now nineteen year old Keane said loudly, "Big brother Ley, I heard from the guards a long time ago that a man riding a black panther had arrived. I immediately guessed that it must be you."

Black panthers were extremely rare, after all. There were only two types; Blackstripe Panthers, and Blackcloud Panthers.

"Big brother Ley." Jenne's face was slightly flushed, and she looked expectantly at Linley.

"Let's talk inside." Linley said with a calm laugh.

All of them entered the castle. Since he had turned sixteen, Keane had officially taken over the management responsibilities of the city, and by now, he was a qualified city governor.

Last year, Keane had taken a beautiful wife. At the time, Keane had wanted to invite Linley, but unfortunately, he had no idea where Linley was living.

"Jenne, you've become a magus?" Walking in the hallway, Linley laughed as he asked her this question.

Given Linley's spiritual energy, he could immediately sense the aura of a magus coming from Jenne. The aura wasn't particularly strong.

"Right. A water-style magus." Jenne's eyes shone with excitement. "Big brother Ley, after you left, I didn't have anything to do. Afterwards, I realized that with you being so powerful, if I couldn't do anything and kept on being a hindrance to you, that wouldn't be a good thing. So, I went to have my elemental affinity and my spiritual energy tested. I didn't expect that I was suited to train in water-style magic."

When she was young, Jenne had been constantly suppressed and held down by her aunt, and thus didn't have the chance to train in magic at all.

Nobody had any idea that Jenne had the capability of becoming a magus.

"But my talent isn't very high. After five years, I'm still only a magus of the third rank." Jenne said quietly.

Generally speaking, from infancy until adulthood, one's spiritual energy was continuously growing. But for geniuses such as Linley and Reynolds, even if they hadn't trained in magic when they were young and only began once they reached the age of eighteen, they probably would have immediately started off with the spiritual energy of a magus of the third rank.

Eighteen years of growth, combined with five years of training. And yet, she was still only of the third rank.

Her talent could only be considered to be average, perhaps a bit higher than your ordinary magi.

"Big brother Ley, have a seat." Keane enthusiastically invited Linley to sit in the seat of honor. "Let me make some introductions. This is my wife, Irene [Ai'lin]."

Seated next to Keane was a very beautiful young lady, who had a pair of pretty blue eyes. Right now, this young lady was looking at Linley with curiosity. When she and Keane had first began their courtship, Keane often would talk to her about Linley.

"Big brother Ley." Irene said courteously.

"Keane, everyone, just sit down and relax. Don't stand on so much ceremony." Linley said with a calm laugh.

Everyone sat down, but Keane continuously stared at Linley. Keane knew very well that the purpose of this trip had to do with that five year agreement he had made.

Five years having passed, Jenne was now twenty three. Because of training in water-style magic, Jenne's skin was now glistening, making her even more beautiful. And the now twenty three year old Jenne now had a more womanly aura.

During these five years, Jenne had many suitors.

And not just from the prefectural city of Cerre. Whenever Jenne and Keane went to attend the yearly events of the clan at the provincial capital of Basil, there would be many people who would attempt to flirt with or make passes at Jenne.

But Jenne still refused to pay any of them any heed.

"Jenne." Linley looked at Jenne, cutting straight to the heart of the matter. "I imagine you still remember our five year agreement. Jenne, I'll tell you right now, in my heart, I truly can only envision you as a younger sister who needs someone to cherish her."

Jenne's entire body trembled, but in the next moment, she began to laugh.

Next to her, Keane and their housekeeper, Lambert, both let out a low sigh.

"Big brother Ley." Jenne said. "I feel very fortunate to have a big brother like you. No matter what, no matter where, I'll follow you. I just hope that you won't discard me before I get married."

Linley slightly trembled.

But he immediately understood that Jenne truly had made up her mind to follow him. But judging from what Jenne was saying, over the course of these five years, Jenne had already mentally prepared for what he had said today.

"Then you've decided to follow me and leave here?" Linley asked.

Jenne paused for a second. After all, she was very close to her brother, Keane. In her heart, she couldn't bear to part with him either. But after taking a glance at Keane and seeing how happy and loving he was with Irene, Jenne's worries melted away.

"I can follow you away at any time, big brother Ley. Big brother Ley, where do we go first?" Jenne asked.

"We'll first pay a visit to a small town near the provincial capital of Basil." Linley replied.

"The provincial capital of Basil?" Keane started, then immediately said, "Big brother Ley, our Jacques clan will organize a yearly gathering at the provincial capital of Basil each year. It happens every year on November 15th. The day will come in three days. Big brother Linley, would you be willing to let my sis go with me one more time? It's in the same direction anyhow."

Keane looked expectantly at Linley.

Keane really couldn't bear to be parted from his sister. He knew that Linley roamed the world. Once his sister left with Linley, who knew how long it would be before the two would meet again?

Having grown up alongside his big sister, their affection was naturally very deep.

Linley looked at Keane, then looked at Jenne. Finally, he nodded. "Fine. We'll go to the provincial capital of Basil together. After you finish attending your clan's annual gathering, Jenne will leave with me."

"Thank you." Keane said gratefully.

While Linley took up residence for a few days within the prefectural city's castle, the Radiant Church's forces that were hidden within the prefectural city of Cerre were very excited.

"That Linley actually came to the prefectural city of Cerre. This is wonderful." A white haired man said, his face covered with excitement. "Five years, five full years. We've finally found Linley."

The Radiant Church had been searching fruitlessly for Linley for five years. Sadly, due to their lack of manpower within the O'Brien Empire, their forces were primarily concentrated in places such as prefectural cities. Naturally, they wouldn't be able to discover Linley, who was hiding within a countryside village.

However, in this prefectural city of Cerre, the place where Linley had once stayed for quite some time, the Radiant Church had a good amount of people present.

"Hurry and send a message to Lady Lyndin in the countryside. Tell her that Linley has arrived at the prefectural city of Cerre.” The white robed man immediately instructed his subordinates.

Lyndin and the other five Angels, upon arriving at the O’Brien Empire, had searched everywhere for Linley for two full years, but had found nothing. In the end, with no other choices, they had settled into a small town near the prefectural city of Cerre, ready to act at a moment’s notice.

As soon as they received any news, they would immediately head out.

They would kill Linley no matter what the cost, even if it meant they would have to die with him. This was their fate as Angels.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 43, The Gathering in Basil

That night, Linley had dinner at the main hall of the governor's castle.

"Keane, Jenne. Come outside a moment." After finishing dinner, Linley called out to them, then walked out of the main hall to the quiet rear gardens.

Keane and Jenne exchanged glances, then followed Linley to the gardens as well.

The gardens at night were very peaceful and quiet. Looking at Jenne and Keane, Linley smiled. "Jenne, Keane, there's something I must inform you of."

Keane and Jenne stared at Linley, puzzled.

"The Radiant Church and I have a deep hatred between us. We will not rest until one or the other is destroyed."

These words from Linley immediately stunned Jenne and Keane. They knew that Linley was no ordinary man, but they had no idea that he was diametrically opposed to the Radiant Church.

The Radiant Church was, without question, an enormous entity.

Lowering his voice, Linley said, "Five years ago, when I fought with the Radiant Church, it most likely resulted in them becoming aware that I am in the O'Brien Empire. Five years ago, the forces of the Radiant Church became aware of Haeru's existence. I believe that just based on this alone, they should have discovered how I had followed the two of you to the prefectural city of Cerre."

Many people knew that back then, a mysterious expert with a black panther companion had protected Keane and Jenne on their journey to Cerre, allowing Keane to assume the position of city governor.

This wasn't a secret. It wouldn't be strange at all for the Radiant Church to find out about this.

"I suspect that the Radiant Church has definitely hidden quite a few people within the prefectural city of Cerre." Linley said calmly.

From the moment he had decided to come to the prefectural city of Cerre, Linley had already made certain plans.

That Stehle had exchanged blows with him before. After that fight, the Radiant Church would certainly have realized how dangerous Linley was to them. If they didn't send people immediately to kill him as soon as possible, then the Radiant Church really would be a pack of fools.

"Then what should we do?" Keane and Jenne were both rather bewildered.

"Jenne, first of all, let me ask you. Do you still want to follow me?" Linley stared at Jenne.

Jenne nodded without any hesitation.

Linley nodded slightly. "I'm afraid that within your castle, the Radiant Church has spies here as well. That's what I want to let you know...that I plan to leave the prefectural city of Cerre tonight."

"What?" Jenne looked at Linley in astonishment. "Big brother Ley, you plan to leave by yourself?"

"Don't worry. I'll just head out slightly before you do. I'll head to the provincial capital of Basil first. I'll take up residence in the eastern side of the city's Nile [Nai'er] Hotel. When the time comes, you can find me there." Linley was very confident in his ability to deal with the Radiant Church's men.

However, he couldn't take Jenne and Keane along with him.

If he brought such a large group of people, he would be as good as harming Jenne and Keane.

"The Nile Hotel of the eastern city. This is a very famous hotel. I know where it is." Keane nodded. Over these five years, he had paid quite a few visits to the provincial capital.

Linley had made these plans long ago.

Right now, whether or not he killed the Radiant Church's forces wasn't important. After all, killing those people didn't make a huge difference to the Radiant Church.

If he encountered them, he would kill them. If he didn't, then forget it.

As for Jenne, by the time they reunited with the five Barker brothers and Zassler, Linley would no longer be concerned about any schemes the Radiant Church might have to play.

"Then I'll leave now." Linley laughed.

"Immediately?" Jenne and Keane were startled.

"Immediately. That way, the Radiant Church's men wouldn't have any idea." Linley chuckled, then transformed into a black blur, flying through the air and disappearing from the rear gardens.

At the same moment, the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, as well Bebe also departed at high speed.

Three black blurs flashed over the prefectural city of Cerre's twenty meter tall walls, easily crossing over to the other side. Although the city walls were useful against ordinary combatants, to experts on Linley's current level, they were nothing more than a fairly high door stop.

Riding on Haeru's back, the night wind howled past Linley.

"I've discovered that I rather like the feeling of travelling by night."

Feeling the cool wind blow against his face, Linley felt very much refreshed.

The light of the moon seemed to make the world covered by a layer of thin gauze, making everything seem so dreamlike.

This night, there were people riding on horses at high speed heading to other places as well. These were the people who were rushing towards Lyndin to give her the good news. However, there was a distance of over a hundred kilometers from the prefectural city of Cerre to the town Lyndin was staying in.

Linley had only arrived in the prefectural city of Cerre at nightfall. The supervisor for the prefectural city of Cerre only received the news at around 6 o'clock at night. By the time he sent someone out, it was already 7 o'clock.

At around 8 o'clock at night, Linley had left the prefectural city of Cerre.

At this time, that messenger was still on the road. By around 9 o'clock, the messenger finally managed to arrive at the town where Lyndin and the others were staying. The town was lit by fires. The poor man who had been blown on by the cold wind of November finally felt a hint of warmth.

"Lord Lyndin." The messenger man arrived at Lyndin's residence. Seeing Lyndin at the doorway, he immediately jumped off his horse. "Lord Lyndin, something important has happened. We've already discovered that Linley has arrived at the prefectural city of Cerre."

The eyes of Lyndin, who had been standing there coldly, suddenly lit up.

"Linley?" Lyndin was both shocked as well as overjoyed.

She had waited for five full years, to the point of being numb. And then tonight, this report had come out of nowhere.

"Syke [Sai'ke], Syke! All of you, come out." Lyndin's cold voice rang out a few times, and the other five Angels immediately rushed over.

These six Angels were all wearing human bodies, and thus their power was limited to that of a warrior of the ninth rank.

But their essence was still that of the Angels.

They would definitely obey orders. For the sake of the glory of the Lord, they would be willing to sacrifice their lives at any time.

Upon hearing that there was news of Linley's return to the prefectural city of Cerre, the other five Angels grew excited as well. Their mission was to kill Linley.

"Let's go, we head out immediately." Lyndin immediately ordered.

"Yes." The other five didn't hesitate at all.

Lyndin and the others didn't bother about the messenger. The six of them, relying on their legs, immediately began racing towards the direction of the prefectural city of Cerre. As combatants of the ninth rank, without question, the speed they could reach was much faster than that of horses.

The next morning.

Within a very ordinary manor in the prefectural city of Cerre. The previous night, Lyndin and her people had taken up residence here upon reaching the prefectural city of Cerre.

"What? Linley disappeared?" Lyndin stared coldly at the white-robed man in front of her.

The white-robed man immediately said, "Lord Lyndin, the people we stationed within the city governor's castle didn't know either. They only found out this morning that Linley and his two magical beasts disappeared. Most likely, they've left the prefectural city of Cerre.

"Bam!"

Lyndin angrily smashed a fist against the stone desk in front of her, smashing it into tiny pieces. The other five Angels were extremely angry as well.

The six of them had spent over five years here. They had just received word of Linley's arrival, but then in the blink of an eye, he had disappeared again.

The white-robed man was somewhat nervous now. He knew that the six people in front of him were very powerful. Even the Northwest Administrative Province's supervisor had to obey the orders of these six people.

However, the white robed man didn't know that these six were actually angels.

Only in the moments before the deaths, when Lyndin and the others chose to go all out, would their true power as Angels be put on display.

"Investigate. Go investigate. Find out where Linley has gone. Also... activate every resource we have in the entire Northwest Administrative Province. We must find Linley. Linley must be somewhere within the Northwest Administrative Province." Lyndin said in a cold, deadly voice.

"Yes." The white-robed man immediately assented.

They hadn't been able to find Linley for five years. Lyndin had even begun to worry if Linley had perhaps left the O'Brien Empire. After all, given they had found no trace of him, there was no way they could be certain as to where he actually was.

But at least they now knew for sure that Linley was in the Northwest Administrative Province.

Just as Lyndin was feeling furious at her helplessness on the third morning, they received word from the provincial capital of Basil.

“Linley has appeared within the provincial capital of Basil.”

As soon as they received this news, Lyndin’s other colleagues grew excited.

“Lord, shall we head out now?” The five looked at Lyndin expectantly. Lyndin was the captain of their squad. In fact, amongst the Descended Angels, Lyndin could be considered a fairly famous person.

The Angels that would descend into bodies that could only support the ninth rank were almost all Two-Winged Angels. Only three of them were Cherubim, Four-Winged Angels, and of the three, Lyndin was the only female one.

“That McKenzie is in the provincial capital.”

Lyndin frowned. “McKenzie has reached the Saint-level nearly sixty years ago. From our reports, his power can be considered a mid-stage Saint-level. If he were to interfere, things would become complicated.”

“Lord, if we were to go all out, killing McKenzie shouldn’t be too hard.” Another nearby Angel, the one known as Syke, spoke out.

“Right. When going all out, we can allow our bodies to collapse and utilize all of our true power. The five of us are all Two-Winged Angels, while you, Lord, are a Cherub. Although it will only be for a short period of time, it should be enough to kill Linley.

Hearing her subordinates words, Lyndin hesitated.

Indeed. If Angels were to ignore their physical collapse, they could indeed use all of their real power for a short period of time. But most likely, after just two or three attacks, their bodies would have turned to ash.

When a Cherub and five Two-Winged Angels used the Angel Battle Formation and allowed their bodies to collapse from using their full power, even a mid-stage Saint-level combatant might die in their hands.

"No rush." Lyndin said calmly. "Everyone, calm down. Going all out is our last resort. After all, pre-transformation, Linley isn't that impressive. We can instead find an opportunity where Linley is in his human form and directly kill him."

"Lord, then your intention is to..." The five looked at Lyndin.

"That Linley doesn't recognize the six of us." A hint of a cruel smile was on Lyndin's face.

That day, Lyndin's group, led by the white-robed man, rode fine horses out of the prefectural city of Cerre.

"Lord, the military carriage up ahead belongs to the soldiers of the city governor of Cerre." The white-robed man reported in a quiet voice to Lyndin and the others as soon as he saw them.

"Oh? Is it Jenne and Keane?" Lyndin glanced at the distant caravan.

Jenne and Keane's relationship with Linley was something that Lyndin knew quite a bit about.

"Have your subordinates been mixed into their caravan?" Lyndin lowered her voice.

"Yes, Lord." The white-robed man nodded. Smiling, Lyndin said, "That's fine. For now, we don't need to pay them any attention."

Lyndin's group clearly travelled at a much faster pace than Keane and Jenne's group. In the blink of an eye, they passed them by. The reason Keane and Jenne were making this trip out to the prefectural city of Basil was because they needed to attend the annual dinner party.

Lyndin's team and Jenne's caravan were both headed towards the provincial capital of Basil. As for Linley, quite some time ago, he had settled down in the hotel in the east side of the city.

There was a small manor located right off behind the hotel. Linley was staying there.

"I came to the provincial capital of Basil in such grand fashion. Most likely, the Radiant Church's men recognized me. I wonder who the Radiant Church will send out next time?"

Linley wasn't worried in the slightest. He was actually quite eager.

“I haven’t encountered anyone who could fight me head on yet, or force me to use the ‘Hundred Layered Waves’ level of the ‘Profound Truths of the Earth.’

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 44, Neighbors

The provincial capital of Basil was the base of operations for the ancient Jacques clan, here in the Northwest Administrative Province. Here in the Northwest Administrative Province, the Jacques clan could be considered the local kings. During their annual clan gathering, all of the various branches of the clan would hurry over to the provincial capital.

In the northeast part of the provincial capital, there was an extremely large and ancient castle. This was the headquarters of the Jacques clan.

Yulan calendar, year 10008. November 14th. This was a day when the Jacques clan's castle would always be decorated and brightly lit. The number of guards at the gate were tripled as well, compared to the past. In addition, many branch members of the clan were passing through the gates this day, arriving from all over the world.

"Sis, the clan's castle is much larger than ours, at least ten times larger." Keane peered through his carriage's cloth door while sighing in amazement.

This carriage contained three people. Keane, Irene, and Jenne.

Jenne also stared through the door. Nodding, she said, "The clan clearly has far more experts than us as well. Only, I wonder if Great-Grandfather will be there as well."

The Great-Grandfather which Jenne spoke of was McKenzie.

Each year, at the annual gathering, McKenzie sometimes attended but sometimes did not. However, two years ago, McKenzie did show himself once. That sighting had satisfied Jenne and Keane's desire to see the hero whom everyone in the clan worshipped.

"It is very possible. Irene has never seen Great-Grandfather." Keane held his wife's hands.

The caravan quickly arrived at the castle gates. It came to a halt. Jenne, Keane, and Irene all knew the rules. They got off the carriage.

"Jenne!" A happy, teasing voice rang out.

Immediately upon hearing this voice, Jenne frowned, but then she squeezed out a smile. She turned her head and looked towards a young man with gleaming hair. "Cousin Albert [Ai'bo'te]."

"Cousin Albert." Keane and Irene also said courteously.

Albert looked like someone who was full of himself. Being educated since he was young had given him the airs of an ancient, noble clan, but just by looking at his eyes and his face, anyone could tell that this man was an empty-headed lecher.

But Albert was the eldest son of the current clan leader of the Jacques clan, and was the successor to the position as well.

The future clan leader of the Jacques clan. Who would dare look down at Albert, given his status?

"Jenne, you are growing more beautiful by the year. Keane, Irene, don't just stand there like idiots, come in." Albert warmly escorted Jenne and the others into the castle.

Because the family gathering was on November 15th, quite a few people arrived on the 14th. The night of the 14th, the castle of the Jacques clan was extremely lively.

"Big sis, feeling frustrated over Albert again?"

Keane walked into Jenne's room. Seeing Jenne standing at the window and sighing, he immediately could guess at what Jenne was thinking about.

Jenne turned her head to glance at her younger brother. Frowning, she said, "That Albert doesn't have any good intentions. Each time at our clan gathering, he'll come bother me. These days never pass by easily."

"Sis." Keane took his sister by the hand. Apologetically, he said, "I know that the only reason you didn't go with big brother Ley was because you wanted to spend a few more days with me."

"Keane." Jenne affectionately patted Keane on the head. "Keane, you are even taller than me now."

Keane lowered his head silently.

Jenne had taken care of Keane since they were young. Ever since they had arrived in the Holy Union, their mother had been severely ill, and so Jenne had taken care of Keane like a mother would have.

The affection between these two siblings was very deep.

"Jenne, Cousin Jenne." Albert's voice rang out again.

Jenne and Keane both frowned, no trace of enjoyment on their faces now. This Albert really was as annoying and stifling as a boa constrictor.

In the blink of an eye, Albert had arrived at the doorway.

"Jenne. Oh, Keane, you are here also." Albert beamed. "Jenne, we're organizing a small banquet in the main hall. Jenne, let's go together. I've arranged for some people to prepare several beautiful evening gowns for you."

Jenne shook her head. "No need. I'm feeling a bit dizzy and am a bit unwell."

"Why would you be feeling unwell? Let me take a look." Albert actually stepped forward, intending to touch Jenne by her forehead. Jenne immediately took two steps back.

Keane snickered from the side, "Cousin Albert, my sister isn't feeling well. Let her have a good rest."

Albert stood there for a moment, then laughed and nodded. "Fine." He then stared at Keane. "Keane, come with me for a moment. Cousin Jenne, have a good rest. If there is anything you need, just let the servants know." He gave Keane a meaningful look.

Keane nodded, then followed Albert out.

Within the flower garden.

Albert and Keane were walking together. Albert was silent, and Keane said nothing either.

After a long time...

"Keane, how does it feel to be the governor of a prefectural city?" Albert suddenly asked.

Keane was startled. Slowly, he said, "Pretty good."

Albert laughed and nodded. "Of course it's good. You govern millions of people, Keane. You must understand that the entire Northwest Administrative Province has only ten prefectural cities. Positions like the city governorship are highly sought after, and many people keep their eyes on those positions. After all, our Jacques clan is a large clan."

As though he understood something, Keane nodded.

The Jacques clan was continuously starting new branches. Naturally, each generation was more numerous than the last. In the past, the reason why Keane's father, Count Wade, had been lucky enough to receive the governorship was because he was on very close terms with the previous clan leader.

In truth, the various city governorships were totally all controlled and decided upon by the clan leader of the Jacques clan.

After all, the Jacques clan had sole authority over the management of the Northwest Administrative Province.

"Keane, you should know that many of my younger siblings have grown up now, such as my own third brother. Right now, he's only a major in the army. Many of these people would very much like to become the governor of a prefectural city." Albert looked at Keane with an expression that both was and wasn't a smile.

Keane knew what Albert was hinting at.

"And not just my siblings. My uncles as well. In the past, they weren't able to overcome your father, but they've never given up."

Albert looked at Keane. "Keane, I have a very good impression of you. But you must understand that to get something, you have to give something."

Keane was silent.

"Keane, you have taken the city governorship, yes, but I, the future clan leader, can make you lose it as well." Albert saw that Keane was silent, and began to speak more coldly.

"Cousin Albert, go ahead and state your desires." Keane forced a smile to his face.

Albert laughed. "Haha, you are my cousin. Of course I won't force you to do anything. I just hope that we can further deepen our relationship. For example, you can have your big sister marry me. What do you think?"

Keane was filled with rage.

He knew Albert's intentions long ago. Such a gentle, beautiful, virtuous woman such as Jenne, especially after beginning to train in water-style magic, was a very mesmerizing, refined lady.

Albert had been lusting after her this entire time.

But Albert was already thirty years old and had three wives. If Keane's sister were to marry him, she would be nothing more than a concubine.

What's more, his sister was going to follow Linley.

"Cousin Albert, I've told you in the past that my sister already has someone she likes." Keane said helplessly.

"What a joke." Albert sneered. "Keane, if your sister has someone she likes, why hasn't she gotten married yet? And even if she likes someone, we can just go ahead and kill him.”

Albert had desired Jenne for quite some time now. Not only was she beautiful, she was a magus. After a person trained in magic, their longevity would be extended. Most likely, even when she was sixty or seventy, Jenne would look like a thirty year old lady. Albert naturally desired a wife like this.

“You can’t kill him. The person my sister likes is an expert of the ninth rank.” Keane made up his mind.

“A combatant of the ninth rank?” Albert frowned.

This was troublesome. If he were the current clan leader, he could use the powerful soldiers of the clan to go kill that expert of the ninth rank. But he was only a successor. The people at his disposal were quite limited, and they weren’t very powerful either.

“Keane, you’d best not be lying to me.” Albert stared coldly at Keane.

Keane bowed slightly. “Cousin Albert, I’m definitely not lying. My sister likes him. There’s nothing I can do about that. Cousin Albert, I won’t disturb you any further. I bid you farewell.”

Albert let out a cold snort, staring at Keane as he left.

“Five years.” Albert stared in the direction of Jenne’s room. “This time, I definitely cannot let Jenne slip away again. So what if he is an expert of the ninth rank? Does he dare come and make trouble for the Jacques clan?" A fierce, wolf-like look was in Albert's eyes.

On the 15th, Linley had headed to the headquarters of the Dawson Conglomerate early in the morning. Using his medallion showing that he was an elder, he sent some people to Cloudpeaks Village to inform Zassler and the others that he was going to be delayed.

And then, Linley quietly stayed in the Nile Hotel.

There were over ten manors behind the Nile Hotel, all of which were tall and well made. Linley was residing in one of them.

Within his courtyard, Linley finished carving a sculpture, and then began to wave his adamantine heavy sword about as he pleased.

Bebe and Haeru both lazily rested on the ground.

After training with the sword for some time, Linley came to a halt, a sudden thought having come to mind. "It has been a year since I reached the peak of the eighth rank. In this past month, I've always had this feeling that I'm about to break through, but for some reason, there's just some tiny piece missing."

To an ordinary person, breaking through from the peak of the eighth rank to the ninth rank wasn't a big deal.

But for Supreme Warriors, the difference between the two was extremely great. Upon entering the ninth rank, Linley in Dragonform would be at the Saint-level.

"I can't be too hasty. My speed of training is already very fast." Linley was still fairly calm. Staring towards the south, Linley once again began to think about his younger brother, Wharton. "When I reach the ninth rank, I'll head towards the imperial capital and meet with my younger brother. It has been a long, long time since I've seen Wharton."

Ever since Wharton had left home when he was six and headed to the O'Brien Empire along with Housekeeper Hiri, the two brothers had never met again.

And now, Wharton was twenty two years old. In another month, he would be twenty three.

"Hrm?" Linley suddenly turned and stared at the courtyard walls.

The various manors operated by the hotel were all quite close to each other, with each plot of land divided into two manors. At this time, in the manor adjoining Linley's, the person who was renting that manor had climbed over the wall and was peeking in this direction.

This guest was an extremely adorable, agile young lady. Her guileless eyes were staring in Linley's direction, but they were locked on the Blackcloud Panther on the ground.

"Wow, what a huge panther." The young lady very agilely hopped over the wall, and then jogged towards Haeru.

"Don't touch him." Linley immediately shouted.

The young lady came to a halt, smiling and laughing at Linley. "Big brother, I've never seen such an adorable, large black panther. Can I please touch him?"

This young lady had a head full of silver hair, and her eyes were very intelligent. She had a playful smile on her face, but she was dressed in the garb of a female warrior.

Linley took a sizing look at this silver-haired girl.

A warrior's power was hard to gauge just by looking at them, but Linley could tell from this girl's aura that she was at least a warrior of the seventh rank, or perhaps even higher.

"Haeru doesn't like being touched by others." Linley said calmly.

The silver-haired girl couldn't help but pout, scrunching her nose up as she frowned. "Hmph, I don't believe you. My teacher's magical beasts often let me touch them." The silver-haired girl ran directly towards Haeru.

"Groooooowl." Haeru suddenly rose to his feet, baring his sharp fangs as he stared coldly at the silver-haired girl.

The silver-haired girl was immediately frightened, and she stumbled back two steps.

"I told you. Haeru doesn't like being touched. Enough, you can go back to your own place now." Linley directly asked her to leave.

The silver-haired girl smiled bewitchingly at Linley. "My master told me that panther-type magical beasts are very formidable. Then big brother, you must be very powerful as well. Can I spar with you?"

"Spar?" Linley disliked his life being interrupted by others.

"Let me introduce myself first. My name is Danlan [Dan'lan]." The silver-haired girl said with an adorable smile.

"You can call me Ley. But I don't have any time for you. You can go back now." Linley still spoke coldly and calmly. For a young girl to be at least a warrior of the seventh rank...she wasn't as simple as she appeared.

The silver-haired girl pouted helplessly. "Oh. Got it." And then she turned and left, although her heart was filled with frustration. "This Linley really is a cold fellow. Getting close to him will be difficult. But I won't give up so easily either. If I can kill him easily, I will."

This silver-haired girl was Lyndin.

But in terms of temperament, Lyndin had changed dramatically. In the past, she was an ice-cold Angel. But now, she had become adorable and lively. One had to admit that her acting skills were formidable.

"Oh, big brother Ley, you are a sculptor?" Lyndin looked at the sculpture Linley had just completed and immediately ran over in excitement.

Staring at it, she said happily, "My teacher also likes sculptures, but he doesn't know how to carve himself." As she spoke, Lyndin carefully inspected the sculpture with great curiosity.

Linley frowned.

This silver-haired girl was really annoying!

This sculpture was one which Linley had just finished not too long ago. Given Linley's current skill, his stonesculpting was at an extremely high level as well. This silver-haired young lady carefully examined the sculpture from every angle.

"Wonderful. Just wonderful."

After inspecting the sculpture with great care for a while, she turned her head to look at Linley. "Big brother Ley, I sense that this sculpture of yours is better than those of my master's, but I don't know exactly how to describe it."

Despite such an adorable girl looking at him like this, Linley only felt irritated.

"Miss Danlan, I need to train." Linley said tactfully.

The silver-haired girl nodded. "Okay, I'll leave right away." As soon as she said these words, Linley let out a sigh of relief. But then the silver-haired girl continued, "However, big brother Ley, after you finish training, you need to teach me how to stone sculpt."

Linley hardened his face. "Stone sculpting is one of the top tier artistic forms. How can I so easily transmit its secrets to others?"

Indeed, most master-level sculptors would not easily accept disciples.

"Oh." The silver-haired girl lowered her head in disappointment, beginning to walk to the nearby wall. And then, with an easy leap, she jumped to the other side.

"She's finally gone." Linley let out a long sigh.

But then, the silver-haired girl's head popped out from over the wall. "Big brother Ley, have a good training session. After you are done, I'll come and find you." After speaking, she disappeared again.

Lyndin returned to her own bedroom. Sitting down on a chair, her face returned to its usual coldness, and her eyes were as icy and merciless as ever. If Linley saw her, he wouldn't be able to believe that someone was able to act so well.

"This Linley is suspicious of everyone, and won't let anyone easily get close to him. This is rather troublesome."

As a Descended Angel, Lyndin actually truly did not wish for her and the other five Angels to die alongside Linley.

However, as an Angel, she could not disobey orders.

One step at a time.

If she could easily kill Linley somehow, wouldn't that be better than sacrificing her life?

“Given the amount of care Linley has shown towards Jenne and Keane, it makes no sense that he would be so suspicious towards me.” Lyndin had come up with this plan after learning about how Linley had treated Jenne and Keane.

As long as Lyndin could get into close physical range with Linley, given her power as a combatant of the ninth rank, she could suddenly ambush him from close range in his human form. She had a 90%+ chance to kill him in that sort of situation.

“Perhaps it was because he sensed my power.” Lyndin shook her head. “This Linley has no sense of curiosity. I mentioned my ‘master’ several times, but he still didn’t ask me who my master is.”

Lyndin actually had prepared an entire chain of lines to fool Linley.

Although Lyndin appeared very young, in reality, her actual age was most likely far greater than that of Doehring Cowart. Only, the ten thousand years she had spent in the divine realm of the Radiant Sovereign hadn’t been as impactful to her as the decades she had spent here.

.....

“From her personality and her attitude, that silver-haired girl seems like an unreasonable little princess.” Linley frowned. “But her power..”

In truth, Linley was continuously wary of the Radiant Church’s forces.

As far as Linley was concerned, the Radiant Church's forces should have already located him here by now. And now, all of a sudden, a young female warrior of the seventh rank appeared? Even if she appeared to be lively and cute, Linley wouldn't easily trust her.

Before he trusted someone, he would take their strength into consideration.

If she had been a weak little girl who didn't have the strength to kill a chicken, Linley's attitude probably would have been much better. After all, even if you gave such a girl a weapon, she wouldn't be able to hurt him at all. But this young lady was different.

If she were to suddenly attack him from a near distance, it would be very possible for her to heavily injure or kill him.

"Could it be that the assassin the Radiant Church has sent after me this time is this young lady?" But thinking back to the innocent, pure look in the silver-haired girl's eyes, Linley found it rather hard to believe.

That night.

The silver-haired girl came again, but this time, she came pushing a hotel food cart from the front gate.

"Big brother Ley, I took the place of the servant in delivering dinner for you." Lyndin's clear voice rang out. Her face was covered with smiles, but Linley, looking at her, only felt a headache coming.

"You again?"

"What, is there a problem?" Lyndin pouted, then giggled, "Big brother Ley, I brought you dinner, so you teach me stone sculpting, okay?"

"No." Linley refused.

"Stingy." Lyndin wrinkled her nose. "When I cook for my teacher, my teacher will do anything I ask him to. You are a stingy fellow."

"Your teacher is your teacher, I am not." Linley simply wouldn't agree.

This stranger was at least of the seventh rank, and perhaps even higher. Linley would not permit this female warrior to draw close to him, while teaching someone how to stone sculpt would definitely require them to be in close physical contact.

After all, this period of time was the period when he was expecting the Radiant Church to act against him.

"Remember. I don't want you delivering my dinner." Linley said coldly.

Lyndin's face changed, and she glared angrily at Linley. "You bastard. You don't know when someone is being good to you. I'll definitely go tell my master. He'll come over here and kill you."

"Kill me?" Linley looked at the angry expression the girl's face.

"Of course. My master is very powerful." The silver-haired girl said arrogantly.

"Who is this oh-so-powerful master of yours?" Linley asked.

The silver-haired girl said arrogantly, "I'll tell you. The name of my master is Haydson [Hei'de'sen]."

"The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson?" Linley was startled.

In the entire O'Brien Empire, if the War God was considered the number one expert, then without question, the second highest expert would be the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson. This Monolithic Sword Saint had been at the peak-stage of the Saint-level for many years now, and he had never lost a single duel against any Saint-level experts.

He was flawless in terms of both offense and defense.

In addition, he was a very cold and remote person. Virtually nothing was capable of impeding his developments. A flawless, perfect Saint-level expert who towered above all others, his very perfect was the reason why others dubbed him the 'Monolithic Sword Saint'.

"So now you know that you should be afraid?" The silver-haired girl laughed arrogantly. "But don't worry. So long as you teach me how to stone sculpt, I won't tell my teacher."

"No wonder." Linley looked at the silver-haired girl. "What rank are you currently at?"

"The eighth rank already." The silver-haired girl said proudly. "What do you think? The entire Empire doesn't have many experts of the eighth rank who are younger than me."

Linley glanced at the silver-haired girl. "Miss Danlan, you can go back and tell your teacher that I am unwilling to teach you stone sculpting. I want to see if he will come over and kill me."

The silver-haired girl started, and then her attitude softened. Begging, she said, "Big brother Ley, I'm begging you, just teach me, okay?" As she spoke, she walked closer to Linley.

Linley directly took three steps back, retreating into his main hall.

"Miss Danlan, I need to rest now. You should go back." Linley shut the door to his manor.

"Hrmph."

The silver-haired girl let out a snort, then left.

The next two days, the silver-haired girl would try all sorts of things; she would buy beautiful clothes to bring to Linley as a gift, or pretend to be very pitiable and just watch Linley. It was as though she absolutely refused to accept the fact that Linley wouldn't teach her how to stone sculpt.

The fourth day.

This morning, Lyndin came to Linley's courtyard once more, as she had every day past.

"Big brother Ley, I'm leaving now." Lyndin said in a somewhat lost voice.

Linley glanced at the silver-haired girl with some surprise. These past three days, Linley had been tormented by this girl to the point of getting a headache whenever he saw her. What's more, Linley was still uncertain as to who this girl really was.

Someone belonging to the Radiant Church?

Or the disciple of the Monolithic Sword Saint?

But the longer he had interacted with Lyndin, the more Linley came to feel that this silver-haired girl really was the playful, active type. He didn't really think she belonged to the Radiant Church.

"If she is an assassin of the Radiant Church, then I am truly in awe of her acting abilities." Linley secretly said to himself.

Lyndin glanced at Linley helplessly. "Big brother Ley, I've always worshipped my master, and my master also likes sculpture. I really wanted to carve a good sculpture for him, but you aren't willing to teach me."

"It is useless if you do not have enough time and not enough talent." Linley shook his head.

Lyndin's eyes lit up. She quickly said, "I have both time and talent."

"Are you an earth-style magus?" Linley suddenly asked.

"No." Lyndin shook her head, then asked questioningly, "What does this have to do with being an earth-style magus?"

Linley shook his head. "If you are not an earth-style magus, that means you do not have the talent necessary to learn stone sculpting from me." Linley was telling the truth. The Straight Chisel School of sculpting required the sculptor to be an earth-style magus.

"You are just making that up." Lyndin took a step forward, pointing at Linley with a finger. "I've never heard anyone say that stone sculpting required one to be an earth-style magus."

"There's many things you don't know." Linley laughed calmly.

Right now, Lyndin was roughly two meters away from Linley. Lyndin was calculating to herself, "Two meters distance. In his normal human form, I am more powerful than Linley. I should have the chance to kill him."

Originally, Lyndin had wanted for the two of them to be in even closer proximity before making her move.

But Linley didn't give her the chance.

"Big brother Ley, I know that you are lying. Big brother Ley, I just want to ask you one last time. Are you willing to teach me stone sculpting?"
Lyndin looked at Linley with hopeful eyes.

Linley shook his head.

"Oh." Lyndin lowered her head despondently.

But right at this moment, Lyndin suddenly charged at Linley, moving as fast as lightning, while from within Lyndin's right hand, a dagger appeared.

Two meters. They were too close.

But then, a strange violet light flashed.

Lyndin only felt as though that violet sword flash flickered everywhere, changing positions constantly. It somehow wrapped around her dagger and her arm as well.

"Hrmph."

"Boom!"

Their two hands clashed against each other, and Lyndin hurriedly charged forward. But Linley moved in a strangely graceful way backwards, in the blink of an eye retreating to the corner of the wall.

"Growl."

Haeru and Bebe were both standing by Linley's side, but before Haeru and the others could attack, Lyndin immediately retreated.

"You want to kill me?" Linley stared coldly at Lyndin.

Raising her head high, Lyndin said angrily, "Ley, listen up. I, Danlan, have never begged anyone in my entire life like I did just now. Even when I'm with my master, I've never acted like this before. Three full days! I tried everything I could to beg you to teach me, but you refuse to do so. So what if I want to kill you now? Is there something wrong about that?"

"Such overbearing logic." Linley looked at Lyndin.

Lyndin stood at the gate to Linley's manor, staring angrily at him. "If you have the ability to do so, come and kill me. My fellow apprentices will be arriving soon. If you dare bully me, I'll go tell them about it!"

Right now, Linley's desire to kill had already been aroused.

Regardless of whether this 'Danlan' girl was really the student of the Monolithic Sword Saint, or if she was not, she definitely had tried to kill him just then.

But Linley had this strange feeling of danger.

He couldn't clearly explain where it was coming from, but this feeling was warning him...do not pursue Danlan. If you do, it will be very dangerous.

"Hrmph, you don't have the guts to kill me, right? Then I'm leaving." Lyndin arrogantly pushed the door to the manor open, then began walking out. Linley didn't chase after her, only mentally sending out an order. "Bebe, go through the underground tunnels and take a look to see what is outside."

Right now, outside Linley's gate.

The other five experts of the ninth rank were all outside the gate. They had taken up their positions long ago, ready to join with Lyndin in the Angel Battle Formation at any time.

When Lyndin walked out of the courtyard, she used her eyes to signal the other five.

Those five quietly followed behind Lyndin, quickly departing.

"Hrmph." Exiting the hotel, Lyndin was very unhappy. "If just then, Linley had chased after me, the six of us could've killed Linley in the blink of an eye. But he kept hiding in his manor, with those two magical beasts beside him. Even if the six of us ran inside, given Linley's speed, he definitely would be able to flee.

Lyndin knew very well that killing Linley within the provincial capital was not a wise decision. After all, McKenzie was living in that nearby castle. Given McKenzie's speed, he could probably fly over here in the blink of an eye.

"Lord, what should we do?" The other five were looking at Lyndin.

"Execute the next strategy." Lyndin said coldly. "As for killing Linley in a suicide attack, that is an option of last resort, to be used only if we have no other choices." The other five nodded.

Even Angels wouldn't be willing to throw away their lives too easily.

"Hrm?" Lyndin suddenly saw a man and a woman being escorted by quite a few guards. Lyndin had seen pictures of Jenne and Keane before. "I hadn't gone to find them yet, but they actually delivered themselves to me?" Lyndin's lips began to curve up in a smile.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 46, A Change of Plans

Within the courtyard.

“Boss, just now, when I dug my way through the tunnels and went outside, I saw that five men left alongside that Danlan chick.” Bebe’s eyes were shining with an angry light. “That bad woman! She definitely had ill intentions.”

Linley laughed calmly. “No need to over-think things. That woman was almost certainly someone the Radiant Church sent to kill me. Just now, if I had chased out after her, most likely as soon as I stepped out of the gate, the people lying in ambush outside would’ve attacked at the same time and killed me. If she hadn’t already made up her mind to kill me long ago, why would she have arranged for people to lie in ambush? What’s more, I couldn’t sense those people at all.”

He hadn’t been able to detect the presences of those five men hiding outside. These five men were definitely experts, experts that were no weaker than he himself.

“Master, what should we do, then?” Haeru mentally transmitted.

With a thought, Linley summoned his adamantine heavy sword to his hands. “What should we do? We don’t need to mind them. When Jenne returns, I’ll immediately take her away from here. If they follow, I’ll kill them.”

As long as he wasn't ambushed, after transforming into his Dragonform, with the adamantine heavy sword in hand, Linley was confident of dealing with even an early-stage Saint-level expert.

A short while later.

"Big brother Ley." That familiar voice rang out.

"Enter." Linley laughed as he stood up, casually pulling the gate open. Jenne and Keane walked in.

Keane looked at Linley, sighing. "Big brother Ley, my sis almost got taken advantage of this time. Fortunately I was cautious and arranged people to surround and guard her room."

"Taken advantage of?" Linley looked at Jenne.

Jenne shook her head and laughed. "It's nothing. It's just that Albert, the first successor to the clan leader position. Tonight, he was planning to secretly enter my room. Fortunately, my little bro had taken some precautionary measures. That Albert was afraid of this situation getting out of hand as well. After all, there were many people inside the castle."

"That Albert has always had bad intentions towards you. I don't dare to be caught off-guard. Even if I stop being the city governor, so what? No matter what, I won't allow you to be taken advantage of by that bastard, sis." Keane said solemnly.

Somewhat moved, Jenne looked at her little brother.

Linley looked at Keane with praise in his eyes as well.

"Sis, in the future, when you are following big brother Ley, you have to take good care of yourself." Keane's eyes were starting to turn red. "But as long as you are with big brother Ley, I'm not too worried about you."

Lyndin was standing not too far away from the hotel, and had watched as Jenne and her younger brother had entered.

"Let's sit down nearby and take a rest for now." Lyndin pointed at the first floor of the hotel. "But while resting, we have to keep an eye on things outside. When Jenne and Keane head out, we'll immediately follow them."

The other five all nodded, and they followed Lyndin into the hotel.

But after one or two minutes, Albert brought around ten or so people into the hotel.

"Is this the place?" Albert asked one of his subordinates.

"Yes, young master. Miss Jenne entered this hotel." Hearing this, Albert nodded. "Go investigate for me and find out who the bastard is that Jenne likes."

As he spoke, Albert rubbed the wound on his face.

Last night, he really did cut quite the sorry figure.

He knew that Jenne was a magus of the third rank, but he himself was a warrior of the fourth rank. He was planning to slip in while she was asleep and re her. That shouldn't have been too hard. So, late at night, he stealthily crept towards Jenne's room.

But who would've expected that Jenne's room had a female guard in it, and not just Jenne.

What's more, there were guards hidden outside the room as well.

He, the stately successor to the clan leader position of the Jacques clan, was soundly thrashed by that female guard. Fortunately, Jenne and the female guard knew who he was and so had not dared to kill him. At the time, Jenne had also told him to give up, because in the future, she was going to travel to the ends of the earth by the side of the man she loved.

"Could it be that she is going to go by the side of this mysterious warrior of the ninth rank and travel the world with him?" Albert's heart was filled with suppressed rage.

"Let's sit here for a while. We'll have some food and wait." Albert shouted.

Albert led his group of men into the Nile Hotel as well, into the main floor. But as soon as the fuming Albert entered the hotel, his eyes immediately lit up as he saw who was inside.

Albert stared fixedly at Lyndin.

"This beauty is as lovely as an angel." Albert sighed to himself.

Albert was quite choosy. He was already bored with ordinary beautiful girls. But Lyndin truly was astonishingly beautiful. Not only were her facial features exquisite, she also had that cold, holy aura about her.

Lyndin, no longer putting on an act, had totally returned to her usual temperament.

The holier and purer a woman seemed, the more Albert desired her. Albert felt extremely satisfied when he had a holy and pure woman beneath his thighs.

"Pretty lady, your humble servant is named Albert Jacques. Very happy to meet you." Albert walked over, saying modestly.

Lyndin glanced at him, not paying him any attention.

"fk off." One of the golden-haired men next to Lyndin barked.

"You lookin' to die?" The guard behind Albert immediately drew his weapon, staring coldly at the golden-haired man. This time, as he followed Jenne over, Albert had been very careful.

He knew that Jenne's paramour was a warrior of the ninth rank, and thus everyone he brought today was an expert. One of them was a student of his great grandfather, a warrior of the ninth rank.

"Jacques?" Lyndin suddenly turned to look at him. She only now had paid attention to the lineage of the buffoon in front of her.

"Yes." Albert smiled proudly.

One of Albert's servants said arrogantly, "The young master of my clan is the successor to the clan leader position. Your group actually dares to be impolite to the young master?"

The Northwest Administrative Province was the domain of the Jacques clan. Albert was the successor to the clan leader position. Indeed, he had the right to act so overbearingly.

"Albert." A middle-aged man standing behind Albert said softly, "None of those six, including that woman, are weak. It is very likely that they are all warriors of the eighth rank, and perhaps even of the ninth."

Albert was startled.

At this moment, Lyndin rose to her feet, smiling. "Young master Albert, hello. I've come with my five fellow apprentices in search of a man we intend to kill."

"Five fellow apprentices? Who is your master?" The middle-aged man behind Albert asked.

"The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson." Lyndin said.

The reason why Lyndin dared to make wild claims like this was primarily because the Monolithic Sword Saint was a man who liked to roam all about the world. Thus, there were most likely very few people in the entire O'Brien Empire who knew exactly who the apprentices of the Monolithic Sword Saint were.

"The Monolithic Sword Saint?"

Everyone was shocked.

"Young master." A servant of Albert's came running over. "Young master, we have the information. The man whom Miss Jenne came here to meet registered under the name of 'Ley'."

"Ley?" Albert frowned.

"Never heard of him." Albert turned to look at the expert he had brought. "Uncle Slan [Si'lan], are you confident you can deal with him?" The middle-aged man frowned.

But hearing this, Lyndin's heart was suddenly swayed.

"Young master Albert, can it be that you have a grudge against that man named Ley?" Lyndin laughed.

Albert looked at her in surprise. "What of it?"

"My five fellow apprentices and I have come to deal with him." Lyndin smiled.

Albert was immediately excited. He really did hope to develop a closer relationship with this holy, pure beauty, and this was an excellent opportunity.

"Perhaps I will not only kill Ley and acquire Jenne, I will also acquire this beauty in front of me." Albert's heart began to quiver. Lyndin's beauty was not one whit inferior to Jenne's, and in fact she was even superior.

Albert smiled. "That is wonderful. Everyone will work together, then. What is your name?"

"I am called Danlan." Lyndin still used the same false name.

"Beautiful Lady Danlan, your master, Lord Haydson, has previously paid a visit to the Jacques clan before as well. At that time, he had spent a full month together with my great grandfather." Albert said, attempting to draw a closer connection.

"Oh?" Lyndin seemed rather surprised.

"Indeed." Albert then looked at the five men behind Lyndin. "Are your people confident in your ability to deal with Ley?"

"Do you not have faith in the disciples my master taught?" Lyndin said somewhat unhappily. That frown on Lyndin's face when she was unhappy only made her look all the more mesmerizing. Albert could almost feel his heart twitching ferociously.

Just as Albert and Lyndin were chatting, the people keeping tabs on Jenne rushed in from the outside.

"Young master, bad news! That Ley took Miss Jenne with him and actually separated from young master Keane. And they just exited the courtyard. It seems they plan to leave."

Albert immediately jumped to his feet.

Albert, Lyndin, and the others all stared at the outside through the window. Indeed, Jenne was following Linley on the street in a direction heading outside of the city.

As far as Keane, his group was taking a different route. The two even waved farewell to each other.

"She's leaving? Jenne is really leaving with this Ley?"

Lyndin's face changed, and her mind became unsettled.

The strategy she had just came up with had just been ruined by Linley suddenly leaving with Jenne. She didn't expect that Jenne would leave with Linley. After all, Jenne had been with Keane for all these years.

"Jenne is really going to leave with that bastard? It seems the two of them really do plan to wander the world together." Albert fumed. "Men, attend me!"

"Don't be hasty." Lyndin's eyes lit up, and she immediately interrupted him.

Albert looked questioningly at Lyndin. Lyndin, by now, knew that with Linley's departure alongside Jenne, her previous plan was now useless.

But there was another way.

"Albert, send some people to follow them. Once they leave the city, we will ride horses after them. Outside the city... my fellow apprentices and I will kill him." Lyndin said confidently.

Outside the city, most likely McKenzie would only be able to arrive after they had already killed Linley.

"Oh?" Albert was delighted. If he didn't have to personally act, of course he would only be all the happier.

"How about this. After they leave the city, lead a squad of knights after them. Myself and my five fellow apprentices will enter the squad, so Linley doesn't notice us at first. When the time is right..." Lyndin laughed coldly.

When Linley was caught off-guard, the six of them would suddenly erupt from the squad and surround Linley, setting up the Angel Battle Formation.

In a short period of time, they would kill Linley.

Once the Angel Battle Formation was successfully set up, they had a virtually 100% chance of killing Linley. After all, when Angels set up the Angel Battle Formation, even if they didn't go all out, they could still kill early-stage Saint-level experts. Once they did go all out and allow their bodies to collapse, even a middle-stage Saint-level expert might perish.

"No problem." Albert patted his chest and guaranteed.

Lyndin and the other five were all smiles, while Albert was smiling radiantly as well.

Outside the city.

Jenne rode on the back of the black panther, while Linley was walking, as smooth and graceful as the wind. While walking, Linley chatted and laughed with Jenne.

Jenne's face was radiant, filled with the light of true happiness. As long as she could often see Linley and chat with him, Jenne felt that she was already very happy and fortunate.

"Jenne, in a bit, please be careful." Linley suddenly said.

"What?" Jenne was somewhat startled.

Linley said casually, "There's a squad of knights chasing after us." A hint of a murderous intent was in Linley's eyes. This squad most likely had to do with the Radiant Church.

"It is about time to truly test the power of the Hundred Layered Waves anyhow." Linley intentionally continued forward at their current pace, allowing the squad to have the chance to catch up.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 47, The Angel Battle Formation

It was deep into autumn already. The cold autumn wind howled across the land like icy blades as an elite squad of knights galloped forward.

“Faster, faster!”

With Albert dressed in simple armor leading the way, the group quickly galloped forward on the desolate road, with several dozen knights following behind Albert. By Albert’s side, there was a middle-aged man, the one and only expert of the ninth rank under Albert’s command.

As for Lyndin and the other five, they were also wearing ordinary knight’s armor and wearing gray knight’s helmets. Just from appearances, one wouldn’t be able to tell that Lyndin and the others were any different from the rest of the knights.

“Remember.” Lyndin said quietly to the five men with her. “When we catch up to Linley, once Albert gives the order to attack, each of you will split up and follow these knights to surround Linley. With Linley off-guard, we’ll execute the Angel Battle Formation. Remember, no matter what, don’t be too hasty with your attack. You absolutely must await my order.”

“Yes, Lord.”

The five all nodded.

A hint of a smile was on Lyndin's lips. "Giddyup."

The sound of hoof steps continued to ring out, and the squad kicked up clouds of dust in their wake. In the blink of an eye, they had travelled a great distance.

Linley had intentionally lowered his own speed to allow this group of people to catch up. Naturally, after just a short period of time at full gallop, Albert's squad saw Linley's figure.

"He's right ahead." Albert was very happy, and he immediately began to shout, "Faster, faster!"

Those knights began to call out loudly as well, and they prodded their horses to gallop even faster. Within the thunder of their hoof steps, this group of knights quickly neared Linley.

"Remember, hang on to Haeru's neck. Haeru will take you to my place first." Linley instructed softly.

Jenne looked at Linley with concern. "Big brother Ley, what about you?"

"Don't worry. I'll just get rid of this bit of trouble." At the same time, Linley glanced at his Blackcloud Panther, Haeru. Mentally, he ordered, "Haeru, you can go now. Remember, protect Jenne."

"Growl."

Haeru let out an arrogant growl, and then slowly began to speed up before suddenly transforming into a black blur, disappearing far away, without giving Albert's men any chance to stop him.

"Clatter." The group of knights totally blocked Linley's forward path. They didn't block the Blackcloud Panther from leaving, because they couldn't block him. As for Lyndin and the others, they were capable of blocking the panther, but they were happy to see it leave.

After all, their target was Linley!

"Jenne!" Seeing this happen, Albert couldn't help but grow angry.

Turning furiously towards Linley, Albert sneered, "Punk, you had your magical beast take Jenne away? Hrmph, let me tell you, Jenne is mine. As for you...let me send you off to the Netherworld. Haha...everyone, attack!" Albert pointed angrily at Linley.

With the clatter of hoof steps, the dozens of knights immediately surrounded Linley.

Linley just stood there in the middle, not caring in the slightest. Bebe only stood arrogantly on top of Linley's shoulders, using his beady little eyes to stare disdainfully at the knights.

"My Cousin Jenne isn't for the likes of you to touch. You should consider what lowly status you have!" Albert said arrogantly. He had the feeling that everything was now under his control.

Linley only calmly glanced at the surrounding knights.

"I originally wanted to get rid of the Radiant Church's forces. I didn't expect that I would have attracted this group of useless fools." Linley shook his head slowly. But right at that moment...

"Boss." Bebe suddenly stared at the knights. "Danlan is there."

"Danlan?" As though a bucket of cold water had been poured on Linley's head, Linley shivered once. "The Radiant Church's forces are with them?" Linley began to be cautious.

"I can smell her scent." Bebe said confidently. "She thought that by putting on a helmet and some armor, that I, Bebe, wouldn't be able to discover her?"

Linley still didn't call forth any of his weapons.

There was no need to rush to using weapons.

When the weapons suddenly appeared from his interspatial ring at the critical moment, that would catch the opponents off-guard. Linley paid no heed to Albert, who was still arrogantly spouting his nonsense, and instead carefully paid attention to the surrounding knights.

"Charge! Kill him!"

Albert ordered arrogantly.

But just at this moment, a cruel voice rang out as well. "Kill!" Suddenly, six rays of gleaming white light suddenly connected with each other. In terms of appearance, it was exactly the same technique as had been used by the six Special Executors to trap Linley.

That combined formation attack actually was the Angel Battle Formation.

But in terms of power, when actual Angels used this formation, it was far more powerful.

"Swish swish." Those six rays of light, when connecting, pierced through the bodies of several of the knights that were in the way. Three of them died immediately, while eight were heavily injured.

"Aaah!"

One of the knights was pierced through the chest, leaving a small hole behind. This knight immediately toppled off his horse. He screamed twice, then fell silent.

"Haha, it's been almost nine years. The Radiant Church hasn't learned any new tricks." Linley began to laugh loudly.

"What's going on?" Albert was terrified.

The middle-aged man by Albert's side was quite experienced. His face immediately changed, and he shouted, "Quick, leave! Those six are not the disciples of Haydson; they are from the Radiant Church, and they are all experts of the ninth rank. Leave! If you tarry, it'll be too late!"

Albert was useless in most aspects, but his fleeing instinct was top notch.

"Giddyup, giddyup!" Albert no longer cared about killing Linley at this moment, as he hurriedly galloped away alongside that middle-aged man.

Some of the knights were trapped in the midst of that Angel Battle Formation. Terrified, some of them thought to try and flee out, but as soon as they ran into that white light, their bodies turned to ash, as though they had been burnt by an extremely high temperature flame.

"Hrm? It seems to be more powerful than that of those six Special Executors." Linley sighed in praise.

"Flee."

The remaining knights all fled at high speed, while those who did not had all been killed by Lyndin. In the entire desolate landscape, only Linley, Bebe, and Lyndin's squad remained.

"Boom!"

The armor covering Lyndin and her men split apart as they returned to their normal appearances. One woman and five men. Lyndin's group stared very confidently at Linley.

"Linley, aren't you afraid?" Lyndin laughed coldly at Linley.

Linley glanced at Lyndin. "I must admit, your acting abilities are extremely formidable. You were able to successfully play the part of a headstrong young lady. However, you weren't aware that eight years ago, at the city of Hess, I killed six Special Executors who also used this combination attack."

"Crack, ripple..."

As Linley was speaking, those black draconic scales pierced through his clothes, while those cold, gleaming spikes erupted one at a time from his spine, his forehead, his elbows, and his knees. A long draconic tail sprouted from behind him as well.

Linley's eyes had become that cold, remorseless dark gold color.

"Linley, we aren't the same as those six." Lyndin said calmly. "Today, you will definitely die." As she spoke, the density of the light increased once more, seeming to even cover the sky above the area.

Linley's dark golden eyes swept the six of them. In a cold voice, he said, "I have to tell you something. I....really dislike this formation attack."

Linley still remembered that dream-like white glow.

"Grandpa Doebling." Linley could clearly remember the scene when, eight years ago, Grandpa Doebling had sacrificed himself to kill those six Special Executors. From that day forth, Grandpa Doebling had forever vanished from the universe.

"Kill him."

Lyndin ordered coldly.

"Whoosh!" Lyndin's group charged forward towards Linley, and that cage of light began to shrink at high speed. Anything and everything touched by that light was turned into dust.

It was utterly unblockable.

"Radiant Church. Haha..." Linley laughed coldly at the six attackers. Kicking off from the ground, he leapt towards one of the attackers.

"How sad." Lyndin stared coldly at Linley's attempt to resist.

When joined forces, their defense was incredibly high. No one below the Saint-level could harm them at all. They didn't care about Linley's attack at all.

"The first one!"

Linley's voice suddenly rang out like a bolt of thunder, as from his hands, the adamantite heavy sword suddenly appeared. Transforming into a blur, the adamantine heavy sword slashed through the air, smashing against the body of one of the attackers.

"How laughable."

The six of them didn't care at all. That Angel of the ninth rank originally didn't even bother dodging, but the strange thing was, Linley's blow hadn't caused the white light to activate and block it.

Profound Truths of the Earth – Hundred Layered Waves!

Linley's dark golden eyes stared coldly at the man.

This Angel of the ninth rank only felt a very queer sensation, as though giant warhammers were suddenly smashing against his internal organs again and again. His light-style power was totally useless against this sort of attack!

"Boom!" "Boom!" "Boom!"

Those strange attacks continue to reverberate in the Angel's head as well as body.

"Ah!"

The ninth ranked Angel slumped to the ground. The Angel Battle Formation, now lacking a person, had been destroyed, and the white light disappeared. Lyndin and the other four stared at this scene in astonishment. They couldn't believe it.

Linley quirked his lips.

That white light had been light-style energy; in essence, it was the same as battle-qi. But the Profound Truths of the Earth which Linley used was a totally different sort of attack. Whenever it encountered an obstacle, it would transmit through it, with only a bit of reduction in attack power. No obstacle could totally block it.

This so-called combination attack, before the Profound Truths of the Earth, was nothing but a joke.

Linley's full-power attack had disintegrated the internal organs of an Angel of the ninth rank in a single blow. He was dead as dead could be, and his soul vanished from the world.

"You...you killed him?" Lyndin and the other four were stunned.

The Angel Battle Formation had been broken, just like that.

"Formation attacks are useless against me." Linley's remorseless eyes swept them with his gaze. "That's one of you down. Now for the rest of you."

In the Yulan continent, anyone, including Saint-level experts, would die once their bodies were destroyed.

When these Angels who had descended into human bodies fought, even when they went all out, they weren't actually destroying their own bodies. They were just ignoring their bodies' ability to contain their power, in essence overloading them.

This sort of overloading technique would cause the body to slowly break down.

This sort of break down was gradual. Only after, say, thirty seconds, would the body have decayed to the point where the soul could no longer survive in it.

But since Linley reduced the Angel's internal organs into paste with a single blow, even if the Angel wanted to go all out at this point, it was too late.

"Lord?" The other four looked at Lyndin.

A holy light was suddenly shining from Lyndin's face. "Since this mortal has such an unusual attack, we no longer need to worry about our lives. Prepare to return to the embrace of the Lord."

"Yes, Lord."

Their eyes were very cold and calm. Their faces began to shine with holy light as well.

"Swish, swish..." A pair of illusion-like white wings suddenly sprouted from the backs of those four men. In the blink of an eye, those four 'ordinary' men each now were winged, and they flew into the sky.

Four humanoids with wings were flying in the air. Seeing this, Linley was shocked.

"Angels! They are Angels!"

One of the legendary, powerful races had just appeared in front of him. Even the weakest two-Winged Angels were terrifyingly powerful early-stage Saint-level experts.

"Kill." Lyndin issued her order, not wasting any time at all.

This was because the bodies of these four were already beginning to emit blood, which was constantly flowing downwards. Clearly, their bodies were already starting to crumble, and their blood vessels were beginning to collapse. The early-stage Saint-level energy was beyond the capacity of these bodies.

They didn't have much time.

They had to kill Linley as quickly as possible.

"Whoosh!" With a flap of their radiant wings, the four Angels transformed into four white blurs as they charged towards Linley.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 48, The Four-Winged Angel

Tonight, the moon was in the sky. The moon was very bright, covering the wilderness with its desolate glow.

And in this desolate wilderness, four white Angels were gliding down through the air coldly, like an illusionary mirage, drawing ever closer to Linley.

“What incredible speed.” Linley was surprised.

Right now, Linley’s offense was powerful, but his defense was weak. His offense was powerful enough to kill an early-stage Saint-level combatant. But his defense was poor; although he could take blows below the Saint-level of power, he still couldn’t take blows from early-stage Saint-level combatants.

“Hrmph.” Linley launched himself off the ground. With the aid of the Supersonic spell, Linley very agilely began to dodge. In terms of speed, however, Linley was still slightly slower than these four Angels.

“Shkreeeee!”

With an ear-piercing screech, a black blur suddenly appeared, moving even faster than those four Angels, colliding against the Angel nearest Linley.

"Die." That Angel coldly smashed his fist against the black blur.

"Bam!" The fist, glowing with holy light, smashed viciously against the black blur. The black blur was knocked to the floor, but with a ricochet from the ground, it quickly charged up again.

"Swish!" Two fierce claws extended out, swiping viciously against the Angel.

One claw smashed against the Angel's fist, while the other struck the Angel's body. The Angel's body was already at the point of collapse; struck by such a vicious claw, the body actually trembled, a layer of muscle being ripped open and blood pouring out.

"Bam!" Circling around once, the black blur smashed viciously against the Angel a second time.

This strike only hastened the collapse of the Angel's body.

With a "boom" sound, the Angel's body directly disintegrated. The white wings disappeared. Just like that, a Two-Winged Angel had died in battle.

Lyndin, who was watching the battle from behind, stared in astonishment at the black blur.

She could tell that the black blur was Linley's pet, that adorable Shadowmouse. But by now, the Shadowmouse was already a meter long, no longer just that twenty-centimeter long, hand-sized critter. And the black Shadowmouse was astonishingly fast...even faster than Two-Winged Angels.

Bebe was simply too astonishing.

"Six years ago, in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Bebe was roughly on par with Haeru in their battle. Six years later, Haeru hasn't improved at all. He's at his limit. But Bebe has continued to grow these six years...in terms of speed, Bebe is now far faster than Haeru. As for defense...perhaps even Barker, a Saint-level Undying Warrior when transformed, doesn't have much higher defense than Bebe." Linley knew exactly how formidable Bebe was.

Right now Bebe's speed was simply too high.

Every day, Linley was absorbed in his bitter training. Bebe did nothing but eat, sleep, sleep, eat. And yet, the pace of his strength growth was faster than Linley's.

One could tell how powerful Bebe had become just from looking at his transformation. From half a meter in the past to 1 meter long now.

"Squeeeeeek." Bebe let out an excited cry, while mentally transmitting, "Boss, let me handle these Two-Winged Angels. Their attacks can't hurt me at all."

Linley was speechless.

Two-Winged Angels, early-stage Saint rank. Couldn't harm Bebe.

What sort of freakishly powerful magical beast was Bebe?!

The other three Two-Winged Angels, seeing how this black blur's lightning-fast claws had destroyed one of their comrades with two swipes, couldn't help but be filled with both shock and fury.

Not giving them the time to react, Bebe immediately charged towards another one of them.

"Ignore him. Kill Linley." Lyndin's cold voice rang out.

The three Angels paid no more attention to that terrifying black blur, charging towards Linley. But although they paid Bebe no heed, Bebe himself wouldn't let them off.

After all, Bebe was slightly faster than them.

"Whoosh." A black blur flashed by, with Bebe arriving next to one of the Angels.

Linley had run far away, as he was not confident in his ability to deal with the group attack of the Angels. Only in single combat was he confident of success. After all, Linley wasn't like Bebe, with his freakishly tough defense.

"Slash!"

Bebe opened his maw wide, chomping towards one of the Angels.

"Bam!" The Two-Winged Angel slammed his fists against Bebe, but Bebe actually wrapped his twin claws around the Angel's right fist, and then bit at it.

"Crunch!"

The right hand was bitten off.

Resisting the pain, the Two-Winged Angel smashed his left fist against the black Shadowmouse angrily. This attack carried with it virtually all of the power available to the Two-Winged Angel, and his left hand shone like the sun.

"Baaaam!" The left hand smashed against the black Shadowmouse, but at the same time, the black Shadowmouse thrust its claws fiercely against the Two-Winged Angel's chest.

Skin and flesh ripped open. Blood sprayed everywhere.

Bebe was smashed to the ground, but the Two-Winged Angel's body trembled. The vessels in its body totally collapsed, and even its heart had imploded, unable to sustain that amount of power any longer. As blood leaked everywhere, the Two-Winged Angel collapsed from the skies.

Yet another Angel had fallen.

"Boss." Bebe was looking anxiously at Linley.

"Bam!"

Linley was sent flying by a fist, but the Two-Winged Angel's body shuddered, and then crumbled, falling from the skies. The last remaining Two-Winged Angel immediately chased after Linley.

"Boss!" Bebe's speed reached its limit. With Linley constantly dodging as well, Bebe managed to interpose himself between Linley and the Angel, just before the Angel would have struck Linley again.

Bebe stared angrily at the Two-Winged Angel.

"Boss, you okay?" Bebe mentally transmitted.

"I'm fine. But if I took more of those blows, I wouldn't be able to take it." Linley wiped the blood away from the corner of his lips. Part of the scales around his chest were smashed apart, with blood leaking out from behind them.

Linley couldn't help but be frightened.

Just then, the two Angels had pincer-attacked him. Linley was slightly slower than them to begin with. In the end, his only option was to block one attack with his own, while accepting the second blow.

"Still not fast enough. If I could match Bebe in terms of speed and defense, I wouldn't have cut such a sorry state." Linley sighed to himself.

Six years ago, Bebe was roughly as fast as he was, while Bebe's defense was a level higher.

But six years later, Bebe's speed was nearly double his own. In terms of defense, Bebe's was multiple levels higher now. The most irritating thing was, Bebe remained at the ninth level. He had not reached the Saint-level.

No wonder the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, had submitted to him.

Haeru was a proud magical beast of the ninth rank with extremely high natural talent, but compared to Bebe, his so-called talent was far weaker.

Using his astonishing defense and speed, Bebe dealt with the final Two-Winged Angel. In the blink of an eye, the four Angels had all died. Their leader, Lyndin, remained in her human form, watching from afar.

"Boss, are Two-Winged Angels of the early-stage Saint-level? Why did I feel that they weren't that powerful?" Landing on the ground, Bebe mentally spoke to Linley.

Linley chuckled, casting a glance at Lyndin.

"Bebe, didn't you notice that after they utilized their Angelic power, blood began to flow from their bodies? Clearly, their bodies couldn't withstand that level of power. They weren't truly early-stage Saint-levels; although they had the power, their bodies were still as weak as before." Linley had immediately seen the truth of the matter.

Those bodies had been at the breaking point already. A few good blows to those bodies would cause them to totally collapse.

"What a powerful magical beast."

Staring at Bebe, Lyndin said with surprise, "Linley, I only heard that you had a Shadowmouse, but it seems he isn't a Shadowmouse. He seems more like the legendary ruler of the rat race...."

"What's that?" Linley looked at Lyndin.

Linley had always been curious as to exactly what sort of magical beast Bebe was.

"The type of magical beast with the greatest defense and the highest speed...could he really be that type?" Lyndin had lived in the realm of the Radiant Sovereign for many years. As a Four-Winged Angel, she had seen many things.

There were quite a few magical beasts that would reach the Saint-level upon becoming an adult.

But even amongst those, there were still a few extremely rare and outstanding types of magical beasts. This was the first time Lyndin had seen any of the legendary rulers of the rat race.

"Boss, what's this woman saying?" Bebe looked doubtfully at Linley.

"She's saying you are a ruler amongst the rats." Linley chuckled.

Even the likes of Doehring Cowart and the Holy Emperor didn't know what kind of magical beast Bebe was, but it seemed as though this Lyndin had a bit of a clue. Only, from the sound of it, Lyndin was just guessing, and wasn't certain.

"Linley, you should feel proud."

Just now, Lyndin had only been briefly surprised by Bebe's performance. Now, she had totally calmed down again. "For the sake of killing you, a Cherub, a Four-Winged Angel, is about to die alongside you."

Lyndin's entire body began to shine with white light, and then four white wings sprouted forth from Lyndin's back, stretching and spreading out as Lyndin took to the skies.

A Cherub!

"Not good." The look on Linley's face changed. The more wings an Angel had, the more powerful they were, and as the number of wings increased, the power increased at a rapid geometrical rate.

"Boss, let me go!"

Bebe excitedly let out a sharp screech, then transformed into a blur as he charged towards the Cherub.

Lyndin smiled coldly. Her four wings fluttered slightly, and she suddenly transformed into a white blur. Her astonishing speed was actually not one whit inferior to that of Bebe's.

"Boom!"

Lyndin's fist, clad in holy light and appearing like white jade, smashed against Bebe. This time, Bebe was smashed down, flying into the ground like a meteor and even creating a deep crater in the ground. Bebe's body had been smashed deep into the earth.

"Bebe." Linley was shocked.

Linley had guessed at how powerful this Cherub was, but he didn't expect the Cherub to be so terrifyingly strong.

"Bo-, Boss, I'm fine." Bebe's weak voice rang out in Linley's mind. Linley could guess at how heavily injured Bebe currently was.

The power of a Cherub was far greater than that of a Two-Winged Angel.

"Linley. It is your turn." Lyndin's body was already beginning to be covered with blood, but Lyndin didn't care about her collapsing body at all.

Lyndin knew that she had, at the very least, ten seconds of life left.

These ten seconds were more than enough for her to kill Linley.

Those four white wings of light fluttered slightly, and then Lyndin transformed into a white blur. Linley couldn't see her clearly, as she appeared almost like a mirage, suddenly appearing in front of him.

The only thing Linley could see were Lyndin's cold, remorseless eyes, now silver in color.

"Time to go all out!"

"Ah!!!"

Linley launched himself off the ground, rapidly retreating while at the same time, the Bloodviolet Godsword appeared in his hand. He immediately activated that terrifying baleful aura hidden within Bloodviolet.

This terrifyingly baleful aura had influenced even the peak-stage Saint-level expert, Stehle, much less Lyndin.

Trembling slightly, that strange bloody light covered and began to flow on the surface of Bloodviolet.

That baleful aura entered Lyndin's mind, attacking her soul.

"This..." A hint of fear suddenly appeared in Lyndin's cold eyes. She only sensed that she seemed to have returned to that time when she was with the army of Angels engaging in warfare in other planes, and had suddenly encountered within the depths that terrifying demon. She still remembered how that demon had easily butchered so many of the Angels. An entire army of hundreds of thousands of Angels had been butchered.

That full-power punch of hers, under the influence of Bloodviolet, began to grow weaker.

At the same time as he activated Bloodviolet, Linley fiercely swung his adamantine heavy sword forward, chopping mercilessly against Lyndin's body.

Profound Truths of the Earth – Hundred Layered Waves.

"Boom!" Linley was struck by Lyndin's fist as well, which had been reduced to roughly half-power. His black scales immediately split apart, and Linley's chest caved in as a large volume of blood poured out of Linley's mouth.

Like a ripped sandbag, Linley smashed against the ground, kicking up a huge cloud of dust.

Lyndin stood there disbelievingly.

"How could he possess such a terrifying baleful aura?" And then, Lyndin suddenly felt herself bound by the Laws of the universe. Her soul, not resisting in the slightest, was drawn forth by the Laws, disappearing from the plane of the Yulan continent.

As for Lyndin's corpse, it gently slumped down, fresh blood leaking from her mouth and nose.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 49, Saint-Level Dragonblood Warrior

The cold wind continued to blow.

The desolate wilderness had finally returned to its former calm. But compared to earlier, atop the wild plains, there were a number of corpses as well as pools of blood. The aftermath of the battle was easily visible. The ground was cracked open in many places, and there was that giant crater, with that deep hole in the center of it. At this moment, a black Shadowmouse slowly, wearily crawled out of that deep hole.

“Boss.” Bebe’s body was stained red, blood matting his fur.

Bebe was staring forward in concern. He saw that Linley was lying there, not moving at all. Although the Cherub, thanks to the influence of the Bloodviolet sword’s baleful aura, had seen its attack weakened, the force of its blow was still several times greater than that of the Two-Winged Angels.

Bebe scurried forward, arriving next to Linley.

“Boss, you okay?” Bebe mentally transmitted. Bebe was very worried. Right now, Linley’s chest had an astonishingly deep indentation, with over half of the scales on his chest shattered and fallen. Fresh blood had dyed Linley’s chest totally red, and Linley’s face was very pale. His eyes were closed.

Slowly, Linley opened his eyes, looking at Bebe.

"I'm fine. Bebe. Don't move my body." Linley's voice rang out in Bebe's mind.

Bebe nodded obediently, settling into a curl near Linley's body.

"This time, I was wounded very badly." Linley felt that his chest was wracking him with severe pain with each breath he took. Linley's only option was to urge the Dragonblood battle-qi in his vessels to help repair some of the damage he had taken, in accordance with the method prescribed in the 'Secret Dragonblood Manual'. As a Supreme Warrior, his recuperative abilities were quite formidable.

But this time, the injury really was very severe.

The Dragonblood battle-qi slowly flowed through each part of his body, as the unique energy of the Dragonblood in his veins slowly seeped into his blood vessels and heart. As for his chest, which had suffered the majority of the damage this time, after it drew some of the special energy from his Dragonblood, Linley could feel it slowly begin to recover. With each breath, Linley could feel his chest slowly changing.

"In terms of regenerative speed, amongst the Four Supreme Warriors, the Dragonblood Warriors should be inferior to the Violetflame Warriors and the Undying Warriors." In a time like this, this thought suddenly crossed Linley's mind.

The Violetflame Warriors possessed incredibly strong regenerative abilities, and even had that freakishly powerful Nirvana Rebirth ability.

Unless their bodies were entirely destroyed, given enough time, a Violetflame Warrior would be able to recover to their peak condition.

"Huff." "Puff."

The sound of Linley's breathing grew louder and louder, as his damaged chest continued to recuperate. At the same time, the black scales covering Linley's body retracted, as did his spikes and his tail. In the blink of an eye, Linley returned to his normal human form. But despite now being in human form, Linley's body was still covered in blood, and the injury to his chest was as severe as ever.

As time passed, the night began to deepen.

The cold wind blew drearily. The light of the moon was totally blocked by the clouds. But Linley and Bebe paid no heed to the weather at all.

"Boss, doing better?" Bebe's beady little eyes stared unwaveringly at Linley.

"My internal injuries are more or less fixed. Only, three of my ribs are broken. Fortunately, they didn't pierce into any other vital regions." Linley revealed a smile towards Bebe. "However, it will take at least ten days or half a month for broken ribs to recover." Normal people would need several months to heal a broken rib. Linley was only able to make this claim because of his confidence in his lineage as a Dragonblood Warrior.

Bebe nodded.

“But if I were able to find a light-style or a water-style magus, I should be able to recover even more quickly.” Linley knew that certain types of magical healing could be extremely powerful.

When Linley had been imprisoned within the Radiant Temple, virtually every single bone in his body had been broken. But when he had been bathed in that holy light of the Radiant Sovereign, his body completely healed in the blink of an eye, and was restored to peak condition. This sort of astonishing recuperative ability was very formidable.

Linley continued to generate his Dragonblood battle-qi.

The Dragonblood battle-qi absorbed the elemental essence from nature, and it also absorbed the unique Dragonblood lineage in Linley's veins. As it gradually strengthened, it nourished every part of Linley's body. Linley's internal injuries were now almost completely healed. The only tricky part remaining was his shattered ribs.

“Hrm?”

Linley's eyebrows shot up, and he felt a hint of delight.

The Dragonblood battle-qi circulating throughout his body suddenly began to tremble, and the liquefied Dragonblood battle-qi in his dantian suddenly roiled about like the waves of the sea. Linley immediately guided all of the Dragonblood battle-qi in his veins into his lower dantian. Very soon...the density of Dragonblood battle-qi in his lower dantian reached its maximum peak.

"Rumble..."

A radiant smile blossomed on Linley's face as he sensed the Dragonblood battle-qi in his dantian begin to transform.

Every single shred of battle-qi was changing. Changing in quality and nature.

"I'm finally beginning to break through." Linley calmly waited. At first, only a small amount of Dragonblood battle-qi had been transformed, but as time went on, more and more transformed, and at a faster and faster rate. At the end, in the space of time it would take a person to breathe ten times, the remaining half of the battle-qi all transformed successfully.

"Haha..."

Linley rose to his feet, dispersing the totally transformed Dragonblood battle-qi in his veins to every part of his body. Some of it was sent to his shattered ribs, assisting them to recover more rapidly.

"Boss?" Bebe looked at Linley with curiosity.

Linley hugged Bebe, lifting him into the air. Laughing, he said, "I'm fine. Let's prepare to go home."

At this time, Linley was extremely happy. Ever since he had reached the peak of the eighth rank, he had been waiting for this day. Although in the past month, Linley had the feeling that he could break through at any moment, that moment somehow just wouldn't come. But now, while he had been healing his injuries, he had suddenly broken through.

The ninth rank!

From this day forward, Linley was a warrior of the ninth rank...but that was just his nominal level of power. In reality, after Dragonforming, Linley was already an early-stage Saint-level combatant. In terms of defense, speed, or power, he had dramatically grown.

"If I were to encounter that Four-Winged Angel again, just by using the adamantine heavy sword, I would be able to dispose of her." Linley was very excited.

The Saint-level!

That was a brand new level of existence. Even the mighty Dawson Conglomerate desperately desired to have a Saint-level warrior amongst their ranks. The mighty Jacques clan was mighty, precisely because they had a single Saint-level combatant. This was their pride and the source of their arrogance. This was why they had the confidence and the ability to administer the O'Brien Empire's Northwest Administrative Province in perpetuity.

An expert of the Saint-level.

Before a Saint-level combatant, even the Grand Dukes and Kings who administered and ruled over populations of millions or tens of millions meant nothing at all.

Before a Saint-level combatant, even an ancient clan that had existed for thousands of years would have to lower their noble heads.

Even the Radiant Church, the Cult of Shadows, and the Four Great Empires would deeply desire to pull Saint-level combatants into their orbit!

In the entire Yulan continent, aside from those three humans who stood at the peak of the world (the High Priest, the War God, and the King of Killers), or the two deity-level Kings of magical beasts, Saint-level combatants were the cream of the crop. Upon entering the Saint-level, one would immediately possess an unlimited life. The King of Killers, Cesar, had lived for five thousand years as a Saint-level, had he not?

"The Saint-level!"

Linley raised his head to the sky.

Suddenly, flakes of snow began to drift down from the heavens, melting when they touched Linley's face.

"I still remember those two Saint-level experts doing battle in Wushan township when I was a child. At that time, Saint-level combatants were unfathomably high entities, far beyond the likes of me. Even that magus of the eighth rank who rode on a Velocidragon was an expert. But now?" A sense of pride swelled up in Linley's heart.

At last, he had accomplished something.

Most likely, if the current Linley were to encounter the Stellar Sword Saint, Dillon, he would be able to defeat him.

"Ancestors of the Baruch clan, keep watching me. I will restore the fame and the legend of the Dragonblood Warriors, and spread it across the continent." Linley felt a sense of absolute self-confidence.

Linley was only twenty six years old, this year. But upon Dragonforming, he was a Saint-level warrior.

"There will come a day when I reach an even higher peak of power." A hint of a smile was on Linley's face.

Linley knew exactly how powerful he was. Although he was only an early-stage Saint-level after Dragonforming, the hardest part of advancing from the early-stage to the peak-stage of the Saint-level was not in accumulating battle-qi. Rather, it was in gaining a deeper level of understanding and insight regarding the world. But Linley's level of understanding was already at that of a peak-stage Saint-level.

In truth, sometimes two people who had the same amount of battle-qi and similarly deep levels of understanding would still have major differences in their power.

This was because different people would walk different paths to wisdom, even if they were in the same realm.

For example, another combatant might also be training in the Laws of the Earth, but after the 'impose' level, he might have taken a totally different route. After all, the Laws of the Earth were as boundless and infinite as the oceans, and there were many paths one could take in understanding them. Different paths would result in different results. Linley's path was akin to the throbbing pulse of the earth itself, using those strange vibrational attacks. It was totally different to the usual types of force and power based attacks used within the Yulan continent.

Just as Linley was preparing to head back to the Cloudpeaks Village, suddenly...

"Linley, right?" A voice rang out from not too far behind him.

Linley's heart jumped in fright. He hadn't noticed that there was someone nearby. He immediately turned his head to look, only to see a black-robed, skinny old man with a few flecks of white in his hair, standing in mid-air. The old man was staring down at Linley from mid-air.

Linley immediately understood. "McKenzie?"

"Right." This person was indeed McKenzie.

Linley had just suffered a serious wound, and had been focusing on healing himself. He had totally forgotten that this major battle he had just fought against those six Angels definitely would not escape the attention of the nearby Saint-level combatant, McKenzie, who was residing in the provincial capital.

Linley carefully looked at McKenzie. McKenzie looked as though he were in his early fifties. Although his hair had a few streaks of white, there wasn't a single wrinkle on his face. He stood in mid-air with his waist ramrod straight, with an immovable aura that made Linley feel secretly amazed. This McKenzie was definitely more powerful than that Four-Winged Cherub.

"How long have you been here?" Linley asked.

McKenzie laughed. "Not too long. When I arrived, I managed to witness you and the Four-Winged Cherub exchanging your final blows to each other and injuring each other."

Linley raised an eyebrow.

This McKenzie should have been watching the entire time as Linley had been healing himself. Since he didn't act against Linley when Linley was injured, he probably didn't have any ill intentions towards Linley.

"I am very surprised that you actually managed to kill a Cherub." McKenzie sighed in appreciation. "Although the Four-Winged Angels are only temporarily able to use their full strength, for you to be able to kill one without dying is quite amazing. Dragonblood Warriors...the legendary Dragonblood Warriors really are powerful. Linley, after Dragonforming, you should be at the Saint-level, I believe. Only, given how difficult it was for you to kill a Cherub, you should only be an early-stage Saint-level warrior, right?"

Linley started, not knowing whether he should laugh or cry.

"This McKenzie...jeeze..." Linley was speechless. He thought to himself, "Only after I killed the Four-Winged Angel did I gain the ability to reach the Saint-level in Dragonform. This McKenzie actually thinks that I had already reached the Saint-level when I was fighting with the Cherub."

"What, you haven't reached the Saint-level?" McKenzie said disbelievingly.

Linley smiled. "I admit that after Dragonforming, I am indeed at the early-stage Saint-level."

McKenzie laughed and nodded with satisfaction. "Haha, it's been a long time since I've seen a Saint-level combatant. I really am quite happy to see you today. How about this. Come with me to my residence for a time. That way, the two of us can spar a bit. I'm sure that this will definitely help both of us improve our abilities. Don't worry, I won't go full force; this is just a sparring match."

Seeing that Linley suffered serious injuries while killing a Four-Winged Angel, McKenzie believed Linley was not truly a match for him.

"McKenzie, my Dragonform is indeed at the Saint-level. However..." Linley looked confidently at McKenzie. "I just broke through to that level now, after the battle. When I was fighting against the Cherub, I hadn't broken through yet." Right now, as far as Linley was concerned, although he wasn't confident in his ability to deal with peak-stage Saint-level experts, he was still confident in dealing with people at McKenzie's level.

Having reached the Saint-level, there was no longer a need for him to conceal himself or hide his power.

“What? You broke through just now?” McKenzie was shocked to hear this.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 50, An Appointment

McKenzie's view of Linley had totally changed.

"Haha..." After being silent for a moment, McKenzie laughed loudly. He descended from the skies, slowly walking towards Linley, his attitude noticeably more warm and friendly. "Linley, the legendary genius magus, supposedly the second greatest genius in history. But in my opinion, your talent as a warrior is even greater than as a magus. To be so young and yet already have the power of the Saint-level...the Dragonblood Warriors truly are Supreme Warriors."

Linley had always been proud of his clan's heritage. But whenever he thought back to how his clan had all but been destroyed, with only himself and his younger brother remaining, he couldn't help but feel a thread of grief in his heart.

"Mr. McKenzie, is there anything else? If there isn't, I need to go back now." Linley said.

McKenzie hurriedly said, "My friend Linley, this is our first meeting. Why don't we have a nice get-together? I'm very curious about you legendary Dragonblood Warriors as well. If there's enough time, I truly do wish to have a sparring contest against you, Linley. After all, sparring against experts of the same level is one of the best ways a Saint-level combatant can improve." As he finished speaking, McKenzie looked very earnestly at Linley.

Spar?

McKenzie was the local hegemon of the Northwest Administrative Province. Being able to get on good terms with McKenzie was of benefit to him. And in addition, Keane belonged to the Northwest Administrative Province as well. This could be considered helping Keane out as well.

Considering for a moment, Linley nodded. "I'm still wounded. Even if I did go to your residence, I wouldn't be able to immediately spar with you. How about this? I'll go home first, but after a period of time, I'll come back and pay a visit to you. It won't be too long, a month or so at most."

McKenzie happily nodded. "Wonderful. Then I will await your arrival within the Jacques clan's castle."

"I'll definitely come."

Linley smiled and nodded.

It had begun to snow, and snowflakes were flying everywhere. McKenzie and Linley, these two Saint-level combatants, smiled at each other, then flew off in different directions.

In the vast wilderness, only Linley and Bebe were left present.

"The winter's snow." Seeing the endless snowfall, Linley suddenly thought back to that huge blizzard that winter when he was young and in love with Alice.

The next year, also on a day of a blizzard, Linley and Alice had separated.

And then, within the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, on another snowy day, Linley had come to understand the 'impose' level.

Now, on a fourth blizzard, tonight, Linley had broken through to the ninth rank as a warrior, with his true power now totally within the realm of the Saint-levels.

"Snow..."

Linley felt extremely moved. But when he lowered his head and looked at himself, his smile disappeared. Astonished, he said, "I chatted with a Saint-level combatant for such a long time, looking like this?"

Because of his transformation and his battle against the Angels, Linley's clothes and pants had been turned utterly ruined.

The way he currently looked, even beggars would probably feel sorry for him.

However, just now, McKenzie hadn't paid any attention to his attire. In truth, when many Saint-level combatants engaged in training, they would sometimes train for months at a time. It was normal for their bodies to become incredibly filthy. Thus, they didn't care too much about superficial appearances. What they cared about was what a person was like inside.

For example, although Linley's clothes were in absolutely wretched shape, no one would dare look down upon him as he stood there.

This was a person's aura and demeanor.

"Boss, you said you have reached the Saint-level? Transform and let me admire my Boss's magnificence." Bebe's beady little eyes stared at Linley as he intentionally said those flattering words.

An excited feeling entered Linley's heart.

That was not a bad idea at all.

"Fine." Linley said with a laugh. Bebe immediately leapt off of Linley's shoulders as once again, those black scales emerged from Linley's skin. Sharp spikes erupted from his forehead, knees, and elbows, while his eyes once more transformed into that dark golden color.

He looked exactly the same as he had before.

But Linley could feel the difference.

"Whoosh." Linley felt the unique energy of the exalted Dragonblood hiding in his veins begin to flow into his bones, his muscles, and even his armor, spikes, and draconic tail.

The originally pitch-black scales were actually beginning to shine with a hint of blue light.

Linley could feel that his vision and his hearing had suddenly increased dozens of times in sensitivity. Nothing within several kilometers of him could escape his notice.

“Such powerful strength. Such powerful battle-qi.”

Linley balled his fist, and the air itself shuddered once. His mighty muscles now contained far greater power than before, and the amount of battle-qi in his body had grown vastly.

“Haha...” Linley began to laugh excitedly.

Late at night. Linley was flying across the desolate landscape. He, a fully transformed Dragonblood Warrior, looked like a monster as he floated through the air, occasionally letting out overjoyed bouts of wild laughter.

His laughter echoed in the heavens and in the earth.

“No wonder Barker was so excited when he reached the Saint-level. I didn’t expect that my power would increase this much after reaching this level.” Linley was extremely excited as well.

Dragonblood Warriors had many innate gifts. Once their power reached a certain level, they would naturally be able to fly. This was like the flight which flying magical beasts innately possessed; it was a natural ability which didn't require any particular understanding or insights.

"In terms of mysteriousness and exaltedness, the bloodline of the Armored Razorback Wyrms is far inferior to the lineage of us Dragonblood Warriors." Flying high in the air, Linley felt a sense of awe.

Originally, Linley had drunk a large amount of dragon's blood as well as eaten the draconic crystal of the Armored Razorback Wyrms. But despite that, the Dragonblood in Linley's vein had been able to dissolve and absorb it all.

And now, upon entering the Saint-level, Linley could sense that the energy of the Dragonblood heritage in his veins was continuing to transform and strengthen various functions in his body.

"My speed has doubled, at least." With but a thought, Linley suddenly transformed into a blur as he streaked across the sky.

"As for defenses..." Linley looked at his now perfect, undamaged scales, paying special attention to that dim layer of blue light. "If I were to take another blow from that Four-Winged Angel, I would at most suffer some light wound."

Linley's lips curved upwards.

Confidence!

Unmatchable confidence!

Actually, most human Saint-level experts had very weak defense. Even experts of the peak-stage Saint-rank had far inferior defense compared to Saint-level magical beasts.

But the Four Supreme Warriors possessed talents and gifts that were even more freakishly powerful than that of magical beasts.

This was one of the reasons why, as soon as a Dragonblood Warrior reached the Saint-level in human form, they would immediately be at the peak-stage of the Saint-level in power after Dragonforming. They were invincible. Understanding and insight made no difference.

Even just by relying on raw force, they were an invincible force amongst Saint-levels.

This was their natural talent!

Much like how Haeru was jealous of how powerful Bebe had become, the Four Supreme Warriors were worthy of admiration and jealousy from any race in the entire Yulan continent.

"Boss." Bebe leaped up into the air.

Linley stretched his arm out, catching Bebe in mid-air, and Bebe jumped onto Linley's shoulders. Linley was now covered totally with dark scales, while on his shoulders there was a black Shadowmouse.

It really was quite a matching sight.

“Bebe, time for you to experience the flight speed of a true Saint-level expert.” Linley laughed loudly, then exerted himself to his utmost, transforming into a black blur as he streaked across the skies, disappearing into the horizon.

The snow continued to fall across the night-shrouded wilderness.

Only the corpses on the ground gave testament to the battle that had been fought here.

The straight-line flying speed of a Saint-level was extremely fast. In an hour, Linley was able to cross over a thousand kilometers. In a very short period of time, Linley saw Cloudpeaks Village up ahead.

Tonight, the snow-covered Cloudpeaks Village was very quiet.

Linley flew directly to the western side of the village, dropping down at high speed like a meteor as he landed into the middle of the courtyard.

“Who comes!” A low roar as several shadows flashed out.

Linley had been flying so fast that he had been creating sonic booms. Naturally, he attracted the attention of experts such as the Barker brothers. But once they saw that the person in front of them was the Dragonformed Linley, they all secretly sighed.

"Hrm, you entered without even opening the door?" The fifth brother, Gates, said in astonishment, then he stared at Linley. "Lord, could it be that...?"

Laughing, Linley glanced at Gates.

Gates was the most intelligent and mentally agile of the five brothers, and was the first one to grasp the concept of 'wielding something heavy as though it were light.'

"Ah! Saint-level!" The others now realized as well, and the five brothers stared at Linley in astonishment.

"Big brother Ley returned?" Jenne's voice rang out, as she ran out as well. But as she saw Linley's transformed appearance, she was so scared that she immediately screamed, "Monster!"

Rebecca and Leena, who shared the room with her, quickly consoled her.

"Jenne, that's big brother Linley. That's his Dragonblood Warrior transformation." Rebecca laughed.

Linley returned to his normal human form. Badly frightened just now, Jenne stared stupidly at the transformation, then looked at Rebecca. "Dragonblood Warrior? What's a Dragonblood Warrior?"

"Haha, Dragonblood Warriors are one of the Four Supreme Warriors. We five brothers are also Supreme Warriors. We are the Undying Warriors!"

Gates said arrogantly.

Jenne looked at the surrounding group of people.

When she had arrived here tonight with Haeru, she temporarily took up residence with Rebecca and Leena. But when Rebecca and Leena were introducing everyone to her, they had only gotten around to introducing Zassler.

Jenne hadn't even finished getting over her amazement at hearing that Zassler was an Arch Magus necromancer before, suddenly, this 'Dragonblood Warrior' and these 'Undying Warrior' concepts popped up as well.

"This...you all are..." Jenne's mind was in chaos.

"Jenne, go back and get some rest." Linley laughed as he spoke.

Barker and his brothers were all stunned by Linley's breakthrough. The second brother, Ankh [An'ke], laughed helplessly. "Lord, you broke through at such speed. Big brother Barker has reached the Saint-level as well, but still wasn't your match. Now...the difference between us has increased even more."

"If he wasn't powerful, would he be our Lord, and lead us against the Radiant Church to seek vengeance?" Gates said arrogantly.

"All of you are close to having the power of the Saint-level." Zassler's face had a smile on it. "Fortunately, this old fogey has finally gained some certain insights. I trust that within ten years, I should be able to break through and reach the Saint-level."

Ten years?

Zassler was over eight hundred years old. To him, ten years was a fairly short period of time.

"A Grand Magus necromancer? That is an incredibly terrifying idea." Linley's eyes shone. "By that time, you'll be able to summon Saint-level departed souls, and lead an army of millions of departed souls!"

An Arch Magus necromancer of the ninth rank was already very frightening.

But a Grand Magus necromancer was as terrifying as an entire Empire, all by himself.

"Haha, everyone, keep growing stronger. fk, does the Radiant Church still dare send people over? If they send one, we'll kill one. If they send ten, we'll kill ten. Then we'll let Zassler create undead slaves out of their corpses and use them to counter-attack." As Gates spoke, he grew excited over his idea.

Everyone was very happy. Their strength increasing meant that they were now becoming more qualified to fight head on against the Radiant Church.

Linley was very happy as well.

Raising his head towards the sky, watching the snow drift about, Linley then turned his gaze to everyone present. "Alright, there's a blizzard tonight. Everyone should go inside the main hall if we want to chat."

"Right! Tonight, we won't stop until we are all drunk." Even the reliable and steady Barker was roaring loudly in his happiness.

The party went on for half the night. In truth, whether or not they would be able to fight against the Radiant Church depended entirely on their power. The reason Linley was their leader was because he was the most powerful amongst them.

Time passed. In the blink of an eye, three days had gone by.

Jenne had grown to fully understand everyone's background, and she slowly came to accept it all. Only now did Jenne truly understand that to these people, the city governor of a prefectural city was nothing at all.

In fact, not just a prefectural city; even the mighty Jacques clan, the rulers of the Northwest Administrative Province, didn't trouble Linley's group. They only viewed the Jacques clan as equals, and that only because of the existence of McKenzie.

"Barker, his brothers, and big brother Linley are all so hard working." Rebecca, Leena, and Jenne, these three beautiful ladies, were chatting amongst themselves while carrying baskets through the manor.

But just as they entered the courtyard, they suddenly saw....

The Shadowmouse, Bebe, floating in mid-air. Seeing Jenne and the others, he winked flirtatiously towards the three of them. Bebe opened his mouth, and out of it came crisp, clear human speech.

“Wow, three pretty girls. Hello, ladies!”

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 51, Wharton

The imperial capital of the O'Brien Empire. Channe [Chi'yan]. In the entire Yulan continent, perhaps only the capital of the Yulan Empire could match Channe in terms of size.

As for the name 'Channe', the War God O'Brien himself had chosen this name.

The imperial capital, Channe. There were millions of residents living here.

As a capital with over five thousand years of history, Channe had many ancient clans. In a place such as the imperial capital of Channe, even experts of the ninth rank were quite common. No one dared to act rashly in the imperial capital, because there were far too many powerful clans here.

But of course, the number one power of the imperial capital of Channe was, without a doubt, the War God's College.

Although the personally taught disciples of the War God virtually never showed their faces, even the weakest of the honorary disciples were at least warriors of the eighth rank, while most were warriors of the ninth rank. From this, one could tell how astonishingly powerful the War God's College was. And of course, there was the master of the War God's College. The War God himself.

It must be understood that in the O'Brien Empire, all other religions were outlawed. Even the commoners prayed to the War God. The War God had become the object of their faith!

From this, one could tell how important the War God was in the hearts of the commoners.

The east part of the imperial capital of Channe was a place covered with palaces and noble residences, with the imperial palace located within the east city as well. Within East Channe there was a street named Boulder Street, and on each side of Boulder Street there were meticulously constructed manors. These were all built by the order of the imperial clan of the Empire, and were given as rewards to the nobles and government officials who had rendered great deeds unto the Empire.

One of the manors on Boulder Street was the residence of the newest rising star of the Empire, Count Wharton. Two sturdy guards stood at each side of the gate to his residence, their waists stiff. And right now, within the main hall of the manor, there were four people.

All four of them were standing, but one of them was pacing about, a hint of a frown appearing on his brows.

He seemed to be roughly twenty one or twenty two years old. He wore a simple warrior's outfit, with the sleeveless outfit totally revealing his bulging muscles. He had a straight nose, thick black eyebrows, and a blocky, angular face, making him look very courageous and fierce.

But the most astonishing thing about him was his body.

He had the astonishing height of 2.2 meters. He had massively broad shoulders, a comparatively narrow waist, and two toned, powerful legs.

"Just by looks, Wharton does seem to be more astonishing than Linley." Hillman said to himself.

Compared to Wharton, Linley appeared to be more reserved and understated.

"Young master Wharton, are you still worrying about the Seventh Princess?" Housekeeper Hiri, his nose red from drinking wine, begin to chortle. Wharton turned to look at him helplessly. "Grandpa Hiri, you know who those people chasing after Nina [Ni'na] are."

The other young man in the group of four laughed. "Young master Wharton, why has a bold, forthright man such as yourself become so squeamish and nervous when it comes to matters of love? Why don't you just go with her to meet with His Imperial Majesty? Isn't that simple?"

"Just go directly?" Wharton raised an eyebrow.

Hillman encouraged as well, "Nader [Na'de] is right. You are already a warrior of the eighth rank, and the scion of the Dragonblood Warrior clan. His Imperial Majesty surely knows that for a scion of the Dragonblood Warrior clan to reach the eighth rank means that he definitely has been able to train in Dragonblood battle-qi, and has the ability to transform."

As Hillman saw it, for someone to reach the eighth rank without training in battle-qi was virtually impossible.

But Hillman had no idea that right now, by Linley's side, there were five brothers who had reached the eighth rank just based on physical training.

"Wharton, as a Dragonblood Warrior, you are a fit and qualified match to wed the Seventh Princess. I trust His Imperial Majesty will agree." Housekeeper Hiri laughed as he spoke. "But as for asking for her hand, I think it might be better if you let the Seventh Princess to sound His Imperial Majesty out first. That way, you'll have a better idea going in."

Housekeeper Hiri and Hillman glanced at each other, then both of them began to laugh.

In the past year or two, the relationship between Wharton and the Seventh Princess of the Empire had become quite well known throughout the entire imperial capital. Only, the other young nobles of the imperial capital had refused to give up. What's more, two of them were quite competitive.

"Enough of that for now." Wharton shook his head.

He trusted the Seventh Princess. The Seventh Princess had already told him long ago that aside from him, she wouldn't marry anyone else. But Wharton also knew that the marriage of an imperial princess of the Empire was not up to her alone to decide. In addition, Wharton didn't want the Seventh Princess to be too frustrated and unhappy. If he could openly wed her, that would be for the best.

"Oh, right. Grandpa Hiri, any news of my big brother?" Wharton asked.

Housekeeper Hiri nodded. "The Dawson Conglomerate has sent word that your big brother remains hidden in seclusion, where he continues to train. There's no special news."

"Big brother is as hard working as ever." In his heart, Wharton admired Linley very much.

Many of the weighty responsibilities of the Dragonblood Warrior clan, such as the reclaiming of their ancestral heirloom, or the avenging their parent's deaths, had been shouldered by Linley alone. As for him, Wharton, he could remain here in the imperial capital and quietly train.

Even from afar, Linley continued to shield him from the wind and the rain.

"Big brother..." Wharton still remembered how when he was young, when those two Saint-level combatants were doing battle outside Wushan Township, those boulders had rained down densely from the skies. His big brother had ignored his own safety to cover Wharton with his own body.

Wharton could clearly remember that dangerous moment....

"Get down!" Linley had angrily shouted at Wharton, while charging towards him with no regard for his own safety. Linley had used his own weak, frail body to shield Wharton.

After leaving home at the age of six, Wharton was now twenty two years old. In another month, he would be twenty three.

It had been almost seventeen years.

He hadn't seen his sibling in seventeen years.

"Young master Wharton, don't worry too much. Young master Linley will come find you once his training reaches a certain level. After all, he knows exactly where you are living." Housekeeper Hiri said consolingly.

Wharton nodded, then chuckled at himself. "When big brother sees me, I wonder if he'll still recognize me."

"The little six year old kid has changed quite a bit. Haha...it's true that your big brother might not recognize you." Hillman began to laugh.

Nader nodded as well. "When I came along with my father from the Holy Union, I initially couldn't recognize you either, young master Wharton. It was only after I saw Housekeeper Hiri did I realize that this big fellow who was even taller than me was actually that little kid I used to know."

"Nader, you punk." Wharton glared at him.

Nader was Hillman's son. However, Nader didn't have much talent as a warrior; although he was already twenty five years old, Nader was only a warrior of the fourth rank. But Nader was extremely discreet and careful, and so alongside his father Hillman, he managed and oversaw the work of all the guards of the manor.

"Whoah, it's getting late." Wharton took out a pocket watch and cast it a glance. "Grandpa Hiri, Uncle Hillman, I need to head out."

"He must be meeting up with the Seventh Princess again." Nader snickered, intentionally putting a smirk on his face.

Wharton laughed confidently towards Nader. "Naturally. What, are you jealous?" As he spoke, Wharton chortled as he walked out of the manor.

Watching Wharton leave, Housekeeper Hiri felt very moved.

"When we came, young master Wharton was just a child. But now, he's all grown up. I have fulfilled the task Lord Hogg gave me." When he thought of Hogg, Hiri couldn't stop sighing.

"The Baruch clan has been slumbering for many years. But now, it has finally begun to awaken. In another ten years, most likely the entire Yulan continent will once again be filled with people discussing the legendary Dragonblood Warriors." Hillman said confidently.

Carrying the warblade 'Slaughterer', Wharton rode on a Saber-Toothed Tiger on the streets. Saber-Toothed Tigers were magical beasts of the eighth rank, and thus their aura would make ordinary magical beasts cower away from it. What's more, Wharton was so physically huge himself. Together, they posed such a terrifying sight that everyone who saw him felt dread.

Thus, the pedestrians on the street all made way for him.

"That's the genius student of the O'Brien Academy, Wharton. Look. He's riding a magical beast of the eighth rank."

"Saber-Toothed Tiger. How fierce! If I had a magical beast of my own, how great that would be."

Many people on the streets chatted about Wharton as he passed by. In the past, when Linley had seen that Velocidragon for the first time, he too had dreamed of having a powerful magical beast like a Velocidragon for his companion. In the eyes of many youths, Wharton was their role model.

Saber-Toothed Tigers were extremely fast. Even when travelling on the streets, it moved forward very rapidly and very nimbly.

"Here we are." Wharton saw that magnificent hotel from far away. This was the appointed meeting spot for him and the Seventh Princess. The receptionist for the hotel recognized Wharton as well, and immediately opened the door for Wharton to enter.

Leading the Saber-Toothed Tiger behind him, Wharton entered the hotel.

Wharton looked around the hotel, his gaze finally settling on the person he cared about the most. He immediately called out happily, "Nina." But just at this moment, Wharton suddenly frowned...because he also once again saw the person who irritated him.

"Wharton."

Nina had a head of full, lustrous blonde hair, and her pale face was as charming as ever. Her brilliant, shining eyes didn't have a single hint of impurity in them.

Nina ran over happily towards Wharton, who immediately stepped forward, taking Nina by the hand.

"That guy is bothering me again." Nina whispered to Wharton.

Wharton glanced at the distant man, saying in a low voice, "Nina, don't pay any attention to that guy." But just at that moment, the handsome young man walked over. With a calm laugh, he said, "Wharton, I really didn't expect to see you here. Why is it that you always appear wherever Nina is?"

"Shut your mouth, Lamonte [Lan'mo]." Wharton frowned. "Remember. Nina's name isn't for the likes of you to call out. And also. The question you asked me, I should be asking you. Why is it that wherever Nina is, you always appear?"

Lamonte glanced at Wharton, a smile that was not a smile on his face.

Although on the surface, he didn't seem to care much, in his heart, Lamonte really disliked this Wharton. After all, it was Wharton who had taken Nina away from him.

"Oh, a Saber-Toothed Tiger." Lamonte looked at Wharton's Saber-

Toothed Tiger. Laughing, he said, "Wharton, any interest in letting my Blue-eyed Tiger Mastiff have a fight with your Saber-Toothed Tiger? I'll wager that my Blue-eyed Tiger Mastiff would definitely win."

Blue-eyed Tiger Mastiffs and Saber-Toothed Tigers were both magical beasts of the eighth rank.

However, there were differences in power amongst magical beasts of the eighth rank as well. For example, Goldmane Mastiffs and Blue-eyed Tiger Mastiffs were considered one of the top kinds of magical beasts of the eighth rank. Blue-eyed Tiger Mastiffs were particularly effective against tiger-type magical beasts.

"Not interested." Wharton paid his suggestion no heed at all. Looking coldly at Lamonte, Wharton said, "Lamonte, if you really want to have a competition, I wouldn't object to having a sparring match against you. As for having magical beasts, compete? Hrmph."

"A competition between men?"

Lamonte chuckled, then no longer said anything.

He, Lamonte, was an honorary disciple of the War God's College, and he was a warrior of the ninth rank. He was indeed qualified to be arrogant. But right now, virtually all of the ancient clans of the imperial city knew that Wharton was of the Baruch clan, which in turn was the clan of the Dragonblood Warriors. And Wharton was clearly able to use battle-qi.

A scion of the Dragonblood Warrior clan who could use battle-qi was definitely capable of Dragonforming as well.

Lamonte knew very well that although Wharton appeared to be only a warrior of the eighth rank, when using that unique, special warblade of his to attack, he could fight on par with ordinary warriors of the ninth rank. But once Wharton transformed, he, Lamonte, wouldn't be a match at all.

"Let's leave." Gently stroking the head of his Blue-eyed Tiger Mastiff, Lamonte chuckled lightly.

And then, Lamonte left along with his magical beast, just like that.

Nina and Wharton headed directly to a private deluxe room on the second room of the hotel. As for Nina's female attendant, she stayed outside the room.

"You big lunk, tell me, what should we do about that Lamonte? He is so annoying." Nina nestled in Wharton's arms, asking in a soft voice.

'Big lunk'. This was how Nina had addressed Wharton the first time they had met. Whenever they met in private, this was how Nina would address him.

"It is your own fault for being so charming, Nina." Wharton grinned as he tweaked Nina's nose. "Actually, I don't care too much about that Lamonte fellow. The one I'm worried about is Caylan [Kai'lan]."

"Big brother Caylan?" Nina said with resignation, "I only think of him as a big brother, but he...sigh."

Caylan was twenty three years old, but was already a magus of the seventh rank.

There were quite a few twenty three year old warriors of the seventh rank, but very few twenty three year old magi of the seventh rank. Moreover, Caylan had reached the seventh rank as a magus when he was twenty one years old.

If Linley hadn't sculpted 'Awakening From the Dream', most likely it would've taken him until the age of twenty to reach the seventh rank.

In the imperial capital, Caylan was considered a genius magus. He had been childhood friends with Nina. And more importantly, Caylan's father was the Left Premier of the Empire, an extremely powerful man. Caylan himself was, simply put, a very good person as well. It could be said that he was a nearly perfect individual.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 52, The Beirut Clan

“In terms of lineage as well as personality, Caylan is a fine man.” Wharton held Nina in his arms, speaking softly. “I’m afraid that your Imperial father will give your hand in marriage to Caylan.”

Nina nodded. “It is true that Imperial father values Caylan due to his high talent for magic. In the future, he has a high chance of becoming an Arch Magus of the ninth rank, and even has a chance to become a Saint-level Grand Magus. The Empire has many Saint-level experts, but most of them are Saint-level warriors. There are extremely few Saint-level Grand Magi.”

Wharton sensed that Caylan was a threat.

Although Lamonte belonged to the War God’s College, he was just an honorary disciple. In addition, his clan wasn’t particularly powerful either. He, Wharton, was a Dragonblood Warrior after all. As long as the Emperor wasn’t a fool, he would definitely select Wharton.

But if Caylan were to compete against Wharton, things would be different. His father was, after all, the powerful and influential Left Premier of the Empire.

“Nina.” Wharton became very solemn.

“Hrm?” Nestled in Wharton’s arms, Nina looked up at him.

"I am preparing to request an audience with His Imperial Majesty, and to personally ask for him to give me your hand in marriage." Wharton said with a very solemn expression on his face.

Nina started, and then a look of wild joy appeared on her face.

"Truly?" Nina was very excited.

"Yes." Wharton nodded. "Nina, before I do so, you can chat with your Imperial father and get a sense of which way the wind is blowing."

Nina shook her head helplessly. "I thought I told you already. My Imperial father himself has yet to make up his mind. The only thing he says is, 'no rush', 'no rush'....but my Imperial father does have a very favorable impression of you, and he values you as well. If you really were to ask for my hand, I think your chances would be very high." Nina was very hopeful.

Only one of her older sister's had married someone whom she loved. For the rest of Nina's sisters, their marriages were marriages of political convenience, and not very happy ones.

Wharton nodded slightly.

"Don't worry, Nina. I won't let anyone take you from me." Wharton tightly embraced Nina, who placed her head against Wharton's massive, sturdy chest.

The Northwest Administrative Province. Cloudpeaks Village, outside the provincial capital. On the west side of Cloudpeaks Village, there was a forest. The already Dragonformed Linley was currently sparring with Bebe.

"Bebe, don't force me." Linley said helplessly as he wielded the adamantine heavy sword. "If you keep doing this to me, then I'll be forced to use the Profound Truths of the Earth."

"Heh heh, Boss, I know you care about me too much to do that to me." Bebe was hovering in mid-air, speaking in human tongues.

Upon reaching the Saint-level, magical beasts could freely alter their size, and also speak in human tongues. But only a Deity-level magical beast could transform into a human shape.

In the entire Yulan continent, only the King of the Forest of Darkness and the King of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, these two powerful Deity-level experts, could transform into a human form.

As for Bebe, who knew how long it would be before he could reach such a level?

"You rascal." Linley sighed. "I reached the Saint-level and finally caught up to you in terms of speed and defense. But you, you immediately entered the Saint-level as well. Your speed became even more ridiculous."

But movement speed and attack speed remained two different concepts.

The speed of swinging a sword was far faster than movement speed. Although in terms of dodging and agility, Linley was no match for Bebe, his adamantine heavy sword was still able to block Bebe's attacks. Thus, facing Bebe, Linley usually just stood there, using his sword to defend himself.

"Heh heh." Bebe laughed proudly.

Actually, Linley's Profound Truths of the Earth still posed a real threat to Bebe. After all, the Profound Truths of the Earth all but ignored external defenses, rendering Bebe's powerful defense useless.

But how could Linley bear to use such a vicious attack against Bebe?

Thus, Bebe continuously teased and taunted Linley in their spars.

"Enough. My body has two claw marks on it now. Are you happy?" Linley laughed as he rubbed Bebe's little head. "Let's go back. It's time to eat."

As he spoke, Linley reverted to his human form, then put on a new set of clothes.

"The Boss is always the best." Bebe flew to Linley's shoulders and giggled.

In Linley's current squad, if Linley were to avoid using the Profound Truths of the Earth, there was no one here who was a match for Bebe. Bebe was a truly powerful Saint-level magical beast, through and through.

"Bebe, what sort of magical beast are you, exactly?" Linley walked while chatting with Bebe.

"I really don't know either." Bebe rapidly shook his little head.

Linley suddenly remembered something, then looked towards Bebe in astonishment. "Bebe, do you remember back when we initiated our 'bond of equals', I asked you what your name was? At that time you said, 'Bei', 'Bei'. You didn't say whatever it was you wanted to say very clearly."

Linley remembered that scene very clearly.

"Little Shadowmouse, what is your name?" Linley had mentally asked him.

The little Shadowmouse had said, somewhat excitedly, "Bei....bei...."

Linley had stared at the little Shadowmouse.

"What's the little Shadowmouse saying?" Linley didn't really understand.

His white beard flowing, Doebling Cowart had floated next to him and mentally said, "Linley, this little Shadowmouse is still an infant. He can't form precise sounds yet. Even when engaging in mental communication with you, for now, he can only communicate simple intentions."

Due to their spiritual link, Linley had been able to feel the little Shadowmouse's excitement, but the little Shadowmouse simply couldn't speak at all.

"Okay. You were saying 'Bei'....'Bei'....then I'm going to call you 'Bebe'. How's that?" Linley had grinned as he watched the little Shadowmouse.

The little Shadowmouse had seemed to ponder for a while, and then had happily nodded.

And just like that, Linley had named him 'Bebe'.

"Did I say that?"

Bebe was startled.

"Oh, right." Bebe remembered. "I remember now. When I was very, very young, so young that I couldn't even open my eyes, I heard a very close, very warm voice speak to me."

Linley immediately looked at Bebe. He had never heard Bebe speak of this before.

It was normal for magical beasts to be unable to open their eyes soon after they were born. At that time, Bebe most likely had just been born not long ago. That was a very distant memory. If Linley hadn't brought it up, Bebe wouldn't have recalled it either.

“That voice told me that I belonged to some clan. It instructed me to hide in the back courtyard of your clan’s manor and to not run around. And then, the voice disappeared.” Bebe was very puzzled.

“The Bei-something clan?” Linley said questioningly.

“I don’t recall very well. It seems to have been Bei...Bei...oh!” Bebe’s little eyes lit up. “‘Beirut’ [Bei’lu’tē]. Right. It seems to have been ‘Beirut’. That voice told me that I was a member of the mighty Beirut clan. It told me not to run around, because it was dangerous outside. That’s why I stayed in your manor’s back courtyard the entire time, Boss, as I slowly grew up there.”

Linley now understood.

“The Beirut clan?” Linley was puzzled. “Magical beasts have clans?”

Bebe shook his head in confusion as well. “I don’t know either. I never met my parents after I was born. I just stayed at the back courtyard of your clan’s manor, and all I had to eat were those pieces of rubble.”

Linley firmly imprinted this name into his memory – the Beirut clan!

Linley was absolutely certain that he had never heard of any powerful clan in the Yulan continent named ‘Beirut’. But this clan was most likely a magical beast clan.

A magical beast clan?

Linley didn't know about it because he was not a magical beast.

But Bebe didn't know either, because he had no parents.

Ten more days passed for Linley within Cloudpeaks Village. Per Linley's agreement with McKenzie, all he had to do was make a single trip to visit the Jacques clan within thirty days.

"Big brother Linley, you have a letter." Jenne ran in excitedly from outside.

"Oh, it should be from the Dawson Conglomerate."

The Dawson Conglomerate sent a letter every month. Linley immediately walked out. There was a young man leading a horse outside. Upon seeing Linley, the young man immediately bowed and said courteously, "Lord Ley, here is your letter."

Linley accepted the letter and laughed. "Next month, there will be no need for you to come here."

The young man looked at Linley questioningly.

"By this time next month, I will no longer be here." Linley had made the decision long ago that in the next few days, he would head to the Jacques clan.

His wounds had healed long ago, and after Dragonforming, he was a Saint-level combatant. It was time to go visit his little brother.

It had been a long, long time since he had met with Wharton. In his heart, Linley had always missed this one and only sibling of his.

"Yes, Lord Ley." The young man said respectfully, and then he mounted his horse and left.

As for Linley, he opened the letter and read it. The letter had quite a good amount of general information regarding the current state of affairs for the Radiant Church and the Yulan continent as a whole. It also had some information about Reynolds, George, and Yale. At the bottom was information regarding Wharton.

"George is really formidable." Linley mentally sighed in praise.

With the support of the Walsh family, George had continued on his upward trajectory within the Yulan Empire. He himself was very talented as well, but more importantly...

The Third Prince of the Yulan Empire had successfully inherited the imperial throne, becoming the Emperor of the Yulan Empire.

Prior to the Third Prince assuming the position of Emperor, George had been on very close terms with him. The two of them were politically of one mind. Now that the Third Prince had succeeded his father as Emperor, George had become the youngest Grand Secretary in the Yulan Empire.

The entire Yulan Empire only had twelve Grand Secretaries. Each of them possessed extraordinary power and authority. What's more, George was also the Deputy for the Right Premier of the Yulan Empire.

"By comparison, Reynolds hasn't done as well as George." Linley chuckled, then he closely read the information regarding Wharton. Linley had a general idea of what Wharton was up to.

But upon reading the letter..

"What?!" Linley was shocked. "Wharton has asked the Emperor for the Seventh Princess's hand in marriage?"

The Dawson Conglomerate had just transmitted this news to the provincial capital of Basil not long ago. After all, this event only happened a few days ago.

"The Emperor didn't agree?"

Frowning, Linley continued to read. "Fortunately, although he didn't agree, he didn't refuse too harshly either."

According to the letter, the Emperor was continuing to delay.

That Lamonte had gone long ago to ask the same question, and the Emperor hadn't agreed then either. Now that Wharton had gone, the Emperor still declined to agree. What he said was, "Nina is still young. There is no rush."

Nina was already twenty one years old. She wasn't that young.

But Nina was both a magus and a warrior, and her affinity as a magus was to water magic, which was of exceeding benefit to one's body. Nina's lifespan would definitely be very long. It would be easy for her to live for three or four hundred years. Given this, it was true that she did not need to be in a rush to marry.

"One is the son of the Left Premier of the Empire, while the other is an honorary disciple of the War God's College." Linley could immediately tell who his younger brother's greatest adversary was. It was the Left Premier's son, that magus named Caylan.

"It seems as though the situation isn't looking good." Linley's forehead was furrowed. A cold light flashed in his eyes. "No matter what, I can't let Wharton walk the same road that I did. Tomorrow. Tomorrow, I'll go pay a visit to the Jacques clan. After satisfying the agreement, we'll head directly to the imperial capital."

Linley had made his decision.

But right at that moment...

"Lord, Lord!" The familiar voice of Gates rang out. Gates was probably the most lively of the five brothers.

"Lord!" It wasn't just Gates; the others were shouting as well.

Puzzled, Linley returned to the courtyard. As he did, Gates and the others immediately rushed to him, their faces filled with wild joy.

"All of you are so happy. What's the good news?" Linley laughed.

"Second brother, second brother has already reached the ninth rank!" Gates was the first to speak.

"Ankh, our second brother, is at the Saint-level as well after transforming." The third brother, Hazer, said with joy.

Linley was startled.

Of the five brothers, Barker was the first to reach the ninth rank. After he possessed the power of the Saint-level, the other four brothers, all at the peak of the eighth rank, continued to work hard. Unexpectedly, another one had reached the ninth rank so soon.

"Myself. Bebe. Barker. Ankh. All of a sudden, four of us have reached the Saint-level." Linley had never heard of a clan possessing four Saint-level combatants. The scariest part of it was...the other three brothers could break through at any moment as well.

Linley had no idea, but he was grinning so widely that his lips threatened to split apart.

Perhaps the very next day, someone would come running over to tell him that another one of the five brothers had broken through. They would then have yet another Saint-level in their ranks.

Linley now felt all the more convinced that his decision to go rescue Barker and his brothers was an absolutely genius decision. By now, aside from Barker and Ankh, the other three brothers could be considered Saint-levels in the making.

Living in the Northwest Administrative Province, it could be said that Linley had gotten everything he had desired. In the blink of an eye, he, Bebe, and the second brother, Ankh, had all reached the Saint-level of power. Their group now had four Saint-level experts. Even the three major trading unions or the four major assassin's guilds couldn't boast such a number!

This was an extremely powerful, hidden force.

Unfortunately, in the imperial capital, the opposite was true for Wharton.

In the spacious training area in the back part of the manor, Wharton was wildly training with his ancestral heirloom, the warblade 'Slaughterer'. Sweat was pouring down from every part of his body, but it seemed as though Wharton didn't feel tired at all, as he continued to train.

Watching quietly, Housekeeper Hiri shook his head to himself.

"Wharton is just like his father. He cares too much about love." Hiri had watched Hogg grow up, and knew how deep a love Hogg had felt for Linley's mother, Lina. When Lina had been abducted, Hogg had been in misery for over ten years. The only reason he had endured was because he had to raise Linley and Wharton.

As soon as Hogg felt that Linley and Wharton could grow up on their own, he threw away everything to investigate his wife's whereabouts. In the end, he paid for it with his life.

"Wharton is the same. His Imperial Majesty didn't totally cut off all his hopes. He only asked Wharton not to be in such a rush, and that there was no need for the Seventh Princess to marry so soon. But Wharton has become like this..." Hiri kept on sighing.

Housekeeper Hiri didn't know that it wasn't just Hogg and Wharton who were like this. Linley was the same as well.

"Groooooowl."

After this bestial growl, Wharton slowly stopped brandishing the warblade in his hands. After having painstakingly trained for so many years, Wharton had already reached a very high level of proficiency with the warblade. The bestial roar that came out just now was one of the hallmarks of the warblade style he had developed.

"Grandpa Hiri." Wharton looked at Housekeeper Hiri, squeezing a smile onto his face.

After having unleashed all of his frustrations just now, Wharton felt a bit better inside.

"Wharton, don't be too sad. You and the Seventh Princess still have a chance." Hiri laughed. "I think the reason His Imperial Majesty has been delaying is because it is very hard for him to choose between you and Caylan."

Wharton nodded.

Wharton actually understood a great deal about the current Emperor.

He was an Emperor that highly valued human talent, and he was a fairly decisive man as well. But he had one flaw. That flaw was – bias! Extreme bias!

Everyone in the imperial capital knew this.

For example, twenty years ago, the Southeast Administrative Province's managing clan had made some mistakes. Since they didn't have the backing of a Saint-level expert, in the end, their clan was ransacked by the Emperor. At the time, many clans had desired to take over the Southeast Administrative Province. But in the end, the Emperor had actually given his one and only younger brother, Duke Julin [Yu'lin], authority over the Southeast Administrative Province.

Anyone the Emperor was close to, he tended to be biased towards.

Caylan's father, the Imperial Left Premier, Judd Darryl [Jia'de Da'li'er], had grown up alongside the Emperor. They were on very good terms with each other. After the Emperor took the throne, he naturally appointed Judd Darryl to a high rank, eventually appointing him the Imperial Left Premier. He possessed enormous power, and could be described to be second to only the Emperor himself.

The Emperor, being on such close terms with the Imperial Left Premier, naturally was very partial and protective towards Caylan as well.

In addition, Caylan was a very talented, worthy person. It would have been very natural for the Emperor to agree to Caylan's attempt to woo Nina. However, Wharton was also wooing Nina, and Nina herself liked Wharton. This made the Emperor hesitate.

Caylan and Wharton were both very talented.

He doted on Caylan, but he also doted on Nina.

Caylan's father was his dear friend and was one of the pillars of the Empire. But Wharton was a Dragonblood Warrior.

This was a very hard choice to make!

"I understand what His Imperial Majesty is thinking. For him to refuse my direct request to be allowed to wed Nina means that it will not be so easy for the two of us to be together." Wharton sighed.

"Wharton, you need to have some self-confidence." Housekeeper Hiri encouraged.

Wharton forced out a smile. "Grandpa Hiri, I know what the situation is. In the Empire, His Imperial Majesty's decree is absolute law. The only person he is afraid of is the War God himself. That's why I originally took part in the competition to become an honorary disciple. I wanted to build a relationship with the War God. So long as the War God was willing to assist me, everything would have been set."

The War God. The true foundation and pillar of the O'Brien Empire.

A single word from the War God could make the Emperor abdicate without daring to say a word of complaint. After all the War God was the founding Emperor of the O'Brien Empire, and he was also a Deity-level expert who stood at the top of the entire Yulan continent.

"Slowly, slowly. Don't be in a rush." Housekeeper Hiri consoled.

"Lord Count, the Seventh Princess has arrived." An attendant walked into the training grounds and said respectfully.

"Nina came?" Wharton was very surprised.

Although the two were on very close terms, Nina rarely came to visit him at his manor. Wharton immediately took a quick rinse, changed into a fresh set of clothes, then went to the main hall to see Nina.

Within the main hall.

A look of happiness was on Nina's face. The female attendant behind her laughed quietly. "Princess, what sort of expression do you think the Lord Count will have on his face when he hears this news?"

"What sort of expression the big lunk will have?" Nina pondered the question, her laughter becoming all the merrier.

As she thought and chatted, Nina suddenly heard footsteps. Turning, she saw a large, powerful figure walk in, as tall and strong as a wargod. Staring at this familiar figure, Nina felt a sweet feeling in her heart. In her heart, Wharton had already become her mental pillar of support.

"Nina, why have you come to my place? Aren't you afraid your Imperial father will scold you?" Wharton laughed as he walked in.

Nina pouted. "He can scold me if he wants. I wanted to come."

Seeing the adorable look on Nina's face, Wharton felt a gentle, warm feeling in his heart. He sat next to Nina and held her hands. "Nina, judging from the look on your face, I think you are hiding something from me."

Nina wrinkled her nose, saying delightedly, "I can't hide anything from you. I want to tell you some good news."

"Good news? What good news? Has your Imperial father changed his mind and decided to allow me to marry you?" Wharton said casually.

The Emperor's words were as good as gold. How could he so casually take back what he had said?

"Of course not." Nina's smile was very bright.

"Then what is it?"

Nina's expression grew solemn. "Two days ago, you spoke with my Imperial father, but he didn't agree. I felt very unhappy, so I thought of something. I went directly to big brother Caylan."

"You went to find Caylan?" Wharton's eyebrows shot up. Caylan was his enemy in love. "What did you go find him for?"

Nina giggled. "Okay, stop guessing. I just went to have a good chat with big brother Caylan. I told him that the only thing I felt for him was the affection due an older brother. We grew up together, and he really was like an older brother to me. I asked big brother Caylan to help the two of us. I told big brother Caylan that if I were to leave you, Wharton, I wouldn't be able to live."

Wharton suddenly felt deeply moved.

"Big brother Caylan was quiet for a long time, but in the end, he agreed that he would speak to His Imperial Majesty, and that he would abandon his pursuit of me and allow us to be together." Nina's smile was incandescent.

"Caylan is giving up?" Wharton was shocked.

Wharton had been in the imperial capital for a long time now, and had interacted with Caylan several times. Wharton could clearly sense the love which Caylan felt towards Nina. He was totally, truly in love with her. And yet, Caylan had decided to give up. Wharton felt very moved, while at the same time, he began to somewhat admire Caylan.

“Big brother Caylan has given up, while the others aren’t much of a threat. As for that Lamonte, in my Imperial father’s heart, he can’t compare to you.” A very happy look was on Nina’s face. “Big lunk, there’s no one who can stop us from being together now.”

Excitement!

There was no way he could stop this sense of excitement and joy from swelling in his heart. The most troublesome, headache-inducing competitor facing him had voluntarily given up. This sort of sudden, unexpected joy made Wharton feel a little giddy and dizzy.

Staring at Nina’s incandescent smile, Wharton felt more moved than he ever had been.

“Right. No one will prevent us from being together.” Wharton held Nina tightly in his arms.

Linley, Bebe, Haeru, Rebecca, Leena, Jenne, Zassler, and Barker and his brothers left Cloudpeaks Village, making their way towards the provincial capital of Basil.

The provincial capital of Basil. The Jacques clan’s castle.

Linley’s group had arrived at the gates.

“Who comes before us?” The castle guards barked at them from far away. The Jacques clan were the local hegemony of the Northwest Administrative Province. Their headquarters wasn’t a place where just anyone could enter.

The fifth of the brothers, Gates, immediately shouted loudly, "Go inform McKenzie that our Lord Linley has arrived."

"Who is making so much noise outside?!"

A familiar voice shouted. Linley carefully stared in the direction of that voice. Indeed, that gaudily dressed young man, Albert, came rushing out amidst a number of servants.

Seeing Linley's group, the look on Albert's face changed.

"You are called Ley, right? How dare you come to my house?" A vicious, sinister look was on Albert's face. "I didn't expect that those six people belonging to the Radiant Church wouldn't be able to kill you. But my Jacques clan isn't so easily bullied by the likes of you."

At the same time, Albert also noticed that behind Linley, there was Jenne, as well as Rebecca and her sister.

Jenne's complexion was as beautiful as a flower petal in a pool of water, while Rebecca and Leena possessed a certain mysterious grace that was extremely mesmerizing.

"How the hell did this guy get so many beautiful women to follow him?" Albert felt extremely aggrieved.

"How dare you come to cause trouble at the gates of the Jacques clan? Men! Seize them!" Albert immediately ordered loudly.

The surrounding guards all charged forward, but before Linley made a single move, Barker and his brothers charged forward.

"Spare their lives." Linley said calmly.

"Got it." Gates said excitedly.

"As long as they don't die, right?" Barker's eyes held a hint of glee as well. These five brothers had been famous in the Eighteen Northern Duchies as bloodthirsty warlords. When leading their armies, they had killed countless people.

These five enormous siblings were like war machines. They seized one guard after another, as easily as snatching up a chicken, and then casually tossed them like sandbags towards the castle gates. The force of these tosses by the Barker brothers was quite high. These warriors of the fifth and sixth ranks had their bones snapped as soon as they hit the ground.

"You..." Albert was so angry that his entire body was quivering. "You are too arrogant and wild. You dare act like this in front of the Jacques clan?"

"What is going on out here?"

An angry roar could be heard, as another group of people appeared from within the castle. The leader was a middle-aged man with a square face. Albert immediately bowed. "Father, these people are causing trouble at our gates, and they even injured our guards."

"Oh?" This middle-aged man was the leader of the Jacques clan, Odin [Ao'deng] Jacques.

Odin Jacques stared coldly at Linley's group.

"Haha, brother Linley, you've arrived!" A loud laugh could be heard as a blur suddenly descended from the heavens, appearing in front of the castle gates.

That stiff, ramrod straight back. That white-flecked hair.

Odin and Albert, upon seeing this man, immediately dropped all pretenses of arrogance and immediately bowed respectfully.

"Odin, what are you doing here?" McKenzie looked coldly at Odin.

Odin trembled, not daring to speak. He had heard how McKenzie had just said the words, 'brother Linley'. He didn't dare say a word.

"This has nothing to do with this Odin fellow. Only, there's a small grudge between his son Albert and myself. Thus, he wanted to use the clan's forces to resolve our private issues." Linley said with a calm laugh.

"Grudge?" McKenzie nodded.

Casting a single cold glance at Albert, McKenzie turned to look at Odin. "Odin, have Albert go to the prefectural city of Deco to assist his uncle. The provincial capital of Basil is no longer an appropriate place for him to stay."

Albert's face instantly turned white.

The provincial capital of Basil was no longer a suitable place for him to stay? This was as good as saying that his position as heir to the clan leadership had just been stripped from him. Moreover, he was being exiled to a prefectural city, and he wasn't even going to be the city governor; he was just going to assist his uncle. In the future, he wouldn't even be on Keane's level.

"Yes, grandfather." Odin didn't dare to hesitate in the slightest.

In the Northwest Administrative Province, McKenzie's stature was the same as the War God O'Brien's stature in the O'Brien Empire. Even if he wanted Odin to give up his position as clan leader, Odin wouldn't dare to voice a single word of complaint.

"Brother Linley, I am so very sorry. I was out for a stroll just now, and so I arrived here a bit late." McKenzie warmly welcomed Linley into his castle.

Smiling, Linley entered the castle alongside McKenzie, with Odin courteously following them from behind. As for the pale-faced Albert, no one paid him any more attention.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 54, Personal Disciple

The Jacques clan's castle was extremely large, but virtually everyone in the castle knew that the 'quiet park' that took up nearly a third of the castle was a restricted area.

Because that was where McKenzie lived. Aside from McKenzie and his wife, only three attendants as well as McKenzie's disciples were permitted to enter. Normally, even the clan leader or his sons had to be granted entry before entering.

The quiet park was extremely large, and more than half of it was taken up by trees and flowers. The buildings inside the park were both simple and unadorned. But despite that, it would be easy for over a hundred people to live within this place.

Linley's group had been invited to enter the quiet park.

A jade-haired, beautiful, virtuous looking woman who seemed to be in her thirties guided Linley's group through the park, helping arrange places for them to live.

"Bliss [Bi'li'si], prepare a banquet, just like last time when Haydson came to visit." McKenzie said to the beautiful attendant.

"Yes, milord."

The jade-haired woman was very shocked. McKenzie, when receiving guests, was very particular about how he treated them. Generally speaking, this high-class banquet which McKenzie was now instructing to hold was generally only for Saint-level combatants.

"Can this youngster be a Saint-level expert?" Bliss glanced at Linley, guessing silently.

McKenzie laughed towards Linley. "Linley, although you've been in my Northwest Administrative Province for quite some time, I'll wager you have yet to try some of the true delicacies of the Northwest Administrative Province."

"True delicacies?" Linley raised an eyebrow.

When he was staying in the hotels, the dishes Linley had ordered were all very famous. After all, for someone at Linley's level, money was of no concern.

"Of course, the provincial capital has many restaurants with fine dishes. But there are some special dishes which even those finest of restaurants only prepare a single portion of each week. Those special delicacies are something that you can't simply buy with money." McKenzie said proudly.

Throughout his life, McKenzie had only two hobbies; the first was training, and the second was sampling the various delicacies of the world.

McKenzie had even once said that if one didn't have the chance to eat rare foods, then one's life would have no flavor.

"Then today, I must have a good sampling of what you have to offer." Linley chuckled.

Right now, only Linley and McKenzie were in the main hall, as well as Bebe, who was standing on Linley's shoulders. As for Barker and his brothers, all of them had retired to their rooms.

"Hrm?" Seeing the Shadowmouse on Linley's shoulders, McKenzie seemed to be slightly surprised. "Linley, I have the feeling that this magical beast of yours seems to be quite extraordinary. But he looks like a black Shadowmouse. This..." Black Shadowmice were the weakest type of Shadowmice. But McKenzie was certain that given Linley's status, there was no way he would have such a weak magical beast companion.

Bebe had reached the Saint-level already.

Currently, however, Bebe was totally suppressing his aura. If a Saint-level combatant were to suppress their aura, unless the opponents were far stronger, they wouldn't be able to sense the exact power.

"Bebe is a peak-stage magical beast of the ninth rank." Linley laughed.

On Linley's shoulders, Bebe flashed his fangs disdainfully towards McKenzie. As Linley planned it, Bebe having reached the Saint-rank was one of his most valuable hidden trump cards.

Bebe was already extremely terrifying before reaching the Saint-rank. Now that he had reached the Saint-rank, if Linley didn't use the Profound Truths of the Earth, he would be absolutely ravaged by Bebe in their sparring matches.

But amongst Saint-level experts, how many possessed such a strange attack as Linley's Profound Truths of the Earth? Generally, Saint-level experts weren't a match for Bebe at all.

"A black Shadowmouse which is a peak-stage magical beast of the ninth rank?" McKenzie was still very surprised.

"Enough about that. McKenzie, in a few days, I plan to head off to the imperial capital. What do you think would be a good time for us to hold our sparring match?" Linley asked.

"Leaving so soon?" McKenzie was a bit disappointed. "I was hoping to celebrate with you for quite a while, brother Linley. That way, when we sparred together, we would learn more as well. But since you have business to attend to in the imperial capital, then...how about this? In three days, let's have our sparring match in that small desolate mountain outside the city."

"Works for me." Linley nodded in agreement.

"Come, come take a look at my training yard." McKenzie said warmly, and Linley followed McKenzie over to take a look.

While Linley was enjoying the warm hospitality of McKenzie, Wharton and Nina had left the imperial capital and were headed for the War God's College.

The War God's College was built on top of a tall mountain. The mountain was thus named, War God Mountain.

"It has already been over two hundred years since the last time the War God accepted a personal disciple. A few years ago, the Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier, refused the War God's invitation. I didn't expect that he would suddenly declare that he would accept another personal disciple."

"If one day, I could become his personal disciple, even if it were just for a day, I would die a happy man."

The road outside the imperial capital was filled with people, all chatting and calling out to each other. The War God's College accepting new honorary disciples was no longer an issue of major interest; accepting a new personal disciple, however, was an earth-shaking event. The importance of such an event was not one whit less than a new Emperor assuming the throne.

After all, in the past five thousand years, the War God O'Brien had only accepted a total of 20 or so personal disciples. Many of them were already deceased.

As for Emperors?

In the past five thousand years, there had been over a hundred of them.

Although in the hearts of the commoners, this was a huge affair, the War God's College method of carrying the recruiting of a personal disciple was very simple. When the time came, they would simply send out a public announcement of who the next personal disciple would be.

The designated time was today at noon.

And thus, early this morning, a large number of people had come to congregate outside War God Mountain. Wharton and Nina naturally went to watch this momentous event as well.

Within their carriage.

“Big lunk, who do you think will become the next personal disciple of the War God?” Nina asked. Even in the eyes of an imperial princess, the War God was high and far above them, someone who they could never approach. Since she was born, Nina had never seen the War God once.

In fact, not even the current reigning Emperor, Johann [Qiao'an], had ever met the War God.

But the personally taught disciples of the War God were qualified to meet him. From this, one could see the extremely elite status the War God's personally taught disciples held. In the past, when that Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier, had refused the enticing offer to become a personally taught disciple of the War God, everyone was shocked and filled with admiration.

“The personally taught disciple of the War God would definitely be a person of enormous talent. At the very least, he would be a warrior of the ninth rank, and one with the possibility of reaching the Saint-level.”

Wharton's words were based on historical precedent.

"However, there are too many experts of the ninth rank in the Empire, and talent level is difficult to determine as well. It is very hard to say who the War God will accept as his personal disciple."

Suddenly, the carriage came to a halt.

"Princess, we've already reached War God Mountain. There are too many people up ahead. The carriage can't pass through." The driver called out.

Wharton immediately helped Nina off the carriage.

"There are so many people here." Seeing the sea of people in front of them, Nina couldn't help but be afraid.

At the base of the cloud-topped War God Mountain, people were densely clustered everywhere. Earlier, carriages might have been able to advance, but now, none would be able to. The mountain roads were filled with people.

"Nina." Wharton smiled towards Nina.

"Groooowl." The Saber-Toothed Tiger, who had been following the carriage the entire time, leapt over. Wharton put Nina on top of it. "Have a good seat and take a firm grip. We'll take a shortcut."

Nina was both a warrior and a magus. Although she wasn't very powerful, she was able to clutch quite tightly to the Saber-Toothed Tiger's neck.

"Let's go." Nina was very excited.

The Saber-Toothed Tiger immediately soared into the air, with Wharton travelling at high speed by its side. Wharton and Nina didn't take the main road; rather, they took some hard-to-traverse side roads from the back of the mountain.

Even the toughest, steepest of mountain paths were as easy for the Saber-Toothed Tiger to traverse as flat land. Wharton was extremely agile as well.

The two of them clambered up at high speed. On the way, they encountered quite a few powerful experts who were using the same method as they were. After all, if they had to squeeze in through the main road, who knew how long it would take?

"Here we are." With a final leap, Wharton and the Saber-Toothed Tiger arrived at the main plaza.

"Wow. I'm so scared that my entire body is covered with sweat now." Nina's little face was very red. She hopped off the Saber-Toothed Tiger's back.

The neat, flat stone plaza in front of them was extremely large. There already were over ten thousand people present, and yet it didn't seem crowded at all. In fact, to the contrary; it seemed rather empty.

“Big lunk, did you know that this huge training school’s foundation was originally created by the War God himself? That year, he used one stroke of his sword to slice off the main peak of War God Mountain, then had the War God’s College built on the now-flat land.

Wharton was astonished at the War God’s power.

In truth, War God Mountain actually had several mountain peaks, with one being the primary peak. But the War God effortlessly chopped it off with one blow of his sword, creating a flat surface, upon which these various buildings of the War God’s College were erected, becoming the place where the honorary disciples of the War God’s College would stay.

According to legend, the personally taught disciples of the War God lived at another mountain peak.

“It isn’t time yet. Let’s have a rest.” Holding Nina’s hand, Wharton headed to a nearby stone bench and took a seat.

The plaza began to fill up with more and more people. Finally, the appointed time came.

On the tall dais in the front part of the plaza, there were a large number of people, all of whom were the honorary disciples of the War God’s College. Wharton’s ‘competitor’, Lamonte, was there as well.

“Look. A Saint-level expert.”

"Someone is flying over."

Wharton and Nina all looked upward into the sky. They saw three human forms dressed in blue robes flash through the air, flying shoulder-to-shoulder towards the dais. Finally, they landed.

"Three Saint-level experts!" Everyone present felt their hearts tremble. Normally, even a single Saint-level expert was a rare sight, but now, three had appeared.

After landing, one of the three Saint-level experts, a middle-aged man who appeared to be the leader, said in a loud voice, "Everyone, today, we three fellow apprentices have come at our master's instruction to announce who the 27th personal disciple will be."

Everyone grew quiet.

"All three of them are the personal disciples of the War God." Wharton suddenly felt as though he couldn't breathe. The War God's College was simply too powerful. All three of these personal disciples were Saint-level experts. No wonder the O'Brien Empire was named the most militarily mighty Empire in the world.

That middle-aged man continued, "The last time a personal disciple was accepted was in year 9723 of the Yulan calendar. This is now year 10008 of the Yulan calendar. 285 years have passed."

Everyone below began to murmur. Such a long time had passed between accepting new disciples. 285 years. Many people didn't even live that long.

"I announce that my master's 27th personal disciple will be....Blumer Akerlund [Bu'lu'mo A'qi'lun]!"

Hearing this name, everyone in the plaza immediately let out a roar of joyous approval. At the same time, from within the group of honorary disciples who were standing on the dais, Blumer quietly walked out.

Blumer was rather skinny, and his eyes were slightly sunken. He gave the appearance of being a resolute, cold person.

"Respectful greetings to you, senior fellow apprentices." Blumer bowed as he walked in front of those three men.

Those other three personal disciples of the War God all nodded slightly. Their leader, the middle-aged man, withdrew a scarlet interspatial ring from within his clothes.

Blumer knew that the emblem of one's status as a personal disciple of the War God was always an interspatial ring, and a scarlet red one at that.

"So it's him."

Watching from below, Wharton shook his head slightly. Last time, when he had tried to join the ranks of the honorary disciples, the one who had won in the end was this Blumer.

Unexpectedly, after just a year had passed, Blumer had suddenly become the personal disciple of the War God!

Nina nodded as she said, "The seemingly common and ordinary Akerlund clan actually produced two geniuses in a row. The Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier, was an absolute genius who even the War God wished to take on as his disciple. And now, Olivier's younger brother, Blumer, has himself become the personal disciple of the War God."

However, Wharton's heart was filled with self-confidence despite seeing Blumer's success.

So what if Blumer was able to join the War God's College? Wasn't the point of it all to reach the Saint-level? He, Wharton, upon reaching the Saint-level as a Dragonblood Warrior, would definitely be a powerful expert amongst the Saint-levels.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 55, A Saint-Level Battle

While the citizens of the imperial capital were celebrating the 27th personal disciple the War God had chosen in five thousand years, in the far-off Northwest Administrative Province, Linley and the Saint-level expert, McKenzie, were currently chatting happily over wine. Tonight, they would prepare to do battle.

Tonight, the curved moon hung high in the sky, its faint silver glow covering the world, making it seem as though the entire world had been covered by a layer of gauze.

Atop the small desolate mountain outside the provincial capital of Basil, Linley and McKenzie were walking shoulder to shoulder, with Bebe seated on Linley's shoulder. The others did not come.

The only witness to this battle would be Bebe.

The small mountain was extremely desolate and depopulated. Aside from a few sparse trees, the mountain peak was empty and bare. Linley and McKenzie stood side by side on the top of the mountain. The mountain wind howled drearily, rustling their clothes.

Linley and McKenzie glanced at each other, each understanding the hidden meaning in the other's eyes.

Bebe very obediently hopped off from Linley's shoulders, and Linley removed his upper body clothes, storing them in his interspatial ring. He began to transform, and black scales quickly covered his entire body, while his forehead, back, elbows, and knees began to sprout sharp spikes. That iron-whip-like tail began to swing about behind him, and his eyes suddenly transformed into that merciless dark golden color. That faint layer of blue light appeared on his scales as well. As immense power began to radiate from Linley's body, dust and small rocks began to be caught up in the swirl of energy.

"Supreme Warriors live up to their name." McKenzie's eyes lit up.

"Whoosh!"

Simultaneously, Linley and McKenzie transformed into a pair of rainbows as they flew to the air above the small mountain. They stood there in mid-air, roughly a hundred meters from each other.

McKenzie flipped his hand, and an azure spear appeared within it. "In order to forge this spear, I had to spend twenty million gold coins to purchase all sorts of precious ores. After completing it, I named it 'Azureflame'."

Linley flipped his own hand, and the Bloodviolet flexible sword appeared within it.

"I acquired this sword from a very dangerous location in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Its name is 'Bloodviolet.'"

With regards to his abilities in using Bloodviolet, Linley had reached the fourth level, 'Profound Truths of the Wind'. However, Linley had only reached the first, simplest stage of the 'Profound Truths of the Wind', which he had named 'Rippling Wind'.

But despite that, when combined with the unique properties of Bloodviolet, Linley still felt confident in his ability to deal with McKenzie.

"Being at the Saint-level makes me feel as though I am filled with boundless power." Wielding the Bloodviolet Godsword in his hands, Linley felt extremely confident. "In the past, it was impossible for me to use Bloodviolet to harm a Saint-level combatant. It wasn't that Bloodviolet was insufficiently sharp; it was that my own battle-qi and strength was far from being sufficient."

How could the weapons used by most experts, in terms of sharpness, compare with this divine artifact, the Bloodviolet Godsword?

Bloodviolet was so sharp that if one didn't use any battle-qi, just by virtue of its sharpness, it could pierce the defense of most magical beasts of the seventh rank. How many weapons could possibly compete with such terrifying sharpness?

Once it was matched with a Saint-level amount of battle-qi, its sharpness and power would reach an even more astonishing level.

"Then, let us begin!"

McKenzie's body began to radiate a boundless desire for battle. Standing high up in the air, as the wind blew his long robes about, McKenzie's body suddenly began to be covered with a layer of crackling flame, and the Azureflame spear in his hands began to emit flame as well.

His entire body seemed to have been covered by fire.

Clad in flame, and holding his spear at the ready, McKenzie looked like a god of battle.

"His battle-qi has actually reached such a level." Linley's eyes lit up.

"Boom!" Linley's own battle-qi exploded as well, as that azure-black battle-qi totally covered Linley's body, and also activated Bloodviolet. Those azure-black scales were totally covered by that azure-black battle-qi, making Linley look like a demon from the Infernal Realm.

A hint of a smile was on McKenzie's lips.

Suddenly...

"Swish!"

Linley only saw a blur as McKenzie slashed his way through the air at him. The spear in McKenzie's hands, burning with flame, seemed to have locked down all the surrounding space as it pierced towards Linley with tremendous, boundless power.

At this moment, it seemed as though the only thing which existed in this world was that spear.

"Clang!"

A strange, devilish purple light gently slashed open the locked space, and the tip of the sword clashed against the tip of the spear. As they did, Linley and McKenzie's battle-qi exploded through their weapons at each other.

"Boooom!"

A terrifying explosive sound blasted forth from between the two of them as the power released from this clash of two Saint-level experts burst forth in all directions. Even the boulders dotting the mountain beneath them began to crack apart from the released battle-qi.

The two separated at high speed after the clash.

"Hrm?" Linley glanced at McKenzie once. "His battle-qi is actually slightly more powerful than mine." Dragonblood Warriors simply possessed too much natural talent. Even an early-stage Saint-level Dragonblood Warrior would only have just slightly less battle-qi than an ordinary mid-stage Saint-level combatant.

Of the Four Supreme Warriors, the Undying Warriors had the best defense, the Tigerstriped Warriors had the highest speed, the Violetflame Warriors had the fastest healing speed, but the Dragonblood Warriors had the best offense.

Dragonblood Warriors were nothing to joke about.

"Haha, wonderful. Take another attack from me!" McKenzie laughed loudly as he charged towards Linley at high speed again, transforming into three separate mirages as he did so.

"You want to compete in speed?"

Linley smirked.

Linley's body blurred, then transformed into three separate mirages as he charged towards McKenzie as well, leaving a streak behind in the sky as he did so.

"Haaargh!"

The previously refined McKenzie was now extremely wild and unrestrained as his three mirages transformed into nine. But somehow, those nine shadow-McKenzie's were all wielding the spear in their hands in a different manner.

"Bam!"

The nine mirages spun their spears in different ways, then thrust their spears at Linley.

Originally, Linley had only seen nine spears, but after those spears coiled about mysteriously, suddenly, it seemed as though the entire world was filled with countless spear-shadows.

An infinite number of spear-shadows, giving Linley no place to run.

“Haha...” Linley laughed loudly, while at the same time, he himself transformed into a whirlwind of action. In what seemed like the blink of an eye, Linley’s entire body had turned into a spinning tornado, and surrounding that spinning tornado were countless flashes of that devilish purple light.

Those countless spear-shadows were all blocked by those countless flashes of violet light.

McKenzie was stunned.

“Tornado Technique – Shatter!”

Linley roared loudly, and then he slammed towards McKenzie as though he were a giant warhammer. In the blink of an eye, that Bloodviolet sword in his hand seemed to have transformed into ten thousand different swords.

Those sword strikes all seemed so light and graceful, but when they collided against McKenzie’s spear, McKenzie felt as though they each had the power of a thunderbolt.

Wielding something light as though it were heavy!

“Bam!” “Bam!” “Bam!” “Bam!”

Linley's entire body had been transformed into a tornado, and McKenzie had a feeling as though the heavens themselves were aiding Linley. The strangest thing was, it seemed as though the sword in Linley's hand could disappear then reappear at will.

Under these repeated assault, McKenzie was forced down to the ground from the sky.

"Bam!"

McKenzie landed heavily on the ground, and the earth around him cracked as dust swirled up everywhere. The flames atop of McKenzie's body began to burn even hotter, and the warlike look in his eyes grew only more wild.

Linley landed heavily on the ground as well. Covered in azure-black battle-qi, the aura Linley gave off was totally opposite compared to McKenzie's.

One was domineering and tyrannical. The other was dark and mysterious.

McKenzie lowered his head to glance at his chest.

Fresh blood oozed out from beneath his clothes, and then evaporated under the intense heat of the flames. But McKenzie's bloodstained clothes indicated that he clearly had been wounded.

“Linley, I could understand your movements, but there was one thing I couldn’t understand. How could that Bloodviolet Godsword of yours fuse with the wind so well?” McKenzie was a very experienced Saint-level combatant.

The level of ‘impose’ was that of using the imposing force of the heavens and the earth.

But the amount of natural force which Linley had used to support his attack was truly frightening.

“Of course there is a limit to the amount of energy which the heavens and earth can loan you. As for the reason why you had such trouble defending...” Smiling, Linley lifted Bloodviolet into the air, and it suddenly, bizarrely, began to curve about every which way.

If you wanted a sword to be sufficiently hard and sharp, one of the pre-requisites for that was that the sword would not be able to be very flexible.

“This...this is a flexible sword?” McKenzie was very surprised.

Just then, when Linley exchanged blows with him, he had used Bloodviolet to attack in curving arcs. However, due to Linley’s usage of ‘impose’, the impression that McKenzie had gotten was that the sword would suddenly disappear, then appear from somewhere else.

This was another way one could use ‘impose’.

"Right. This is a flexible sword." Linley said.

"But how can a flexible sword fight head-on against my Azureflame spear?" McKenzie was very shocked.

The reason why a flexible sword could straighten and be hard was because of battle-qi. But how could a weapon which relied on battle-qi to become straight be comparable to a weapon that was straight to begin with?

McKenzie's Azureflame spear was also a very precious spear.

"This is a divine artifact." Linley didn't hide anything.

"A divine artifact." McKenzie nodded in amazement, and then laughed loudly. "Wonderful. Linley, next I will use my ultimate attack. Be careful."

"I have a special attack that I haven't used either." Linley was very confident as well.

Right now, both men were on the ground, staring at each other.

"Haaaargh!"

McKenzie suddenly began to move. He lifted the spear in his hands, pointing it at the sky. Suddenly, with McKenzie as the focal point, an endless wave of flame began to spew out in every direction.

In the blink of an eye, within several hundred meters, everything had turned into a world of flame.

Linley was surrounded and caged in as well. His dark golden eyes watched emotionlessly. Within this World of Flames, McKenzie's image appeared everywhere, along with his spear.

Oppressive!

This World of Flames seemed to be suppressing Linley, and there was no 'imposing force' Linley could draw upon.

"Rumble..." One indistinct spear after another suddenly pierced through the air, thrusting towards Linley. Combined, they formed a seemingly very real fire dragon, which was coiling forth from the flames and roaring at Linley.

And at the same time...

Behind Linley as well, McKenzie bizarrely appeared out of nowhere as he thrust the spear in his hands toward Linley.

One in front, one from behind. Linley had nowhere to run.

"Rippling Wind!"

Linley began to move, and the Bloodviolet flexible sword in his hands suddenly transformed into countless vipers, colliding and striking against the various spear-shadows that were attacking from all around him. Each time his sword struck against a spear, there was a thunderous boom. That astonishingly powerful fire dragon seemed to have been surrounded and wrapped around by a large number of enormous pythons, and as the pythons constricted it, it exploded violently.

"Slash!" McKenzie's spear thrust out towards Linley from behind.

But that Bloodviolet flexible sword very nimbly and agilely curved backwards, blocking the spear. As the flexible sword bounced off the spear, Linley too immediately went flying backwards, moving farther away from McKenzie.

"Bam!" "Bam!" "Bam!" "Bam!"

To his astonishment McKenzie had discovered that the area around Linley seemed to have suddenly given birth to wild gusts of wind, while the Bloodviolet sword in Linley's hands seemed to have turned into a violet bolt of thunder, striking in every direction. In the blink of an eye, his World of Flames had been broken open.

Linley had already located McKenzie.

"Whoosh!" "Whoosh!" "Whoosh!" The Bloodviolet sword in Linley's hands would appear and disappear at random. In McKenzie's eyes, all he could see were countless sword tips stabbing towards him.

It was simply too fast. So fast that McKenzie wasn't able to block them all, and his only option was to rouse his battle-qi to defend against it.

Countless sword tips pierced against his protective layer of battle-qi, and each blow contained an astonishing amount of force. With a sudden exploding sound, that layer of battle-qi blew apart, the force of it causing the earth to rumble, creating ten terrifyingly deep canyons in the ground. Dust flew everywhere.

After a long period of time, the dust finally settled down.

McKenzie's clothes were totally ruined, unsightly beyond repair.

McKenzie glanced at Linley. Chuckling, he nodded. "I lose."

But Linley stared suspiciously at McKenzie. "McKenzie, why were all the spear-shadows in your world of flames so weak and illusionary? My sword easily broke every one of them. If all of those attacks were real, I would have lost."

Linley had already reached a very high level of understanding. He could tell that those spear-shadows were totally capable of becoming real attacks. In other words, those countless spear-shadows could all be real spears. It would have been very difficult for him to block them, if that were the case. But just then, he had easily broken every single spear-shadow.

"Haha, if all of them were real, then I would be a peak-stage Saint-level expert." McKenzie laughed. "My current World of Flames can only reach this current level."

“How is it that your Rippling Wind technique can be so fast? It was even more terrifying than what you were using when we started.” McKenzie asked in puzzlement.

Linley explained, “When we first started to fight, I was only borrowing the imposing force of the wind. As for the Rippling Wind technique, that was part of the insights I gained with regards to the Profound Truths of the Wind. The sword can become one with the wind, and wherever the wind is, the sword can appear.”

The Rippling Wind was indeed fast. Terrifyingly fast.

Linley was only able to develop this terrifying technique thanks to the unique properties of the Bloodviolet sword. Using Bloodviolet with this technique, it wouldn't be hard for Linley to produce over ten million sword attacks in the blink of an eye.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 56, The Magicite Core

“Wherever the wind is, the sword can appear!”

Hearing these words, McKenzie was truly shocked. If he hadn't personally sparred with Linley, upon hearing these words, McKenzie would have taken them to be an empty boast. But just then, he himself had sensed the terrifying speed of those sword attacks, which had reached a speed that was ten, no, a hundred times faster than his own.

There was no way for him to block them, and so he had to rely on his battle-qi to defend against it.

To be forced to such a state, McKenzie was thoroughly convinced of Linley's superiority.

“Linley, you spoke of merging and becoming one with the wind. I...do not understand what you mean.” McKenzie said, frowning slightly.

Linley didn't try to hide anything. Laughing, he said, “McKenzie, you must understand, the wind itself is invisible and formless, but it can be both as fast as the lightning, or utterly slow and calm. My ‘Profound Truths of the Wind’ is, in truth, based on that small amount of insight I have gained into the Laws of the Wind.”

“The Laws.” McKenzie's eyes were filled with admiration. “The highest of truths.”

Every sort of elemental Law was extremely profound and mysterious. In truth, if one could master and understand a sufficiently large amount of one of these Laws, then one's soul would totally merge with the 'elemental world' and crystallize into a divine spark, allowing one to reach the Deity-level.

As for Linley, he had just barely scratched the surface of these Laws.

Whether it was the 'Profound Truths of the Earth' or the 'Profound Truths of the Wind', Linley had only understood the smallest portion, like a single drop of water in an endless sea.

"By merging with the wind, my sword can appear wherever the wind is. But this sort of technique has a very high requirement with regards to the composition of the sword itself, because it requires the sword to almost instantly move from one place to another, causing the sword to come under enormous stress." Linley smirked. "If there was no such requirement or drawback, then wouldn't I be able to essentially teleport myself around by merging into the wind?"

Linley could indeed merge with the wind, but his body simply couldn't handle the amount of speed and stress it would suffer from teleportation-like movement speeds.

"Haha, teleportation, eh? Even Deity-level combatants are not capable of such a thing." McKenzie sighed.

No matter how powerful an expert was, even one such as the War God, they could at most move as fast as lightning. No one was capable of teleportation. Although people often talked about 'teleportation', that was just how the weak described the high speed movements of Saint-level experts who did battle.

Saint-level experts were simply too fast. Those ordinary people could only see that the Saint-level experts were sometimes here, and other times there. They took this to be teleportation.

In truth, there was no such thing as teleportation.

Even if there was, it wasn't something which the likes of the War God was capable of.

"McKenzie, what about that technique of yours? What was that all about? Just now, I couldn't sense you at all. I felt as though all of those countless spear-shadows surrounding me were real." Linley stared at McKenzie questioningly as well.

When Saint-level experts sparred, it did indeed help them learn more and faster. Naturally, Linley wouldn't give up this opportunity by being shy about asking.

McKenzie laughed. "Actually, this sort of attack is a fairly common one. Generally speaking, most peak-stage Saint-level combatants use such an attack."

"Oh?" Linley looked at McKenzie in astonishment.

"In the past, during the War God's battle with the High Priest, many experts witnessed the terrifying power of a Deity's "Godrealm".

Afterwards, many Saint-level combatants wanted to create an attack that could duplicate the effect of a Godrealm. In truth, that attack I used just now was a sort of 'Pseudo-Realm' attack." McKenzie laughed at himself self-deprecatingly.

Linley continued to look at McKenzie.

What Linley wanted to know was the underlying principles behind this sort of attack.

"Actually, this sort of attack is extremely wasteful." McKenzie said emotionally. "For example, I myself am a practitioner walking on the path of understanding the 'Laws of Fire'."

Every Saint-level practitioner had their own paths to understanding the various Laws. Only, they would all focus on different types of Laws.

"This attack, the 'Pseudo-Realm', basically forces one to blast out all of one's battle-qi, while at the same time summoning and igniting all of the surrounding area's fire elemental essence, causing everything within a hundred meters to turn into a sea of flame. Because my own battle-qi has merged with the fire elemental essence, this causes the entire sea of flame to be imprinted with my own aura, making you unable to detect where my true body is located."

"However, my control is insufficient. I can only control my battle-qi to form a single true attack from the elemental essence. If I were able to control all the other spear-shadows and change them into real attacks, you would be in a great deal of trouble." McKenzie laughed.

Linley was beginning to understand.

The underlying principles of this technique were quite simple. The difficulty lay in the control of elemental essence.

For example, 'impose' was just borrowing on the natural force of the heavens, but this 'Pseudo-Realm' was different. It required complete control! Generally speaking, it was impossible for a Saint-level to totally control all the elemental essence in a given area. This was something only a Deity-level expert could perform.

But Saint-level experts were very intelligent. By blasting out all of their of battle-qi, they allowed their battle-qi to merge with the elemental essence, then used it to control the elemental essence. Although it required them to use a large amount of effort and battle-qi, they were able to just barely create this 'Pseudo-Realm'.

But despite that, its control over elemental essence was far inferior to that of the 'Godrealm' technique.

Linley had personally experienced how the King of Killers, Cesar, had used the power of his Godrealm to freeze both Linley as well as the peak-stage Saint-level expert, Stehle, in the blink of an eye, causing them both to be unable to move.

That sort of control over elemental essence was absolutely terrifying.

Compared to it, the 'Pseudo-Realm' was far weaker.

“This Pseudo-Realm does have its strong points. Although it consumes a huge amount of battle-qi, as long as one is at a high level of understanding, one can suddenly create ten million attacks out of nowhere. In addition, it also allows one to hide one’s body. It is more powerful than my own ‘Rippling Wind’ technique. The only weakness is that it uses up too much battle-qi, and is very wasteful.”

But then, Linley quickly shook his head.

“No. This is simply a clever little technique to mimic the Godrealm ability. Although it is a test of a person’s ability to control elemental essence, it has virtually nothing to do with a person’s actual level of understanding with regards to the Laws.” Linley believed that this was definitely a wrong path of training, not a correct path.

Earth, fire, wind, water. Each had its own Laws, such as the Laws of the Earth.

A complete, perfect set of elemental Laws was like a complete, perfectly constructed building. Every single brick in this building was akin to one of the profound mysteries of the Laws. Each Law contained within it countless numbers of profound mysteries.

Linley had gained insight into one particular mystery, and had developed his vibrational attack technique. This should be considered one of the higher class mysteries of the Laws of the Earth.

After this battle, both Linley as well as McKenzie were now in absolutely tattered clothes. But of course, only Linley’s pants were torn. The two changed their clothes, then smiling, left the mountain.

“Squeaaaaak!” On Linley’s shoulders, Bebe delightedly squeaked at McKenzie, baring his fangs. It was as though Bebe was mocking McKenzie for losing.

“You little rascal. Jeeze...” McKenzie laughed involuntarily.

Linley laughed as well. Per Linley’s instructions, Bebe wasn’t giving any sign that he was at the Saint-level of power. Only when it was absolutely necessary would Linley reveal this trump card of his.

Under the moonlight, the two Saint-level experts chatted and laughed on the way back to the provincial capital of Basil.

The next morning, no matter how McKenzie tried to persuade him, Linley was still determined to head off to the imperial capital. Out of options, McKenzie personally sent them off, escorting them for over a hundred kilometers. By nightfall, the group arrived at a harbor at the Yulan river.

Early on, McKenzie had sent people to arrange a three-story boat for Linley at the harbor.

“Mr. McKenzie, there’s no need to escort us any further.”

By now, Linley was on extremely good terms with McKenzie. This McKenzie had escorted them for a hundred kilometers, all the way to the port. How could Linley not be grateful for McKenzie’s kindness and courtesy?

“Brother Linley, I really hate the fact that I can’t spend a few more months with you. However, you are in a rush to meet with your little brother, so I know it isn’t appropriate for me to insist on you staying either.” McKenzie said seriously. “Brother Linley, have a safe trip.”

As McKenzie watched, Linley’s group boarded this ship, and then, following the tides of the Yulan river, began to sail south.

The Yulan river was extremely wide, and the river waters were turgid.

This ship was much finer than the ship Linley had previously rented. In addition, the skills of its sailors were much higher as well. Although they went down the same general direction with the flow of the river, they were clearly moving much faster than before.

“This is the Yulan River? It really is huge.” Barker and his brothers were standing at the railing, staring at the roiling river waves, their eyes shining.

Barker and his brothers came from the Eighteen Northern Duchies. They were used to seeing the land covered in snow and ice, but had never seen such an enormous river.

Rebecca and Leena were very excited as well, while Jenne chatted with them about the Yulan river.

Right now, Bebe and Haeru, the two magical beasts, were growling in conversation to each other.

Linley knew that ever since Bebe had reached the Saint-rank, Haeru had felt all the more ashamed in front of Bebe. After all, Haeru was a peak-stage magical beast of the ninth rank. He was used to being proud and arrogant. But now, he had suffered a severe mental blow due to Bebe.

"Haeru, come with me."

Linley glanced at Haeru, then headed directly to the second floor of the ship. Bebe and Haeru immediately followed after him. Right now, the second floor of the ship was fairly empty.

"Boss, why'd you have Haeru come over?" Bebe suddenly asked. While outsiders were present, Bebe didn't dare to speak, but now, with no one else present, Bebe was going to have a good, spoken chat. Bebe actually very much enjoyed speaking in human tongues.

Haeru's cold eyes stared questioningly at Linley.

He didn't know what his master, Linley, was planning to do.

"Haeru, in the past, didn't you and Bebe both want that darkness-type Saint-level magicite core?" Linley laughed.

Hearing these words, the intelligent Haeru instantly understood what Linley intended to do, and his eyes immediately lit up.

"Boss, you are giving him the Saint-level magicite core?" Bebe was able to guess it as well.

"What, are you opposed?" Linley looked at Bebe.

Bebe happily shook his little head, then looked at Haeru pityingly as he said mockingly, "Of course not. Although Haeru is sometimes a little bit cocky, he's still a fine fellow. In the future, he'll be following me, right? I'm a Saint-level magical beast. If my followers are too weak, that'll be really embarrassing to me."

Listening to Bebe's words, Linley couldn't control his laughter from coming out.

"Enough. Haeru, eat this Saint-level magicite core, then go to your room. I won't let anyone disturb you." With a flip of his hand, Linley retrieved that darkness-style Saint-level magicite core he had acquired so long ago.

Thinking back to the affairs of his youth, and that terrifying battle between the Armored Razorback Wurm and the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear, Linley couldn't help but secretly sigh.

Time had gone by. The current Linley most likely had the strength to fight head on against the Armored Razorback Wurm or the Saint-level Violet Tattooed Bear. But back then, all he could do was hide.

"Bebe, you go to Haeru's room as well. Help me keep an eye on him. If anything important and out of the ordinary happens when Haeru is trying to break through, immediately inform me." Linley was concerned about any side effects Haeru might have from eating the Saint-level magicite core.

"Got it, Boss." Bebe puffed out his chest, saluting.

Linley tossed the darkness-style Saint-level magicite to Haeru. Haeru opened his jaws, catching it in his mouth as he cast a grateful look at Linley. Given his level of intelligence, Haeru knew exactly how valuable a Saint-level magicite core was. What's more, it wasn't a guarantee that he would break through upon eating the Saint-level magicite core. He did have a chance of failure.

But Linley still had given him the Saint-level magicite core.

"I hope Haeru won't disappoint me." Watching Haeru and Bebe enter Haeru's room, Linley secretly sighed. And then, he once more returned to the main deck, enjoying the view of the turgid waters of the Yulan river.

The ship continued to head south through the Yulan river at high speed as it had previously. As for the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, he was beginning to charge towards the barrier between him and the Saint-level.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 57, Yet Another Saint-Level

A Saint-level magicite core contained the essence of a Saint-level magical beast's magical power. A Saint-level magicite core was something that was very hard to consume, and which would take a significant amount of time to do so. In the past, because Linley had the legendary 'Dragonblood Warrior bloodline', his special bloodline eventually dissolved and absorbed that ninth-rank magicite core of the Armored Razorback Wurm.

But even after he had dissolved and absorbed that magicite core of the ninth rank, the residual energy of the core remained in Linley's body, alongside his Dragonblood. It hadn't been totally mastered and utilized by Linley.

"As the current continues to take us south, from here to the Southwest Administrative Province, we will have travelled more than three thousand kilometers. Such an enormous distance will take several days, even though we are following the current."

Looking at the roiling waves, Linley said to himself.

Who knows if a few days would be enough for Haeru to finish dissolving and absorbing that Saint-level magicite core. Linley himself didn't have any experience of course when it came to the subject of peak-stage magical beasts of the ninth rank absorbing magicite cores.

"Gates, why are you going back inside? The scenery around the Yulan river is pretty good." The third brother, Hazer, said in a loud voice.

Of the Barker brothers, four were standing in front of the railing, enjoying the beautiful sights of the Yulan river. Only Gates was heading back into the cabin.

"Big bro and second bro have already made their breakthroughs, third bro. You guys can watch, but I'm not in the mood. I don't want to waste time. I'll go back and train." Gates replied back loudly.

Hazer was caught off-guard.

Linley turned to stare at Gates in surprise. Right now, only two of the five had mastered the level of 'wielding something heavy as though it were light'. One was Barker, while the other was Gates. Gates was a very proud person. Linley knew this quite well.

"Gates is right." The fourth brother, Boone, nodded as well. "I will go train as well."

The third brother, Hazer, followed Boone into the cabin as well, leaving behind just Barker and Ankh. The two exchange glances, then began to laugh.

"Second bro, you have to work hard. If Gates makes a breakthrough, he'll be more powerful than you." Barker laughed as he spoke to Ankh.

Ankh nodded, drawing out the two giant long-handled greataxes on his back. "I'm going to the rear deck to train with my weapons."

"I'll go with you." Barker drew out his own long-handled greataxes as well.

The long-handled greataxes of Barker and his brothers were quite astonishing. These might be the heaviest weapons that existed in the modern world. 5300 pounds each, they were quite suited to the Undying Warriors, famed amongst the Supreme Warriors for their strength.

Zassler laughed as he stroked his white beard. "Those five brothers really have become quite hard working. They make this old man feel a bit ashamed."

But despite saying that, Zassler continued to admire the local scenery.

At Zassler's current level, what he needed was a flash of insight. Training alone wouldn't provide that.

Smiling, Linley stood on the front of the ship. Slowly, Linley closed his eyes. The wind over the wide Yulan river was quite strong, and it buffeted Linley's robes, causing Linley to sway ever so slightly.

Linley had totally become one with the wind, and could sense the movements of the wind elemental essence.

.....

Time flowed on like water. In the blink of an eye, four days had passed, and the ship had entered the domain of the Southwest Administrative Province. In two days or so, they should be able to reach the harbor they were aiming for.

“Big brother Linley is training?” Jenne said quietly.

Rebecca and Leena both shook her heads, indicating that they didn’t know.

Right now, it was late at night, but Linley continued to stand on the deck of the ship, his eyes closed. If someone thought Linley was asleep, though, they would have been wrong. Because every so often, a flash of violet light would pass by Linley’s body.

The difference was, this time, Linley wasn’t aiming for speed.

When he was training in the ‘Rippling Wind’ technique, Linley’s body was always surrounded by innumerable sword flashes. But right now, there was one just one violet flash at a time.

No one knew what Linley was training.

“Wielding something heavy as though it were light. Wielding something light as though it were heavy. It can be as fierce as the storm winds, or as gentle as the spring wind.” After having trained for so long, Linley finally was gaining some insight with regards to the second stage of the Profound Truths of the Wind.

Profound Truths of the Wind, stage one – Rippling Wind. This relied on pursuing speed to the highest levels.

In truth, once a technique's speed reached a certain level, its attack power would also be extremely powerful. This was the reason why Linley could break through McKenzie's defense in an instant.

But the second stage of the Profound Truths of the Wind which Linley was developing was a very unique type of attack.

When he struck out with his sword, sometimes the sword would flash like lightning, while other times it would be as heavy as a mountain. In truth, this sword attack was very fast, but it gave the impression of constantly rippling and fluctuating between being fast and being slow.

That was the intention of this technique.

"Profound Truths of the Wind, stage two – Tempos of the Wind."

A smile was on Linley's face. He slashed through the air with Bloodviolet, and when it did, he gave off two distinctly different impressions; one was that this attack was as fierce and explosive as the winds of a hurricane, while the other was that it was as gentle and calm as the spring wind which blew through the willows.

One technique with two opposing rhythms.

"These two totally opposite tempos, when merged together, can give birth to a blade made of air." Linley continued to pursue his goal of using his sword to create the 'Dimensional Edge' type of attack.

This 'Tempos of the Wind' was a single-target attack.

Although its power was far inferior to the 'Dimensional Edge' spell, which was so terrifyingly powerful that it could cut through the walls of reality itself, the power of the 'Tempo of the Wind' had already exceeded that of the 'Rippling Wind' technique.

This was especially true in one-on-one combat.

"This second stage of the Profound Truths of the Wind, the Tempos of the Wind technique, should be capable of posing a threat to peak-stage Saint-level experts." When Linley had sparred with McKenzie, he had gained a better understanding of what peak-stage Saint-level experts were like. "However, this 'Tempos of the Wind' technique is most likely one of the more basic mysteries of the Laws of the Wind that I have gained some insight onto.

Linley had to admit that the Tempos of the Wind was an extremely powerful technique.

But the 'Tempos of the Wind' could only be considered the most basic, rudimentary level of the 'Dimensional Edge' spell. It was still a material, physical attack, which the opponent could use battle-qi or armor to defend against.

But the resonating vibrations produced by the 'Profound Truths of the Earth' was clearly a higher level of attack. Those vibrations didn't need to break the opponent's armor; it could simply bypass it and attack the internals directly.

“To an ordinary Saint-level expert, using Bloodviolet should be enough.” Linley chuckled. “Unless, of course, I encounter some particularly powerful peak-stage Saint-level experts.”

Peak-stage Saint-level experts had varying levels of power as well.

For example, Stehle and the Holy Emperor were both peak-stage Saint-level experts, but Stehle was much weaker than the Holy Emperor. After all, the Holy Emperor trained in Oracular Magic.

Or for example, the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, reputed to be the most powerful Saint-level in existence. To date, not a single expert had been able to overcome Haydson.

Of course, there were people who had never competed against Haydson, such as the Holy Emperor, or the Dark Patriarch. They didn’t dare compete against him, because their exalted statuses meant they simply couldn’t afford to lose. Unless they were totally certain of victory, they wouldn’t compete.

.....

The fifth day on the ship, at around noon, just as Linley and the others were eating lunch and chatting casually, suddenly....

“Boss, come quick!” Bebe’s urgent voice rang out in Linley’s mind.

Without hesitating slightly, Linley immediately began to run towards Haeru’s private room. “You guys, keep eating.” He instructed as he entered Haeru's room.

Closing the door, Linley stared in astonishment.

"Rumble." It seemed as though beneath the Blackcloud Panther's skin, there were small mice running around, as his muscles and flesh constantly twitched. A black light surrounded his entire body. His eyes closed, the Blackcloud Panther constantly moaned in pain.

At the same time, the patterns on the Blackcloud Panther's body were beginning to change as well. Sometimes his four limbs would turn snow white, while later they would turn totally black. Sometimes, his entire body would turn snow white....

Bizarre.

The most astonishing thing was that the Blackcloud Panther's head was covered with two circulating gusts of blue and black energy.

"Boss, Haeru's been like this for a while. I don't know what to do either." Bebe said with concern.

Linley looked at Haeru.

"Haeru." Linley said to him mentally.

"Ma...master. I'm fine!" Haeru's agonized voice rang out in Linley's mind. Linley forced himself to suppress his anxiety, just watching and waiting.

Linley's attention was focused on Haeru's head. The most important part of a magical beast was their head; their magicite cores were there, after all.

In the air above and around the Blackcloud Panther's head, those two streams of blue and black energy continued to spin about at high speed. Sometimes, the black energy would expand, but then a moment later, the amount of black energy would decrease, and the blue energy would increase in amount.

This repeated over and over!

And then, those two gusts of energy suddenly emitted a terrifying amount of force. Even Linley was shocked. If these two gusts of energy were to explode, most likely the entire boat would be transformed into rubble.

"Rumble." Linley's body immediately became covered with a layer of black scales. Without hesitating in the slightest, Linley immediately transformed into his Dragonform.

If he wasn't in his Dragonblood Warrior form, if these two gusts of energy were to explode, Linley wouldn't be able to take it. Linley's remorseless, dark golden eyes stared at the Blackcloud Panther, his gaze as sharp as daggers.

Suddenly, those two gusts of blue and black energy returned to their earlier state of calmness as they directly entered the Blackcloud Panther's skull. And then, the Blackcloud Panther's body grew calm as well, and the patterns on his body stopped changing.

Linley let out his held breath.

Right now, the Blackcloud Panther's body was covered with beads of blood. That transformation just now had been a transformation in both physical and spiritual terms.

The Blackcloud Panther opened his eyes, staring with grateful joy at Linley.

"You succeeded?" A hint of a smile was on Linley's lips as he immediately returned to his human form. Only, his upper body clothes were ruined once again.

"Yes, Master." These growling, cold words in the human tongue came forth from the Blackcloud Panther's lips.

A faint gust of blue light appeared on the Blackcloud Panther's body, gently wiping off all of the beads of blood, restoring him once more to his normal, glossy black color.

"Not bad." Bebe floated over to the Blackcloud Panther, chortling. "It's a good thing that you didn't waste that Saint-level magicite core. Otherwise..."

Haeru looked away.

He could guess that if he had failed, Bebe would have given him a thorough beating.

"Enough. Let's all head out." Linley said after changing into another set of clothes.

Because of how his Dragonform transformation ruined his clothes, Linley had stored over a hundred set of clothes in his interspatial ring. But of course, to the current Linley, the amount of money it cost to buy clothes was a miniscule amount.

....

On the sixth morning they spent on the boat, the boat finally reached the harbor they were headed towards.

"We finally arrived." Rebecca, Leena, and Jenne, the three ladies, all stared excitedly with bright eyes. But just at this moment, from the rear deck, the sound of loud, explosive, excited laughter could be heard.

"Hrm?"

Linley, Zassler, and the others both turned to stare at the rear deck, where Barker and his brothers had been training this entire time.

"Barker, the five of you, hurry on over. We're about to reach the shore." Rebecca called out loudly.

"Coming, coming." Barker and his brothers walked over, laughing loudly. All of their eyes were on Linley, and there was a look of irrepressible joy on their faces.

Seeing that look on the faces of Barker and his brothers, Linley began to wonder. "These five brothers....can it be...can it be that yet another has broken through?"

Right now, of the five brothers, the oldest brother Barker and the second brother Ankh had reached the Saint-level in power. The others, in their human forms, were still only at the peak of the eighth rank.

"Lord." Barker's face was filled with excitement. "Gates has broken through as well!"

"Gates has broken through?"

Although he had predicted it, Linley still felt a surge of joy and excitement. He couldn't help but to turn and look at Gates. The usually loud and boisterous Gates was currently just scratching his head and beaming happily.

When they had left Basil and boarded the ship, Linley's forces consisted of four Saint-level combatants; Linley, Bebe, Barker, and Ankh. But upon landing, Linley's forces now consisted of six Saint-level experts.

Not a single Empire would dare be discourteous to such a terrifying force.

Taking a look behind at the Blackcloud Panther Haeru, then at the beaming Gates, Linley shouted with heroic gusto, "Haha, everyone, disembark! Let's go! We are heading to the imperial capital!"

"Let's go!" The five brothers also roared happily.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 58, Blumer's Request

Linley's group disembarked at the port, beginning to travel in the direction of the imperial capital. But as this port was in the central region of the Southwest Administrative Province, from there to the center of the O'Brien Administrative Province was a journey of four thousand kilometers after factoring in the curving roads.

Such a long distance would take at least ten days or half a month, even if one rode horses at full gallop the entire time.

On the road to the imperial capital of Channe, many people were talking about the rising star of the Empire; Blumer Akerlund.

"I hear that anyone who becomes the personal disciple of the War God has the possibility of becoming a Saint-level combatant eventually. Blumer is so lucky."

"What do you mean, 'has the possibility'? It is guaranteed."

In many of the common restaurants of the imperial capital, the drinking men would loudly chat about this subject. "That day, when it was announced that Blumer would be the personal disciple, I was there myself. Three of the personal disciples of the War God came, and all three were Saint-level experts."

"Not all of his students are necessarily at the Saint-level. The War God has accepted a total of twenty seven disciples, and the first one was accepted over five thousand years ago. He might have died by now. And there are the other personal disciples who have disappeared. Who knows if they all reached the Saint-level or not?" Someone else disputed.

"You don't believe in the power of the War God?"

"Of course I believe in the War God, but are his personal disciples necessarily that formidable?" The man pursed his lips. "Training requires natural talent. Look at the Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier. He trained on his own and yet still became so powerful. How many of the disciples of the War God can compete with Olivier?"

"You aren't Olivier. You aren't qualified to speak poorly of Blumer. What's more, Lord Olivier and Lord Blumer are siblings, you know!"

That year, when Olivier had entered the Saint-level, he had easily defeated the Stellar Sword Saint, Dillon. Thus, everyone believed that Olivier already possessed the power of a peak-stage Saint-level combatant.

Although Dillon himself was only a mid-stage Saint-level expert, if Olivier wasn't at the peak-stage, how could he so easily defeat Dillon?

"I hear that tomorrow, His Imperial Majesty is going to hold a personal audience with Blumer and confer upon him a title of nobility." Someone suddenly said.

"I've heard this as well. Tomorrow, many of the nobles of the imperial capital will be visiting the 'Martial Palace'.

The O'Brien Empire was an Empire which highly valued martial strength and valued their military. Since the founding Emperor of the Empire was the War God, it was natural that this was the case. Whenever the Emperor of the Empire wished to meet with his ministers, he would summon them to the Martial Palace.

The Martial Palace was named by the War God himself.

The next day.

Many nobles of the imperial capital got up very early this day. They dressed formally, then one after another, entered their carriages and headed towards the imperial palace. Today, the Emperor was going to confer a title of nobility on Blumer. This was a major affair.

Every single personal disciple of the War God would receive a title of nobility from the Empire.

For an Emperor to have the chance to do so even a single time was already quite lucky. After all, in the past five thousand years, there had been over a hundred Emperors, but only twenty seven personal disciples.

The rank of the title was already set. It was never as high as a 'Duke'; it was usually a 'Marquis'.

"After becoming the personal disciple of the War God, the noble rank conferred to Blumer is even higher than the one I received." Wharton casually thought to himself while riding in his carriage.

Personal disciples had a very exalted status. After all, anyone qualified to become a personal disciple was almost certainly capable of reaching the Saint-level.

What's more, they had the backing of the War God himself. Naturally, no one dared to offend him. And if you offended a single personal disciple, all the other personal disciples would possibly appear as well.

Upon reaching the palace gates, Wharton left his carriage and casually headed inside alongside the other nobles.

The Martial Palace usually only had around a hundred or so senior ministers present for morning court, but today was a special occasion. Many nobles who usually did not need to attend morning court were present, and thus a very high number of people were there.

Ordinary imperial nobles weren't even qualified to join this ceremony. Those who did participate were all people with power and authority. As for Wharton, he was a Count who had received his title of nobility from the Emperor himself, and thus he was qualified to participate.

The Martial Palace normally seemed very large and empty, but now that it was filled with over eight hundred nobles and senior ministers, it didn't seem very large at all. People were everywhere.

"Blumer, congratulations."

In the center of the palace, many people were surrounding Blumer, warmly congratulating him. Blumer's older brother was a Saint-level expert, while Blumer in the future would most likely become a Saint-level expert as well. Even the most powerful of clans wouldn't be so foolish as to anger a Saint-level expert.

Blumer quietly nodded in response to each of the nobles.

"Worldly power?" Blumer didn't care about it.

In his heart, the one he truly worshipped was his older brother, Olivier. Even the sword techniques that he utilized had been developed, then taught to him by Olivier.

Ever since he was young, Olivier had displayed astonishing amounts of talent, and he always protected Blumer as well. If anyone dared to mistreat Blumer, Olivier would definitely avenge his little brother.

"Big brother is training alone on that mountain peak. I wonder what level he has now reached." Blumer silently wondered to himself.

Nearly nine years ago, his older brother had entered the Saint-level and easily defeated the Stellar Sword Saint, Dillon. At that time, there were some who already believed that Olivier possessed the power of a peak-stage Saint-level expert.

But Olivier didn't accept any gifts or titles. He just left by himself, continuing his training.

Three years ago, Olivier began training alone in a barren mountain outside the imperial capital. No one knew how powerful Olivier, who nine years ago already possessed the power of a peak-stage Saint-level, had now become.

“Perhaps one day, my older brother will reach the Deity-level as well.” In Blumer’s heart, his older brother was an indisputable genius. There was nothing his older brother could not accomplish.

And indeed, this was the case.

Olivier was such a genius that even the War God had sighed in praise and wanted to accept as a disciple.

“His Imperial Majesty has arrived.” Many nobles noticed that the Emperor had arrived, and they immediately returned to their designated positions, forming neat rows as they paid their respects to the Emperor.

The Emperor of the O’Brien Empire, Johann O’Brien, was a fairly just Emperor, aside from that little problem of being biased.

Johann was fairly tall, standing 1.9 meters high. Even after becoming Emperor, he continued to train his battle-qi, causing his body to be powerful and sturdy. Dressed in his imperial robes, he sat on his imperial throne, looking down at everyone.

“Haha, where is Blumer?” Emperor Johann laughed as he looked down at his subjects. Today, Johann was extremely happy. Neither his father nor his grandfather had the opportunity to confer a rank of nobility on one of the personal disciples of the War God, but he did.

This sort of opportunity would happen only once in a lifetime.

With nearly eight hundred people standing before him, Johann couldn't immediately see where Blumer was. Blumer strode out from the crowd. Standing in the center of the palace, he bowed respectfully. "Blumer pays his respects to you, Imperial Majesty."

Johann carefully inspected Blumer, then sighed in praise. "You are indeed incredible. Who would have expected that the Akerlund clan would suddenly produce two geniuses. You are not inferior to your elder brother at all."

A hint of a smile was on Blumer's face.

Whenever others put him on the same level as his older brother, Blumer felt very proud.

"We are very happy that you are able to become the personal disciple of the War God. Today, We shall bequeath unto you the hereditary noble title of Marquis, a manor on Boulder Street, a hundred guards, a hundred maids, and a hundred thousand gold coins." Johann said loudly.

Everyone stared jealously at Blumer.

Generally speaking, with each generation, the noble rank of Marquis would be lowered by one rank. If future descendants were incompetent, after a few generations, they would be commoners again and the noble rank would be lost.

But hereditary noble titles were different. They never dropped in rank. A hereditary rank of Marquis was far more important than even most ordinary Dukedoms. The Empire had many dukes, over a hundred. But very few of them were hereditary.

“Thank you, your Imperial Majesty.” Blumer bowed respectfully.

Johann nodded in satisfaction. Actually, this gift was already pre-determined. Every personal disciple of the War God was given a Marquisdom, and in each case it was a hereditary title.

Amidst the crowd of nobles and senior ministers, Wharton looked at Blumer, standing proudly in the center.

Previously, he had lost out to Blumer when the War God’s College was selecting honorary disciples. The gifts the Emperor had previously given Wharton was the hereditary title of Count, fifty guards, fifty maids, and fifty thousand gold coins. Clearly, Blumer’s gift was a level higher.

Wharton didn’t care too much about worldly goods.

But in his heart, Wharton had already considered Blumer as an opponent. “Although he is nearly ten years older than me, he’s only an ordinary person. I am a Dragonblood Warrior. These two cancel out. No matter what, I won’t let myself be weaker than him.” Wharton was extremely proud and stubborn.

But he hid these feelings in his heart.

"Blumer, today, We are in an extremely good mood. You are the first personal disciple that We have conferred a title of nobility on after We succeeded to the throne. Haha. Tell me, is there anything you desire? So long as it is reasonable, We will definitely agree." Johann's voice rang out in the Martial Palace.

Everyone's gazes turned towards Blumer.

Actually, these words from Johann were just a form of courtesy. Historically speaking, the vast majority of personal disciples would say something like, "Thank you for your kindness, your Imperial Majesty." They wouldn't actually request anything.

"Your Imperial Majesty, your servant does indeed have a boon to request." Blumer said.

Wharton stared at Blumer with a bit of surprise.

"Speak." Johann magnanimously waved his hand.

Blumer bowed before speaking. "Your Imperial Majesty, your servant has seen the Seventh Princess, and as soon as I saw her, my heart was trapped by her. Your servant humbly begs that your Imperial Majesty give me the Seventh Princess' hand in marriage."

After he said this, everyone in the palace was stunned.

Asking to marry a princess!

This Blumer actually asked to marry a princess.

Hearing these words, Wharton felt his head grow dizzy. He shook his head, staring fixedly at Blumer in the center of the palace.

Blumer only stared quietly at the Emperor.

"Your servant humbly begs that your Imperial Majesty grant your servant's request." Blumer said again.

All the nearby nobles and senior ministers turned to look at Wharton. Who in the imperial capital didn't know about Wharton and Nina? Just a while ago, Caylan, the son of the Imperial Left Premier, had personally sought out his Imperial Majesty to inform him that he would no longer pursue the Seventh Princess.

Many people believed that Wharton and Nina would definitely be a couple.

Even Emperor Johann had been planning to select an auspicious day to have Wharton and Nina marry. But this request by Blumer caused Johann to suddenly reconsider.

Johann glanced at Wharton, who stood out in the crowd. At 2.2 meters tall, he was the tallest of the local nobles and ministers.

Chuckling, Johann said, "Blumer, We truly desire to grant you this boon as well, but We must also ask Nina what she thinks. Don't be impatient. Haha..."

"Yes, Your Imperial Majesty." Blumer didn't say anything else.

After court was adjourned, Wharton exchanged a quick stare with Blumer before the two left the Martial Palace. For Blumer to suddenly act in such way had indeed caught Wharton off guard.

The Emperor, Johann, was taking a stroll in his flower garden. He was in a wonderful mood.

"That Olivier cares nothing for fame or nobility. It is hard for me to recruit him. I was thinking about how to draw the Akerlund clan closer to me, but I didn't expect...I didn't expect..."

To Johann, Olivier, who had defeated the Stellar Sword Saint Dillon as soon as Olivier had entered the Saint-rank, was indeed a person worth building a relationship with.

And his younger brother was the personal disciple of the War God.

The Akerlund clan, in the future, would almost certainly possess two mighty Saint-level combatants.

"Olivier was so powerful upon entering the Saint-level. In the future, he'll definitely be even more astonishing. At the same time, I can't refuse to give face to the personal disciple of the War God." Johann frowned.

“But that Wharton...”

This was the reason why Johann hadn't immediately agreed in the Martial Palace.

Wharton and Nina were truly in love with each other.

“Wharton only has the support of the decaying Dragonblood Warrior clan, while behind Blumer is the support of the War God and Olivier.”

Johann truly did give great weight to Blumer's position as the personal disciple of the War God.

“I'll keep delaying for now. No rush.” Johann decided to use the same strategy he had previously used against Wharton and Caylan when they were struggling over Nina. Only, in his heart, Johann was already inclined towards Blumer.

But what the nobles of the imperial capital, Channe, did not know was that at this very moment, Linley's group of six Saint-level experts were hastening in the direction of the imperial capital.

Book 8, The Ten Thousand Kilometer Journey – Chapter 59, The Brothers Meet

Several days had passed since Blumer received the title of Marquis.

"Milord." The guards at the gate of the Count's manor saluted respectfully.

Wharton seemed to have not noticed the guards at all. Not glancing at the guards in the slightest, he headed directly into his manor. The two guards looked at each other.

"The Lord Count has been really out of it the past few days. Just now, he was lost in his own world again."

"Right. In the past, he would always smile at us and even greet us. From the looks of it, that Blumer's request in the palace to be allowed to marry the princess had a major impact on the Lord Count."

The news of Blumer requesting the princess' hand in marriage had already spread throughout the capital.

Many people in the imperial capital knew about the affairs of Wharton, Seventh Princess Nina, and Blumer. In the main streets and the little alleyways, in the hotels and the restaurants, this topic could often be heard discussed.

"Wharton, what's wrong?" A voice rang out.

Wharton turned to see who spoke to him. It was Hillman's son, Nader. Shaking his head, Wharton let out a sigh. Nader understood. "The Seventh Princess didn't show up?"

"Yeah." Wharton nodded.

Wharton and the Seventh Princess often went on dates together, and the timing of these dates had become quite regular. But ever since Blumer had requested to marry Nina at the Martial Palace, Wharton had only met Nina a single time, the day after that event. The next three days, he hadn't met Nina.

He wasn't even able to see her. Naturally, Wharton felt very miserable.

Nader felt very aggrieved on Wharton's behalf as well. Snorting, he said, "Blumer must be messed up in the head. He actually directly asked that the Seventh Princess be given to him in marriage. What the hell is wrong with him."

"It's pointless to talk about it right now." Wharton shook his head.

Just at this moment...

"Lord Count, Lord Count." A clear voice rang out from outside. Turning his head, Wharton saw that the speaker was the personal hand-servant of the Imperial Seventh Princess, Lucy [Lu'si].

"Let her in." Wharton immediately said.

The guards let Lucy run in. Panting, Lucy charged straight towards Wharton. "Wharton, the Princess has been ordered to remain in the palace by his Imperial Majesty and is not to leave the palace. Even I had to come up with some special ideas in order to leave. This is the letter that the Princess asked me to give you. Here, take it. I don't have any time, I have to go back now. If I go back late, it will be disastrous."

Lucy handed the letter to Wharton. Wharton stood there, stunned. Before he had a chance to even speak, Lucy ran away.

"What is his Imperial Majesty thinking?" Nader frowned, feeling rather angry.

Wharton immediately opened the envelope and withdrew the letter from it. Seeing the contents of the letter, Wharton felt a gush of warmth enter his heart, warming it.

Azure battle-qi exploded from Wharton's hands, reducing the letter to ash.

"Both a personal disciple of the War God, and the younger brother of Olivier. It seems his Imperial Majesty is favoring Blumer." Wharton saw things clearly.

If his Imperial Majesty didn't restrict Nina from coming out, Nina would go find Wharton, not Blumer.

This order clearly was meant to help Blumer.

Letting out a cold snort, Wharton felt helpless. Even Dragonformed, he would only be at the peak of the ninth rank. How could he cause any trouble or make any waves with that bit of power?

Many days later, outside the imperial capital.

One carriage, several horses, and a pure, pitch-black panther. Atop the panther was a young man dressed in a simple robe.

"Linley, look." Zassler, mounted on his horse, pointed at the distant, tall mountain. That mountain had multiple peaks. "That is the world-renowned War God Mountain. The War God's College is at the top of it."

"The War God's College?" Linley's eyes lit up.

The legendary and indisputably most powerful force within the Empire. The College founded by the War God who stood at the peak of the entire Yulan continent. Staring at the War God Mountain from afar, Linley couldn't help but sigh in admiration.

"War God..."

The War God O'Brien was simply too dazzling a figure. He had not only established the mighty O'Brien Empire, he had also fought the High Priest to a stalemate over the Yulan river. That battle had made him famous, guaranteeing that he would share the same exalted status as the High Priest.

After five thousand years, no one knew how powerful the War God, who had previously been on the same level as the High Priest, was now. But the only deity that was worshipped within the O'Brien Empire was the War God. From this, one could see how venerated the War God was.

Linley's heart was filled with a heroic urge. "There will come the day when I, too, will stand at the peak of the Yulan continent!"

Linley turned his head, no longer staring at War God Mountain. No matter how beautiful War God Mountain was, it belonged to the War God.

"The imperial capital of Channe." Staring to the east, he could already see that enormous city, reputedly the largest in the entire continent. Channe was an enormous city. Only the imperial capital of the Yulan Empire could match it.

Channe's architecture was simple and unadorned.

"The imperial capital of the most militarily powerful Empire in the continent. The place where experts reside. Channe." A hint of a smile was on Linley's lips. Underneath the dazzling sun, Linley and his team headed into Channe.

No major figures paid any special attention to this group of travelers.

But they didn't know that these people would very soon cause earth-shaking disturbances within the O'Brien Empire.

“Haha, this really does live up to its reputation as the imperial capital of the O’Brien Empire. These streets are so wide.” Barker laughed loudly, and Linley laughed as well.

Linley’s team was walking in the center of one of the major thoroughfares of the imperial capital.

Barker and his brothers had already dismounted, as they put their weapons on their backs; those astonishing long-handled greataxes. On the way over, they had stored their long-handled greataxes within Linley’s interspatial ring. After all, the greataxes were simply too heavy; the horses couldn’t carry them.

“What muscular men.”

Many people in the imperial capital parted in front of this team. Barker and his brothers were simply too physically awe-inspiring. All of them were around 2.2 meters tall, had massive bear-like waists, and were so muscular they seemed inhuman. What’s more, on their backs they carried those enormous long-handled greataxes, which gleamed with a cold metal light.

Even if those long-handled greataxes were made solely from steel, they would weigh at least a thousand pounds. But from the coloration of those greataxes, clearly they were not ordinary weapons. Would someone who was weak dare wield such heavy weapons?

And that sleek, glossy black panther, who didn’t have any hint of discoloration whatsoever?

Nobody in the imperial capital had ever seen such a panther. This was because after the Blackcloud Panther had reached the Saint-level, it had the ability to easily change the colors of its fur.

"Boulder Street." Linley knew where Wharton was staying, and everyone present hastened towards the East Channe's Boulder Street.

"I wager that Lord Blumer will definitely be able to marry Princess Nina."

Linley suddenly came to a halt, turning his head to stare at a nearby restaurant. Linley was frowning. "Nina? That Nina which Wharton likes? Wasn't it someone called Caylan who was competing with Wharton? What does Blumer have to do with this?"

Linley knew who Blumer was.

When Wharton had taken part in the competition to become an honorary disciple, in the end, Blumer had been victorious.

"Nonsense. I'm willing to bet that Lord Wharton will be the one to marry Princess Nina. Princess Nina and Lord Wharton have been together for a long time now."

"Hard to say. Look at Lord Blumer's current status; he's the War God's personal disciple."

"Lord?" Barker said in a quiet voice.

Linley stood there silently for a while.

Blumer was the younger brother of Olivier. He had actually become the personal disciple of the War God? And it seemed that he had asked the Emperor for Nina's hand in marriage.

Barker and the others looked at Linley.

"Let's go." Linley said.

Linley's group arrived at Boulder Street. Every single manor lining Boulder Street belonged to a noble clan, and thus Boulder Street was not very crowded.

Walking in the empty Boulder Street, Linley carefully inspected the signs on every single manor.

"Up ahead." Linley's eyes lit up.

The two guards who were engaged in idle conversation suddenly noticed Linley and the others walking over. They immediately became alert, especially after seeing the enormous bodies of Barker and his brothers.

"These guys are definitely as tall and as muscular as the Lord Count." The two guards were somewhat shocked.

"Who are you?" One of the guards summoned all his courage, calling out bravely.

Gates was the first to reply loudly, "Is this Count Wharton's residence?"

"Yes." The guard nodded.

Hearing these words, Linley felt his heart tremble in excitement as it sped up. How many years had it been? Wharton had left when he was six years old. In a few days, exactly seventeen years would have gone by.

Seventeen years!

Smiling, Linley said, "Go deliver the message that his big brother, Linley, has arrived." Hearing these words, those two guards were very surprised. Count Wharton's older brother? They had never heard of such a person.

But these two guards had good judgment. They could immediately tell how formidable this group was. Without daring to say much else, one guard bowed. "Please wait here a moment. I'll go make the report."

Linley took a deep breath, letting himself calm down.

"Linley, this is your little brother's residence?" Zassler walked over, laughing. "Looks like your little brother has done quite well for himself in the imperial capital."

Linley couldn't help but feel extremely proud as well.

Housekeeper Hiri and Hillman were currently chatting over some wine, but suddenly, the guard ran in at high speed. "Lord Hillman, a group of people have just arrived. Their leader claims he is Wharton's older brother, and that his name is Linley."

"Smash!" The winecup in Housekeeper Hiri's hands fell to the floor, smashing into pieces.

"Linley!"

Housekeeper Hiri and Hillman simultaneously rose to their feet. They stared at each other, wide-eyed and filled with shock and joy.

"Go, go, fast! Go inform the Lord Count!" Hiri immediately instructed.

And then, Hiri and Hillman both charged towards the outside of the manor at high speed. Seeing how Housekeeper Hiri had totally lost his usual bearing, the guard realized what a momentous affair this was, and he immediately ran to the training fields.

Soon, Hiri and Hillman arrived at the front courtyard. Arriving before the main gate, they actually slowed down as they looked forward carefully.

They saw five terrifyingly muscular men. Those long-handled greataxes on their backs alone made the two of them tremble. By the side of those five men, there was a skinny, skeletal old man whose shadowy green eyes were filled with a terrifying aura.

Besides the old man were three beautiful girls, pleasing to behold.

And at the very front...

"Linley!" Hillman was the first to speak. Housekeeper Hiri was still carefully inspecting Linley. After a while, he suddenly recognized who Linley was. He cried out in surprise and joy, "Young master Linley."

Linley, who was in the middle of a conversation with Zassler, turned his head.

Grandpa Hiri looked just as he had in Linley's memories, with that wine-reddened nose of his. And Uncle Hillman was there as well. Looking at them, Linley found that he was totally unable to suppress the excitement in his heart.

"Grandpa Hiri, Uncle Hillman." Linley rushed into the courtyard, his eyes beginning to turn moist.

Housekeeper Hiri walked to Linley's side, eyes red. "You grew up. You grew up. Young master Linley, you are taller than you were." It had been seventeen full years since Housekeeper Hiri had seen Linley.

When he had left with Wharton, Linley had only been ten years old.

"Grandpa Hiri, you look exactly the same." The joy in Linley's heart couldn't be expressed with mere words.

Looking at Linley, Hillman said in an extremely gratified voice, "Young master Linley, you've grown up. But you still look very similar to how you looked ten years ago."

Ten years ago, Linley was already 1.7 meters tall. His appearance hadn't changed much since then.

Suddenly, frantic footsteps could be heard.

Turning his head, Linley saw a tall, strong figure appear in the doorway, as though appearing from a dream. This person looked very similar to Linley himself. Linley had the feeling that this person was most likely his younger brother, Wharton.

Only, Wharton had left when he was just six years old. He had changed tremendously.

But Wharton only needed a moment before recognizing Linley. Linley still looked very much like he did in the past. Wharton's mouth hung open. His tears were already beginning to flow down his face. "Big bro..."

Linley slowly walked towards Wharton, his gaze totally locked on him.

"Big bro..." Wharton staggered forward two steps as well.

"Little Wharton. Is it really you?" Linley stared at Wharton. That chubbyfaced kid of the past had turned into a 2.2 meter tall youngster.

"Big bro, it's me. It's me." At this moment, Wharton had totally forgotten about the issue with Nina. His heart was filled with boundless excitement. He was totally incapable of suppressing this excitement.

Linley reached out with trembling hands, resting them against Wharton's shoulders. He carefully looked at Wharton. His face blossomed into smiles, even as tears were shining in his eyes. In a quivering voice, Linley said, "Little Wharton, you've grown up."

That chubby face kid of his memories, who had always called out 'big brother', 'big brother' at him in a child-like voice, had already grown up.

"Big bro!" Wharton tightly embraced Linley in a massive hug. Having seen Wharton, Linley felt more excited than he had in a long time. Finally, he was no longer able to prevent his own tears from coming out, and they cascaded down his face.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 1, A Powerful Supporter

Linley and Wharton had been separated for nearly seventeen years.

Seventeen years ago, shortly after the Yulan festival of that year, Wharton had left Wushan Township by the side of Housekeeper Hiri and headed towards the distant O'Brien Empire. At that time, Linley was only ten, while Wharton was six. The two brothers had been very innocent and knew so little about the outside world. And back then, they were supported by Hogg, who had protected them like an old hawk looking after its chicks.

But now, Hogg was long dead. Of the two brothers, one was a Count of the O'Brien Empire, while the other possessed the terrifying power of the Saint-level.

Within the Count's manor.

Linley, Wharton, Housekeeper Hiri, Hillman, Nader, the Barker brothers, Zassler, Jenne, Rebecca, and Leena were all gathered together.

Two rectangular tables had been covered with wine and food.

Wharton and Linley were engaged in conversation regarding what had happened in recent years. Although Wharton had gotten general information regarding Linley from the Dawson Conglomerate, when he personally chatted with Linley, he couldn't help but grow anxious as he listened.

So close. His big brother had come so close to dying.

“During those three years of training in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, followed by the six years of training in the Northwest Administrative Province, although I encountered several dangerous battles, in the end, I arrived without suffering any major harm.” Linley laughed. “In the past, I was worried about the Radiant Church. But now? Although I don’t have the power to raid their headquarters yet, I have more than enough power to protect myself.”

The Radiant Church had been established in the Yulan continent for years now.

For it to be on par with the O’Brien Empire as one of the premier powers of the Yulan continent, it definitely had a terrifying amount of hidden power. From the fact that the War God’s College was able to send out three personal disciples who were all at the Saint-level, one could determine that the Radiant Church must surely have quite a number of Saint-level experts of its own.

“Big bro, you, you’ve reached the Saint-level?” Wharton was shocked and excited. Wharton knew how difficult training could be. Although he himself had an extremely high density of Dragonblood in his veins, he was still only of the eighth rank, and even in Dragonform was only at the peak of the ninth rank.

The density of the Dragonblood in Linley’s veins was lower than in his own.

But for Linley to be able to claim that he had more than enough power to protect himself surely meant that Linley had reached the Saint-level.

"After Dragonforming, I indeed am at the Saint-level." Linley said with a smile.

Hillman and Housekeeper Hiri, seated at the same table, exchanged glances, excitement in their eyes. Housekeeper Hiri's voice was hoarse with excitement. "I've taken care of three generations of Baruch clan members now. The Baruch clan has finally produced a Saint-level combatant."

The Saint-level was simply on a whole different level.

If a clan had a Saint-level in it, as long as that Saint-level did not die, then the clan would never decay or weaken.

"Wharton." Linley looked at Wharton. "When I was in the Northwest Administrative Province, I paid attention to your affairs. It seems that you and that Imperial Seventh Princess..."

Wharton nodded honestly. "It's true, big brother. I truly wish to marry Nina, but right now, the situation is very complicated. Right after Caylan gave up his pursuit of her, Blumer appeared."

On the road over, Linley had already learned of this issue.

After all, right now, there are many rumors regarding Wharton, Nina, and Blumer.

“Blumer. I’ve heard people in the streets of the imperial capital discussing Blumer. He seems to be the personal disciple of the War God, and is the younger brother of Olivier.” Linley laughed calmly.

Wharton nodded, a hint of worry appearing in his brows again. “Big bro, you don’t understand how famous Olivier is within the O’Brien Empire. Olivier is simply too powerful, terrifyingly powerful. Nine years ago, he already possessed the power of a peak-stage Saint-level. And now...who knows how powerful he has become?”

Linley patted Wharton on the shoulders. “Wharton, don’t inflate the deeds of others and downplay your own abilities.”

Wharton nodded.

Housekeeper Hiri sighed emotionally. “Young master Linley, you’ve never lived in the imperial capital. Perhaps you don’t fully understand how influential the War God’s College is. Even the Emperor himself would be extremely courteous to the personal disciples of the War God’s College. The personal disciples of the War God have an extremely exalted status.”

Hillman said seriously, “After all, there have been over a hundred generations of Emperors since the War God founded the Empire. Many of the Emperors in the history of the Empire have never even met the War God. But the personal disciples of the War God? They are qualified to meet him. Tell me, who does the War God care more about?”

Linley now understood.

Good point.

A hundred plus generations had passed. Although the War God was the ancestor of Johann, after five thousand years, who knew how many descendants the War God had? How much affection would the War God truly have for each individual descendant of his over the past hundred generations?

Just judging from the fact that many Emperors had never even met the War God, one could tell what the answer to that question was.

By contrast, personal disciples were different. The War God would even personally instruct them.

"It isn't that I'm inflating the deeds of others. It's that I truly am not confident." Wharton was frustrated. "I really don't know what I'll do if Nina ends up being given to Blumer."

Wharton truly could not accept this result.

"fuck his grandmother, if that Emperor dares to do such a thing, then we bros will go over and abduct the princess and bring her over to be your woman." Gates immediately said.

The entire hall immediately grew silent.

Wharton stared at Gates in shock, then looked at Linley. "Big bro, who is this?"

Only now did Linley come to his senses. He had been so excited at his reunion with his little brother that he had focused on chatting with him, and had totally forgotten to introduce Zassler and the others.

"Haha..."

Linley rose to his feet. "Wharton, let the servants leave first. The attendants outside can leave as well." Linley was about to introduce these people in his group to Wharton.

There was no need to hide anything from one of his own.

"Understood." Although Wharton didn't know what Linley wanted to talk about, he immediately followed Linley's instructions and dismissed the servants and attendants.

Linley first walked in front of Jenne, Rebecca, and Leena. Sighing with emotion, he said, "Wharton, in the past, our mother was forcibly abducted by the Radiant Church, precisely because her soul was pure. Rebecca and Leena had been abducted for the same reason."

Hearing these words, Wharton felt an emotional resonance in his heart.

"When I was in the Northwest Administrative Province, I rescued them. This one is Jenne. Wharton, you need to treat these three girls as you would a big sister or little sister." Linley instructed.

Wharton nodded.

“As for this gentleman...” Linley walked towards Zassler. Actually, whenever Wharton and the others looked at Zassler, they felt their hearts tremble. His thin, skeletal body and his dark green eyes caused fear in the hearts of whoever saw him.

“This is Zassler, an Arch Magus necromancer of the ninth rank. He is the oldest member of my group, and is already over eight hundred years old.”

Linley’s words caused Wharton, Housekeeper Hiri, Hillman, and Nader to all be astonished.

Necromancer? This was a legendary type of magus. And an Arch Magus necromancer of the ninth rank? It was far harder for a magus to advance than a warrior, due to the high requirement for spiritual energy. By contrasts, warriors didn’t require much spiritual energy.

The spiritual energy of a magus of the eighth rank was generally greater than that of a Saint-level warrior.

Although Saint-level warriors possessed extremely tough, durable spiritual energy, in terms of volume, a magus of the same rank would possess a hundred times the amount of spiritual energy, if not more.

“Eight hundred years old? As I recall, a person’s maximum lifespan is only five hundred years, unless he reaches the Saint-level.” Housekeeper Hiri suddenly said.

The Saint-level experts had an essentially unlimited lifespan, but humans who did not reach the Saint-level couldn't live for more than five hundred years.

"Haha..." Zassler's ancient voice rang out. "You are referring to normal people. Let me tell you something. Those magi who train in the three ultimate types of magic, Oracular Magic, Life Magic, and Necromantic Magic, have extremely long lives. Of the three, we necromancers possess the longest lifespan."

Zassler glanced with an evil look at the group. "If one of you were about to die from old age, you can come find me. Given my relationship with Linley, I can help you transform your body into a zombie-body and allow you to never perish."

Never perish?

This was the goal of countless people. But a zombie-body? Just from the sound of it, one could guess that it must be one which belonged to a departed soul.

Wharton, Housekeeper Hiri, and Hillman all squeezed out a smile. They really were rather nervous in dealing with an Arch Magus necromancer.

"Zassler." Linley looked unhappily at Zassler.

Zassler's eyes flashed with green light as he laughed, "I'm just joking with your little brother and his friends. Transforming a body into a zombie-body isn't an easy task either."

Linley shook his head, then walked over to Barker and his brothers.

"It's finally our turn." Gates intentionally puffed out his chest. Wharton's eyes lit up as well. All five of the brothers were as tall as Wharton, and they were much more muscular than him. Those long-handled greataxes in particular clearly were extremely heavy weapons.

"Wharton, have you heard of the Armand clan?" Linley looked at his younger brother.

"The Armand clan? Can it be...the Undying Warrior clan?" Wharton's eyes lit up.

Linley nodded with satisfaction. "Right. Barker, Ankh, Hazer, Boone, Gates. These five brothers are the descendants of the Armand clan, and all five of them are Undying Warriors."

"All five of them are Undying Warriors?" Wharton was shocked. Next to him, Hiri and Hillman were stunned as well.

Being a descendant of the Armand clan and being an Undying Warrior were totally different concepts.

For example, although Hogg was a descendant of the Dragonblood Warrior clan, he himself wasn't a Dragonblood Warrior. It was very rare that one of the Supreme Warrior clans would produce a genius actually capable of transforming into a Supreme Warrior.

"Right." Linley nodded.

Seeing the astonished look on Wharton's face, the five brothers felt extremely proud.

"The Armand clan had fallen on extremely hard times, and even their 'Secret Undying Manual' had been lost. Fortunately, Lord Cesar helped out." Linley said gratefully. "Wharton, amongst these five brothers, Barker, Ankh, and Gates have already reached the ninth rank of power. The other two are at the peak of the eighth rank."

"Ninth rank!" Wharton was frightened when he heard this.

"Big bro, are you saying that...?"

"Right. After transforming, all three of them have Saint-level power." Linley smiled.

Wharton, Hillman, Housekeeper Hiri, and Nader's hearts were filled with a hot gush of excitement. They were already very excited upon learning that Linley possessed the Saint-level of power, but who would've expected that three more Saint-level combatants would have popped up?

Four Saint-level experts!

What a terrifying force this was.

A basis for being confident!

A very strong basis for being confident. Previously, Wharton had been worrying about how he would go about struggling with Blumer. But now that his big brother had come with this group of people, Wharton felt like a beggar who had suddenly acquired a trillion gold coins.

"Lord Hogg, can you see this? Can you see this?" Hillman repeated emotionally.

If Hogg was still present, he would definitely be very happy upon witnessing this.

"Wharton, this is a magical beast that I tamed in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. His name is Haeru. Haeru, greet everyone." Linley said with a laugh.

The Blackcloud Panther that had been lying on the ground stood up. He swept Wharton and the others with his cold, dark eyes, and then spoke in the human tongue. "Haeru pays his respects to you all."

Wharton stared at Linley in astonishment. "Big brother, this magical beast, this magical beast just..."

"Right. Saint-level magical beast." Linley nodded.

The throats of Wharton, Hillman, Hiri, and Nader all clenched. Good heavens. Magical beasts, by their very nature, were stronger than humans of the same level. Generally, only peak-stage Saint-level human experts would be able to defeat any Saint-level magical beasts.

Linley was a Saint-level expert. Fine. But his magical beast was as well?

"Hrmph."

A cold sneer could be heard. Wharton and the others all turned upon hearing it. The sound came from Bebe, who was seated next to Linley. Bebe's head was arrogantly raised.

"Bebe." Seeing Bebe's familiar figure, Wharton felt very close to him. After all, Bebe had been with Linley early on. When they were young, Wharton had often played around with Bebe as well. "Bebe, how does it feel to be travelling alongside a Saint-level magical beast? You must really worship him, right?"

Bebe stared at Wharton, then said loudly, "Wharton, you stinking little punk! What sort of magical beast do you take me, Bebe, to be? That fellow Haeru, even at the Saint-level, he isn't a match for me, Bebe!"

"Aaaah!"

Wharton and the others had shocked expressions on their faces, as though they had seen a ghost. They could accept that this mysterious panther-type magical beast was a Saint-level magical beast, but Bebe? They had all watched as Bebe had first followed Linley when they were young.

That adorable little Shadowmouse had actually reached the Saint-level as well.

“Bebe is indeed stronger than me.” The Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, once more growled in the human tongue.

Bebe raised his little head high, his eyes filled with self-delight.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 2, A Breakthrough in Spiritual Energy

Six Saint-level experts was simply too shocking. Only after a long time did Wharton and the others finally calm down from their manic excitement. But even after calming down, their hearts were still filled with boundless joy.

They had been worrying this entire time about what to do about Wharton and Nina.

Blumer's status as the personal disciple of the War God and the younger brother of Olivier was giving them a huge amount of pressure. But now, they felt complete confidence in their ability to contend.

Wharton's face was radiant with smiles. His older brother had brought this many powerful experts. Wharton could almost visualize the scene of his marriage with Nina.

"Big bro, thanks. Cheers." Wharton raised his wine cup.

Laughing, Linley raised his own as well.

Wharton had worshipped Linley, ever since he was young. A magus coming out of Wushan Township who was accepted to the Ernst Institute was already something incredible. But now, a scant seventeen years later, Linley actually was in possession of two Saint-level magical beasts and was followed by three Saint-level experts.

"Big bro, in a few more days, it'll be the Yulan festival again. You are almost twenty seven years old by now. When are you planning to get married?" Wharton leaned over and whispered into Linley's ear while snickering.

"You punk." Linley laughed. "Let's not discuss this issue for now."

"Oh." Wharton nodded obediently.

Although Wharton was now an Imperial Count and was a huge man who stood 2.2 meters high, in front of Linley, he still acted the same as he did when they were young.

"Actually, Leena and the other girls are all quite good." Wharton whispered secretly.

Linley gently smacked Wharton upside the head.

"I'll stop, I'll stop. Let's drink, let's drink." Wharton hurriedly said.

Housekeeper Hiri and Hillman, seeing Linley and Wharton chat like this, felt boundless joy in their hearts. Exchanging glances, they began laughing together.

Linley and his little brother were extremely happy in those first few days of Linley's arrival. However, Linley had instructed Wharton that although it was fine to reveal the news of himself and Haeru being at the Saint-level, for now the news that Bebe and three of the Barker brothers had reached the Saint-level as well must be hidden.

Barker, his brothers, and Bebe were an important hidden force for Linley.

In addition, in the entire O'Brien Empire, there was virtually none who knew that Barker and his brothers were Undying Warriors. Thus, maintaining this secret was easy.

Just the presence of two Saint-levels, Linley and the Saint-level magical beast Haeru, was already enough to cause dread in the hearts of others.

Year 10008 of the Yulan calendar. December 30th. This was the day before the Yulan festival. It was snowing on this day, and the entire O'Brien Empire was covered with snow, as the entire world seemed to turn white.

Boulder Street. Count Wharton's training grounds.

Although the snow was flying about, Linley still sat in the meditative position in the middle of the grass. As for Wharton, such a powerful man as himself wouldn't care about snow.

"Whoosh." Wharton's bare upper body was brimming with power and heat. He put down the warblade 'Slaughterer' to one side, preparing to take a rest. But just as he turned to look at the nearby Linley...

"Hrm?"

Wharton found, to his astonishment, that although the snow was flying everywhere, whenever any snow approached Linley, it would 'avoid' him, passing by him in a circular line. It was as though there was an invisible tornado around Linley. Not a single snowflake had fallen onto Linley's clothes.

"What's this?" Wharton was a bit shocked.

Linley, who had been meditating, suddenly opened his eyes. "Wharton, what are you looking at?" Although Linley had been in deep meditation, when someone paid attention to him, Linley would notice.

"Big bro, that snow...how? Could this be the 'impose' level mentioned in our clan's records?" Wharton said in astonishment.

Smiling, Linley said, "Wharton, once you reach the level of 'impose', it is true that you can prevent the rain or the snow from landing on your body. However, this requires that you whole-heartedly concentrate on utilizing the 'imposing force' of the surrounding area. It is impossible to do this at the 'impose' level while one is meditating and not focusing on it."

Just then, Linley hadn't been intentionally preventing the snowflakes from reaching him. However, all it took was a thought, and the snowflakes couldn't come near him.

"What lies beyond the 'impose' level, then?" Wharton truly admired his big brother from the bottom of his heart.

Wharton had trained hard for so many years, and had received the finest instruction from the O'Brien Academy, but to date, Wharton had only reached the 'wielding something heavy as though it were light' level as described in his clan's records.

Actually, there was no need for Wharton to be too modest. The reason why Linley had been able to make such astonishing improvements, aside from his natural talent, was the fact that he was greatly assisted by his exceptional elemental essence affinity.

To ordinary people, elemental essence affinity only represented that one would be able to gather mageforce faster. But to experts, it represented that one would more easily be able to attune with nature, and understand the Laws of the world.

"This part of the 'Profound Truths of the Wind' which I have gained insight into." Linley laughed calmly. "This is just a simple application of it."

"Profound Truths of the Wind?" Wharton's eyes lit up.

"Continue with your training." Linley said, then closed his eyes again, returning to his meditation.

Actually, nowadays Linley didn't spend too much time on his stone sculpting, unless he was seized by a sudden desire. When that desire came, Linley would more easily enter the correct state of mind, and the benefits to him would be better.

These days, the effects of normal stone sculpting were about the same as Linley simply meditating.

The reason was at this point, given Linley's understanding of the Laws of the Wind and the Laws of the Earth, when Linley meditated, he could easily become one with nature, giving him essentially the same benefits as he had when sculpting under normal conditions.

This sort of meditation on the various Laws was also helping to improve Linley's spiritual energy at a constant rate of growth.

Around nightfall.

Linley, who had been quietly meditating this entire time, suddenly revealed a hint of a smile on his previously expressionless face. And then, Linley's lips moved slightly. Shortly afterwards...

"Swish!"

Linley, who had been seated, suddenly moved at a terrifyingly fast speed. At the same instant, nine different Linley's suddenly seemed to appear at different locations of the training ground.

After the nine blurred images disappeared, Linley once again appeared seated in the meditative position in the training grounds.

Only now did Linley open his eyes. "The ninth-ranked wind-style 'Windshadow' spell, famed as the most powerful speed-enhancing spell, lives up to its name. It can actually allow me, in my human form, to reach the speed of a Saint-level."

Right!

Magic of the ninth rank!

Roughly a year and a half after Linley had entered the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, he had reached the eighth rank as a magus. But from the eighth rank to the ninth rank as a magus, the amount of spiritual energy required was astonishing. Even the most brilliant of geniuses would require at least ten years.

But due to his constant meditating, Linley's spiritual energy had grown at a rapid rate.

After spending just seven years, he had finally broken through and reached the level of an Arch Magus of the ninth rank.

"Tomorrow is the Yulan festival. The day before the Yulan festival, I reached the level of an Arch Magus of the ninth rank, eh? Sheesh..." Linley felt extremely happy.

Magi possessed extremely powerful attacks. If you gave a magus sufficient time, a magus could definitely use his spells to defeat a warrior of the same level. The wide area spells of magi were particularly astonishing.

"Tomorrow, I will be twenty seven years old. A twenty seven year old dual-element Arch Magus of the ninth rank. This should be a first in history." A look of confidence was on Linley's face.

How incredible.

A twenty seven year old dual-element Arch Magus of the ninth rank. This was a terrifying record which had never before appeared within the history of the Yulan continent. The previous record holder had reached the ninth rank and become an Arch Magus only after he had turned thirty.

“Wind-style magic includes the Savage Tornado spell, which can easily deal with an army of a hundred thousand soldiers. As for earth-style magic, the ‘Castle of Earth’ can be considered a large-scale defensive spell...” Linley had to admit that the more powerful a magus was, the more terrifyingly useful the battle applications of their magic became.

Magi also possessed very powerful one-on-one spells as well.

“The ninth-ranked wind-style spell, ‘Void Extermination’. Reputedly, as long as one has enough mageforce, this is a single-target spell that can even kill Saint-level experts. It truly is monstrously powerful.” Linley couldn’t help but sigh in praise.

Wind-style magic was very valiant and mighty. ‘Void Extermination’ was the most powerful attacking spell out of all spells of the ninth rank in every discipline. The ‘Dimensional Edge’ spell, in turn, was the most powerful attacking spell out of all forbidden-level spells.

The earth-style in turn was legendary for its defensiveness, whether in self-protection or in large-scale protection.

When an earth-style magus of the ninth rank utilized the 'Supergravity Field' spell, he could cause the hearts and veins of other experts to explode and cause them to instantly die. After all, although some people had powerful muscles, their hearts and their blood vessels weren't necessarily that tough.

"However, to me, the most useful spell is still the Windshadow spell. The most powerful speed-supporting spell!"

In his human form, Linley had less than half the speed he possessed in his Saint-level Dragonform. But by relying on the Windshadow technique, his speed in human form could rival his speed in Dragonform. How terrifying!

The day of the Yulan festival. The sun was bright and high in the sky, casting its glow on the snow-covered trees and rooftops, which gleamed dazzlingly. The entire imperial capital seemed to be much brighter than normal.

On this day, the imperial capital was arranging large-scale celebrations as well.

Within a carriage.

Watching the festivities, Wharton and Linley were sharing a carriage while chatting about Nina, and what to do about her.

"Wharton, in two days, bring me to visit the Emperor." Linley said directly.

"Visit his Imperial Majesty?" Wharton stared at Linley in astonishment.

Linley said with a calm laugh, "I have no grudges against the O'Brien Empire. If the Emperor is willing to allow Nina to marry you, I wouldn't mind settling down here in the O'Brien Empire."

Wharton looked at his older brother. In his heart, he understood what Linley was saying.

"But if that Emperor doesn't know what's good for him and insists on marrying the Seventh Princess to Blumer, then we'll have to resort to our backup plan. We'll abduct Nina and then the two of you can elope." Linley looked at Wharton. "Wharton, are you ready to accept this result?"

Wharton was silent for a moment. "Of course I am. I don't feel too great a sense of loyalty to the O'Brien Empire. But Nina..."

"The Seventh Princess would refuse?" Linley asked.

This was a major issue.

Wharton shook his head. "I know her. When I was competing against Caylan, Nina once said that if the Emperor really tried to force her, she would elope with me. But Nina is afraid that we wouldn't be able to make it."

"You don't need to worry about that, unless the War God personally intervenes.” Linley said calmly.

Linley knew that given the War God’s status, he wouldn’t get involved in these minor issues. Only if the Empire truly suffered a severe crisis would the War God show himself.

Normally speaking, the War God wouldn’t even get involved if an Emperor was assassinated.

The War God had countless descendants. If one Emperor died, another would succeed him. As long as nothing threatening the entire foundation of the Empire occurred, the deity-like War God would not interfere.

Three days later, a carriage came to the gates of the imperial palace. A tall young man dressed in a gentleman’s suit, alongside a young man dressed in a long black robe, stepped out of the carriage.

“Count Wharton, who is this?” The palace guards asked. Given their keen eyes, they could clearly tell that the person next to Count Wharton was no ordinary individual.

With a calm laugh, Wharton said, “This is my older brother. I wish to take him to see his Imperial Majesty.”

The palace guards didn’t make any difficulties for them, immediately allowing them in. Actually, it generally wasn’t too difficult for one to be granted entry into the palace. Anyone with some status could bring people inside.

This was because the palace itself was enormous. If one wanted to enter one of the important areas of the palace, however, the guards would be much more restrictive.

"Stop!" Two guards shouted. "Count Wharton, who is this person by your side?"

"Please send a message. This is my older brother, Linley. I am bringing my older brother to meet with his Imperial Majesty." Wharton said directly.

"Please wait here first." One of the guards shouted, before turning and running inside the courtyard.

There were very many experts within this courtyard. Without the express permission of the Emperor, the various nobles did not dare to rashly barge in. A while later, that guard came running back. "His Imperial Majesty has permitted you to enter."

"There really are quite a few experts here." As Linley walked into the courtyard, he could easily sense the locations of one expert after another from the flows of the nearby wind elemental essence.

After walking for a while and taking some roundabout paths, they arrived at a classical, refined study room.

"Your Imperial Majesty." Wharton called out in a loud voice.

"Haha, Wharton, I hear your big brother Linley has arrived? Come, quick!" Emperor Johann's clear and bright voice rang out from within the study.

Smiling, Linley stepped into the study.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 3, Provocation

Emperor Johann had heard of Linley's fame long ago.

That 'second genius magus' in all of history who had also reached the exalted rank of grandmaster sculptor at the age of sixteen. An absolute genius. When Johann had learned of Linley and his history, he couldn't help but sigh repeatedly with admiration.

He watched as Linley walked in.

"He indeed appears to be a man of great talent." Johann sighed to himself. Be it in either his physical proportions or his reserved personality, Johann could tell that Linley did indeed have that unique aura of a grandmaster sculptor.

"Greetings, your Imperial Majesty." Linley bowed fractionally.

"How dare you." The palace attendant next to Emperor Johann said in a shrill voice. "How dare you not kneel and kowtow before his Imperial Majesty?"

Linley swept the attendant with his cold gaze. The palace attendant suddenly felt as though he was being stared at by a viper, and he couldn't help but shiver.

"A master artisan such as Linley is someone whom We have admired for a long time. Naturally, there is no need for him to kneel and pay any obeisance." Johann glanced at his nearby attendant, and the attendant no longer dared to speak.

In the O'Brien Empire, generally speaking, ministers needed to kneel on one knee before the Emperor. But people such as Blumer, a personal disciple of the War God, only needed to bow slightly.

"Wharton." Johann looked at Wharton, who stood next to Linley. "We have heard long ago that you had an older brother. Why is it that you have only brought him to see Us today?"

Wharton immediately said, "Your Imperial Majesty, your servant's older brother has only recently arrived in the imperial capital."

Emperor Johann nodded calmly, then looked at Linley. With a laugh, he said, "Master Linley, I heard that at the age of seventeen, you became a dual-element magus of the seventh rank. After ten years have passed, might I ask what level you have now reached?"

Linley smiled. "After ten years of painstaking training, just a few days ago, I stepped past the gateway into the ninth rank."

"An Arch Magus of the ninth rank?" Johann blinked.

"What?" A surprised shout from behind the Emperor. Linley casually glanced at the covering screen placed behind the Emperor's seat. As soon as he had entered, Linley had known that there were two experts of the ninth rank hidden there, one a magus, one a warrior.

Johann glanced backwards as well.

Knowing that they had revealed themselves, those two came forward. One was dressed in a loose, long magus robe, while the other was wearing a classic warrior's outfit.

"These two are Our guards. They, too, were shocked at your advancement, Master Linley." Johann laughed calmly.

"A dual-element Arch Magus of the ninth rank. Linley, might I ask how old you are this year?" That silver-haired magus stared at Linley. As a magus, he naturally knew how incredibly difficult it was for one to increase one's level of spiritual energy.

Throughout history, more than ten warriors had reached the Saint-level in their twenties.

But in all of history, there was not a single Arch Magus of the ninth rank who reached that rank before the age of thirty. The rate of advancement for spiritual energy was something which couldn't be increased by any known means. It required one to slowly accumulate it, one step at a time.

"My older brother is twenty seven years old this year." Wharton spoke out.

"Twenty seven!" Hearing this number, that magus of the ninth rank had a very...amusing...look of shock on his face.

History was history. History included the records of countless geniuses over tens of thousands of years. There were a few people who reached the ninth rank after the age of thirty, but that was ancient history. In the past few centuries, there hadn't been a single person who had reached the ninth rank in their thirties.

But...

"Twenty seven. Twenty seven!" That silver-haired old man laughed at himself. "I reached the rank of Arch Magus of the ninth rank when I turned 170, and I thought I didn't do too bad. But compared to you, Master Linley..."

The silver-haired old man sighed, shaking his head.

The difference was simply too extraordinary.

"Mr. Gerhaus, in the past, how old was the youngest Arch Magus to reach the ninth rank?" Johann immediately asked.

The silver-haired old man said respectfully, "Your Imperial Majesty, according to the historical records, the youngest Arch Magus of the ninth rank was an absolute genius from over thirty thousand years ago. He reached the ninth rank at the age of thirty two. In more recent history, from the beginning of the Yulan calendar to now, the youngest genius magus to reach the ninth rank did so at the age of thirty five."

In training battle-qi, if one possessed or acquired some special treasures, perhaps their battle-qi would be greatly enhanced.

One's level of understanding might suddenly jump as well from a flash of insight.

There had been people who had reached the Saint-level in their twenties!

But spiritual energy wasn't something that you could easily increase at will. Even by using the Straight Chisel School of stone sculpting, Linley had only gained that sudden breakthrough and increase a single time, when he was sixteen. In the past ten years, he had been slowly, painstakingly training nonstop. Only then had he managed to reach the ninth rank.

"I've heard that Master Linley isn't just a magus. You are also a powerful warrior?" Emperor Johann smiled towards Linley.

Linley smiled calmly. "Your Imperial Majesty, you can have that person next to you give me a try."

That warrior of the ninth rank pursed his lips. "Can it be that Master Linley is such a genius that you have reached the level of a warrior of the ninth rank as well?"

"Mr. Lancy, go ahead and give him a try. But you must be careful. Master Linley is of the Dragonblood Warrior clan." Johann laughed.

Mr. Lancy immediately drew his pitch black broadsword.

Linley only flipped his hand over, allowing Bloodviolet to appear in his palm. Against a warrior of the ninth rank, he didn't even need to transform.

"Hrmph." A layer of illusionary, stellar light seemed to suddenly cover the broadsword in Mr. Lancy's hand. "Mr. Lancy is the student of the Stellar Sword Saint." Johann explained.

Stellar Sword Saint?

Linley wasn't even concerned about the Stellar Sword Saint himself, much less his disciple.

"Swish..." The broadsword seemed to split apart the air itself, chopping against Linley with seemingly enormous power. Linley just stood there, not even moving. Bloodviolet flashed...

Mr. Lancer suddenly felt as though the entire world was filled with violet light, and that all the surrounding space had suddenly been locked and frozen.

"Bam!" The flat of Bloodviolet's blade struck against Lancy, knocking him flying back and smashing against the stone screen. The screen split apart, and Lancy spat out a mouthful of blood as he fell to the ground.

Steadying himself with his hands against the floor, Lancy slowly rose to his feet. His eyes didn't have a hint of arrogance in them. Instead, he said with gratitude, "Thank you for being merciful, Master Linley." The flat of the blade had contained such tremendous force when it struck against him. If it had been the edge of the blade, he definitely would have died.

"Of course. It was just a sparring match." Linley said casually.

"Master Linley, you have already mastered the level of using the force of the heavens and the earth. My master once said that in order to reach the Saint-level, one must master this level. I am too far off from your level, Master Linley." Lancy knew his own limits.

When sparring against his master, he had previously experienced this sensation of the space around him having been frozen and locked.

Emperor Johann's eyes narrowed.

The Empire's intelligence regarding the Dragonblood Warriors was quite detailed. If a person were able to reach the ninth rank in human form, then after Dragonforming, that person would definitely be at the Saint-level of power. And if they were able to reach the Saint-level in human form, then in Dragonform, they would definitely be invincible amongst Saint-levels.

"The Saint-level..."

Linley's status in Johann's mind was continuing to rise.

"Haha...master Linley, you truly are the most incredible genius that We have ever seen. Even Olivier cannot come close to competing with you." Johann laughed loudly.

As a warrior, Olivier perhaps was on par with Linley.

But as a magus? Who could compete with him, the greatest genius in all of history?

As a stone sculptor? Linley had been acclaimed as a grandmaster sculptor at the age of sixteen. Every aficionado of stone sculptures was filled with worship towards him.

It was very hard to reach the peak of any field. For someone to reach the peak of three fields...only the word 'genius' could be used to describe him.

"Your Imperial Majesty." Linley didn't want to waste any time with Johann. "I just recently arrived at the imperial capital. There are many things I don't understand too well regarding the affairs of the Empire. But I understand that my younger brother Wharton truly likes the Seventh Princess, Nina. In my capacity as the clan leader of the Baruch clan, I would like to ask you, your Imperial Majesty. Would you be willing to allow Nina to marry into my Baruch clan?"

With Hogg's death, Linley had become the leader of the Baruch clan.

But this so-called clan only had two members to it.

"This..." Johann was put in a very difficult situation by Linley's sudden ambush.

Linley was indeed a genius, and Johann's heart had been moved.

There were quite a few Saint-level warriors in the O'Brien Empire. The War God's College alone had several. But Saint-level Grand Magi could be counted on one hand. And perhaps only a single one of them would obey the commands of the imperial clan.

Perhaps in one-on-one combat, Saint-level Grand Magi were not exceptionally powerful.

But in times of war, Saint-level Grand Magi were incredibly dangerous.

Just think about it. If a Saint-level Grand Magus were to directly cast a destructive forbidden-level spell over your capital, how much damage would be caused? The million man army that you painstakingly built up might be destroyed in an instant by a single forbidden-level spell such as the 'Annihilating Tempest'.

A dual-element Arch Magus of the ninth rank at age twenty seven.

If someone were to tell Johann that a genius such as this wouldn't be able to reach the Saint-level and become a Grand Magus, Johann most likely would curse out that person as being mentally retarded.

"Human talent."

The allure of a Saint-level Grand Magus was much higher than that of a Saint-level warrior.

"Master Linley, please permit Us some time to consider it." Emperor Johann's attitude was incredibly friendly.

"Then I and my younger brother will respectfully await your Imperial Majesty's decision." Linley said with a calm laugh. "Then, your Imperial Majesty, I bid you farewell."

"Master Linley, why not enjoy a dinner with Us instead?" Emperor Johann hurriedly said.

"Thank you, your Imperial Majesty, for your kind offer. But I have other affairs to attend to." Linley said with a smile. A hint of disappointment was on Johann's face, but he didn't try to press the issue. Smiling, he said, "Next time, then."

Linley and Wharton walked out of the inner palace. Wharton was extremely excited. "Big bro, I've never seen his Imperial Majesty be so humble before. Even facing Blumer, he had never been so modest."

"The O'Brien Empire has many Saint-level warriors, but very few Saint-level Grand Magi." Linley laughed calmly. "Most likely, he values my talent in magic."

A twenty-seven year old dual-element Arch Magus of the ninth rank.

Anyone who heard these words would be terrified out of their wits.

Nobody could say for sure how terrifyingly powerful Linley would be in the future.

"Judging from the look on his Imperial Majesty's face, most likely he is beginning to seriously consider things. I've been in the Empire for quite some time, but I haven't heard of any Saint-level Grand Magi yet." Wharton sighed emotionally.

The O'Brien Empire truly had too few Saint-level Grand Magi.

"Hrm?" Wharton suddenly saw someone from afar.

Noticing that Wharton had paused, Linley couldn't help but ask questioningly, "What are you looking at?"

"Oh, it's Wharton. What, did you go to visit his Imperial Majesty?" A cold voice rang out. Linley turned to look as well. At a glance, Linley could tell that this youngster in front of him was no weakling.

"Blumer, what are you doing over there?" Wharton said coldly.

Wharton was fairly familiar with the layout of the imperial palace, especially the wing where the Seventh Princess, Nina, resided in. The direction Blumer was headed towards was precisely the direction where Nina's residence was.

Blumer laughed calmly. "What? Aren't I allowed to visit Princess Nina?"

"Visit Princess Nina?" Wharton suddenly grew calm. "Blumer, I'll wager that you haven't been even allowed inside the main entrance."

This indeed was the case.

Blumer had went to visit Nina, but Nina had shut the gate in his face, refusing to see him at all.

Blumer's heart had been filled with anger at this. All his life, aside from his older brother whom he worshipped, he had never lowered himself in front of anyone. After becoming the personal disciple of the War God, he had become all the more self-confident.

"No. I haven't been able to get in."

Wharton laughed calmly. "Blumer, did you think that because you are the personal disciple of the War God, you would definitely be able to marry Nina? Dream on! Big bro, let's go."

Linley shook his head with a calm smile, then turned and left alongside Wharton as well.

"Hold it!" Blumer suddenly shouted.

"Oh?" Wharton turned his head to look at him. "Might I ask, oh mighty personal disciple of the War God, what else do you want?"

Blumer stared coldly at him. "Wharton, I hear you are of the Dragonblood Warrior clan, and that you are quite powerful after you transform. But I don't believe it. Today, I formally challenge you to a duel.

Do you dare accept?"

Linley couldn't help but narrow his eyes.

Wharton was briefly startled, and then he laughed loudly. "What do I have to fear?"

"A month from now, at the imperial capital's Colosseum. I'll invite his Imperial Majesty as well as my fellow apprentices from the War God's College to officiate. If you don't have the guts to participate, you can give up." Blumer said coldly.

And then Blumer paid no more attention to Wharton, immediately walking away.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 4, The Blade Named 'Slaughterer'

Linley turned his head to glance at his younger brother. Smiling, he said, "Wharton, this Blumer knows how powerful you are, and yet still challenges you. It seems he is quite confident."

Wharton said confidently, "Don't worry, big bro. Since when have we Dragonblood Warriors feared anyone at the same rank?"

"That's exactly the sort of confidence you should have."

Linley glanced at Blumer's disappearing back. "I noticed the sword this Blumer fellow was carrying. It seems rather special."

"Right. Blumer's sword is extremely fast. When he participated in the competition to become an honorary disciple, he became famous for his fast sword speed. But fast swords are usually not very powerful. He might be able to overcome ordinary opponents of the ninth rank, but given my defensive power, even if he lands a hit on me, he most likely wouldn't be able to break my defense." Wharton was extremely confident. "If the honorary disciple tournament had consisted of a winner-take-all tournament, the victor most likely wouldn't have been him."

Smiling, Linley patted Wharton on his shoulder. "Enough. Honorary disciple of the War God's College? Pfft. Let's go. Time to go home."

As the scions of the Dragonblood Warrior clan, Linley and Wharton both possessed a sort of pride.

Blumer quickly informed Emperor Johann of the duel, and Emperor Johan immediately sent someone to ask Wharton if this was the case. After knowing that this was indeed the case, Johann immediately issued the order to have his subordinates prepare the Colosseum for this duel between two geniuses.

All of the citizens of the imperial capital became excited after hearing of this impending duel.

One was the personal disciple of the War God, the ninth ranked warrior, Blumer.

The other was a scion of the Dragonblood Warrior clan, the genius of the O'Brien Academy, Wharton!

Most importantly...

Both of these geniuses were wooing the Imperial Seventh Princess. Given the common folk's natural propensity to engage in gossip, many people began to say that these two geniuses were battling for the sake of the Seventh Princess. All sorts of rumors regarding Wharton, Blumer, and Nina began to fill the streets and alleyways of the imperial capital.

East Channe. Count Wharton's manor, on Boulder Street. Within the training grounds.

Linley and Wharton were each standing on opposite sides of the training ground. Housekeeper Hiri, Hillman, Barker, and the others were watching from far away.

The duel on February 4th was one which Wharton had to win.

Linley stared directly at Wharton. "Wharton, since Blumer is famous for his fast sword attacks, I will compete with you using fast sword attacks. Don't hesitate in the slightest. Use your full strength in battling me."

"Yes, big brother." His upper body bare, Wharton immediately initiated his transformation.

Azure draconic scales began to cover Wharton's entire body, and his arms and legs began to be covered in scales as well, as his nails also began to lengthen and sharpen. A draconic tail sprouted out from behind him, and a single draconic horn emerged from his forehead.

His eyes were still black, despite an occasional golden light flashing through them.

"This is the true, authentic Dragonblood Warrior form of our clan." Seeing his little brother's transformation, Linley felt quite moved. He immediately said loudly, "Wharton, attack me at full strength. Quickly!"

"Understood."

Wharton's eyes lit up, and he forcefully leapt from the ground, causing the earth where he had been standing to tremble. Wharton transformed into a blur as he charged towards Linley, his hands tightly grasped around the warblade Slaughterer, covered as always with countless bloodstains.

"Wielding something light as though it were heavy!" The Bloodviolet Godsword in Linley's hands, carrying a titanic, heavy force, flew up at a seemingly slow speed towards the Slaughterer. It actually managed to block the Slaughterer in an extremely strange way.

"Bang!" The two forces collided.

Linley felt as though he had been slammed into by a giant meteor, as the astonishing force from that blow was transmitted to him through the Bloodviolet Godsword.

"He really is ridiculously strong. An ordinary blow from him is actually on par with me in human form using 'wielding something light as though it were heavy'." Linley couldn't help but sigh in praise. Dragonblood Warriors truly did have an astonishingly powerful level of strength.

Twisting like a tornado, Linley easily dodged past Wharton.

"Swish!"

Nine flashes of violet light appeared. This was just the ordinary attack speed of the Bloodviolet Godsword. As far as Linley was concerned, even if Blumer's sword was very fast, he probably should only be able to reach this level of speed at best.

Tapping the ground with the point of his foot, Wharton quickly leapt backwards with a dodge while also using the warblade 'Slaughterer' in his hands to block Linley's attack.

But although he was able to block six of the attacks, the other three attacks from Linley landed on Wharton's body. These attacks were simply ordinary attacks by Linley in his human form.

"Clang!" "Clang!" "Clang!"

Three metallic ringing sounds could be heard, as three faint white lines appeared on Wharton's azure blue scales.

"Haha...Wharton, it looks like if I don't use a bit of power, I won't be able to hurt you at all." Linley laughed loudly, but in truth, he was very happy.

Wharton looked seriously at his big brother. "Big brother, don't hold back."

In his human form, Linley was only an early-stage warrior of the ninth rank.

But right now, Wharton was already a peak-stage Dragonblood Warrior of the ninth rank. In terms of strength, battle-qi, or defense, he vastly outstripped Linley.

"Lord, if you keep on holding back, I'm afraid Wharton is going to simply beat you down." Gates shouted loudly from the side.

Laughing, Linley shook his head.

"Wharton, be careful."

Linley grew solemn, and then he suddenly began to move at rapid speed. The entire training yard seemed to have suddenly been filled with a wild gust of wind as Linley's body reached a terrifyingly fast speed.

"Whoosh!" The Bloodviolet Godsword chopped towards Wharton, and seemed to press down against Wharton along with the very space around him.

Impose!

Wharton felt an incredible pressure coming towards him, but faced with this dangerous situation, the Dragonblood in his body began to boil. Letting out a deep growl, Wharton exploded forth the Dragonblood battle-qi in his body, allowing this wild strength to be burst forth from his warblade, 'Slaughterer'...

"Swooooosh."

The locked space was chopped open and the warblade collided directly against Linley's Bloodviolet Godsword.

But Linley's Bloodviolet only trembled slightly, then immediately transformed into six sword-shadows. At such close range, Wharton was totally unable to use his warblade to block it.

“Haargh!” Wharton clenched his left fist, which suddenly had become covered with azure light, then smashed it against the nearest sword-shadow.

“Bam!” “Bam!” “Bam!” “Bam!”

The six sword-shadows once more transformed into a single physical shape as Bloodviolet once more pierced towards Wharton, carrying with a terrifying penetrative aura which made Wharton tremble.

Wielding something light as though it were heavy! As fast as lightning!

In the blink of an eye, Linley had stabbed four times at a single spot on Wharton’s body. These repeated stabs pierced through Wharton’s battle-qi and his protective scales, punching into his flesh.

As soon as he pierced through the scales, however, Linley immediately retracted his sword and flew back.

Wharton stood there, stupefied, then raised his head to look at Linley. Disbelievingly, he said, “Big bro, how could you be so fast?” He didn’t even have the ability to react. From this, one could imagine in what a short period of time those attacks had occurred. And yet, Linley had sent out four full attacks!

“You call that fast? If I were to reach my limit, then in a situation like that, I could have sent out another six sword attacks. This was relying purely on speed, not relying on any mysteries or deep insights. If I were to utilize the Rippling Wind technique...” A hint of a smile was on Linley’s lips. "In the blink of an eye, I can execute several hundred sword attacks, or even more!"

Wherever there was wind, his sword could appear.

The power of the Rippling Wind technique lay in a single word: "Fast". So fast it seemed like teleportation. But for the speed to reach such a level meant the power of each strike couldn't be extremely high. But with hundreds of sword blows combined together, the total strength was still astonishingly high.

"Hundreds of sword attacks?" Wharton was shocked. "But...good thing Blumer's speed is far inferior to yours, big bro. If he was this fast, I'd rather just admit defeat."

"Never hope to rely on luck." Linley rebuked coldly. "Wharton, are you so sure you know Blumer's absolute highest speed?"

"No, I don't." Wharton shook his head.

"Use your most powerful attack against me." Linley said seriously.

"Yes, big bro." Wharton grew solemn as well. "This attack was one I developed based on my understanding of 'wielding something heavy as though it were light'. The name is 'Single Stroke Execution'." Wharton gripped the warblade 'Slaughterer' with both hands, and a metallic light flashed atop the warblade's edges.

A hint of a smile was on Linley's face.

"That's a rather murderous name." Linley wielded Bloodviolet in one hand.

"Whoosh!" Wharton sped up to his maximum speed, appearing before Linley in the blink of an eye. The warblade, Slaughterer, seemed to dance in his hands, as agile as a falling leaf. "Swish!" It chopped towards Linley.

Although the impression it gave was that it seemed to be moving quite slowly, in the blink of an eye, it arrived in front of Linley. Facing this chop, Linley could actually feel a murderous, bloody aura emanating from it.

Linley didn't dare to be the slightest bit careless.

"Clang!" "Clang!" "Clang!"

Linley seemed to have transformed into the sun as he seemed to radiate a million flashes of violet light. These violet flashes of light all converged against the warblade 'Slaughterer'. The terrifying attack power that the warblade 'Slaughterer' originally had possessed was slowly, yet totally being cancelled out by the force of those countless violet flashes of light.

"Bang!" The warblade was actually sent flying, and Wharton himself was chopped countless times by those flashes of violet light and sent flying as well.

Wharton coughed twice, rubbing his chest as he stood up.

"Not bad. It is quite powerful." Linley said approvingly. "It actually took ten...no, sixteen hits from my sword to cancel out your attack." When using the Rippling Wind, every sword blow was fairly weak.

In truth, if Linley were to attack at full strength, each blow would probably be around 25% of the power of that one chop of Wharton's.

Logically speaking, Linley should've been able to cancel out the attack with just four hits.

"In principle, there shouldn't be any expert of the ninth rank who is a match for you, unless they are a Supreme Warrior, in which case you might have a fight on your hands." Linley said approvingly.

"Also." Linley looked at Wharton. "You need to learn how to more agilely control your battle-qi, and also how to move more fluidly. You shouldn't let the opponent land several blows on you in one spot."

Wharton nodded.

"Lord." A servant ran over and bowed respectfully. "Lord, there is a fellow called Reynolds who says he has come to see you, Lord Linley."

"Reynolds?" Linley's eyes lit up.

Not bothering to chat any longer with his little brother, Linley immediately rushed towards the outside of the manor. Linley hadn't seen his fourth bro, Reynolds, for nine full years.

Reaching the front courtyard, Linley's footsteps slowed.

Seeing the figure outside the gate, Linley felt as though he had gone back in time. His most carefree, happy youthful years had been spent with his beloved bros, when the four young men had went to the Jade Water Paradise to drink and have fun.

Those distant days were so happy.

And now, the current Reynolds...

Reynolds was wearing a long, plain robe. But his waist was now ramrod straight. His long years spent in the army had given Reynolds the aura of a military man. And by now, Reynolds was nearly 1.9 meters tall.

"Fourth bro!"

Reynolds, who had been waiting at the gate, heard the shout. He immediately looked over, and his eyes lit up. Linley had changed as well. That dazzlingly genius had now become much more reserved and composed. "Third bro!"

"Haha..."

The two bros rushed towards each other, clutching each other in an embrace."

"I didn't expect that you, fourth bro, would join the army. It's been seven or eight years now, right? When you were at the gate, I actually wasn't sure if it was you. I was wondering to myself, why has a military official come here?" Linley teased.

Reynolds clubbed Linley on the chest. "Third bro, damn, I had no choice but to join the army. My old man forced me to. What was I supposed to do?"

"Fortunately, this time when I took my leave of absence, Yale sent someone to inform me that you had arrived at the imperial capital. On my way back, I came to pay a visit to your little bro and look for you. I felt sure that upon arriving at the imperial capital, you'd definitely head to your little bro's place. And see? Here you are."

"Haha, let's go inside and chat."

After having been separated for nine years, these bros had countless things to say to each other. They had been separated for nine years. Nine years later, those two youths had both become accomplished young men.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 5, The Colosseum

Night arrived. The imperial capital of Channe was still bustling and beautiful as brocade, but the wilderness outside East Channe was very desolate. On the desolate road, there was a single ghost-like human figure rapidly heading east.

In the blink of an eye, the human figure travelled over a hundred meters.

This person was the personal disciple of the War God, the current rising star of the imperial capital; Blumer Akerlund.

The imperial capital of Channe was surrounded by many mountains. Outside West Channe was the War God Mountain and other mountains, while outside East Channe was a number of unremarkable mountain peaks as well. Blumer quickly arrived at one seemingly ordinary mountain.

At the top of this mountain was a peak that seemed knife-sharp. At the absolute top of this peak, a man was seated in the meditative stance. Looking at how he sat there, one might be forgiven for having the strange feeling that this man had been there for tens of millions of years.

Arriving at the mountain peak, Blumer said respectfully, "Elder brother."

Clearly, the person quietly meditating at the peak of the mountain was Blumer's elder brother, the one known as the Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier. Tonight, there was no moon in the sky, nor any stars. In the darkness, one could only hazily make out Olivier's figure.

"Second brother. Is there something you need?" A cold voice rang out.

Blumer knew that his elder brother had been quietly meditating here on this mountain peak for three full years. These three years, his elder brother had neither eaten nor drank anything. He had used the skies as his roof and the earth as his bed.

Three years ago, when he had seen his big brother, he could sense emanating from his big brother's body a terrifying, incisive aura. That sort of aura gave the impression that with just a thought, Olivier could defeat him.

But after three years, his elder brother seemed to have turned into a boulder on the mountain, without any fierce aura at all.

No one had any idea how powerful the current Olivier had become!

"Elder brother, on the fourth of the next month, which is to say fifteen days from now, I will have a duel with a scion of the Dragonblood Warrior clan at the Colosseum of the imperial capital." Blumer said respectfully.

"Dragonblood Warrior clan?"

His normally tranquil voice seemed to carry a hint of interest. "According to legend, Saint-level Dragonblood Warriors are experts even amongst Saint-levels. I very much want to exchange blows with a Saint-level Dragonblood Warrior, but Saint-level Dragonblood Warriors have disappeared long ago from the Yulan continent. Mmm. How strong is the person whom you are dueling?"

"After transforming, he should be at the peak-stage of the ninth rank." Blumer said respectfully.

"Oh. Using the sword arts that I taught you, you should be invincible amongst the ninth rank combatants." Olivier said calmly. "Enough. You can leave now."

Blumer hesitated a moment, then said in a low voice, "Elder brother, on the day of my duel, can you come?"

Olivier was quiet for a moment.

"February 4th. Understood. If I have time, I will hasten there." Olivier's voice didn't change tone in the slightest. It was as calm as ever.

"Then I bid you farewell." Blumer immediately left.

The mountain peak returned to its prior stillness. That human shadow in the darkness didn't move at all, as though it had always been and always would be part of that mountain peak.

Yulan calendar, year 10009. February 4th. This was the day two geniuses were going to duel, and many people in the imperial capital excitedly hurried to the Colosseum. Those 80,000 Colosseum tickets had been sold out long ago, and today, it wasn't just people from the imperial capital who were hurrying to watch the duel. There were people from other cities and even other provinces.

Linley's group had arrived at the Colosseum early on, and had been given a private room within it. Linley, Reynolds, and Yale were engaged in active conversation.

"Boss Yale, I didn't expect that you would be able to make it here as well." Reynolds laughed.

Yale's forehead was still covered in sweat. Looking at Linley and Reynolds, he laughed very happily. "After I heard that you arrived at the imperial capital, fourth bro, and that third bro was here as well, even the most important of tasks became irrelevant, and I came. This time, I can also help cheer on third bro's little brother."

"Boss Yale, fourth bro, you all came. Now, we're only missing second bro." Linley said emotionally.

"Second bro is now a Grand Secretary of the Yulan Empire. He has an extremely high status. What's more, given that distance from there to here is over ten thousand kilometers, how can he possibly make it in time?" Yale sighed as well.

Reynolds laughingly cursed, "Back when the four of us were at the Academy, second bro was the most glib and most crafty. He participated in every school activity, and he also was very good at hosting them. I knew even back then that second bro would be suited for officialdom, and see? Just ten years later, he's managed to swindle his way into becoming a Grand Secretary of the Yulan Empire."

"It is fortunate that the current Emperor of the Yulan Empire succeeded to the throne when he did. This caused second bro's position and status to immediately rise." Yale said approvingly.

Footsteps could be heard outside the door.

"Bro, we're heading out to the Colosseum. Let's go." Hearing this call, Yale, Linley, and Reynolds all rose and left the resting room.

In the center of the Colosseum, there was a dueling platform over three hundred meters long and three hundred meters wide. The platform was constructed from enormous slabs of tough rock, and were covered with large-scale magical arrays.

On the east and west sides of the dueling platform were the viewing platforms for the families of the duelists.

Directly in front of the dueling platform was the position reserved for the officiating hosts of the duel.

Wharton, Linley, and the others came out of the tunnel. Seeing the countless teeming human forms surround them in the Colosseum, they couldn't help but feel stunned.

"So many people." Wharton had a forced smile on his face.

The fifth brother Gates said with a laugh, "Wharton, there are eighty thousand people here today. You'd best not lose any face."

The chants from the crowd seemed like the howling of the seas, filling the air. Linley and his group could totally sense the excitement of the onlookers.

The O'Brien Empire was a highly martial Empire. The duel between two ultimate geniuses would attract the attention of countless people. There were 80,000 watchers inside, and outside the Colosseum, there were many people hoping they would somehow have a chance to catch a glimpse of this duel.

Above Wharton's seat, Linley, Yale, Reynolds, Barker and his brothers, and the others all sat down. Blumer's side had arrived early as well.

Blumer had many people with him, over a hundred.

"Plenty of them are honorary disciples of the War God's College. It seems they have come to support Blumer." Linley said with a calm laugh.

He could tell that all of those people were very strong.

"What good does it do him to bring so many supporters?" Yale laughed contemptuously.

Right at this time, the chants began to build. Clearly, with both the participants in the duel having appeared, everyone had become extremely excited.

"80,000 people. The most people I've seen in one location, even in the army, was 10,000 training together." Reynolds stared at the spectacle here in the Colosseum. As the Four Great Empires currently were not in an era of large-scale warfare, it was rare to see the various armies massed together.

"Everyone, silence!"

A voice rang out like a bolt of thunder, covering the entire Colosseum. Those 80,000 viewers immediately quieted down, as they stared at the silver-haired old man in the middle of the Colosseum.

Linley and the others began to chuckle. This silver haired old man was an expert of the ninth rank. Given his prowess in battle-qi, it wasn't hard for him to have his voice cover the entire Colosseum.

"For a duel such as this, even the officiating host must be an expert." Linley sighed ruefully.

The silver-haired old man boomed out, "Everyone, this duel we are about to see is the most important duel in recent history. Of the two participants, one is the personal disciple of the War God, Marquis Blumer. The other is a scion of the Dragonblood Warrior clan, Count Wharton. Both of them are unquestioned geniuses, but who exactly is stronger?"

The silver-haired old man began to laugh. "Soon enough, everyone will know. As for the judges for this day, I expect everyone will be very happy once you learn who they are."

"The first is the personal disciple of the War God, Lord Kenyon [Kai'ni'en]." The silver-haired old man said clearly.

A middle-aged man with graying temples, dressed in a long blue robe, came striding out of a tunnel. And then, with a single step, he seemed to turn into a blur. Lord Kenyon suddenly appeared in the judge's position, then sat down.

The appearance of this Lord Kenyon sent everyone in the Colosseum into a frenzy, as countless shouts and chants could be heard.

"A Saint-level expert." Linley was absolutely certain.

Just then, Kenyon had used a flying technique to directly arrive at the leftmost judge's position.

"The second is our Imperial Majesty, the Emperor of the O'Brien Empire." The silver-haired old man's voice grew higher, and the lavishly dressed Johann, face beaming with smiles, walked towards the judge's seats, taking the middle position.

The arrival of the Emperor naturally instigated yet another bout of wild joy.

The silver-haired old man's face was covered with smiles as well. "After finding out who our third judge is, I too was both shocked and overjoyed." The silver-haired old man intentionally paused a moment, and the 80,000 viewers all fell silent, listening closely. Who was this third judge?

"The third judge is the pride of our Empire...the Monolithic Sword Saint, Lord Haydson!"

As soon as the words 'Lord Haydson' came out, the entire Colosseum seemed to go utterly mad, as the countless viewers began to scream and shout excitedly.

"HAYDSON! HAYDSON!!!"

"MONOLITHIC SWORD SAINT!"

Some of the more powerful warriors began to use their battle-qi to shout. The chants sounded like a million thunderbolts ripping through the Colosseum, as everyone went stark raving mad.

"Crazy. They've all gone crazy." Gates was flabbergasted. "Is it worth getting this crazy for a Saint-level expert?"

Zassler glanced at him, laughing. "You haven't been in the O'Brien Empire for very long. You have no idea how influential the Monolithic Sword Saint is."

Reynolds' eyes were filled with excitement as well. "After reaching the Saint-level, Lord Haydson has experienced countless duels and battles, but he has never lost a single time! Even against the other peak-stage Saint-level experts of the Empire, he achieved complete victory. He is the number one Saint-level. No one amongst the Saint-levels can defeat him. The Monolithic Sword Saint – Haydson!"

Linley, Wharton, and the others all stared at the distant tunnel, quietly awaiting Haydson's appearance.

Haydson finally came out.

Haydson appeared simple and unadorned, the lines of his face as hard and sharp as something from a stone sculpture. He wore only a simple gray robe, and on his back was an earth-colored heavy sword.

His steps were steady and sure. Haydson didn't use any flying technique. He merely walked forward.

With a single step though, he somehow walked from the tunnel to the officiating host's platform. With the second step, he somehow arrived next to Emperor Johann, then took his seat next to Johann.

It was as though he had teleported!

"What was that?" Linley had seen something that was utterly unbelievable.

Barker and the others were all stunned as well.

"Was that teleportation?" Wharton murmured.

But Linley was absolutely certain it was not teleportation! As far as Linley knew, there was no one alive who could teleport. Teleportation was just a fairy tale.

“When Haydson walked, the entire earth seemed to tremble. In the blink of an eye, it was as though that long distance suddenly became short, allowing him to travel dozens of meters with one step. It was so relaxed. It didn’t rely on speed at all. With but a single step, he could somehow shorten the distance?”

It was simply too astonishing.

Linley’s own training relied on two different paths. One was on divining the Laws of the Earth, and the other was on attuning with the Laws of the Wind.

This simple technique that Haydson had utilized had something to do with the Laws of the Earth, but...Linley could not understand it at all. How had Haydson done this?

“Whew.”

Letting out a deep breath, Linley calmly sat down.

“He is reputed to be the number one amongst Saint-levels. In all these years, no one has ever defeated him. It makes sense for a person like him to have such capability.” Linley was still very confident.

Haydson might have his own marvelous abilities, but wouldn’t Haydson in turn be unable to understand Linley’s vibrational attacks?

Although they both attuned to the Laws of the Earth, they had each embarked on different paths.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 6, The Duel

Both the Emperor Johann as well as the War God's disciple, Kenyon, immediately stood up, smiling as they greeted Haydson. Haydson acted in a very friendly manner, greeting Emperor Johann and Kenyon as well.

The three judges sat down.

Behind the judges, there were many seats as well, all taken. These people primarily consisted of the likes of the Empress, the imperial consorts, the princes, and the princesses.

"Nina." Wharton saw that Nina was in that crowd of people.

Nina saw Wharton as well. Over the past few days, the Emperor had restricted her from leaving the palace, so Wharton and Nina hadn't seen each other in over a month. Given the depths of their affection for each other, even three days without seeing each other would feel like three years. These thirty days of not seeing each other had been very arduous indeed.

Wharton and Nina exchanged glances. They could sense from each other's gazes the love and affection each bore the other.

"Hrmph." Seeing this, Blumer couldn't help but snort coldly. An ordinary person might not have been able to see this clearly from a distance of hundreds of meters, but Blumer's vision was simply too good. He could clearly see the look in these two people's eyes.

Sometimes, having good eyesight wasn't necessarily a good thing.

The silver-haired old man looked at the Emperor and at the judges. Emperor Johann nodded, and the silver-haired old man laughed. In a sonorous voice, he said, "Everyone, please be quiet. The duel between the two geniuses of the O'Brien Empire is about to start. First, introducing the challenger, the personal disciple of the War God...Blumer!"

The challenger was the first to be announced, while the challenged was the second to be announced. This was the rule.

Carrying a long sword on his back, and dressed in a blue warrior's outfit, Blumer flew several dozen meters into the air, arriving onto the dueling platform.

"BLUMER!"

"BLUMER!"

Many of the 80,000 onlookers began to chant loudly. Clearly, many supporters of Blumer were here today. In the hearts of many people, Blumer's older brother, Olivier, was the pride of the O'Brien Empire.

"Quiet." The silver-haired old man smiled. "Next is Wharton, of the Dragonblood Warrior clan."

"Rumble..." Tearing off his upper body clothes, Wharton bared his torso, revealing his explosively muscular chest, causing many viewers to roar in excitement.

"Hrmph." Seeing this, Blumer only let out a cold, contemptuous sneer.

Taking the warblade 'Slaughterer' in his hands, Wharton leapt directly onto the dueling platform. Given Wharton's 2.2 meter tall stature, and with that massive warblade in his hands, and his bare upper body...

Wharton emanated a simply heroic aura.

Heroic!

This sort of heroic aura caused many people to begin joyful chants. "WHARTON!" "WHARTON!" These chants began to erupt as well, and these supporters were not any fewer in number than Blumer's.

"What is so impressive about Blumer, that he was able to become the personal disciple of the War God? Today, everyone shall find out." The silver-haired old man said sonorously. "As for the legendary Dragonblood Warriors, acclaimed as Supreme Warriors, today, everyone will have a chance to witness them in action as well."

"I now announce..."

The silver-haired old man's voice went up in pitch. "This duel has commenced!"

In the blink of an eye, Wharton's body was covered with azure draconic scales. A draconic horn sprouted forth from his forehead, and that blue draconic tail came out as well. The entire dueling platform began to tremble. Beneath the light of the sun, those azure blue draconic scales radiated a dazzling glare.

"Ooooooooo."

A collective noise of surprise could be heard from the onlookers. None of the people present had seen the Dragonform transformation. This transformation of Wharton's had totally stunned the watchers.

But after being momentarily stunned, everyone burst into wild cheers of joy.

"Dragonblood Warrior?" All three of the judges watched with their eyes lit up. Haydson looked at Wharton with interest. "It would be wonderful if he was at the Saint-level."

The legendary Saint-level Dragonblood Warriors were experts even amongst the Saint-levels.

And he himself, the Monolithic Sword Saint Haydson, was an expert amongst the Saint-levels. It had been a long time since Haydson had tasted defeat. But yet if he were to challenge a Deity-level combatant, he would definitely lose. Against that sort of overwhelming force, there was nothing Haydson could do either.

He truly hoped that there would appear a Saint-level combatant capable of defeating him.

Perhaps, he would gain some insights and suddenly break through to the next level, reaching the Deity-level.

"So this is a Dragonblood Warrior?" A twelve year old child holding Nina's hands who sat next to her said. Nina looked at the figure on the dueling platform, then nodded. "Right. This is the legendary Supreme Warrior."

Given the relationship between the two of them, Wharton had long ago demonstrated the Dragonform transformation for her.

"Haha, Dragonblood Warrior. Not bad." Blumer looked at Wharton and began to laugh. "But my Akerlund clan has never believed the Four Supreme Warriors to be all that strong."

Blumer stared coldly at Wharton as he drew his longsword with a flip of his hand.

The longsword looked like it was forged from a piece of ice, seemingly see-through. Beneath the light of the sun, it radiated all the colors of the rainbow. Blumer confidently looked at Wharton, and he loudly said, "This is the precious sword which my older brother gifted to me: Icedream."

Wharton hefted the warblade 'Slaughterer'. In a cold voice, he said, "The warblade, 'Slaughterer', the ancestral heirloom of our Baruch clan, the personal weapon of the first Dragonblood Warrior."

"Oh?" Blumer sneered.

All the onlookers fell silent. They watched with wide eyes carefully trained on this duel between geniuses. They didn't want to miss a thing.

"Whoosh!"

In the blink of an eye, Blumer seemed to suddenly disappear as a violent gust of wind suddenly appeared out of nowhere in the dueling platform. This was a gust of wind created by Blumer's speed.

The wind blasted against Wharton's face, but Wharton simply stood there without moving.

"Hrm?" Wharton suddenly noticed Blumer out of the corner of his left eye. Just as Wharton turned and prepared to attack, he suddenly sensed another gust of wind ambushing him from his right.

Indeed.

Blumer's real body was to his right.

Laughing coldly, Blumer looked at Wharton as he mercilessly chopped towards Wharton with Icedream. But Wharton, his back facing Blumer, suddenly smashed with his iron-whip-like draconic tail.

"WHAP!" The draconic tail smashed viciously against Icedream, with part of the tail landing against Blumer's body as well.

"BAM!"

Blumer's body was sent flying by that blow as if he were but a sandbag. In mid-air, Blumer recovered with a beautiful somersault, landing on one knee at the edge of the platform.

All the viewers held their breath, not daring to chant or shout.

"Ugh." Blumer spat out a bit of blood, then stared at his chest, where the draconic tail had struck. His clothes had been ripped apart. Although his chest had been protected by battle-qi, the battle-qi had been ripped open. A visible wound was on his chest, and blood was slowly leaking out.

Only now did Wharton turn around, staring at Blumer with his cold black eyes. A golden light flashed through those eyes.

"What powerful force." Blumer said in a low voice.

Without question, no warrior at the same level possessed the same strength or power of attack as a Dragonblood Warrior. Just a swipe from Wharton's draconic tail would be enough to deeply wound Blumer.

Blumer now fully understood that in fighting Wharton, he could not allow himself to be struck. Just the tip of the draconic tail had struck his chest, but he had already been wounded. If it had been a full blow, he probably wouldn't have been wounded so lightly.

"Boom!"

With monstrous force, Wharton kicked off from the ground, which trembled despite the protective magical barriers on it. Transforming into a cruel blur, in the blink of an eye Wharton crossed the hundred meters distance between the two of them as he charged at Blumer.

"Haaaargh!"

Carrying immense force, Slaughterer came crashing down on him. Without hesitating in the slightest, Blumer immediately dodged. At the same moment as when he attacked with the warblade, Wharton spun around and kicked out with both legs viciously at Blumer.

Blumer didn't dare to block at all, only continuing to retreat at high speed.

"Whap!" But despite his high speed of retreat, that lightning-fast draconic tail snapped towards him once again, and Blumer hurriedly raised Icedream to block.

"Bam!" Despite striking against Icedream, the powerful force of the blow still sent Blumer flying far away towards the spectator stands of the Colosseum. The people standing near the spectator stands quickly scattered as Blumer viciously slammed down.

"Bam!" The stone spectator stands split apart, sending rubble flying everywhere and covering the area with dust.

All the viewers sucked in a cold breath. Dragonblood Warriors were simply too powerful. Because of their terrifyingly powerful draconic scales, their legs, arms, and tail could clash head on against weapons.

This was a major advantage.

"Aaaaargh!" With a wild howl, Blumer came flying out from the dust cloud. He didn't charge directly at Wharton; rather, he charged towards the other side of the dueling platform.

With just three massive leaps, Blumer arrived at the other side.

"Blumer, you will definitely lose." Wharton said coldly.

Blumer's body was covered in bloodstains, but he still stood ramrod straight. Blumer didn't look at Wharton, only at the longsword in his hand. "I originally wanted to defeat you using the sword technique that I personally developed. But it seems that I will have to use the sword technique which my older brother taught me."

"His older brother's sword technique?"

Haydson could clearly hear each word. "Olivier's Lightshadow Sword? I wonder how much of Olivier's technique he has mastered."

Linley frowned as well.

Olivier's sword technique?

"Remember, the technique which defeated you is the Lightshadow Sword!" Blumer's cold voice rang out. Suddenly, the Icedream sword in Blumer's hand became covered with a layer of golden light.

"Rumble..."

The strange thing was, standing on the dueling platform, Blumer suddenly split into two people, along with the sword in his hands. But then, those two shadows split once more...

One became two. Two became four. Four became eight.

This sight was simply too queer.

"What astonishing speed." Given his current level of enlightenment, Linley could tell that this Blumer was relying on an astonishing level of speed to reach this effect.

"This speed is actually slightly faster than my fastest speed in human form." Linley was secretly startled.

Wharton kept a careful, solemn guard. He felt as though he were surrounded by Blumer's shadows. Blumer was very fast, far faster than him. Even faster than his big brother Linley's human form.

"You will lose for sure."

The ice cold voice seemed to ring out simultaneously from all of those human shadows. Just as Wharton tightened his guard even further, those illusionary shadows suddenly blurred as Blumer appeared in front of him.

"Slash!"

Wharton simply didn't have time to use his warblade to block, and so he could only raise his arm, relying on it to block this blow.

"Clang!" The sound of metal ringing on metal could be heard. Icedream only left a white line on Wharton's scales, but at the same time, Wharton's draconic tail...

"Swish!"

The draconic tail came smashing over...but Blumer disappeared yet again.

Having failed with this attack, he had immediately retreated.

"What is going on?" Wharton was shocked. "How did he suddenly appear in front of me just now?"

But Linley had seen everything clearly and understood. "Using the illusionary effects of this Lightshadow technique, he can draw near without his opponents noticing, and then using his astonishing speed, appear in front of his opponent before the opponent has a chance to react."

Linley was able to use his understanding of the wind to easily determine where his opponent was, as a way to overcome this technique.

Wharton, however, didn't have much attunement to the wind.

"Why are there so many shadows." The 80,000 onlookers were stunned. They saw that on the dueling platform, sixteen shadow-Blumers had appeared. As a piercing golden light flashed, one of Blumer's shadow-bodies appeared in a different location.

The total number of shadows remained sixteen in number.

Whenever one shadow disappeared, another shadow would appear in a different location. Every single time there was a change, there was a flash of golden light.

Bizarre.

Wharton watched carefully. As another golden light flashed, Wharton's vision was dazzled, but right at this moment, Blumer's longsword appeared in front of him. Blumer didn't aim this attack at any other location, only at Wharton's eyes.

That flashing golden sword had already appeared in front of Wharton's eyes.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 7, Intending to Inflict Serious Wounds

The look on Blumer’s face changed.

Flee!

Drawing his sword back with a powerful pull, Blumer quickly fell backwards, pressing his back nearly against the dueling platform while hurriedly scuttling backwards. Right at this moment, Wharton’s draconic tail smashed towards Blumer.

If Blumer hadn’t pressed his body down to the ground, he definitely would have been struck.

“Whew.” Blumer stood once more at the edge of the dueling platform, panting slightly. That had been too close; he had almost been struck by Wharton’s draconic tail.

Blumer’s head hurt. Wharton’s defense was simply too powerful. His attacks couldn’t break that defense at all.

"Is that technique my only option?" Blumer only had a superficial understanding of the 'Lightshadow Sword' technique, but according to what Olivier had taught him, he could still utilize the most powerful attack of the Lightshadow Sword.

.....

Everyone in the Colosseum was holding their breaths. These experts simply fought at too high a speed, making it impossible for most people to see clearly what was going on. They only saw that Blumer seemed to have transformed into sixteen shadows, moving about as though he was teleporting.

But Wharton was like a sturdy castle. No matter how Blumer attacked, he was unable to hurt Wharton.

"If you won't attack me, then it's my turn to attack you." Wharton's voice rang out in the Colosseum, and then Wharton charged wildly towards Blumer.

Blumer immediately prepared to dodge.

But Wharton's seemingly light, agile blow from his warblade had reached a bizarre speed, and was chopping directly at Blumer's skull. Blumer quickly fell backwards while kicking off against the ground.

"Whoosh!" Blumer retreated backwards at high speed.

Although his retreat was very fast, Wharton's Slaughterer was even faster. Just as it was about to reach Blumer's vital chest area, Blumer immediately split his legs open and rolled to the back.

"Bam!" The Slaughter just scraped Blumer on the back, slamming against the ground.

Slaughterer – Single Stroke Execution!

"Boom!" The entire dueling platform began to tremble, and the magical formation on the dueling platform actually split apart as massive cracks appeared on the platform. This caused all of the 80,000 viewers to feel both shock and fear.

The defense of this dueling platform was incredibly strong, but the magical array had actually been destroyed nonetheless?

Blumer somersaulted in mid-air, then landed at the edges of the dueling platform. The audience near him couldn't help but begin to cry out in shock and fear.

Blumer roared angrily, a fierce look on his face.

With a fierce kick against the dueling platform, Wharton flew into the air at high speed towards Blumer's direction as the platform beneath him cracked yet again. Blumer once again dodged.

"Ahhh!" Seeing Wharton charge towards them, all the onlookers up above began to scream in fear.

But despite moving at high speed, Wharton only lightly balanced against the wall, then changed direction, continuing to pursue after Blumer.

Blumer retreated back to the top of the dueling platform, his face now completely red as his body emanated a red light. His face then turned a golden color, although his eyes remained red.

"What is Blumer doing?" Linley frowned.

Wharton, showing no fear, brandished the warblade 'Slaughterer' and charged directly at Blumer for close quarters combat.

Right now, many of the viewers began to cheer for Wharton, while others cursed at Blumer. Clearly, Blumer's repeated dodges had roused the anger of the crowd. Relying on greater speed to run and hide; what was that? Why not just admit defeat?

Blumer stared coldly at the charging Wharton, a hint of madness in his bloodshot eyes.

The golden aura covering Icedream suddenly carried a hint of white light in it. From a distance, Linley could clearly tell that the sword's aura had grown more powerful.

"Rumble..."

Repeating his old tactic, Blumer's body once more separated into multiple images. As flashes of golden-white light appeared, so too did more and more shadow-Blumers.

"Blumer, can't you do anything besides just run?" Wharton stood there. "If you have any ability, come and play."

Wharton knew that in speed, he was inferior to Blumer.

"As you wish, Wharton!" A gnashing, wrathful voice could be heard as a dazzling golden light flashed, and a longsword appeared in front of Wharton.

Wharton was shocked.

In terms of speed, this time it was even faster than last time.

"Haaargh!" Wharton once more wanted to use his left hand to grab at Icedream and rely on the toughness of the scales around his palm to block the tip, but this time....

"Slash!"

Covered with that golden-white aura, Icedream actually pierced straight through Wharton's palm and then, with astonishing speed, stabbed into Wharton's scale-armored chest.

And then, still covered in that bizarre golden-white light, Icedream once more split open Wharton's scales.

Although it took time to describe it, the actual event happened in the blink of an eye. Icedream pierced through both Wharton's palm and into his chest, and Wharton had actually reacted very quickly as well.

"fuck off!" Wharton's right leg kicked viciously against Blumer.

Blumer, forewarned, had immediately begun to withdraw his sword. Piercing through the opponent was difficult, but pulling the sword out was much easier. Blumer dodged Wharton's kick, but he wasn't able to dodge the slap from Wharton's draconic tail...

Wharton had actually launched consecutive attacks with his tail and leg.

"Whap!" That draconic tail came swinging towards him. Unable to dodge it, Blumer could only use his left arm to block, while at the same time, allowing the momentum of the force to carry him backwards.

"Bam!"

The battle-qi protecting Blumer's left arm immediately split open, and the tip of the draconic tail actually slammed into Blumer's chest, knocking Blumer spinning through the air.

Wharton fell to the ground paralyzed, blood pouring from the wound in his chest.

"Big lunk!"

Nina called out in shock.

Wharton's injury was very severe. This sword blow from Blumer had pierced into his vitals and damaged his internal organs. Even coughing wracked Wharton's body with immense pain.

Blumer flipped up from his fallen position on the ground.

His left arm was broken, but he was still battle-worthy. But right now, Wharton could no longer move. If he were to try to do so, his severe injury would only grow more severe, to the point where he might even lose his life.

"Haha..."

Blumer laughed coldly. By this point, it could be said that Blumer was the victor, but Blumer actually moved at high speed towards Wharton, the Icedream sword in his hands stabbing mercilessly towards Wharton.

Just as Blumer moved, another human figure suddenly moved as well.

"fuck off!" An angry roar could be heard. The 80,000 viewers only saw a sudden hurricane wind appear out of nowhere, and then countless flashes of violet light simultaneously struck against Blumer.

Blumer immediately hurriedly roused the battle-qi in his body to form a protective armor.

He didn't dare to take the blow head on. Borrowing the momentum force from those blows, he hurriedly retreated, letting himself be blasted backwards. But despite that, he still suffered several dozen sword wounds.

Blood flowed everywhere.

Fortunately, he retreated at high speed. If he had dared to resist the blow for even a second, Linley's sword would have run him through. The only things he had suffered so far were superficial wounds.

"Wharton, are you okay?" Linley couldn't be bothered with Blumer as he immediately inspected Wharton's injury.

"I...am fine." Wharton shook his head.

Linley's face changed. The chest was a vital area. A serious blow there could be life threatening. That Blumer could already be considered to have achieved victory, but he still had wanted to kill Wharton.

"This gentleman with the violet sword, please depart. Others cannot interfere in the duel between these two." A cold voice rang out. The speaker was one of the judges, Mr. Kenyon.

Linley turned to stare at him.

Couldn't he tell that Wharton had already been defeated?

"I represent my younger brother in admitting defeat." Linley said coldly. If they lost a duel, then they lost it. To Linley, this wasn't nearly as important as Wharton's life.

It was normal for an expert to lose a duel at times. As long as they could learn from their losses, they would be able to slowly improve.

"Impossible." Kenyon said calmly. "Per the rules of the competition, unless one of the duelists personally admits defeat, the duel must continue to its conclusion. Since Wharton has not yet admitted defeat, the duel has not finished."

Blumer rose to his feet as well.

Although he looked as though he had been badly injured, Linley's sword hadn't injured him at his vital points. He still could do battle.

"You are Wharton's older brother? Nonetheless, I still ask that you depart. Wharton and I will continue our competition." Blumer said directly.

Wharton's chest was deeply injured, and he could only speak in a tiny voice. If he used too much force to speak, his wound would worsen as well. Wharton opened his mouth, forcing himself to say loudly, "I...I..."

Watching beads of sweat form on his little brother's forehead as he struggled, Linley's heart clenched in pain. "Wharton, don't speak. Don't speak." Linley stopped his little brother from speaking.

"Sir, please leave the dueling platform." The judge, Kenyon, spoke again in a loud voice.

"You shut your motherfucking mouth!!!" Filled with rage, Linley roared at him loudly.

The entire Colosseum grew silent. Even the judge, Kenyon, was stunned. He...he had just been cursed at?!

He, a stately personal disciple of the War God, a Saint-level expert, had just been cursed!?

In the Colosseum, in front of 80,000 viewers, he had been cursed!!!

Kenyon immediately erupted with fury.

"Whoosh!" Kenyon immediately flew out of the judge's stand towards the dueling platform, staring at Linley coldly. "What type of thing are you, that you dare speak to your betters in such a way?"

Kenyon was both a Saint-level expert and the personal disciple of the War God. Who would dare be disrespectful to him?

Even the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, was very polite towards him. But today, in front of all these people, he had actually been cursed out by this person who came from gods-knew-where.

"Barker, take Wharton away first." Linley glanced coldly at Kenyon.

Barker and his brothers immediately rushed towards the dueling platform.

"Boom!" "Boom!" "Boom!" Barker and his brothers landed on the platform with those long-handled greataxes on their backs, and the weight of those 5000+ pound greataxes caused the earth to shudder.

All the onlookers had gone completely silent.

Barker and his brothers very carefully lifted Wharton up, taking him down from the platform. As they did, however, Barker and the others glared viciously at Kenyon.

"fuck, who the fuck does he think he is?" Gates even cursed at him in a low growl.

Kenyon couldn't help but stare angrily at Gates...but just at this moment, Linley's body began to undergo an astonishing transformation. Black draconic scales sprouted forth from his body, and his forehead, back, elbows, and knees all became covered with sharp spikes. A black draconic tail began to wave about behind him.

"Ah!" The onlooking audience members cried out in shock.

"He is a Dragonblood Warrior as well?" Seeing this, Haydson was shocked as well. Linley's Dragonform was much more ferocious-looking than Wharton's, in particular that line of spikes running up his spine.

Raising his head, Linley stared at Kenyon with those utterly remorseless dark golden eyes.

Today, Linley's heart was filled with boundless fury. An expert such as Kenyon should have easily been able to tell the sort of condition his little brother was in. His little brother had already lost, and so Emperor Johann and Haydson hadn't spoken out or tried to stop Linley. But Kenyon had tried to stop him. Clearly, he was biased in favor of his fellow apprentice, Blumer.

Kenyon began to grow wary.

He discovered...

The person in front of him was a threat.

"Dragonblood Warrior?" Kenyon said in a solemn voice, floating in mid-air.

Linley actually rose into the air as well, rising to the same height as Kenyon as he stared coldly at him. Seeing Linley float in the air, everyone in the Colosseum exploded with excitement.

Good heavens! Yet another Saint-level combatant!

Was this going to be a battle between two Saint-level combatants? This was simply too exciting!

Two Saint-level experts stood in mid-air, staring at each other!

"I already told you that my younger brother admitted defeat. But you... still wanted my younger brother to continue." Linley's voice was utterly cold, seeming to come from the underworld.

"My fellow apprentice only wanted your younger brother to personally admit defeat. He didn't actually want your younger brother to continue. Your younger brother could've admitted defeat, but he refused to. Whose fault is that?" Blumer equivocated.

"Roll the fuck away."

Linley let out an angry shout as he suddenly moved. How could Kenyon watch Linley act without stopping him? He immediately drew a gold-black dual-color staff and he smashed it towards Linley.

"fuck off!"

Linley's entire body seemed to have transformed into the sun, as countless violet sword-shadows blasted out in every direction. In the blink of an eye, ten million sword-shadows stabbed towards Kenyon.

Profound Truths of the Wind – Rippling Wind!

Kenyon was completely unable to block. In the blink of an eye, the layer of protective battle-qi over his body exploded with a 'BAM!'. Facing certain death, Kenyon retreated backwards at high speed in terror, but despite that, he was still stabbed several times by Bloodviolet.

Kenyon landed at the edge of the dueling platform, his long robes totally soaked with blood. He looked absolutely pathetic.

Kenyon stared at Linley in shock and terror.

They were on totally different levels. Linley definitely had the power of a peak-stage Saint-level expert!

A majestic personal disciple of the War God, a Saint-level expert...had been reduced to such dire straits by a single attack.

"Blumer!" When Linley turned to look at Blumer, he saw that Blumer, sensing that things were going terribly wrong, had immediately fled from the platform, heading towards the position of the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson.

The only person standing above the platform was Linley, who looked like a vicious demon who had descended from another plane of existence. That devilish Bloodviolet flexible sword was still dripping with blood.

The Colosseum. 80,000 viewers. Utter, deathly silence!

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 8, The Prodigy Sword Saint

With a single stroke, Linley had defeated a Saint-level expert who was the personal disciple of the War God. In addition, Linley's current transformation was into a terrifying form. This deeply shocked everyone present. None of the 80,000 viewers actually dared make a single sound.

Deathly silence. Terrifying silence!

Blumer stared terrified at Linley, still hovering in mid-air. At this moment, Linley's cold, remorseless dark golden eyes were fixed upon him. Blumer felt as though he could die at any moment. This utmost sensation of terror caused him to run even closer towards the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson.

Silence. No one dared to speak.

"Drip!" A single drop of bright red blood dripped down from the tip of Bloodviolet, landing on the dueling platform and splattering on it. In the silence, that clear sound rang out loudly.

This was the blood of Kenyon.

Kenyon was standing at the edge of the dueling platform, in miserable shape. Controlling his muscles and battle-qi, he sealed his wound and stopped the flow of blood. But he didn't dare fight against Linley again.

He was a Saint-level, true. But he was 'only' a mid-stage Saint-level. In terms of their comparative levels of enlightenment, he was far lower than Linley.

"Master Linley." Johann finally spoke. His voice echoed in the Colosseum, seeming to come out of nowhere, causing more than half the people to turn to him. His face still covered in smiles, Emperor Johann said, "Although I knew you were a powerful warrior, I had no idea that your talent in this field was not one whit inferior to your talent in stone sculpting."

Emperor Johann's words visibly eased the tension.

Just then, Linley's vicious demeanor had caused those 80,000 onlookers to not even dare breathe loudly. But as soon as Emperor Johann finished speaking, the entire Colosseum became filled with the sound of countless conversations.

"Master Linley? Ah! Could it be that he is that youngest-ever grandmaster sculptor?"

"Master Linley belongs to the Holy Union. I heard that Count Wharton had originally come from the Holy Union as well. Dragonblood Warriors truly are formidable!"

"Master Linley is so young! When he was sixteen, he created 'Awakening From the Dream', and only eleven years have passed since then. A twenty seven year old Saint-level combatant. Doesn't that make him even more incredible than Lord Olivier?"

.....

Countless conversations regarding Linley could be heard. Linley had appeared out of nowhere. His status as a master sculptor was well known to many aficionados of stone sculptures.

This was an individual who was almost on the same level as Master Proulx.

And now, this young master sculptor, only twenty seven years old, had defeated in a single blow a Saint-level expert who was a personal disciple of the War God!

Unavoidably, many people began to compare him and Olivier.

Compared to Olivier, Linley was even younger.

"My young friend Linley, that technique you used just now should have been derived from your insight into the Laws of the Wind, yes?" The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, spoke, his voice ringing from the judge's platform.

As soon as Haydson spoke, everyone else in the Colosseum fell silent. What did the Monolithic Sword Saint wish to discuss with this genius, Linley?

"It was indeed, Mr. Haydson." A calm reply from Linley.

"Might I ask what the name of this technique is?" The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, was a man devoted to his training and focused on reaching the Deity-level. Haydson was very much interested in the mysteries gleaned by other Saint-level experts. Perhaps by doing so, he might suddenly gain some new insights and have a breakthrough.

"The name of this technique is Rippling Wind." Linley didn't try to hide it.

In order to learn a powerful technique, one must possess a certain level of understanding and insight with regards to the Laws of a certain element. Without that level of understanding, no matter how clearly you explained a technique to someone, they wouldn't be able to learn it.

Still standing in mid-air, Linley glanced at the distant Kenyon. Calmly, he said, "Your name is Kenyon, correct?"

At first, Kenyon had thought Linley was someone who wasn't even at the Saint-level. Naturally, he was furious when Linley rebuked and cursed at him. But now, he knew that Linley was more powerful than he was.

Although he was still rather angry, in his heart, Kenyon already viewed Linley as someone on the same level as himself, or perhaps at an even higher level.

"I am." Kenyon nodded slightly.

"Mr. Kenyon, given your level of power, you should have been able to clearly discern the seriousness of my younger brother's injury. Given that you knew exactly how wounded he was, you shouldn't have said the words you said. Remember. As a judge, you have to be at least somewhat impartial. We had admitted defeat, after all. You can't go too far!"

As soon as Linley finished speaking these words coldly, he flew down towards his own squad. Linley was still concerned about his younger brother's injury.

Having been rebuked by Linley yet again, Kenyon felt rather embarrassed.

But he knew that he had acted wrongly here. Just then, the other side had admitted defeat. He did indeed go a bit too far by acting in such a manner.

.....

"Wharton, are you okay?" Linley said worriedly as he returned to his human form, rushing to his little brother's side and crouching on one knee.

Right now, quite a few people were surrounding him. Even Nina had ignored everything and rushed over.

"Lord Linley." A light-style magus next to them smiled. "Don't worry. I just utilized recovery magic on him. Lord Wharton's wounds are already half-healed. Given Lord Wharton's natural healing abilities, in ten days or half a month, he should be totally fine."

"Big bro, I feel much better." Wharton was able to speak fairly easily now.

Linley finally calmed down.

At the same time, he felt rather satisfied with the preparations the Colosseum had made. Linley knew exactly how effective light-style magi were in treating wounds. Generally speaking, low-ranking magi would only be able to treat superficial wounds. Only powerful light-style magi would be able to heal broken bones or internal injuries.

And of course, the most powerful light-style magi could even totally restore to peak condition anyone who had not yet died. For example, when Linley had received the Divine Boon at the Radiant Temple, that divine power had carried just a bit of healing power with it, but that little bit had been enough to totally restore Linley's body to peak condition, healing all of his broken bones.

This sort of regenerative ability was very formidable.

"Everyone!"

At this moment, the tournament organizer, that silver-haired old man, reappeared on the dueling platform. His face covered in smiles, he said, "I imagine everyone has had an incredible time watching this battle today. Haha. Even our dueling platform has been destroyed as a result of this battle."

The 80,000 viewers stared at the shattered, crater-marked dueling platform, and they all began to laugh as well.

This duel today had absolutely been worth watching.

Not only had they seen a competition between two ultimate geniuses, they even had had a chance to see the terrifying power of Wharton's older brother, Linley. He had, in one blow, defeated Kenyon.

Although the exchange between Linley and Kenyon was very brief, the 'value' of watching that exchange was much higher than that of the battle between Wharton and Blumer. After all, this was a battle between Saint-levels. Many people would live their entire lives without having a chance to witness such a battle.

"And the results of today's duel, I'm sure everyone will agree, are without question. I announce..." The silver-haired old man's words came to a halt, as he stared at the air above him.

Not just him. The tens of thousands of people sitting on the side of the judge's stand were all staring at a glowing line streaking at high speed through the air towards them.

In the blink of an eye, the streak of light arrived at the Colosseum.

"Saint-level!"

The Colosseum once again was filled with excited shouts. Yet another Saint-level expert had appeared.

This man wore simple, sackcloth clothes, and seemed very calm. But his eyes seemed to blaze with the light of the stars. His hair was black mixed with streaks of white, but judging from his face, one could tell without a doubt that this was not an old man; rather, this man was very young.

"Who is this person?"

"Don't recognize'm. His hair is turning white. Which Saint-level expert is this?"

.....

The stands were filled with the sound of discussions being held. It seemed most people were surprisingly unable to recognize who this Saint-level was, that had just flown here. After all, many people had seen some of the more famous Saint-level experts.

The young man flew towards Blumer.

"Second brother, what happened?" The young man said.

"Big brother!" Blumer's astonished, overjoyed voice rang out.

This exchange seemed to have lit a fire within the audience at the Colosseum. This youngster with white and black hair, dressed in a simple sackcloth attire, was the Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier!

"Olivier. Wait, that can't be. Olivier's hair should be brownish-black, and he likes wearing white clothes."

"Olivier. He was such a marvel to behold. How did he become like this?"

"I can tell for certain that this is Olivier. Compared to how he looked when he last battled against Lord Dillon, his appearance is almost identical. Only, his hair looks different, and it seems his aura is different as well."

.....

Right. His aura was different.

No wonder those 80,000 viewers were unable to recognize him. In the past, Olivier's aura was astonishingly sharp, like a sword that had been unleashed from its scabbard. In addition, he wore a pure white robe.

His handsome face and his fierce aura had made Olivier famous throughout the imperial capital.

But the current Olivier had changed dramatically compared to before.

The current Olivier didn't have a fierce aura, and his hair, now part-white, seemed aged. Olivier had never used to dress in sackcloth before either.

"He is Olivier?" Linley looked at Olivier as well.

Yale nodded next to Linley. "Right. According to my clan's intelligence, in the years after he reached the Saint-level, Olivier had been roving about the various Empires and engaging in training. According to the predictions of our intelligence unit, he should have defeated many Saint-level experts."

Linley nodded slightly.

As soon as he had seen Olivier, Linley had the sense...that this Olivier person was an extremely terrifying expert. Compared to Stehle of the Radiant Church, he was even more formidable.

"Has he come for the purpose of doing battle on behalf of his little brother?" Linley immediately began to quietly chant the words to a magic spell.

Olivier was extremely famous. Given his reputation, Linley definitely wouldn't underestimate Olivier, nor did he dare to be insufficiently cautious.

A gust of wind suddenly swirled about Linley.

Wind-style spell of the ninth rank – Windshadow technique!

.....

Olivier finished listening to his younger brother's description of this battle. Blumer intentionally made the situation sound even worse. "Big brother, that Linley bullied me with his superior power. If it wasn't for the assistance of my elder fellow apprentice, I'm afraid..."

Olivier frowned.

The Akerlund clan was actually a very ordinary, common clan. Their parents had died early on, and Olivier had to rely on himself to protect Blumer and help raise Blumer.

Blumer was Olivier's only family member. The two brothers shared a very deep love for each other.

"Kenyon." Olivier glanced at the nearby Kenyon. "Thank you. I, Olivier, will definitely remember your benevolence in assisting us."

Kenyon hurriedly said, "Olivier, no need. Blumer is my younger fellow apprentice. I can't just sit and watch."

Olivier smiled at Kenyon, then stared coldly at his younger brother. He rebuked, "Second brother, I told you long ago, unless the situation is a matter of life or death, you are not to use that forbidden technique. Given your current level of understanding, you are far from being able to use it properly. Do you know how harmful that most powerful attack was to you? The damage it caused was more severe than that of your broken arm!"

Blumer lowered his head.

In order to defeat Wharton, in the end, he had utilized a forbidden technique, and the damage done to himself by this forbidden technique wasn't something which light-style magic could heal. When Olivier had taught him this technique, he had instructed him to only use it in a life-or-death situation.

"Elder brother. I am sorry." Blumer knew that Olivier was looking out for his interests.

Olivier shook his head and sighed, then turned to look at the distant Linley. A fierce look appeared in his eyes, previously as tranquil as the depths of the seas. Olivier flew directly over.

"Olivier, wait!" Knowing things were taking a turn for the worse, Emperor Johann immediately spoke out.

"Your Imperial Majesty, I will not spare someone who tried to kill my younger brother. Your Imperial Majesty, it's best if you don't get involved in this matter." Olivier didn't give Johann any face at all.

Emperor Johann didn't say anything else either. He understood Olivier's temperament very well.

But as far as Johann was concerned, both Linley and Olivier were important members of the Empire. He didn't want these two geniuses to battle each other.

Olivier hovered in mid-air, his long robes fluttering about him. His cold, fierce gaze was on Linley. "Linley, come out!" This explosive shout rocked the Colosseum like a thunderbolt, echoing nonstop within it.

"Come out!" "Come out!" "Come out!"

Everyone in the Colosseum held their breaths. Good heavens. The tickets they had bought were absolutely worth it. They had already seen two battles, but now, it seemed as though they were going to see an even more exciting one.

The 80,000 pairs of eyes in the Colosseum all swung towards Linley.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 9, Linley vs. Olivier

“Linley, come out!”

Olivier’s explosive shout still echoed in the Colosseum, but Linley seemed to be deaf to it. He remained on one knee besides his younger brother’s side, discussing something with his younger brother, seemingly not having heard Olivier’s shout at all.

Olivier, standing in mid-air, couldn’t help but frown.

“What is Master Linley doing? Didn’t he hear it?”

“Impossible. Maybe he is afraid of Olivier?”

.....

The people in the Colosseum were puzzled by Linley’s lack of reaction. After letting out this angry shout, Olivier fell silent, staring coldly from mid-air at Linley.

After finishing his conversation with his little brother, Linley turned and glanced upwards at the mid-air Olivier. In that instant...

Their gazes met! One on the ground, the other mid-air.

Their gazes seemed to clash in the air like physical blows.

"Olivier." A hint of a smile was on Linley's face. He calmly said, "Ever since arriving in the O'Brien Empire, I've heard people praise you as the Prodigy Sword Saint. To tell the truth? Given that you reached the Saint-level at age forty, I don't see what makes you a 'prodigy'."

Olivier's forehead furrowed slightly.

The combative nature of Linley's words caused all 80,000 onlookers to grow excited. Good heavens. These two geniuses were really being antagonistic towards each other.

This would be the true duel between geniuses.

A duel between Linley and Olivier would clearly be on a totally different level from the duel between Blumer and Wharton. The battle between the older brothers definitely would be a duel between two of the utmost geniuses in the entire Yulan continent.

This duel was about to start at any moment.

Linley suddenly rose directly into the air above the dueling platform. Only after he came to a stop did the blur beneath him slowly disappear.

What terrifying speed.

"Rumble..." Black draconic scales quickly covered Linley's entire body, and ferocious spikes erupted from his spine, his knees, his elbows, and his forehead. That black, scale-covered draconic tail flashed with a cold, gloomy light.

Floating in the air, Linley stared at Olivier with those dark golden eyes.

This was the first time he had seen such a terrifying transformation. Even the normally calm and composed Olivier had a flash of surprise in his eyes, but he quickly returned to his usual calm.

"Saint-level Dragonblood Warrior?" Olivier looked at Linley, a terrifying aura of battle-lust emanating from him. "You aren't at the Saint-level pre-transformation. It seems that your current condition isn't the most powerful condition and time for a Dragonblood Warrior. Pity...such a pity..."

Olivier truly wanted to have a battle with one of the legendary peak-stage Saint-level Dragonblood Warriors.

"Olivier, a person should know their limits." Linley's cold voice rang out in the Colosseum. "Do you think the likes of you are a match for the Supreme Warriors?"

The two genius Saint-levels stared at each other in mid-air. Everyone held their breaths, carefully watching this never-before-seen battle.

"Linley!"

Olivier extended his hand to his back. On Olivier's back, there were two longswords; one of them, a translucent sword, appeared very similar to Icedream. The other sword was pitch black.

"Against you, using the Lightshadow Sword technique is enough." Olivier drew the longsword that was as translucent as a block of ice. This sword really was identical to Blumer's; it was also an 'Icedream sword'.

With a flip of his hand, that devilish-looking Bloodviolet flexible sword appeared.

"Enough talk. Power is demonstrated through actions, not words." Linley paid no attention to Olivier's arrogance at all.

A hint of self-confidence was in Olivier's eyes. Staring at the Icedream sword in his hands, he murmured, "After I reached the Saint-level and defeated Dillon, I have roamed the various countries. In total, I met eighteen Saint-level experts, and won each battle. Unfortunately, not a single one of them was able to match me in speed."

A series of surprised murmurs from the 80,000 onlookers.

No one had known that Olivier had subsequently done battle against eighteen Saint-level experts.

Olivier looked at Linley, a hint of self-confidence in his eyes. "In general, someone who cannot match me in speed will definitely lose." As he spoke, the Icedream sword in Olivier's hand began to shine as a white light began to swirl about the surface of the sword.

Seeing this, Linley began to grow cautious.

Linley could remember clearly how when Blumer used this Lightshadow Sword technique, the light on the Icedream sword had been golden. Only afterwards, when Blumer had used the 'forbidden' technique, did Icedream carry a hint of white light within it.

Although it was just a hint of white light, the attack power of Icedream had multiplied several dozen times.

Originally, Icedream had not been able to harm Wharton, but afterwards, it had been able to pierce through Wharton's palm, and then pierce past the scales on Wharton's chest. And that was just a hint of white light.

But Olivier's? It was pure white.

"The power of this attack is most likely far more powerful than Blumer's all-out desperation attack." Linley naturally was prepared for this.

"Linley, I'm afraid that today, the world will have lost another genius." Olivier said in a quiet, calm voice, and then the white light began to flash repeatedly.

With each flash of white light, another shadow-Olivier appeared in the air above the dueling platform. The power and efficacy of this white light clearly was much higher than Blumer's technique; in the blink of an eye, 108 shadow-Oliviers had appeared in the sky.

Everyone was shocked speechless.

"Third bro." Yale and Reynolds were so nervous that they had begun to sweat already. Wharton, Barker and his brothers, Rebecca, Leena, and Jenne also watched nervously as well.

The injured Blumer, by contrast, watched with confidence.

"Blumer, your older brother's Lightshadow sword has already reached the perfected level, filling the skies with his shadows." The seated judge, Monolithic Sword Saint Haydson, smiled calmly at Blumer.

Blumer's face was filled with confidence.

.....

The demonically ferocious-looking Linley, standing in mid-air, was now surrounded by 108 shadow-Oliviers. Linley had to admit that this speed was absolutely astonishing.

"Linley, are you ready?" Olivier actually gave Linley a warning.

Clearly, Olivier was feeling extremely confident.

Linley only chuckled calmly.

A sudden white flash, utterly piercing to the eye. Even Linley had to squint, but right at that moment, the Icedream sword, covered with white light, reached Linley's head, piercing directly through it.

"Ah!"

Everyone let out simultaneous cries of alarm. Did the mighty Linley die just like that?

But not a hint of blood came out from Linley's head, despite having been pierced through by Icedream. Suddenly, 'Linley' slowly disappeared. It had just been a shadow!

"You are indeed quite fast. Unfortunately, in front of me, you aren't qualified to be arrogant about it!" Linley's voice rang out from the air a hundred meters away.

Olivier stared at the distant Linley, his face growing solemn.

"How incredibly fast!" The eyes of the Monolithic Sword Saint Haydson, watching from the judge's platform, shone brightly. Linley's speed wasn't one whit inferior to Olivier's.

A wave of surprised murmurs filled the Colosseum. And then, silence once again.

The viewers all felt as though their very souls had been shocked by this exciting battle.

"Is that so?" Olivier's face grew cold. He had never met anyone faster than him. As for someone on par with his speed, the only one to date had been the Monolithic Sword Saint. He didn't believe this youngster Linley could match him.

After all, his speed was so fast that it had already exceeded human limits.

This sword technique and movement technique was based on Olivier's insights into the Elemental Laws of Light. This movement technique, in principle, could reach the speed of light itself. However, due to the limits of his body and his battle-qi, he could only reach his current level of speed.

"You don't believe me?" Linley chuckled.

Another flash of white light. Linley began to move as well, as both reached a terrifying level of speed.

Shadowed blurs everywhere!

Countless shadows and blurs appeared everywhere. The 80,000 watchers felt their vision grow blurry. They simply couldn't tell which of the shadows were the true bodies of Linley and Olivier. The two had simply reached an absolutely terrifying level of speed.

"What astonishing speed." As they really began to compete, Linley couldn't help but feel surprised. "If it wasn't for the fact that I had cast the Windshadow spell in advance, I wouldn't be able to match this Olivier in speed."

Linley was fast, true.

But the insights which Olivier had gained into the Elemental Laws of Light were extremely powerful. However, supported by the most powerful speed-enhancing spell, the Windshadow spell, Linley's speed had been instantly raised to a level equivalent to Olivier's.

"Swish!"

A deep gouge suddenly appeared on the dueling platform; clearly, it had been cut by a longsword. But then in the blink of an eye, a huge crater appeared with a thundering sound.

The 80,000 viewers stared fixedly with wide eyes, not wanting to miss a thing.

"Motherfucker, this is real speed. Our Academy's teacher keeps on bragging, but compared with these guys? He's just a child who has barely learned to walk." Watching this battle, a youngster was so excited that his eyes were turning bloodshot.

These 80,000 viewers had perhaps never seen this sort of high-speed battle before in their entire lives.

This sort of battle would only occur when the two combatants were equally matched in speed. If one of them was too slow, the battle would have ended instantly.

"Bam!"

Linley's black draconic tail brushed past Olivier's clothes, viciously smashing against the dueling platform, causing every single inch of the platform to crack. In the next instant, Linley and Olivier both disappeared.

The battle was so high speed that the onlookers could only barely see some shadows and blurs when the two lowered their speeds to exchange blows. But once the combatants returned to their maximum speed, not even their shadows could be seen!

"Whoosh!"

A tornado seemed to have sprung into being out of nowhere in the middle of the Colosseum. As the wind howled, the 80,000 onlookers could just barely make out two hazy figures standing in the middle of the wind, staring at each other.

The fierce wind gradually died down.

Olivier looked solemnly at Linley, the Icedream sword in his hands gleaming with all seven colors of the rainbow, like a beautiful illusion.

As for the demonic Linley, his draconic tail quivered behind him, and the Bloodviolet sword in his hand was covered with a strange violet light.

A suppressive aura filled the Colosseum.

"I admit that your speed is no lower than mine." Olivier spoke out.

Linley's dark golden eyes were fixed on his opponent. He said calmly, "And your speed isn't any lower than mine either." After having competed just then, these two experts found that neither could gain an advantage over the other based on speed.

If they continued to compete in such a manner, there would be no end.

"Dare you face my attacks head on?" Olivier stared Linley, a surge of an aura of battle-lust erupting forth from him.

"Why wouldn't I dare?" Linley's body began to emit that same ferocious battle-lust.

The 80,000 onlookers were so excited that they were beginning to quiver. Good heavens. These two experts were going to fight head on now. Even the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, was watching carefully.

As for Blumer, Wharton, and the others, they were each eager to see their older brother achieve victory.

Linley and Olivier stared at each other in mid air. In the same instant, the two of them moved in a direct line towards the other.

"Bang!" Sudden sonic booms erupted from them as they reached a terrifying level of speed.

While charging at Linley, Olivier's body seemed to have fragmented into seven or eight people, and the Icedream sword in his hands had transformed into ten million sword-shadows.

"You want to compete in sword speed?"

The Bloodviolet sword in Linley's hand flickered, then in the blink of an eye, Linley's body seemed to have been surrounded by a tornado while at the same time, countless flashes of violet light simultaneously struck at Olivier.

"Clang!" "Clang!" "Clang!" "Clang!"

Countless clashing sounds could be heard, and then, Linley's iron-whip-like draconic tail turned into a blur as well, smashing viciously against Olivier.

"Clang." The Icedream sword in Olivier's hand slammed against Linley's draconic tail, then he flew backwards at high speed.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 10, The Two Geniuses

Olivier immediately flew backwards to the viewing platform, staring at Linley with a hint of surprise in his eyes.

But then, Olivier began to laugh loudly. "Great, great, great! The speed of your sword attacks actually can match my 'Phantom Dream Sword' technique."

"You aren't bad either. You were actually able to block my 'Rippling Wind' technique." Linley's cold voice rang out.

Profound Truths of the Wind – Rippling Wind.

Lightshadow Sword – Phantom Dream Sword.

The strength of these two techniques were equal.

After praising their opponents, the two geniuses fell silent, carefully watching the other. Clearly, this exchange had resulted in both men viewing the other as equals.

The tension in the Colosseum was so thick, it could be sliced with a knife. The terrifying, repressive aura caused the 80,000 viewers to feel as though they didn't even dare to breathe.

"If you can receive this next attack of mine, I can spare your life." A hint of appreciation towards Linley could be seen in Olivier's eyes. "By receiving this next attack, you'll be demonstrating that you are qualified to be considered a rival of mine."

As soon as he said these words, Barker and the others actually began to curse.

"fk his grandmother, this Olivier wasn't able to show any superiority over Lord Linley at all, and he actually dares say something like...'by receiving this next attack, you'll be qualified to be my rival'? What sort of bullshit is this?" Gates cursed loudly.

Barker and the other brothers were muttering unhappily as well.

Indeed, these words from Olivier made many of the people watching this battle unhappy. They had clearly seen how Olivier hadn't been able to seize any advantage. How could he say such a thing? This was simply too arrogant.

"Rival?" Linley laughed calmly. "If you can take this next sword of mine, you'll be qualified to be my rival as well."

The two said the exact same things to each other.

"Haha...then have a taste of the power of my 'Sword of the Aurora'!" Olivier laughed loudly. And then, he flew once more at high speed directly towards Linley.

Linley laughed coldly.

Linley, too, began to prepare the second stage of the Profound Truths of the Wind – Tempos of the Wind. This was a single-target sword attack, relying on ultimate speed and power.

“BOOM!” Sonic booms erupted.

Linley’s ferocious draconic tail swaying behind him, Linley transformed into a blur as he also charged straight forward, the Bloodviolet sword in his hands transforming into a brilliant violet light.

The brilliant white aura covering Olivier’s Icedream sword suddenly expanded dramatically, transforming Icedream and making it as dazzling as the sun itself.

The piercing white light forced everyone watching the battle to unconsciously narrow their eyes.

The most powerful attack of the Lightshadow Sword technique – Sword of the Aurora!

The most powerful attack of Linley’s Profound Truths of the Wind – Tempos of the Wind!

That devilish violet light moved as fast and as ferociously as a bolt of lightning, but at the same time it carried with it the gentleness of the spring wind. These totally opposite auras were manifested at the same time with this attack.

That sort of strange tempo caused many people to feel a strange fear in their hearts.

“What a powerful sword attack!” The eyes of Monolithic Sword Saint Haydson lit up. He could totally sense how powerful this attack by Linley was.

This sort of strange, uniquely intersecting tempo caused a natural wind-edge to form on the surface of Linley’s Bloodviolet sword. Or, to put it more accurately, it was a spatial edge.

The devilish violet light. The piercing white light. They intersected in the middle of the air above the Colosseum.

“Boom!” The terrifying force of the collision blasted out in every direction. The dueling platform below was slashed open by countless invisible blades, with many gouges appearing in its surface. At the same time, a frighteningly powerful wave of force emanated in each direction, causing the 80,000 viewers to sway and stumble.

“Crunch!” Some of the cups located near the edges of the dueling platform were actually shattered by the force of the wind.

Those onlookers held on for dear life against their stone seats as their bodies swayed. Only after that wild blast of wind left did the Colosseum slowly return to its normal calm. But to the shock of many of the watchers, many of their outer layer of clothes had been blown off of them by the wind.

What terrifying force.

Everyone stared in astonishment at the two experts in mid-air. At this time, Olivier and Linley were silently staring at each other in mid-air.

Tempos of the Wind. Sword of the Aurora.

Once again, they were equally matched.

Olivier stared at Linley, his gaze slowly brightening. A hint of a smile actually appeared on Olivier's face. "Linley, what was the name of that sword technique you just used?"

Linley didn't try to dissemble. "Profound Truths of the Wind, second stage – Tempos of the Wind."

"Tempos of the Wind...Tempos of the Wind..." Thinking back to the attack Linley had just used, Olivier looked at Linley with eyes filled with approval. "Linley, I can hardly believe that you are a young grandmaster sculptor as well. To be so accomplished, but not yet be even thirty years old. I admire you."

Olivier's attitude towards Linley had totally changed.

"I previously said that if you could withstand this blow from me, I would spare your life. I will keep my word. From today onwards, your name has now been added to my list of rivals. I eagerly anticipate your growth and development." Olivier said with a smile.

Linley frowned.

This Olivier was simply too arrogant.

Barker and his brothers were standing below them. Gates, the most irascible of the lot, immediately jumped to his feet. "fk his grandmother! Olivier, you didn't beat our Lord. How dare you prattle on and swagger about like a bushy-tailed wolf! fk, I hate people like you."

This loud shout caused the countless onlookers to be unable to control their laughter.

It must be said that many people agreed with Gates' words.

The words which Olivier had just said were the words an elder expert would say to a junior. They had a lecturing aura to it. He had even said, 'I look forward to your growth' and 'I will spare your life'.

If Olivier had truly won, others would acknowledge these words as having bearing and composure.

But he hadn't won. Nobody could sense that Olivier had held even the slightest bit of advantage. If they continued fighting, it was hard to say who would win.

"Hrmph." Olivier sneered coldly. His cold, gloomy eyes swept the surrounding area, and the Colosseum immediately fell silent.

Olivier looked at Linley. Calmly, he said, "Six years ago, you would indeed have been able to stalemate me. But now..."

"You just barely qualify for me to utilize the obsidian sword. But if I use it then today you, a genius, would definitely lose your life." Olivier's calm voice echoed in the Colosseum.

Only now did most people in the Colosseum remember...Olivier had two swords on his back. The Icedream sword was only one of them.

Obsidian sword?

"Obsidian sword? Olivier, you've truly mastered it?" At the judge's stand, the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, spoke out, attracting the attention of everyone present.

From the looks of it, the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, had some sort of prior relationship with Olivier.

Olivier turned to look at the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson. In a calm voice, he said, "Mr. Haydson, thank you for the advice you gave me six years ago. It resulted in me gaining certain insights. Three years of battles, followed by three years of quiet meditation in the desolate mountains. I have now mastered the 'obsidian sword', which is even more powerful than the 'Lightshadow' technique."

The Colosseum was filled with cries of astonishment.

“Even more powerful than the Lightshadow Sword technique? No wonder Lord Olivier said that he was sparing Master Linley’s life.”

“That year when he defeated Lord Dillon, Lord Olivier had used the Lightshadow Sword technique. Back then, Lord Olivier only had a single sword on his back, but now he has two. Ten years. He really has improved.”

Many people sighed in amazement at Olivier’s prowess. The power he had demonstrated just now wasn’t his true power. How terrifying was Olivier truly?

“My big brother, he...” Wharton knew that Linley was fighting for his sake, and now, he was beginning to worry for Linley.

Wharton was worried, but Barker and his brothers, on the contrary, weren’t worried at all.

“Wharton, his Lordship hasn’t revealed his true power yet.” Barker laughed as he glanced at Wharton. “When his Lordship sparred with you, he only used the Bloodviolet flexible sword. He didn’t dare test his true attack against you.”

“Right. Linley has an even more terrifying adamantine heavy sword.” Zassler said solemnly.

Having been with Linley for so long, Zassler and the Barker brothers knew exactly how terrifyingly powerful the adamantine heavy sword was. When Linley was only at the peak-stage of the ninth rank, his usage of the 'Hundred Layered Waves' technique with the adamantine heavy sword would have been irresistible by even Saint-level Undying Warriors despite them being known for their defense.

Even most mid-stage Saint-level experts would probably suffer a severe injury.

And now, Linley's base power and battle-qi were all at the Saint-level. If he were to once more utilize his 'Profound Truths of the Earth', most likely even peak-stage Saint-level experts wouldn't be able to take a blow from him.

After all, the vibrational attacks which Linley had developed based on his insights was simply too terrifying. Battle-qi and muscle power virtually did nothing to defend against it.

"Linley, I eagerly anticipate your future challenge." Olivier said with a calm laugh.

Olivier was also someone who pursued the peak of power. A good rival was hard to find. For Linley to be so powerful in his twenties meant that in the future, he would definitely be a good rival for Olivier.

"Lord Olivier really does have the bearing of an expert." Many people sighed in praise. But Blumer, located near the judge's stand, was unhappy. "Why can't elder brother simply just kill Linley and get it over with?"

The spikes protruding from Linley's head gleamed with a metallic light.

"Olivier." Linley's dark golden eyes stared at Olivier. "I told you long ago. A person should know their limits. Do you think your obsidian sword is very powerful?"

"Hrm?" Olivier's face changed as he looked at Linley. Linley didn't know what was good for him!

But Linley extended his hand. Suddenly, an astonishing azure-black heavy sword appeared in his palm.

"My most powerful weapon...the adamantine heavy sword." Linley stared at Olivier. "Once I use the adamantine heavy sword, even I can't fully control its power. I might kill you."

Olivier started.

The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, was stunned as well. Blumer stared at the mid-air Linley in astonishment as well. The 80,000 viewers had all fallen silent.

In mid-air, the ferocious Dragonformed Linley wielded his adamantine heavy sword and stared coldly at Olivier. "From what you are saying, it sounds like your obsidian sword is very powerful. I want to see for myself if your obsidian sword is more powerful, or if my adamantine heavy sword is more powerful."

"Adamantine heavy sword? Adamantine?" Olivier and Haydson were both secretly shocked.

The legendary material which supposedly even Deity-level experts would find difficult to break?

"Haha...good. Wonderful." Olivier began to laugh loudly. "I take back my earlier words. I, too, want to see if your adamantine heavy sword is everything you claim it is. Linley, be careful. My obsidian sword might just claim your life."

As he spoke, Olivier sheathed his Icedream sword, then slowly drew out his obsidian sword. The obsidian sword was the same size and shape as the Icedream sword, but its pitch-black surface looked very ordinary. However, when Olivier placed the obsidian sword in front of him, a layer of cold, dark light began to flow over its surface.

That black light seemed capable of devouring everything around it.

"The obsidian sword's techniques were developed based on my insights into the Elemental Laws of Darkness." Olivier stared coldly at Linley.

Linley wielded the adamantine heavy sword in his hands. Because it had been struck by heavenly lightning when it had been forged, the adamantine heavy sword's surface gleamed with that azure light.

"The adamantine heavy sword's techniques were developed based on my insights into the Elemental Laws of the Earth." Linley's dark golden eyes were fixed upon the opponent as well.

One wielded an obsidian sword. The other wielded the adamantine heavy sword.

Two ultimate geniuses. 80,000 pairs of eyes in the Colosseum were focused on them. The entire Colosseum seemed to be holding its breath. Both Blumer and Wharton began to grow anxious and nervous.

Right now, no one knew who would win; Linley, or Olivier!

"Bang!" "Bang!"

Two terrifying sonic booms erupted, as the two people charged directly towards each other from hundreds of meters away. But just at this moment, the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, who had been seated at the judge's stand, suddenly disappeared from his seat. He took three steps in mid-air, moving as fast as lightning, suddenly interposing between the two.

"Stay your hands!"

An earth-colored ripple of power erupted forth from the body of the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, striking simultaneously against Linley and Olivier. Linley had the sensation of being struck by countless meteors, and his body was repelled backwards by several dozen meters. Olivier had also been knocked backwards in the same way.

Linley and Olivier both turned to stare at Haydson.

The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, laughed calmly as he looked at each of them. "Linley. Olivier. Both of you are incredible geniuses of the entire Yulan continent. You are both so young. Judging from your words, both the adamantine heavy sword technique and the obsidian sword technique are extremely vicious, dangerous sword techniques, which even you two are unable to fully control. If this battle were truly to continue, then one of you will definitely die, or perhaps even both of you. For two such geniuses to fall would be a huge loss to the entire Yulan continent. I suggest...that we bring this duel to a end for now."

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 11, The Challenge

Stop fighting?

The 80,000 viewers all began to mumble in unison upon hearing these words from the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson. Some even began to quietly curse him.

Linley and Olivier were definitely two of the most brilliant men in the entirety of the Yulan continent. Many warriors would literally be willing to give up their lives if it meant they could see such a battle between two such genius Saint-level experts.

But just as the battle was getting to the most exciting part, the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, had popped out!

How could they not be angry?

But the person stopping the battle was Haydson, the number one Saint-level in the world!

"It's best if we have this battle come to an end here and now."
Housekeeper Hiri's forehead was covered in sweat.

Not just Housekeeper Hiri. Hillman, Wharton, and the others were all worrying for Linley as well. Olivier's performance hadn't been one whit inferior to Linley's, and that obsidian sword technique seemed to be very strange as well.

Linley's 'Profound Truths of the Earth' was powerful, true.

But would the attack which Olivier had developed based on his understanding of the Elemental Laws of Darkness necessarily be any weaker than Linley's 'Profound Truths of the Earth'? Hadn't Olivier himself said that he was unable to control the power of the obsidian sword once unleashed?

Because the Monolithic Sword Saint Haydson had suddenly interrupted, Linley and Olivier were standing on opposite ends of the Colosseum in mid-air, staring at each other, with Haydson between them.

Three Saint-level experts. Two were ultimate geniuses, while the third was reputed to be the most powerful Saint-level expert in the world.

"Stop fighting?" Olivier glanced at Haydson.

Linley glanced at Haydson as well.

"This Haydson's power really is astonishing. That technique he displayed just now definitely wasn't just based on pure battle-qi. It should have been some sort of defensive technique developed through his mastery of the Laws of the Earth."

Linley could totally sense that the earth-colored wave Haydson had emitted earlier contained layers of wave-like energy.

“However, he wouldn’t necessarily be able to withstand my ‘Profound Truths of the Earth.’” Linley was still extremely confident in the power of his ultimate attack.

In truth, when charging against each other just now, both Linley and Olivier had both been in the charge-up phase.

At Linley and Olivier’s levels, as peak-stage Saint-level experts, they wouldn’t waste any energy at all. Both the ‘Profound Truths of the Earth’ as well as Olivier’s attack would wait until when the blows landed on the opponent before suddenly allowing their power to erupt!

Many of the victims of the ‘Profound Truths of the Earth’, when first struck by the adamantine heavy sword, initially hadn’t sensed any danger at all. But then suddenly...

They would sense layers upon layers of vibrational wave attacks transmitting into their internal organs.

Just then, Haydson had been able to push aside both Linley and Olivier with one technique, true. But that was because neither Linley nor Olivier had used their ultimate attacks against Haydson. Otherwise, it wouldn’t have been so easy for Haydson to block them.

“Haha, Olivier, Linley.” Emperor Johann stood up now. Under the gaze of 80,000 people, Emperor Johann walked off the judge’s platform and said in a loud voice, “Olivier, Linley, this battle between the two of you has already been an incredible sight, and expanded our horizons. What’s more, neither of you have a serious grudge against each other that can only be resolved in death.”

Emperor Johann didn't wish for either Linley or Olivier to die.

If these two geniuses remained alive, then the O'Brien Empire's influence in the Yulan continent would be even stronger.

Linley and Olivier glanced at each other.

"Fine." Olivier nodded, laughing calmly. "When brother Linley had received my 'Lightshadow Sword' attack, I already had lost my desire to continue fighting. However, I was partially at fault in this affair as well..." Olivier looked at Linley.

"Brother Linley's power exceeded my expectations. I didn't expect that the sword techniques he revealed at the beginning were just the surface of his abilities." Olivier revealed a smile towards Linley. "I admit, brother Linley's power is no weaker than my own."

Clearly, Olivier was indicating a willingness to be friendly towards Linley. He even addressed him as 'brother Linley'.

The obsidian sword's technique was extremely powerful, but Linley's adamantine heavy sword technique was also extremely powerful. If these two geniuses really did insist on going all-out today and fight to the point of death, it really would be a waste and not worth it.

Since Olivier had already spoken in a conciliatory manner, Linley wouldn't press things either.

After all, he had just entered the O'Brien Empire recently. It was best that he not create too many enemies.

"Then let's have this battle come to an end." Linley's calm voice echoed in the Colosseum, and the 80,000 viewers understand that the battle between these two ultimate geniuses wouldn't continue today.

But immediately afterwards...

An ear-splitting, thunderous applause filled the entire Colosseum. All of the watchers were cheering at the top of their lungs. Although the duel had come to an end, they were still uncontrollably excited.

"Olivier!" "Olivier!" "Olivier!"

"Linley!" "Linley!" "Linley!" "Linley!"

Those joyous, thunderous waves of sound assaulted each person's ears. All of them were cheering for their idols.

In this moment, they had already forgotten that today's duel had actually been supposed to be between Wharton and Blumer.

Clearly...

Although Wharton and Blumer were geniuses, compared to their respective elder brothers, there was still a huge gap between them in every aspect. The astonishing power and might of Linley and Olivier had totally overawed every single person in the Colosseum.

Seeing the two end their battle, the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, felt very gratified as well. At this time, Linley immediately flew down towards his own side.

The joyous roars of the Colosseum continued unabated. By now, in the eyes of the crowd, Linley had already been vaulted to the same level and status of Olivier. If one factored in Linley's youth and his mastery of stone sculpting, perhaps Linley was even more worthy than Olivier of the title of 'Prodigy'.

"Big bro..." From his seated position, Wharton saw Linley fly down. He immediately called out to him in an excited voice.

"Lord." Barker and his brothers went to welcome him as well. Jenne, Rebecca, and Leena all let out sighs of relief as they, too, went forward to excitedly welcome him.

Linley returned to his normal human form and put on a long robe.

"Lord, keep fighting! That Olivier definitely isn't a match for you, your Lordship! I refuse to believe he'll be able to withstand your 'Profound Truths of the Earth' attack." Gates said in a quiet, unhappy voice.

Barker and the others all knew exactly how powerful Linley's 'Profound Truths of the Earth' was. They all believed Linley was capable of winning.

But Linley shook his head and laughed. "Don't underestimate Olivier.

For him to be able to create that special attack, Lightshadow Sword, means that the power of his obsidian sword would definitely be astonishing. You must consider this: I was able to gain insights into certain profound truths, but does that mean others are unable to? The Elemental Laws are as vast and boundless as the ocean, and my insights are but a tiny drop of water in that ocean."

Barker and the others all nodded as though they understood.

But right at this moment, a voice rang out from mid-air above the Colosseum. "Mr. Haydson, do you still remember that battle between us six years ago?"

Linley immediately turned his head to stare at the sky. The person who spoke those words was the Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier. Olivier's eyes were filled with light, and he stared at the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, who was just about to fly downwards.

Haydson came to a halt, turning to look at Olivier. Nodding, he said, "Six years ago, on a night with a full moon. Of course I remember that battle. Your speed left a deep impression on me."

Olivier looked at Haydson. Solemnly, he said, "I roamed through many kingdoms and gained victory in all of my battles against the various experts of the other Empires. I lost to you, and only you. Six years...six full years. During these six years, I developed my blackstone sword technique specifically to deal with you."

The Colosseum instantly went silent.

It seemed as though there was quite a bit of history between these two Saint-level experts.

“Oh, to deal with me?” Haydson laughed calmly. “You believe that your obsidian sword is capable of breaking my defense?”

One of the most important reasons why Haydson was known as the ‘Monolithic Sword Saint’ was because he possessed an extremely powerful defense. Many peak-stage Saint-level experts weren’t able to even break through it, much less injure him.

Olivier thought back to their battle six years ago. That was an utter humiliation!

No matter how he attacked Haydson, he couldn’t scratch Haydson at all. Instead, he was lightly wounded by the impact of each blow. What’s more, Haydson hadn’t been slower than him at all.

Domination!

Although Olivier was also a peak-stage Saint-level, compared to Haydson, he had been utterly dominated. It was as though they were on totally different levels. His reputation as the number one Saint-level expert was definitely not unearned.

“We’ll know whether or not I can break your defense if we give it a test, right? Mr. Haydson, today at the Colosseum, I formally issue you a challenge. If you accept, then in three months, we’ll duel outside the city.” Olivier said.

Olivier had consumed a large amount of his battle-qi today, in his battle against Linley. He was no longer in peak shape.

“Challenge?”

Haydson furrowed his forehead, but a hint of a smile was on his face.

The Colosseum immediately began to be filled with roars of excitement. The Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier, had openly challenged the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson. Many people were so excited that their faces were turning red.

Everyone turned to look at the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson.

“Fine. I accept.” Haydson smiled and nodded. “Three months from now, I will definitely sample the power of the obsidian sword technique which you developed over these past six years.”

“It definitely will not disappoint you.” Olivier’s face was filled with the utmost confidence.

The smile on Haydson’s face became even brighter.

Six years ago, having been dominated to the point where he had no fighting spirit left, Olivier had learned how powerful Haydson’s defense was. But Olivier was still this confident. Olivier was no fool. Clearly, he must really have something he felt he could count on.

"Won't disappoint me? I truly hope it will be as you say." Haydson was filled with some anticipation.

It had been a long time since he had encountered an opponent who could pose a threat to him.

In three short steps, the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, somehow once more appeared at the judge's platform. As for Olivier, he flew to the side of his little brother.

The entire Colosseum was filled with the sound of murmuring discussions.

Linley had suddenly taken to the field of battle and easily defeated Kenyon, and then had fought Olivier to a standstill. And now, Olivier had challenge the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, to a battle.

This chain of events had truly excited them no end.

"Everyone." At this moment, the silver-haired old man returned to the dueling platform. "Just now, I was about to announce the results of the duel. But I didn't expect that Lord Olivier would arrive."

The silver-haired old man's face was covered in smiles. "That made me extremely excited. This was the most exciting day in my long life. Lord Olivier's battle against Lord Linley is something I trust none of you will ever forget for the rest of your lives. Just look at the dueling platform, and then look at those flagpoles."

The battle just now had caused the already-cracked dueling platform to be riddled with gaping holes. Most of the flagpoles around the dueling platform had been snapped in half, and many peoples' clothes had been blown to different corners of the Colosseum. It was a disaster scene.

But this disaster scene made the 80,000 people begin to laugh.

"Haha, enough talk. Everyone already knows the results of the earlier duel between Wharton and Blumer. Blumer managed to squeak out a victory by a narrow margin." The silver-haired old man laughed towards Emperor Johann. "His Imperial Majesty has a few words he wishes to say. I hope everyone will listen closely."

After speaking, the silver-haired old man left the platform.

Emperor Johann now rose to his feet. Some people in the Colosseum looked towards Emperor Johann, while the others looked at Linley, Olivier, and Haydson, the Saint-level experts.

"Today has been the most exciting day in Our life. Whether it was the duel between Wharton and Blumer, or their brothers, Linley and Olivier, what We witnessed was extremely thrilling."

Emperor Johann revealed a hint of a smile on his face. "Everyone knows that both Wharton and Blumer have asked for the hand of Our daughter, the Seventh Princess, in marriage. After seeing both of these brilliant young men in action today, We have already made our decision. We have decided that on March 15th, at the Martial Palace, We shall openly announce who will be the one to wed Our Seventh Princess."

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 12, Front Courtyard as Busy as a Marketplace

Linley, Wharton, Blumer, and Olivier almost simultaneously turned to stare at Emperor Johann in surprise.

On March 15th, the Emperor would announce who would marry the Seventh Princess?

In the past, Emperor Johann had kept delaying, without seeming to be the slightest bit impatient. Neither Wharton nor Blumer had imagined that Emperor Johann would suddenly say such a thing.

“Nina...” Wharton turned to look at Nina.

Nina shook her head, also confused. “I don’t know anything. My Imperial father didn’t tell me anything about this.” She, too, looked frantically at Emperor Johann, but as the Seventh Princess was a member of imperial clan, her marriage was not something she could design on her own. It was completely up to Emperor Johann to decide.

“Princess.” At this moment, a palace attendant came over. “His Imperial Majesty is about to leave. It is time to return to the palace.”

Nina nodded.

Emperor Johann had forbidden her to leave the palace. The only reason she was able to meet Wharton this time was because of this duel in the Colosseum. After bidding farewell to Wharton, Nina followed the imperial clan back and left.

Linley and Wharton's forces also withdrew from the Colosseum.

"Olivier." As Linley left via one of the passageways, he glanced at Olivier, and saw that Olivier was also glancing at him.

These two ultimate geniuses exchanged stares, then turned their heads and left the Colosseum.

Ever since the 80,000 onlookers had witnessed the events in the Colosseum on this day, February 4th, the news about the duel which had taken place at the Colosseum took the imperial capital by storm, filling the entire imperial capital with excitement.

Many people from other cities and other provinces, upon leaving, brought back the news of this duel to their own hometowns as well.

Linley had easily defeated Kenyon, and then fought to a stalemate with Olivier. Olivier had then challenged Haydson. These three events quickly became well-known, and the rumors of these events spread out at astonishing speed.

Linley's reputation quickly became well-known in the imperial capital, and beyond as well, spreading in every direction.

The imperial capital. Boulder Street. Outside Count Wharton's manor, one carriage after another came, all filled with people coming to visit

Linley.

Within the inner courtyard of the manor.

Linley, Yale, and Reynolds were seated together, chatting and laughing. Although there were many nobles and famous people clustered together at the front courtyard, Linley couldn't be bothered to pay attention to them.

Actually, those nobles expected and understood this in heart. Would someone of Linley's status go personally welcome them?

At Linley's level, ordinary, worldly trappings of power no longer meant anything to him. Even the Emperor would be extremely courteous when dealing with Saint-level experts and wouldn't dare to put on airs.

Without question....

Now that the Baruch clan had produced someone like Linley, even if Linley were to never become a noble within the Empire and even though Wharton was just a Count, the Baruch clan had naturally become an extremely surpassing clan within the imperial capital.

"Third bro, you've been hiding your power and your talents, but now that you've exploded forth onto the scene, you've really shocked quite a few people." Yale laughed loudly.

Reynolds nodded repeatedly as well. "Right, right. I imagine the Radiant Church has a terrible headache right now."

Yale and Reynolds knew about Linley's affairs with the Radiant Church. Given the Radiant Church's power, for them to kill Linley at his current level was virtually impossible.

This was especially true given that Linley was currently in the imperial capital of the O'Brien Empire. The Radiant Church wouldn't dare send any Saint-level experts over, for fear that the War God would misunderstand. This was the War God's territory, after all.

"Dealing with the Radiant Church?" Linley laughed calmly. "I've already killed the principal target of my quest for revenge. As for dealing with the rest of the Radiant Church, I'm not in a particular rush. Right now, I'm no longer afraid of the people of the Radiant Church. But dealing with the Radiant Church...I don't have enough power yet."

The Radiant Church had quite a few peak-stage Saint-level experts.

The currently reigning Holy Emperor, Heidens. The spiritual leader of the Ascetics, Lord Fallen Leaf. The Praetor of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal, Osenno. Special Executor, Stehle. And the leader of the Zealots...

Five experts, with Stehle most likely being the weakest of them.

As for the other four, none of them could be underestimated. Even against Stehle, Linley wouldn't be able to win that easily. The reason why Linley had been able to easily defeat Kenyon was only because Kenyon was nothing more than a mid-stage Saint-level expert.

“When my human form reaches the Saint-level and my skills as magus reach the Saint-level...” Linley’s eyes flashed with a fierce light.

“When your human form reaches the Saint-level?” Yale and Reynolds exchanged glances. They couldn’t help but feel worried for the future Radiant Church.

If Linley were to reach the Saint-level in his human form, then as soon as he transformed, just relying on physical strength, battle-qi, defense, and speed, he would already be at a terrifying level of power. Supreme Warriors were hailed as the most powerful of Saint-levels. They were nothing to laugh at.

Such a powerful foundation combined with Linley’s ‘Profound Truths of the Wind’ and ‘Profound Truths of the Earth’....

They believed that once Linley reached the Saint-level in his human form, then his two ‘Profound Truths’ would also advance in level. And then, once he reached the Saint-level as a magus...

He would be invincible in close combat, and at long-range, the spells of a Saint-level magus were unbeatable.

If his opponents were to use human wave tactics, a single annihilating magical spell would be able to destroy them.

“Too terrifying.” Yale and Reynolds were frightened just thinking about it. The current Linley was already a peak-stage Saint-level expert. If in the future, his power increased tenfold in every aspect...who could possibly stop him?

“Enough about this topic for now.” Linley laughed calmly.

Yale laughed and nodded. “Third bro, do you know? My old man keeps on telling me to handle this affair or handle that affair, but after hearing that you had arrived here, he’s stopped pressing me. In fact, he supported me spending more time with you. I must say...my Conglomerate really did make a killing off this deal. We got you as one of our Elders so cheaply.”

Previously, at the provincial capital of Basil, Yale had given Linley an elder’s medal.

“Even if you didn’t give me that medal, if the Dawson Conglomerate had any difficulties, given our relationship, Boss Yale, of course I would help out.” Linley laughed.

Yale felt a sense of warmth and gratitude in his heart.

“Beautifully said! Come, cheers!” Yale immediately raised his cup in a toast, and Linley and Reynolds joined him, laughing.

People’s hearts were hard to discern, especially after growing up. It would be hard for Yale, Linley, and Reynolds to easily trust people now, but towards those good friends they made in their carefree, worry-free childhood years, they felt nothing but the utmost trust.

It is a rare thing for someone to be able to have a true bosom friend.

Linley and the others all felt very fortunate to have such good bros.

"Third Bro." Reynolds pursed his lips. "You really showed off your godlike power this time at the Colosseum. Even our Dunstan clan has sent people to come meet you."

"They sent someone?" Linley was startled. "Who?"

"One of my paternal uncles." Reynolds said disdainfully. "But he didn't have a chance to even see you."

Linley nodded. Linley had refused to meet with any of the people who had come to pay a visit with him. Even the people of the imperial clan had been summarily ignored.

"If your clan truly wants to meet with me, just give me a heads up, and I'll go meet with them." He would of course give face to one of his bros.

"No need." Reynolds shook his head. "I really don't see eye to eye with the people in my clan. Anyhow, the point is, Third Bro, you've really become famous. This makes my life easier as well. Many people in the clan are now much nicer to me as well. They all know that I'm your bro." Chortling, Reynolds looked at Linley. "Third Bro, in the future, if anything good comes your way, you have to take care of me, your bro, you know!"

"You little punk." Seeing the impish expression on Reynold's face, Linley couldn't help but laugh while berating him. "You've been in the army for seven or eight years now, but you still act this way!"

The four close friends of dormitory 1987. Yale was the playboy type, while Reynolds was the type who feared neither heaven nor earth and would dare to do anything.

“Third Bro, Boss Yale, I’m only this one way in front of you guys. In front of those common soldiers, I always have a hard-ass look on my face.” Reynolds intentionally put on a stern, solemn expression.

It had to be said that once Reynolds hardened his face, he did indeed have the look of a soldier in his eyes and demeanor.

After chatting and joking with his close friends, Linley’s face grew solemn. “Boss Yale, Fourth Bro. There’s something I need you two to help me plan out.”

“What is it?” Reynolds and Yale looked at Linley.

Given Linley’s current status, what did he have to worry about?

“This has to do with my little brother. That day, Emperor Johann publicly announced that on March 15th, he would openly announce at the Martial Palace who the Seventh Princess will marry.” Linley’s face was very solemn.

Reynolds and Yale both nodded.

“My little brother, Wharton, and the Seventh Princess share a deep love for each other. Without the Seventh Princess, I fear that my little brother will be in pain for a long, long time. I don't want to see something like that to happen once again, and to my own little brother." Linley's voice was very low.

Reynolds and Yale exchanged glances.

They still remembered how Linley had actually coughed out blood that year when he and Alice had broken up, and then carved out the sculpture 'Awakening From the Dream' over ten days and ten nights, not drinking or eating anything.

Although Linley didn't say anything, they both understood that this had deeply hurt Linley.

"Third Bro, go ahead. Tell us what you want us to do." Yale said directly, and Reynolds nodded by his side as well.

Linley nodded. "Right now, I have two options planned. If Emperor Johann plans to choose my little brother, then that will be a joyous event. But...if he chooses Blumer..."

Linley's face turned cold.

"At that time, I won't give a damn about the fact that he's the Emperor, or how powerful Blumer's older brother is. I will help my little brother and go bring the Seventh Princess out of the palace and allow the two of them to elope together. If anyone tries to stop me, I will kill them!" A killing intent could be seen in Linley's eyes.

Reynolds and Yale couldn't help but feel their hearts shiver.

Others might not understand, but they understood clearly. The five Barker brothers which Linley had brought with him were actually Undying Warriors, and three of them had Saint-level power. And then there was the Blackcloud Panther and Bebe.

Six Saint-level experts!

Once Linley decided to go all out, especially with Bebe who was no weaker than Linley, the entire imperial capital would no doubt begin to tremble from the repercussions of six trouble-making Saint-level experts.

"I hope his Imperial Majesty chooses Wharton." Reynolds and Yale were both praying in their hearts.

"Third Bro." Yale looked solemnly at Linley. "Don't be impatient. Even if you have to bring the Seventh Princess out by force, there's no need to push things to such a state."

"I know." Linley laughed calmly. "I'm only saying, IF someone tries to stop me, then I'll kill them. My little brother and I naturally don't have as firm an understanding of the affairs of the imperial capital as your clans, which is why I hope the two of you can help me think about this issue."

The Dunstan clan and the Dawson clan both had very deep roots of power, and knew many things about the events occurring in the imperial capital.

“Third Bro, set your mind at ease. My Dawson Conglomerate’s forces are quite numerous. We even have a number of palace attendants and maids who will obey the words of the Conglomerate.” Yale said confidently.

Money was a wondrous thing. The power of money could be extremely large.

“When I go back, I will speak with my old man. Don’t worry. My old man will definitely help and support you.” Yale laughed.

Linley was certain about this as well.

If the Chairman of the Dawson Conglomerate were to leak this information to the Emperor, he probably wouldn’t see much of a benefit. After all, the Dawson Conglomerate didn’t lack for money. But as for experts...the Emperor couldn’t simply order a Saint-level expert to serve the Dawson Conglomerate, right?

“You should take primary responsibility for this affair of Third Bro’s. My clan’s authority primarily resides in the military, after all.” Reynolds knew his own limits.

Linley nodded.

“Then I’ll be counting on you, Boss Yale.” Linley said seriously.

Yale nodded confidently.

After the deaths of his parents, Linley had only a single relative left: Wharton. No matter what, he wouldn't let his little brother be hurt. If Emperor Johann were to select Wharton, then that would be wonderful. But if he didn't...Linley wasn't adverse to revealing the true depths of power available to him and forcibly bring Nina out.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 13, Caylan's Arrival

The night descended. In Channe, the imperial capital of the O'Brien Empire, the most military powerful Empire in the Yulan continent, life went on as usual. Aside from a few crowded nightlife streets, the city was calm and peaceful.

East Channe. Boulder Street. After receiving countless carriages over the past few days, Count Wharton's manor gradually regained its usual calm as well.

Within Count Wharton's halls.

Linley, Housekeeper Hiri, Hillman, Barker and his brothers, Zassler, and the other core members of the team were in a meeting. They were discussing how to handle the Seventh Princess affair.

"If his Imperial Majesty really were to select Blumer, then I will act in accordance with your plans, big bro." Wharton didn't hesitate in the slightest.

Hillman nodded solemnly as well. "The soldiers of the Empire are famous for their courage and fearlessness, while the Seventh Princess is located deep within the palace. If you are discovered while sneaking within...even if you manage to slaughter your way out, no doubt there will be countless deaths."

After arriving at the O'Brien Empire, Hillman had been stunned by the spirit and aura of the Empire.

Martial!

The entire Empire venerated the War God, and the only deity they worshipped was the War God. This nation deeply respected powerful experts. One could easily sense that just by looking at the near-crazed reactions of those onlookers in the Colosseum.

Cowards who fled from battle would be viewed with disdain by the Empire.

The O'Brien Empire was located in the northern part of the Yulan continent. The entire Empire was often fairly cold all year around, which had also helped the citizens of the Empire in developing their endurance.

"Uncle Hillman, if we are to go bring out the Seventh Princess, we definitely won't just send a single person. Although the soldiers of the Empire are very powerful, as far as I can tell, they shouldn't be able to pose a threat to us. The only potential complication is that there are Saint-level experts living in the palace."

The Emperor didn't have the ability to demand a Saint-level expert be his personal bodyguard, but the War God would of course station Saint-level experts within the palace to help defend it. The value of the items in the imperial treasury and various hidden treasure rooms were more important than the Emperor himself. Naturally, they would have to be protected.

If someone dared to barge into the imperial palace to take a princess, those resident Saint-level experts might just interfere and stop them.

Linley was confident in his ability to deal with Saint-level experts by himself, but if he was bringing an ordinary person like Nina with him, it would be tricky.

Linley looked at Bebe, who was resting on his legs. "Bebe. When the time comes, it will be up to you."

Bebe immediately leapt to his feet, hopping onto the table.

"Hrm? Up to me?" Bebe rolled his beady little black eyes as he looked at Wharton. "Little Wharton, don't worry. I, Bebe, will definitely bring your woman back to you totally unharmed."

"Bebe will go?" Wharton was stunned.

"Little Wharton, don't you trust me, Bebe?" Bebe raised his little head proudly, widening his eyes and staring angrily at Wharton.

Wharton hurriedly shook his head. "It isn't that I don't trust you. It's...the imperial palace will definitely have Saint-level experts residing there. If they fight against each other, will Bebe really be able to bring a weak person like Nina safely?"

"Wharton, given Bebe's level of power, bringing the Seventh Princess out of the imperial palace shouldn't be a problem." Linley had quite a bit of confidence in Bebe's abilities. "Bebe's speed is the fastest I've ever seen."

"The fastest? Big bro, are you saying he's even faster than you and Olivier?" Wharton said in surprise.

"Bebe's speed is the fastest speed I have ever seen in a magical beast." The Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, suddenly spoke up from his position lying on the ground. Blackcloud Panthers were famed for their speed. When they were at the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Bebe was actually only an early-stage ninth rank. But even then, Bebe was already almost on par with the Blackcloud Panther.

After five or six years had passed, Bebe's speed had surpassed the Blackcloud Panther's by a large margin, reaching a new, terrifying level.

And now? After having reached the Saint-level, Bebe's speed had soared once again!

"Of course he is faster than Olivier." Linley laughed as he rubbed Bebe's little head. "Wharton, let me tell you, Bebe's speed and defense are the greatest I have ever seen. In the past, when I was at the Ernst Institute, Bebe was still in his growing phase and had the power of a magical beast of the seventh or eighth rank. But even after being struck by the dying blow of a peak-stage ninth ranked Armored Razorback Wurm, he still only suffered a severe wound."

This was the first time Wharton had heard of this. It was the first time Zassler and the others had heard this story as well.

"How is that possible?"

They were all stunned. An Armored Razorback Wurm was one of the most terrifying dragon-type magical beasts.

“When I encountered Haeru in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Haeru wasn’t able to injure Bebe at all with his attacks. At that time, Bebe was only an early-stage ninth rank. You must know that Haeru’s attacks were able to cause harm to me at that time, even though I had the defensive powers of a late-stage ninth-rank expert after transforming.”

Bebe raised his head even higher upon hearing Linley’s praise, staring around himself haughtily like a victorious general.

“I can tell you this. Bebe’s speed is definitely higher than Olivier’s. What’s more, even if Olivier was able to land a blow of his ‘Sword of the Aurora’ on Bebe, he still probably wouldn’t be able to break past Bebe’s defense.”

Linley laughed.

Bebe’s fur’s defensive power was simply too terrifying.

“The ‘Sword of the Aurora’ most likely wouldn’t be able to break his defense?” Wharton, Hillman and the others fell silent. That unremarkable little Shadowmouse Linley had acquired when he was young had grown to be so powerful.

Bebe shook his head. “Har har har. The defense of me, Bebe, is naturally powerful. That goes without saying. However...I’m not confident in my ability to deal with a blow from the Boss’s ‘Profound Truths of the Earth’.”

Linley's 'Profound Truths of the Earth' all but ignored defense. The only thing defense would do would be to slightly weaken the strength of the vibrations as it passed through.

"Given Bebe's speed, bringing out the Seventh Princess then fleeing at high speed from the imperial palace shouldn't be a problem. Most likely, the Saint-level experts in the palace simply wouldn't have time to catch up."

"Heh heh. Boss, just entrust this issue to me." Bebe was extremely excited. He looked as though he wanted to go break the Seventh Princess out right now.

"Don't be impatient. Emperor Johann hasn't made his announcement yet with regards to who he will choose, after all." Right now, Linley was prepared for either eventuality. He wouldn't be caught offguard.

.....

Both Wharton and Blumer spent these next few days worrying. Many of the nobles of the imperial capital were also secretly guessing which one of them would end up marrying the seventh princess.

In the imperial palace.

The Emperor was currently in a seated meeting with a blue-haired middle-aged man. In front of them was a strategic wargame board in front of them. These games were quite popular in the military, and Emperor Johann often liked to play this game as well.

"Your Imperial Majesty. You've raised a fine daughter. She's actually attracted so many suitors, including my own younger son." The blue-haired middle-aged man laughed.

This blue-haired middle-aged man was the mighty Imperial Left Premier, Judd Darryl. Judd and Johann were on extremely good terms, and in private they were as close to each other as brothers.

"Judd, stop teasing me." In front of Judd, Johann only addressed himself as 'me', not using the royal 'we'. Just from this alone, one could tell how close the relationship was between these two men. But of course, he only did so when nobody else was present.

"You don't know this, but this has been a huge headache for me. Blumer and Wharton aren't too much of an issue. Either would be a fine choice. But their older brothers..." Emperor Johann sighed. "Olivier and Linley both are absolutely terrifying."

Judd nodded. "Indeed. I saw that astonishing battle in the air above the Colosseum as well. Olivier and Linley both revealed that they had peak-stage Saint-level power from the very beginning. I didn't expect that the power they initially revealed was just the tip of the iceberg. They actually both had their own ultimate attacks, and Olivier even dared to challenge the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson."

Johann nodded. "Olivier and the Monolithic Sword Saint competed before. Last time, Olivier lost. But despite having already competed and thus knowing exactly how powerful the Monolithic Sword Saint is, he still dares to challenge him yet again? That means he definitely has something that is making him confident."

"I have a feeling that both Olivier and Linley will be people on the level of the Monolithic Sword Saint in the future." Johann sighed. "The most damnable thing is, both of these men are extremely protective of their younger brothers. Judd. You tell me. How can I not have a headache?"

Judd began to laugh.

"Then, your Imperial Majesty, have you made your decision yet?" Judd looked at Johann.

Johann nodded. "I've made my decision."

"Who?" Judd was very curious.

Johann said resignedly, "I admit that Linley is indeed the most brilliant person I have seen in my entire life. He is astonishing in every single aspect. But compared to him, Olivier isn't much inferior. If it weren't for other factors, I would probably choose Wharton."

"Then your Imperial Majesty, you mean to say...you have chosen Blumer?" Judd could tell what Emperor Johann meant.

"Right." Johann nodded.

"There's nothing for it. Blumer is, after all, the personal disciple of the War God. You should know how influential the War God is in the Empire.

In addition...over four of his fellow apprentices have come to speak with me. All of them did so for Blumer's sake." Emperor Johann said helplessly.

"Four of them?"

Judd was shocked as well. "I've heard that the personal disciples of the War God rarely get involved in matters. I didn't expect that as soon as he became a personal disciple, four other personal disciples would come out and speak on his behalf."

"Judd, you should know that although in principle, I have the most authority in the Empire, in reality...the War God is still the highest power in the land."

Emperor Johann, in the end, had decided to side with the War God's College.

.....

The Imperial Left Premier's manor.

An astonishingly handsome young man with long, flowing blue hair was taking a casual stroll on the stone roads within his own family's estates. Whenever he saw anyone, even servants, he would smile and nod towards them.

Caylan Darryl, a genius magus.

"In the end, his Imperial Majesty decided to choose Blumer?" Caylan shook his head and sighed. His father, Judd, deeply doted on Caylan. He had even told Caylan about this affair.

"Why? Why can't his Imperial Majesty consider his daughter's feelings?" In his heart, Caylan was actually very unhappy with some of the coldly pragmatic ways in which the noble clans and the imperial clan handled affairs.

In his mind, people should treat other people well. If two people were to be together, it should be because both loved each other. Emperor Johann should have considered things from Nina's standpoint.

"That girl Nina."

Thinking back to how he and Nina had played around together when they were young, Caylan came to a decision. He immediately headed out of the Left Premier's manor. The only thing he said to the housekeeper when he ran into him was, "I'm going out for a walk." Caylan headed straight for Count Wharton's manor on Boulder Street.

Caylan had come to a decision.

He had to inform Wharton of this affair.

....

At nightfall, Wharton was still training in his manor's training area. Next to him, Linley was meditating quietly. Just at this moment, a servant ran over. "Milord, Lord Caylan of the Left Premier's household has arrived."

"Caylan?"

Wharton came to a halt. In his heart, Wharton actually felt very grateful to this former romantic rival of his. After all, Caylan had voluntarily given up his pursuit. If he hadn't, this affair would be even more complicated.

"Caylan's come? Wharton, I'll accompany you." Linley was actually quite curious about this young man who had voluntarily abandoned his pursuit as well.

Linley and Wharton headed directly to the guest hall. When they saw Caylan, the first impression Linley had was that this was a person who was very amiable and easy to get along with.

"Wharton." Seeing Wharton, Caylan smiled, then looked at Linley. "And this should be your older brother, Master Linley. I've heard of Master Linley's reputation a long time ago."

Linley smiled at him as well.

"Caylan, please sit." Wharton was very friendly towards him.

Caylan shook his head. "No need. I've come today to tell you something. As soon as I have, I'll be leaving." Caylan's face grew solemn.

"Tell me what?" Wharton said, puzzled.

Caylan said resignedly, "Wharton, based on the information I've received, on March 15th, his Imperial Majesty is most likely going to choose Blumer, not you. But of course...since it isn't March 15th yet, nothing is for sure. However, this information I have is most likely 90% accurate."

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 14, An Exchange Between Geniuses

Wharton was stunned by this sudden news.

Wharton truly wanted to be able to openly wed Nina in the imperial capital, rather than elope with her.

"Caylan, is this information of yours true?" Linley stared at Caylan, asking urgently.

Caylan nodded solemnly. "Master Linley, although his Imperial Majesty hasn't publicly proclaimed it yet, this information came from my father's conversation with his Imperial Majesty. Master Linley, I trust you can judge for yourself the authenticity of this news."

Linley nodded slightly.

There was no need for the Imperial Left Premier to lie to his own son. And, given Linley's spiritual energy as an Arch Magus of the ninth rank, if Caylan were currently lying, Linley should be able to sense something.

"No matter what happens, we brothers would like to thank you for your assistance, Caylan." Linley said in thanks.

Only now did Wharton's mind become clear again. He too said gratefully towards Caylan, "Caylan, thank you for notifying us."

"No need to thank me. I just hope that in the future, Nina will have a happy life. Alright, I need to leave." Caylan bowed slightly towards Linley and Wharton, then left.

Wharton watched Caylan leave, then suddenly turned towards Linley. "Big bro. What should we do?" Wharton's mind was in chaos.

"What should we do?" Linley spoke with absolute conviction. "For now, we immediately begin moving the household out of the imperial capital."

Linley stared coldly in the direction of the imperial palace. "We are out of options. I will immediately instruct people to speak with Yale and have him come. Right now, we'll have to use the secret channels of the Dawson Conglomerate to take Rebecca, Leena, Jenne, and Uncle Hillman's family members out of the imperial capital. And, ideally the Emperor must not discover that they've left."

In truth, it wouldn't be too big of a deal even if the Emperor did find out.

Even if Emperor Johann was suspicious of Linley, so what? Would he dare to offend Linley? He himself was not the War God, after all. And even if he dared to offend Linley...who under his command was actually capable of dealing with Linley?

.....

That very day, Linley invited Yale over. After discussing the issue for quite some time with Yale, Yale immediately slapped his chest and promised, "Third Bro, don't worry about it. It's just a few people. There definitely won't be any issues."

Yale then laughed. "Actually, Third Bro. Even if the Emperor found out, he would pretend he didn't know."

Linley smiled as well.

He had reached the Saint-level. Although the status of the Emperor was very high, Linley didn't have any fear of the man. In truth, the only person Linley was afraid of was that man who was residing on War God Mountain.

"Still, try to avoid being discovered." Linley instructed.

.....

Although, Jenne, Rebecca, and Leena were reluctant to leave, they knew that they would meet again with Linley's group later, and thus they followed the directives of the Dawson Conglomerate and quietly left the imperial capital.

Actually, Linley and Wharton hadn't given up all hope yet.

They hoped that on March 15th, Emperor Johann would choose Wharton at the Martial Palace. Although the chance was very low...it was still possible that Emperor Johann might change his mind.

After all, Nina eloping with Wharton meant parting with her family. As for Wharton, he, Housekeeper Hiri, and Hillman had all become very comfortable and used to living in the imperial capital. Unless it was absolutely necessary, they didn't want to take the final step.

....

Each day passed, and March 15th drew nearer as well. The streets, hotels, and restaurants of the imperial capital were once again filled with discussion regarding Wharton, Blumer, and their older brothers.

Everyone was trying to guess who would be the one to wed the Imperial Seventh Princess.

The hoped for day of March 15th finally arrived. That morning, a rare snowstorm actually descended on the imperial capital early in the morning. Even though the sun came up at seven or eight, it was still hard to see anything farther than ten meters away.

"Whew." Standing outside his manor, Wharton let out a long breath.

These past few days, he had been under a lot of mental pressure.

"Enough. We'll know the answer today. Relax." Linley laughed, clapping Wharton on the shoulder. Wharton turned his head to look at his older brother. Looking at Linley, Wharton felt as though Linley were his strongest source of support. With Linley there, Wharton felt a sense of confidence.

"Right." Wharton nodded strongly.

Linley and Wharton immediately got on their carriages, heading in the direction of the imperial palace. Because of the snowstorm, the carriages advanced very slowly. In addition, there were many carriages heading towards the imperial palace this day.

At the gates of the imperial palace.

One carriage after another stopped at the gates, and the various nobles exited their carriages and exchanged pleasantries with each other.

"Lord Olivier has arrived." Seeing Olivier and Blumer walk out of the carriage together, many of the nobles and ministers outside the gates welcomed them warmly.

Seeing the nobles and ministers walk towards him as soon as he left the carriage, Olivier couldn't help but frown.

"Second brother, let's go inside." Olivier didn't so much as glance at the nobles as he emitted a wave of force from his body, directly pushing aside the oncoming nobles and senior ministers, yet not harming them in the slightest.

The nobles and ministers all exchanged glances. They couldn't help but be surprised.

"Your Lordship, we've arrived." A carriage-driver's voice rang out, and then Wharton and Linley exited the carriage. This time, the nobles and ministers very wisely did not try to draw too near. They just called out words of welcome at a safe distance.

Linley and Wharton didn't pay too much attention to those nobles either, heading directly for the palace.

"Linley." Olivier came to a halt, turning his head and bidding Linley welcome.

"Olivier." Linley still felt a degree of respect towards a powerful rival such as Olivier. Nobody could reach such a level of power without focusing for many years on painstakingly training one's self.

Linley, Wharton, Olivier, and Blumer walked forward in a line, heading towards the Martial Palace together.

"Linley, that day, at the Colosseum...to be honest, I really wanted to keep fighting with you." A friendly smile appeared on Olivier's face.

"Oh? Then why did you give up the chance? I refuse to believe you were afraid of Haydson." Linley said with a calm laugh.

Olivier and Linley had both sensed each other's power. Although that day, they had been forced aside by Haydson, aside from Haydson's power, one of the main reasons they had been forced aside was because they had not yet allowed their attacks to explode at full power.

"It wasn't that I was afraid of Haydson. It was more that...challenging Haydson was the goal I set for myself six years ago. After mastering the obsidian sword, I absolutely must challenge him.” Olivier glanced at him. “At the Colosseum, I very much hoped to continue to do battle with you. But this battle must come after my battle with Haydson.”

“I don’t want to let Haydson know the secrets to my obsidian sword technique. If I were to battle you with it, wouldn’t I be exposing myself to him?” A hint of a smile was on Olivier’s face. “I really want to see if the ‘Monolithic Sword Saint’ Haydson, famed for his defensive abilities, can withstand my attack.”

Linley nodded.

“In the duel between myself and the Monolithic Sword Saint roughly a month from now, who do you think will win?” Olivier suddenly asked.

Linley paused for a moment.

That day, Linley had seen the layer of flowing black energy on the obsidian sword’s blade. It gave off a very strange sensation. Linley was very confident in his own adamantine heavy sword, but he wasn’t necessarily confident in his ability to withstand his opponent’s blow.”

“It’s possible for either you or the Monolithic Sword Saint to win. But I think the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, has a higher chance of winning. After all, in all these years, no Saint-level expert has been able to beat him. For him to be able to accomplish such a feat means that he surely has some power to rely on.” Linley said impartially.

Olivier nodded. “Right. I admit, six years ago, when I dueled with Haydson, he only revealed a portion of his true power. Haydson...his power is unfathomably deep. But I am filled with confidence towards my obsidian sword as well. No matter how strong his defense is, he shouldn't be able to withstand it."

Linley laughed.

How could it be that this Olivier was so similar to him? He himself had that same sort of confidence in his adamantite heavy sword.

"What sort of attack does your obsidian sword possess? Why are you so confident in it?" Linley asked curiously.

Olivier laughed. "My obsidian sword?" Olivier looked at Linley. Pausing for a moment, he said, "I can tell you this. You should know by now that the technique of my obsidian sword is based on my insights into the Elemental Laws of Darkness."

Linley nodded.

"Thus, in addition to astonishing penetrative power and attack power, my obsidian sword also possesses a spiritual attack." Olivier said directly with confidence.

"Spiritual attack?" Linley was shocked.

Darkness-style magic did indeed include spirit-based curses. The Elemental Laws of Darkness included all sorts of soul-related properties. But for Olivier to be able to develop a spiritual attack with his obsidian sword based on his insights into these laws was indeed astonishing.

“Perhaps the ordinary, physical attacks of the obsidian sword are very easy to defend against, but the assault on the spirit...ordinary defenses are virtually useless against it. I want to see how Haydson can block it!”

As Olivier spoke, a look of excitement appeared on Blumer’s face as well.

Linley had to admit...

The obsidian sword was indeed very terrifying.

“How frightening. To directly attack the spirit...” Linley was amazed at the power of this technique as well.

“The more powerful one’s spirit is, the greater the chance that they will be able to block this attack. But warriors generally do not have very powerful spiritual energy. Even Saint-level warriors usually don’t have as much spiritual energy as an Arch Magus of the ninth rank.” Olivier was very confident.

Warriors had far less spiritual energy than magi of the same rank.

This technique was aimed precisely at the weak point of warriors.

“Linley. What about the attack for your technique?” Olivier asked as well.

Blumer also looked at Linley. Right now, a hint of arrogance was in Blumer's eyes. He was certain that Linley wouldn't be able to match up to his big brother.

Linley didn't try to hide anything. He said directly. "My technique with the adamantine heavy sword also renders exterior defenses useless. It directly strikes against the internal organs in the opponent's body."

"Renders defenses useless?" Olivier's face changed.

Generally speaking, experts would slowly build up their spiritual energy. On the path to gaining insight into the Laws, their rate of growth in spiritual energy would increase rapidly. For example, Haydson's spiritual energy should be able to match an Arch Magus of the ninth rank.

But the internal organs were different.

Although it was easy to train one's muscles, it was extremely hard to train the heart or the intestines. They could only absorb a little bit of elemental essence, which would slightly fortify the heart and the organs.

If one's organs were destroyed, one would definitely die.

"Renders exterior defenses useless and strikes directly at the insides of the body..." Olivier felt admiration in his heart towards Linley as well. This sort of attack was simply too bizarre, yet Linley had managed to develop it.

Linley similarly felt admiration towards Olivier. The obsidian sword was able to attack someone's spirit!

.....

The nobles and ministers behind them, upon seeing Linley and Olivier chatting on seemingly amicable terms, couldn't help but feel surprised.

Soon, Linley and the others arrived outside the Martial Palace.

Linley and Olivier glanced at each other, then led their younger brothers into the Martial Palace together. Actually, even though they had described their ultimate attacks to each other, the attacks would still be very hard to defend against.

Both the spirit and the internal organs were definitely vital points. This was why these two geniuses were so confident, and why they weren't afraid of telling their rival their secret.

So what if I tell you? Let's see if you can do anything about it!

.....

Quite a few people were gathered in the Martial Palace. Upon Linley and Wharton entering the palace, a palace attendant immediately walked over. "Lord Linley, his Imperial Majesty has already arranged a seat for you. Please take a seat over there."

Ordinary ministers had to remain standing, but Linley did not.

Linley calmly sat down, while Olivier was also led to a seat by a palace attendant. The eyes of the various nobles and ministers in the palace were all focused on Linley and Olivier with a hint of respect and dread.

"Linley, who do you think his Imperial Majesty will select?" Olivier chatted casually with Linley, as though those watching nobles and ministers weren't present at all.

"My younger brother Wharton, of course." Linley said directly.

Olivier glanced at Linley. "I don't think I agree. Oh, his Imperial Majesty has arrived." Linley and Olivier both looked towards the palace gates. At that moment, a number of palace attendants, the Empress, the Imperial Consorts, and seven princesses entered the palace alongside his Imperial Majesty, Emperor Johann.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 15, The Results

The entire Martial Palace fell silent. Seeing Emperor Johann arrive, Linley and Olivier both rose to their feet. In the Martial Palace, the Emperor had the highest rank. They had to at least give the Emperor some face.

Wharton's gaze fell upon Nina. Nina was behind her mother, the Empress. As soon as she entered, she looked at him.

"Big lunk..." Nina's mouth moved, but she didn't speak.

Wharton squeezed out a smile of his own, but his eyes were firm. The two knew what the other was thinking from the gaze they shared. No matter who Emperor Johann selected today, Wharton wouldn't give up.

"Nina is mine. Nobody can take her from me." Wharton glanced at Blumer from afar, then turned to look at his Imperial Majesty, Emperor Johann.

"Your Imperial Majesty!"

All the nobles and ministers in the palace fell to one knee, bowing respectfully.

"Arise, all of you." Emperor Johann turned to look at Olivier and Linley, saying modestly, "Linley, Olivier, please, take your seats."

Wharton also stared at Linley from afar. With Linley there, Wharton felt the utmost confidence.

Emperor Johann then turned to look at the Empress and his Imperial Consorts. "All of you, you can sit over there. Nina, sit with your Imperial mother." The Empress, the Imperial Consorts, and the seven princesses all sat on the other side of the palace, where a row of seats had been arranged.

In the O'Brien Empire, the Empress and the consorts were not permitted to get involved in politics. In the Martial Palace, even the Empress could only sit below and watch.

"Today is a very important day. Haha...We expect many of you have been waiting for this day. Indeed, today, We are going to announce who will be the one to marry Our beloved daughter." Emperor Johann smiled towards Nina as he spoke.

Linley, Olivier, and everyone else stared raptly at Emperor Johann.

Wharton felt his heart begin to thump loudly.

Who would it be?

Himself? Or Blumer?

"As for who We will select, before We make the announcement, We would like to introduce two of the personal disciples of the War God." Emperor Johann saw the two figures flying in this direction from far away.

Both men were dressed in long blue robes. Upon entering the Martial Palace, the first one nodded towards Blumer.

"Your Imperial Majesty." Only then did the two men greet Emperor Johann.

The expression on Wharton's face changed.

The personal disciples of the War God? Seeing these two arrive, Wharton sensed that things were not going to go well. Blumer, not too far away from him, cast Wharton a delighted glance.

These two had clearly come in support of Blumer.

"We shall make some introductions, first. This person on the left is Mr. Lanke [Lan'ke], a personal disciple of the War God and a Saint-level expert." Emperor Johann said in a loud voice. "This person on the right is Mr. Castro [Ka'si'te'luo], a personal disciple of the War God and a Saint-level expert as well."

The nobles and ministers in the Martial Palace all made gestures of respect towards the two Saint-level experts.

"Lanke, Castro, please take a seat over there, near Linley and Olivier." Emperor Johann said with a smile.

Lanke, Castro, Linley, and Olivier were all seated together.

Wharton cleared his throat. Right now, he truly felt under a great deal of pressure. The atmosphere was clearly in favor of Blumer. At this moment in time, Emperor Johann spoke.

"Blumer, Wharton, come to the middle." Emperor Johann said in a clear voice.

"Yes, your Imperial Majesty."

Taking a deep breath, Wharton forced himself to stop thinking wild thoughts, then headed to the center of the palace. Blumer and Wharton stared at each other coldly, then stood shoulder to shoulder.

Everyone's attention was focused on these two.

"We are going to announce who shall become Nina's husband. Naturally, that's only if you two both desire to marry Nina. We shall ask you one more time; do the two of you both wish to marry Nina?" Emperor Johann said in a solemn voice.

This was the final moment.

Blumer immediately said. "Your Imperial Majesty, my greatest desire and dream is to be able to take Princess Nina as my wife."

Wharton said respectfully, "Your Imperial Majesty, it is also your servant's dream that I can have an open, public marriage ceremony with Nina, and that the two of us shall be together forever, never to be apart."

As Wharton spoke, he looked at Nina.

Nina was looking at Wharton as well. Their gazes met. Most of the people in the palace noticed this, and Blumer's face sank.

"Haha, wonderful." Emperor Johann laughed loudly. "Since both of you are so sincere, We are very gratified. But in the end, We must choose one person."

As he spoke, Emperor Johann cast a smiling glance at Blumer.

This glance immediately dissipated the rage in Blumer's heart. He could sense what Emperor Johann's hidden meaning was, and Blumer suddenly felt confidence.

Who would be chosen?

To the contrary, Wharton was growing anxious as he looked anxiously at Emperor Johann.

"Everyone, please be quiet. We solemnly announce that-"

"Wait." That personal disciple of the War God, Castro, stood up and spoke out, preventing Emperor Johann from speaking. Emperor Johann looked questioningly towards him.

If it had been someone else who had interrupted him, he would've shouted in anger already. But the person stopping him was Castro.

"Your Imperial Majesty." Castro actually headed towards Emperor Johann, in the middle of the palace. All of the nobles and ministers were stupefied. "There is something I must tell you in private, your Imperial Majesty." As he spoke, Castro glanced at Blumer.

The palace attendants didn't know whether they should try to block him or not try to block him.

"Step aside. Castro has something he wishes to discuss with Us." Emperor Johann instructed his attendants to step aside, and Castro walked directly to Emperor Johann's side.

Emperor Johann looked at Castro quizzically.

Castro whispered a few words quietly into Emperor Johann's ear. Emperor Johann frowned, glancing at Castro. But then Emperor Johann started, and a smile appeared on his face.

Castro stepped away.

"What is this Castro doing?" Linley had a very bad feeling about this. "Could it be that Castro is privately asking Emperor Johann to select Blumer?"

In Linley's heart, he truly hoped that his younger brother would have a perfect marriage.

But there was nothing that could be done about it. Behind Blumer was the might of the War God's College.

"Haha. Just then, Castro had a minor matter to discuss with Us. Now, We shall officially announce that Our daughter shall be wed to..." A smile was on Emperor Johann's face.

The entire palace was so silent, you could hear a needle falling.

Wharton and Blumer both looked anxiously at Emperor Johann.

"Shall be wed too..." Emperor Johann proclaimed loudly. "Wharton Baruch!"

"Wharton Baruch!" "Wharton Baruch!" "Wharton Baruch!" Wharton's name echoed throughout the Martial Palace.

The entire Martial Palace became utterly still.

Blumer's eyes bulged out.

Wharton was stunned.

Nina was stupefied as well.

"Ah!!!!" Wharton suddenly let out a wild howl of excitement, then charged directly towards Nina. Nina recovered as well, throwing herself directly into Wharton's embrace.

Wharton and Nina actually tightly embraced each other, there in the Martial Palace, as though no one was watching. Nina was utterly thrilled.

"Impossible!" Blumer shook his head nonstop, totally unable to accept this result.

In truth, Blumer didn't feel too much affection towards Princess Nina. But Blumer had a strong, possessive nature, wanting to possess the best of everything. And when he was young, people would often compare him against Wharton.

Thus, Blumer wanted to surpass Wharton in every way.

Challenging him to a duel. Wooing Nina. They were all for this reason. The only person Blumer truly loved was himself.

"Wharton. Nina." Emperor Johann's voice rang out.

Only now did Wharton and Nina come to their senses. This was the Martial Palace. Nina's face turned red, and she immediately retreated into her Imperial mother's embrace.

Wharton immediately bowed as well. "Your Imperial Majesty, your servant was too excited."

"We can understand. We can understand." Emperor Johann laughed and nodded.

And then, Emperor Johann looked at Blumer. "Blumer, you and Wharton are both outstanding talents. Only, We have to consider what is best for our daughter. Do you understand?"

What could Blumer do?

He wasn't Wharton. In Blumer's heart, even if Princess Nina became his wife, she would still be nothing more than something for him to show off. He didn't have much affection for Nina herself. Although it was hard for Blumer to accept this defeat, he didn't lose his composure.

"I understand the difficult choice your Imperial Majesty had to make." Blumer could only grind his teeth and force out these words, swallowing the bile that had risen to his throat.

Emperor Johann nodded with satisfaction.

"Haha..." Emperor Johann laughed loudly. "We are extremely happy today. How about this. Let Us decide the date for Wharton and Nina's engagement. Next month, on the 12th. Wharton, that will be the date of your engagement ceremony with Nina. Do you have any objections?"

"Thank you, your Imperial Majesty. Your servant has no objections." Right now, Wharton was all smiles. How could he have any objections?

Linley, standing next to Wharton, felt very happy as well upon seeing his little brother's joy. His little brother's romantic relationship was about to come to a happy conclusion. At last, he was confident it wouldn't turn out like his own had.

Thinking once more about how his own had turned out, Linley felt a bit of pain in his heart.

"Linley, congratulations." The personal disciple of the War God who sat next to him, Lanke, said in a warm manner.

Castro laughed as well. "Master Linley, on War God Mountain, I am a big collector of stone sculptures. I've always been full of admiration for you, Master Linley. If you have some free time, Master Linley, please come to War God Mountain for a stroll. War God Mountain welcomes you at any time."

"I will definitely go when I am free." Linley was in a fine mood today as well.

Olivier directly rose to his feet and walked to his little brother, Blumer, patting Blumer on the shoulder.

"Linley, Wharton, today you shall enjoy a meal with Us, what do you say?" Emperor Johann's voice rang out. "Olivier, Blumer, Castro, Lanke, you should come with Us as well."

Castro and Lanke rose to their feet.

"Your Imperial Majesty, we have affairs we need to attend to back at War God Mountain. We won't be able to accompany you." Castro said.

"That's fine." Emperor Johann didn't try to force the issue.

"Your Imperial Majesty, I also need to go prepare for my duel with Haydson next month. My second brother shall accompany me back as well." Olivier also refused.

Blumer had already lost. How could he stay and have a meal with them?

Emperor Johann understood this and nodded.

But Linley and Wharton accepted Emperor Johann's invitation. In the future, Emperor Johann would be Wharton's father-in-law. They had to give him this bit of face.

"I didn't expect this." Linley's face was covered with smiles.

Indeed, he truly had not. Linley had already sent out Jenne, Leena, and Rebecca from the imperial capital, and was already prepared to take Nina by force and let Nina and Wharton elope. But the end result had actually been this. This truly was surprising.

After the court was adjourned, Nina left alongside the Empress and the Imperial Consorts.

But Linley and Wharton followed Emperor Johann to a different place.

"Big bro." Wharton's face was still covered in smiles. He was simply too happy. Without meaning to, he continued to beam happily.

Linley was very happy for Wharton as well.

"Linley, in the future, we'll all be one family." Emperor Johann laughed towards Linley.

"Right. All one family." Linley smiled back.

.....

Lanke and Castro were flying in the air side by side, heading straight for the War God Mountain outside the imperial capital.

"What was that all about? What did you say to Johann?" Lanke was confused this entire time. Why did Emperor Johann choose Wharton? Emperor Johann had previously already agreed to choose Blumer.

"I told Johann that our master, the War God, was ordering him to choose Wharton!" Castro said in an unhappy voice.

"Master?" Lanke was stunned.

"How should I know? Right after I entered the palace, Master's voice rang out in my mind and instructed me to speak with Johann. And then, Master delivered the same message to Johann as well." Castro said helplessly. "Master most likely was afraid that if he simply spoke to Johann, Johann wouldn't believe that it truly was the War God who was speaking to him. After all, Master has never spoken to Johann mentally before."

"Why did Master do such a thing?" Lanke said quizzically.

"How should I know?" Castro had no idea either.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 16, Congratulatory Gift

The imperial palace was under heavy guard, and valiant knights could be seen everywhere, along with beautiful palace serving ladies. Emperor Johann and Linley walked side by side, with Wharton slightly behind them. Behind these three men were a number of palace attendants and serving ladies. All of the soldiers they encountered on the trip over bowed respectfully upon seeing Emperor Johann.

“That is Master Linley.” Many warriors, seeing Linley walking by Emperor Johann’s side, began to murmur quietly amongst themselves.

Their eyes were filled with veneration and adoration towards Linley. They were all young, and many of them were no older than Linley. Many of the young men in the Empire had set Linley as their goal towards which they would strive.

“The O’Brien Empire lives up to its name of being the most military powerful of the six major powers. All of these warriors in the imperial palace are very powerful.” On the way over, Linley noticed that not a single one of the warriors here was weaker than the sixth rank.

Most were of the sixth, and many were of the seventh. Even a few eighth rank warriors could be seen.

Even the ordinary patrolling guards were so powerful. One could imagine how powerful the Empire as a whole was.

“Linley, look. The eyes of those guards are lighting up when they see you. I'm afraid that in their hearts, the veneration they feel towards you is greater than for Us." Emperor Johann said with a loud laugh.

Linley laughed calmly.

Ever since that duel in the Colosseum, Linley's fame had spread throughout the O'Brien Empire, especially given his young age. He had already become a legend.

Linley was in his twenties, and not only a genius sculptor, but also a genius magus and a Saint-level warrior. In the hearts of many, even though they might not be as talented as Linley, as long as they worked hard, they might be able to reach at least 10% of Linley's accomplishments, and they would be happy with that.

This had actually caused many young people in the Empire to train even more painstakingly.

The O'Brien Empire had a long-standing custom that whenever a genius appeared, the Empire would officially spread the news alongside the rumors of the common-folk. The impact on the citizens of the Empire was actually quite large.

....

The imperial flower garden. There was a banquet table filled with food, and the only people seated there were Emperor Johann, Linley, and Wharton.

The palace serving maids brought plate after plate of delicacies forward, while the guards around them kept a solemn watch around them.

"You can all leave now." Emperor Johann waved his hand.

"Yes, your Imperial Majesty."

The surrounding maids, servants, and guards all dispersed. Soon afterwards, only Emperor Johann, Linley, and Wharton were present.

Emperor Johann glanced at Wharton. Actually, on the entire trip over from the Martial Palace, his heart was filled with questions.

Why did the War God wish to help Wharton?

In the Empire, the War God was unquestionably the highest power. Wharton was nothing compared to him. The War God and Wharton most likely didn't have much of a relationship.

"Could it be that our venerable ancestor, the War God, has some sort of connection to the ancestors of the Dragonblood Warrior clan? That shouldn't be the case either. Five thousand years ago, when the Empire was founded, the Dragonblood Warrior, Baruch, was very famous, true, but they were nothing more than peak-stage Saint-level combatants. There was still a major gap between them and the War God. What sort of relationship could the two possibly have had?"

Emperor Johann didn't believe it.

The War God was someone on the level of the High Priest. How much of a relationship could he possibly have had with Baruch? Even if he had one, could it have been a deep enough relationship that he would help out the descendants of Baruch, five thousand years later?

"Wharton." Emperor Johann didn't think about it any longer. Smiling, he said, "A while later, you and Nina will get engaged. You need to take good care of Nina. This child has the temper of a spoiled princess. We hope you can be accommodating towards her."

Wharton straightened his chest, hurriedly saying, "Your Imperial Majesty, don't worry."

But Linley was staring at Emperor Johann.

"A few days ago, Caylan said that Emperor Johann was going to choose Blumer, but now..." Linley was puzzled about this.

Linley asked directly, "Your Imperial Majesty, I wish to ask, why is it that you chose my younger brother Wharton?"

Emperor Johann was a bit startled.

"Haha..." Emperor Johann laughed loudly. "Linley, didn't We already discuss this at the palace? We were considering things from Nina's standpoint. Nina likes Wharton, after all. We are deeply gratified that We are able to bring Nina happiness."

Linley snickered secretly.

If Emperor Johann really were considering things from Nina's standpoint, then when Wharton had asked for her hand in marriage, he wouldn't have delayed and caused a large chain of events to occur before accepting.

Emperor Johann saw the look on Linley's face. "What? You don't believe it, Linley?"

"I don't fully believe it, actually." Linley said bluntly.

Emperor Johann started. Generally speaking, who would dare speak to him in such a way? But the one who said these words was Linley, a peak-stage Saint-level expert. Emperor Johann let out two awkward chuckles. "Actually, We admit that We had originally been considering Blumer."

That was more like it.

Although that had been Linley's first time meeting with Caylan, he had the feeling that Caylan was a trustworthy person.

"Linley, you should know that in reality, it is Saint-level experts which determine the rise and fall of an Empire." Emperor Johann sighed. "Saint-level experts can easily kill the enemy's leaders despite being surrounded by a million soldiers. Saint-level magi can utilize destructive forbidden-spells and destroy a million man army entirely. It can be said that in the eyes of ordinary people, Saint-levels are absolutely invincible experts."

Linley nodded. When he was young, Saint-levels were indeed the ultimate combatants in existence.

"Although We are the Emperor, We do not dare issue orders to Saint-levels. If We were to offend them, they might leave the Empire. We trust there are many places which would welcome a Saint-level expert's arrival." Emperor Johann laughed bitterly.

Linley understood this.

If a Saint-level expert were to flee, given their flying ability, that would be very simple.

"Both Blumer and Wharton are likely to reach the Saint-level in the future. But the critical issue is...Blumer belongs to the War God's College. All of the experts of the Empire are clustered around the War God's College. We do not wish to anger the War God's College. After all, there is an entire group of Saint-level experts there, not just one or two!"

An entire group of Saint-level experts. Just hearing the words was enough to make people shiver.

"With multiple fellow apprentices of Blumer coming to speak on his behalf, We didn't have a choice." Emperor Johann shook his head and sighed.

"Then why did you choose my younger brother Wharton in the end?" Linley asked.

He had been wondering about this the entire time. What was the reason?

Emperor Johann turned a puzzled gaze towards Linley and Wharton. "Linley. Does your Baruch clan have some sort of historical relationship with the War God?"

"The War God?"

Linley immediately understood. Shocked, he said, "Your Imperial Majesty, are you saying that it was the War God who caused you to select Wharton?"

"Of course." Emperor Johann said, "Linley, think about it. In the Empire, whose word carries even more weight than the members of the War God's College? Only the War God, the highest power of the land."

"Our venerable ancestor, the War God, directly spoke to Us mentally and ordered Us to choose Wharton." A hint of excitement was in Emperor Johann's eyes. "This was the first time We have ever heard the voice of our venerable ancestor, the War God."

The War God!

It had actually been the War God!

The War God was an incredible figure. Five thousand years ago, he had battled the High Priest over the Yulan river to a standstill, proving that he was definitely a Deity-level combatant.

After five thousand years, although no one had ever seen the War God fight again, everyone understood that given the War God's natural talent, he was undoubtedly even more terrifyingly powerful now.

The War God had trained incredibly fast, going from ordinary person to Deity-level in just a few centuries.

His sudden rise to prominence five thousand years ago had caused his fame and glory to completely eclipse even the Four Supreme Warriors, becoming the most brilliant shining star of that era.

"The War God helped my little brother?" Linley couldn't understand it.

"Could it be that he knows my side has six Saint-level experts?" Linley began to wonder. Given the War God's power, he definitely could sense the strength of Linley's forces.

Linley shook his head.

Impossible. To a Deity, Saint-level experts were nothing. Most likely, the War God could kill all six of them with one blow.

"Then what's the reason? Could it really be because he had some relationship with the ancestors of the Baruch clan?" Linley truly didn't understand what the reason was behind the War God's actions.

.....

West of the imperial capital. War God Mountain. Aside from the primary peak, there were four other peaks. Connecting two of the peaks was a natural cave tunnel.

Lanke and Castro were walking side by side in the tunnel.

After travelling several hundred meters through the winding tunnel, the tunnel suddenly turned downwards sharply. If one stared downwards into that bizarre, deep dark hole, not a single thing could be seen. Nobody could tell how deep that tunnel was.

"Whoosh."

Lanke and Castro jumped directly into the deep hole. They fell down at a fairly slow speed. After falling for several thousand meters, the two landed as gently as leaves on the ground. From the entrance of the tunnel to this hole was merely a thousand meters, but this hole took them several thousand meters underground.

"Master usually spends his time in closed-door training, and whenever he does so, he'll usually spend several years, several decades, or even longer training. When he is engaged in training, he'll virtually never speak to us mentally. But this time, at the Martial Palace, he actually reached out to us mentally and told us to tell Johann to choose Wharton, then told us to come back here." Lanke was mystified.

This was very contrary to the War God's habits.

There were very few matters in the world which an ascetic such as War God would issue orders about.

"Junior apprentice-brother, don't think about it too much. Master surely has his reasons for acting like this. All we need to do is listen and obey." Castro said.

"Yes, senior apprentice-brother." Lanke nodded.

To the disciples of the War God's College, the commands of the War God were not to be flouted. They would do whatever the War God ordered them to do. There was no need to think about it.

"Rumble..." A blistering heat could be sensed in the depths of the tunnel. As they walked in, the stones were slowly turning red as well.

The temperature here was very high!

After going several hundred more meters, Lanke and Castro came to a halt in front of a pitch-black stone door. The stone walls surrounding this door were already scarlet red, and the temperature was so high that even Lanke and Castro had to use their battle-qi on their feet to protect themselves.

If a piece of paper was tossed out, it would most likely instantly be set alight.

"You've come." A calm voice drifted out from behind the door.

The War God's voice was very soft, but it carried a penetrative power. The voice was like a needle, piercing directly into one's soul. Castro and Lanke, his two disciples, even suspected...that the War God could possibly dissipate their soul with his voice alone.

This was one of the reasons why Castro and the other personal disciples of the War God feared their Master so much. The War God was simply too powerful.

"Yes, Master." Castro and Lanke said respectfully. Castro continued, "Master, what instructions have you for us?"

The War God's voice rang out yet again. "April 12th will be the day of the engagement ceremony for that kid Wharton. Go speak to your eldest apprentice-brother and acquire an interspatial ring. On the day of that kid Wharton's engagement ceremony, give it to him as his engagement present."

Castro and Lanke were utterly stunned.

The War God was giving an engagement present?

This had never happened before. Even when they, his personal disciples, had gotten married, the War God paid no heed. After all, was the War God someone who had to send congratulatory gifts to others? Even if he wanted to do so, who would be worthy of accepting his gifts?

But the War God was now ordering them to deliver a congratulatory gift for Wharton's engagement ceremony?

"You can leave now." The War God's calm voice once more sounded out in the tunnel.

Castro and Lanke stared at the pitch-black stone door, then glanced at each other. Although they didn't understand it at all, they didn't dare disobey the orders of the War God.

"Yes, Master." Lanke and Castro replied, their voices filled with incomparable respect.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 17, Stepping Onto the Stage

Yulan calendar, year 10009, April 12th. This was the day on which Wharton and Nina would be engaged at the imperial capital. One of the two lovers was the younger brother of a peak-stage Saint-level expert, while the other was the daughter of the Emperor. An engagement ceremony such as this would definitely be very well attended.

The nobles of the imperial capital who received invitation letters all felt extremely proud. Many common nobles weren't qualified to be invited to this event; after all, if everyone was invited, the Count's manor wouldn't be able to hold all those people.

The Count's manor was very festive today, and the outside of the manor was flooded with arriving carriages, which blocked off a large half of the Boulder Street. The guards and servants of the nobles weren't qualified to enter the manor, and all had to wait outside. In total, there were thousands of guards and servants waiting outside.

An ocean of people!

Each carriage was gaudier and more lavish than the next, and each young noble lady was dressed more beautifully and was more mesmerizing than the last. The engagement ceremony banquet at the manor was definitely one of the imperial events of the highest caliber, and the people who came were all people of great status.

"Big bro, I still feel really uncomfortable wearing this." Wharton had wasted quite a bit of his time in his room. He felt more nervous than he ever had before.

Linley laughed. "Enough, Wharton. You already look very handsome. Have some confidence!"

Wharton took a deep breath.

"Let's go. Time to welcome the guests in the hall." Linley laughingly lectured. "You can't just keep on having Grandpa Hiri welcome the guests. For example, when his Imperial Majesty comes, how can you possibly not be out there to welcome him?"

Wharton and Linley entered the main hall, and as soon as they did, they breathed sharply. Good heavens. There were so many people there. What's more, that was just a small portion of the nobles who would be present. Many senior personages hadn't arrived yet.

"The imperial capital really is the imperial capital. There are far more nobles here than in Fenlai City." Linley sighed.

In the past, Linley had participated in Alice and Kalan's engagement ceremony. The number of people present that day clearly were far fewer than the number attending the ceremony today, and were clearly a much lower caliber of people as well.

The noble clans of a kingdom naturally were far fewer in number than the noble clans of an empire.

As soon as Linley and Wharton entered the main hall, they immediately became the center of attention. Wharton's massive frame was simply too eye-catching, and many people went over there to greet him warmly.

"Wharton, come over here." Housekeeper Hiri immediately called out to him.

Wharton immediately hastened over to the main door of the hall and began to greet each of the arriving guests. As for Linley, he filled a cup with wine, then casually walked to the center of the hall, occasionally clinking cups with the guests.

These nobles were very conscientious and didn't try to get too close to Linley or bother him too much, only gently tipping their cups towards him from afar.

However...

Some of the young noble ladies had their eyes set on Linley. They knew that Linley was unmarried. A twenty-something year old peak-stage Saint-level expert...where would anyone find another man like this?

"What a headache." Linley saw three separate young noble ladies begin to drift in his direction. Linley could only pretend not to have seen them.

When these three young noble ladies were a meter away from Linley...

"Whoosh." A soft yet firm gust of wind suddenly pressed against their bodies. No matter what they tried, those three young noble ladies couldn't move any closer towards Linley.

And then, Linley raised his cup, smiling faintly, before heading to a corner of the main hall and sitting down.

"Just then, Master Linley..." A golden-haired and golden-eyed beautiful young noble lady got excited. "What sort of amazing technique was that?"

The other two young noble ladies didn't know either.

Not knowing wasn't an issue. This didn't impact Linley's status in their heart. In fact, to the contrary; this made Linley seem all the more powerful and mysterious to them. Actually, what Linley had just used was just the simplest manipulations of the wind.

"Did you see Master Linley's Dragonform transformation that day at the Colosseum? He seemed so wild and untamed. I was so excited."

"He really is exciting. I like this type. Those men at school are all soft as cotton. None of them are extremely manly like him."

Linley's hearing was simply too good. Hearing what the young noble ladies were saying to each other, Linley felt a wave of resignation in his heart. They called his Dragonform transformation 'wild and untamed'? And 'extremely manly'?"

"His Imperial Majesty has arrived!"

The voice of the guest announcer at the main gates immediately increased in volume. He had clearly shouted using battle-qi, allowing all the guests in the hall to hear clearly.

The entire hall full of nobles fell silent as they all looked towards the gates. There were many nobles outside the hall as well. There were too many guests here today, and the hall simply couldn't fit them all inside.

"Johann has arrived?" Linley stood up and left the hall.

"Milord." The uniformed Gates called out towards Linley.

Today, all five of the Barker brothers were dressed in handsome matching uniforms. As they wandered around the manor, their massive size and frame made the hearts of the nobles quail. The nobles all secretly sighed...the Dragonblood Warrior clan lives up to its name. Even their guards were so incredible.

Emperor Johann was a sight to behold, as always. Holding the Empress's hand, he was followed by a few bodyguards.

"Wharton." Emperor Johann immediately picked out Wharton from the crowd. Seeing how handsome and strong Wharton looked, Johann nodded with satisfaction. "Not bad, not bad."

Linley arrived.

"Your Imperial Majesty, come rest inside." Linley laughed.

"Alright. We have much to discuss with you, Master Linley." Emperor Johann said warmly. Immediately, the two of them entered the guest hall. As for the other nobles and ministers, they very conscientiously stepped aside for them.

So many of the nobles of the imperial capital had arrived today, but Linley hadn't gone to welcome any of them. The nobles all felt that this was normal. A Saint-level expert, go welcome them? Was that possible?

"The Chairman of the Dawson Conglomerate has arrived!"

That high-pitched voice rang out again. The Chairman of the Dawson Conglomerate, one of the three major trading unions of the Yulan Continent. Although the Dawson Conglomerate didn't actually possess any Saint-level experts, it still possessed astonishing economic power.

Even Emperor Johann stood up and said to Linley, "Monroe Dawson is one of Our good friends."

Linley rose as well.

Yale was sure to have come alongside Monroe Dawson. Of course Linley would go welcome them.

"Haha..." The big-bellied Monroe Dawson made his way over, with Yale by his father's side. Seeing Emperor Johann, Monroe Dawson immediately bowed slightly. "Monroe pays his respects to the mighty Emperor Johann."

Emperor Johann smiled warmly. "Monroe, today, Linley is the master of this location. There's no need for you to stand on too much courtesy with Us."

"Master Linley and I have been friends for a long time. Only, I didn't expect that in a few scant years, Master Linley had reached such a level of accomplishment. Haha..." Monroe Dawson laughed so hard his eyes turned into merry slits.

"Uncle Dawson, just call me Linley." Linley smiled as he spoke. He and Yale were the best of bros. Naturally, he had to be respectful to Yale's father.

"Wharton, come and greet Uncle Dawson."

Wharton came over as well.

"What a handsome, strapping young lad." Monroe Dawson's eyes lit up when he saw Wharton. Clearly, Wharton's size and stature had surprised him.

One noble after another arrived, and even Blumer arrived. Blumer acted in an extremely gentlemanly manner today, and even spent some time congratulating Wharton.

But Wharton, in his heart, still felt rather uncomfortable around Blumer. He kept on feeling that Blumer wasn't speaking sincerely.

"Blumer, your elder brother didn't come today?" Emperor Johann laughed as he spoke to Blumer.

"My elder brother is currently in closed-door meditation training, in preparation for his duel with Lord Haydson next month." Blumer smiled.

"Oh. Makes sense." Emperor Johann nodded.

Blumer then glanced towards Wharton, who was welcoming guests at the gate. A cold light flashed in his eyes. In his heart, Blumer was very unhappy that Wharton had managed to successfully ask for Nina's hand in marriage.

"The Monolithic Sword Saint, Lord Haydson, has arrived!"

When the voice rang out, Emperor Johann, Linley, Monroe Dawson, and many others immediately rose to their feet and headed out the hall.

"Haydson came?" Linley was very surprised and pleased. He had thought that Haydson would be busy preparing for next month's duel.

Very soon, the gray-robed Haydson walked in by himself. Emperor Johann, Linley, Wharton, and the others all went to welcome him.

"Haha, Wharton, congratulations." A very friendly smile was on Haydson's face. He then looked at Linley. Jokingly, he said, "Linley, your little brother is getting engaged. What about you, the big brother?"

Linley started. He hadn't expected Haydson to ask such a question.

"Hahaha..." Emperor Johann began to laugh loudly as well, nodding repeatedly. "Linley, it really is time for you to get married. If you take a fancy to someone, just tell Us. We will definitely make sure that lucky girl is sent to you."

Linley didn't know whether to laugh or to cry.

"Lords from the War God's College have arrived!"

This call from the gate extricated Linley from having to answer the question, as they all went to welcome the people from the War God's College.

"I didn't expect that the War God's College would also send people over." Emperor Johann sighed emotionally.

Haydson nodded as well. The War God's College was one of the most major organizations in the Yulan continent. They rarely participated in engagement or wedding events, unless it was the event of one of their own people. Only then would the other fellow apprentices attend.

Lanke and Castro walked in, side by side.

Castro smiled. "Haha, brother Wharton, congratulations." As Castro figured, given how well-disposed his master was towards Wharton, then Wharton was qualified to be addressed by him as 'brother Wharton'."

But this term of address baffled Linley, Johann, Haydson, and the others.

The members of the War God's College were extremely arrogant.

They rarely paid much attention to other people. Castro's attitude really caused quite a few people to feel puzzled.

"Today, we two fellow apprentices have come here as representatives of the entire War God's College to congratulate you, Wharton, on this joyful occasion. This is the gift which our master personally instructed us to bring you." Castro directly held out a brocade box towards Wharton.

Master?

Everyone around them was stunned. The War God was giving a gift?

"We are incredibly grateful." Linley was the first to recover. Smiling, he accepted the congratulatory gift. "Castro, Lanke, come, have a rest over here."

Generally speaking, the servants would accept any congratulatory gifts at the gate...but how would the gift registrars of the Count's manor dare to take the gifts from people belonging to the War God's College? Even if they had come empty-handed, it would have been an honor.

The Count's manor was a hubbub of noise. Many high ranking nobles such as Dukes and Counts were all chatting amongst themselves, while Linley, Emperor Johan, Monroe Dawson, Castro, Lanke, Haydson, and the others chatted casually as well.

The guests at this engagement ceremony were all absolutely incredible.

Just look at the seating arrangements. At Linley's table, the only people present aside from Saint-levels experts were an Emperor and the Chairman of a Conglomerate. Just at this moment...

"A Saint-level expert is flying over." Many people called out. Linley glanced through the door at the sky, and indeed, saw a human form gracefully soaring through the clouds.

Linley, Emperor Johann, and the others all rose to their feet in confusion.

But no matter who it was, given this person was a Saint-level expert, they had to give him some face.

With a mid-air flash, the man arrived at the main gate. This was a white-haired old man, with a white beard as well. Clearly, he was ancient, but his dreamy, sky-blue eyes were very sharp.

"Haha, I came uninvited. I hope I won't be unwelcome here?" The white-haired old man laughed heartily.

He didn't even look at Linley and the others, instead flying directly towards the place where Linley and the others had been seated. As he drew near, Haydson and Castro hurriedly stepped out of his way, and the white-haired old man sat down on the seat previously occupied by the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson.

"This is a pretty good seat. I'll sit here." The white-haired old man laughed loudly.

Emperor Johann frowned. This man was a bit too impolite. Linley, as well, felt that this white-haired old man was a little too arrogant.

"Might I ask..." Before Linley even had a chance to finish his words, the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, quickly said in an extremely courteous voice, "I didn't expect you could come here, milord. This truly is an unexpected surprise for us."

By his side, both Castro and Lanke hurriedly nodded their heads in assent. Their attitudes were unbelievably humble.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 18, Experts of Other Planes

Linley, Emperor Johann, and the others were all puzzled. Who in the world was this mysterious white-haired old man? Even the number one Saint-level expert, Haydson, was incredibly deferential to him.

“Could it be the War God?” Linley secretly wondered.

Most likely, only a Deity could make Haydson be this deferential. And clearly, both Castro and Lanke recognized this person as well. He was most likely the War God.

“Add a chair.” Housekeeper Hiri instructed a nearby servant.

Linley took a step forward. Smiling, he said, “Sir, we two brothers feel extremely honored to have you attend my younger brother’s engagement ceremony. Might I know your name, sir?”

“Me?” The white-haired old man glanced smilingly at Linley. “My name is Hodan [Huó’dan].”

“Hodan?” Linley quickly combed through his memory, but he definitely didn’t recall an expert by the name of Hodan.

“Linley, no need to ask anything else. It is wonderful that Lord Hodan is able to attend today. Let’s all sit down first.” The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, said with a laugh.

Although Linley and Emperor Johann and the others were mystified, they all sat down.

"Milord, let us offer you a toast, milord." Castro and Lanke both raised their cups.

Milord?

A few things suddenly came to Linley's awareness.

First of all, most likely only a Deity was capable of making a Saint-level expert address them as 'milord'. At the same time...if Castro and Lanke addressed him as 'milord' and not as 'Master', then this person was most likely not the War God.

The continent had five prominent Deities. Linley had already met Dylin and Cesar, while he had yet to meet the High Priest, the War God, and the King of the Forest of Darkness. The white-haired old man should therefore be one of those three.

He was now certain that this man was not the War God.

So this person should be either the High Priest or the King of the Forest of Darkness.

"However, it has been countless years since those two Deities showed themselves. How could Haydson, Castro, and Lanke all recognize him?"

Linley refused to believe it.

A Deity-level expert didn't make appearances so easily.

"Linley." The white-haired old man named 'Hodan' raised his cup.
"Come, let us toast each other."

Linley hurriedly raised his cup.

"When I see you, Linley, I think about the past affairs of your Baruch clan and those several Dragonblood Warriors. Haha...unexpectedly, several thousand years have passed in the blink of an eye." Hodan laughed merrily.

These words caused Linley's heart to twitch, hard.

"Those several Dragonblood Warriors of the Baruch clan? Thousands of years ago?" Linley looked at Hodan with confusion.

In his own clan's history books, there had been three generations of Dragonblood Warriors, but later on a thousand years would pass between each generation of Dragonblood Warriors.

But this Hodan was saying that thousands of years ago, he had met several Dragonblood Warriors?

"I didn't know that Elder Hodan knew the ancestors of my clan." Linley laughed.

"Of course. Your clan leader, Baruch, really is a formidable fellow." Hodan said with feeling. "But your Baruch clan has really decayed. In the past, when you had dozens of Dragonblood Warriors, who would dare offend you? Such a pity, such a pity..."

Linley stared.

"Dozens of Dragonblood Warriors?" Linley and Wharton both looked at Hodan in shock.

"What, is that surprising?" Hodan looked at Linley and Wharton.

Haydson hurriedly said, "Milord, it would be best if you discuss this somewhere else. There are too many people here." It was best if they didn't reveal these secrets to the ordinary nobles.

"It is fine. Only the people at this table can hear us. As for the people outside of it, no matter how loudly we speak, they won't be able to overhear anything." Hodan chortled.

There were eight people at this table. Aside from Wharton, Emperor Johann, and Monroe Dawson, the others all possessed at least Saint-level power, with the white-haired old man's power being immeasurably deeper.

"Dozens of Dragonblood Warriors?"

Linley and Wharton could hardly dare to believe it.

Their ancestral records were very clear; the first three generations of their clan produced three Dragonblood Warriors, after which a thousand years would pass between Dragonblood Warriors. In total, there had been only five. How could there have been dozens of Dragonblood Warriors a few thousand years back?"

"The Four Supreme Warrior clans...alas. All have decayed to a sorry state. In the past, the Four Supreme Warrior clans were quite glorious." Hodan said with emotion.

Linley suddenly thought of something.

He remembered how in the 'Secret Dragonblood Manual', there were instructions on the second way by which one could become a Dragonblood Warrior; drinking live dragon's blood. But based on that manual, all three Dragonblood Warriors were natural-born Dragonblood Warriors.

If the second method had never been used successfully, why would the Secret Dragonblood Manual record it?

In the past, both Linley and Doehring Cowart had suspected that the manual had been altered. His clan's history should probably have included examples of Dragonblood Warriors who were produced via drinking live dragon's blood.

"But I didn't expect there were dozens!" Both Linley and Wharton felt extremely shocked internally.

“Oh, that little girl named Nina is coming over.” The white-haired old man, Hodan, beamed, causing Linley and the other shocked participants to turn and look.

Linley and the others all stood up, and Wharton immediately went over to welcome Nina.

Holding hands, Wharton and Nina went from table to table, toasting the guests. But right now, both Wharton and Linley, who remained at his seat, felt their minds to be in a state of utter confusion.

Their clan’s history clearly wasn’t as simple as they had imagined.

In addition...

Saint-level experts had extremely long lifespans. How could it be that not a single Dragonblood Warrior in their clan was remaining? And not just their clan; even the Undying Warrior clan, the Violetflame Warrior clan, and the Tigerstripe Warrior clan had seen the same thing. All of the Four Supreme Warrior clans had bizarrely collapsed.

“Secret...” Linley understood that the history of the continent definitely contained many hidden secrets that were different from the official accounts.

For example, the King of Killers, Cesar, had once told Linley that five thousand years ago, many experts from other planes of existence had descended to the plane of the Yulan continent. But in the history books, there was no such thing.

Linley found himself somewhat mentally disengaged as the engagement ceremony continued. He kept on thinking about these things.

He even wanted to have a private chat with that white-haired old man named Hodan.

Clearly, this Hodan person knew many things about the affairs of the past.

After dinner, the various nobles in the main hall were chatting idly. At this time, Linley, who had grown frantic with impatience, suddenly heard a sentence that was as beautiful as music from the heavens.

"Linley, come with me. I have something to discuss with you."

Hodan actually reached out to Linley and actively asked to speak to him privately.

Wharton looked at his older brother, and Linley instructed, "Wharton, you stay here. Afterwards, go spend some time with Nina. As for Mr. Hodan, I'll speak with him." As he spoke, Linley followed Hodan out of the main hall.

Haydson, Castro, and Lanke all glanced at each other.

"I wonder what Linley will decide." Haydson sighed with emotion.

Hodan and Linley left the main hall. While walking, Hodan said, "Linley, where are those two Saint-level experts of yours? Call them over as well."

Linley was startled.

How did this Hodan know everything?

Hodan knew the names of Wharton and Nina, and he also knew that Linley had two magical beasts. He even knew that Bebe was a Saint-level magical beast.

Linley didn't try to deny anything. He immediately spiritually contacted Bebe and Haeru, calling them over. Since there were Saint-level experts present today, Linley hadn't allowed Bebe or Haeru to go to the main hall.

"Let's go to the training grounds behind the manor. There's nobody there." Hodan chuckled.

"Groooooowl."

Haeru and Bebe arrived by Linley's side.

"Squeaaaak!" Bebe continued to pretend.

"Little fellow, I know that you are a Saint-level magical beast. Stop squeaking." Hodan laughed as he reached out to rub Bebe on the head. Bebe wanted to move aside, but to his astonishment, he found that it was impossible for him to move. He had no choice but to allow Hodan to rub his head.

Linley was secretly shocked.

Without question, Hodan was a Deity-level expert.

"He really is a Deity. How many Deities does the continent have?" Linley thought to himself, while at the same time, he followed Hodan to the training grounds.

"Boss, who is that old fellow? How is he so powerful?" Bebe didn't dare to be too playful right now, appearing very obedient.

Haeru obediently followed by Linley's side as well.

"Close the door first. Without my orders, no one is to be permitted entry." Linley instructed the servants, and then Hodan headed directly to a stone bench and sat down.

"You can sit as well." Hodan pointed to another seat opposite from him.

Linley sat down obediently, then said humbly, "Mr. Hodan, I am totally lost right now. Can you please provide me with guidance?"

"The reason I came today is primarily for the sake of your two magical beasts." Hodan smiled. "Of course, you and those three other Undying Warriors who possess the Saint-level of power can also just barely be considered qualified to be worthy of being considered my targets."

"Hrm?" Linley looked at Hodan with confusion.

Hodan smiled. "Linley, in the countless years of the Yulan continent's history, there have been countless geniuses as well. Even if there is only one every century, in a hundred thousand years, that means there have been a thousand. But right now, how many Saint-level experts exist in the Yulan continent? Each Empire only has a few dozen."

"Saint-level experts can live for over a hundred thousand years?" Linley said in shock.

"Saint-level experts, so long as they aren't killed, can easily live a hundred thousand years." Hodan laughed calmly. "Upon reaching the Saint-level, you are virtually immortal and immune to aging. However, you can still be killed, of course."

Linley was also puzzled.

If this was the case, why were there so few Saint-level experts? After all, the Yulan continent definitely saw a new Saint-level expert every century.

"Then what is the reason?" Linley asked.

"The reason is...they've gone to other planes." Hodan smiled.

"Other planes?" Linley started.

But then, Linley suddenly understood, and he hurriedly asked, "Could it be that the ancestors of the Baruch clan have also gone to other planes?"

"Right. Those dozens of Dragonblood Warriors have all gone to the 'Infernal Realm', one of the Four Higher Planes. In the past, I even visited your ancestor, Baruch, in the Infernal Realm and drank with him." Hodan laughed heartily.

"The Infernal Realm. Mr. Hodan, you come from the Infernal Realm?" Linley felt as though the secrets of the universe were unfolding before his very eyes.

Hodan nodded. "Right. Linley, let me put it to you like this...in the ordinary, material world, once a life form has reached the Saint-level, they will be qualified to enter the Four Higher Planes, or perhaps the Seven Divine Planes. They will be permitted to train and live there."

"In the history of the Yulan continent, many Saint-level experts have already left the Yulan continent and chosen to enter the Four Higher Planes or the Seven Divine Planes." Hodan smiled.

Linley nodded to show he understood.

"Technically speaking, you and those other three Undying Warriors, despite possessing Saint-level power, aren't yet at the Saint-level in your human forms. There was actually no need for me to hurry over here to speak to you. My primary targets were those two Saint-level magical beasts of yours. They have both reached the Saint-level. They are allowed to choose...to continue to live here at the Yulan continent, or to enter the other planes."

Hodan quickly said with a hint of enticement, "The Four Higher Planes are much better than the Seven Divine Planes. In the 'Infernal Realm', for example, experts as are common as the clouds, and Saint-level experts are nothing more than ordinary people. In that place you will have excellent training opportunities, and treasures such as interspatial rings are as common as water. There's a terrifyingly large amount of treasures there."

Linley understood.

Only upon reaching the Saint-level was one qualified to enter the Higher Planes. Naturally, the Four Higher Planes would have experts everywhere, with Saint-level experts being nothing more than commoners.

"I'm not going. I'm staying with the Boss." Bebe shook his head.

"I'm not going either. I'm staying with my master." Haeru said.

Hodan looked at Linley. Laughing, he said, "Linley, your real power has already reached the peak-stage of the Saint-level. You are completely qualified to enter the Higher Planes. Do you wish to go?"

Linley didn't respond. Instead, he looked at Hodan. "Mr. Hodan, who are you, exactly?"

"Me? Oh. I forgot to tell you." Hodan smiled at Linley. "I am the Planar Overseer for the Yulan continent."

“Planar Overseer?”

Hearing this title, Linley somewhat understood. The term ‘overseer’ contained elements of both ‘watching over’ and ‘protecting’. No wonder this Hodan possessed such astonishing strength.

“Linley, you haven’t answered me yet. Are you willing to go to the other planes?” Hodan urged.

It was up to each individual Saint-level as to whether or not they wished to go to the higher planes. The Planar Overseer was only responsible for telling them about this choice.

Linley remained very calm.

“Mr. Hodan, honestly speaking, I don’t know anything about the other planes. Can you perhaps enlighten me a bit?” Linley asked humbly.

Doehring Cowart actually knew about the existence of the Planar Overseer, but at the time, Linley was far too weak, and so Doehring Cowart didn’t see a need to tell Linley right away. But Doehring Cowart had explained a little bit about the Four Higher Planes.

“There are many material planes such as the Yulan continent. These material planes are all about the same. On some, magical beasts are the primary power, while in others, other races are in power. In some, humans are in power. These planes are essentially the same.” Hodan began explaining some of the most basic information regarding the Higher Planes.

“Above these material planes are the Four Higher Planes and the Seven Divine Planes.” Hodan laughed. “The Seven Divine Planes were created by the seven principal Sovereigns of the seven elements. As for the Four Higher Planes, they were created by the four Overgods.”

Linley nodded.

“The Seven Divine Planes and the Four Higher Planes...what are the differences between them?” Linley asked.

Hodan laughed. “The Seven Divine Planes are planes of earth, fire, water, wind, lightning, light, and darkness. For example, you are someone who is training in the Laws of the Earth. If you were to enter the Divine Plane of Earth, you would find that you trained twice as fast using half the effort.”

“However, the Seven Divine Planes are inferior to the Four Higher Planes. It’s best if you enter the Higher Realms.” Hodan said enticingly. “Linley, you must understand, the Higher Planes were created by the Overgods. The four Overgods far outstrip the power of the Sovereigns.”

“Overgods? Can anyone reach the level of Overgod through training?” Linley suddenly asked.

Hodan stared at Linley in astonishment.

"Haha..." Hodan began to roar with laughter, as though he had heard the funniest joke ever.

Linley looked at Hodan in confusion.

"Linley, it seems you really know nothing." Hodan laughed. "You have no idea. The Overgods aren't people who reached that level through training. Let me explain to you. Every single race has the chance to become a Sovereign through training; the chance is just extremely, extremely low..."

"How low?" Linley asked.

"Let me give an example. In a hundred million ordinary Deities, it would be rare for a single Sovereign to appear." Hodan laughed. "For example, in the Divine Realm of Light, there are countless Demigods, Gods, and Highgods. But in ten million years, you might not see a single Sovereign appear from their ranks."

Linley was silent.

"Demigods, Gods, and Highgods?" Linley frowned as he looked at Hodan in confusion.

In the past, Grandpa Doehring had only discussed the existence of 'Gods'. He didn't explain further.

"The 'divine spark' of Deities are of different levels as well." Hodan said calmly. "Once you reach a certain level of mastery with regards to the Laws, the Laws will themselves grant you their recognition and descend into you a 'divine spark', allowing you to become a Deity. But when you begin, you'll only be a Demigod. As you continue to understand more...at a certain level, you will become a God."

Only now did Linley understood.

"What level of Deity is the War God?" Linley asked with curiosity.

Hodan glanced at Linley with irritation, then laughed. "For the sake of your ancestors, I'll tell you. The War God...is only a Demigod."

"A Demigod?" Linley blinked twice.

Good heavens. The War God had become a Deity over five thousand years ago. Given his talent, he should be much more powerful now than before. How could he still just be a Demigod?

"Haha, Linley, do you think it is easy to advance from being a Demigod to a God?" Hodan shook his head.

"But the War God was a Demigod five thousand years ago." Linley immediately said.

"At that time, he was indeed a Demigod. But there are differences amongst Demigods as well. For example, let's say that to become a Demigod, one must master 1% of a Law, while to become a God, one must master 10% of a Law. Someone who only mastered 9% of a Law is only a Demigod...but is he on the same level of power as someone who mastered 1% of a Law? Even though they are both Demigods?" Hodan explained in a simplified way.

Linley now understood.

"Linley, don't be too greedy. On the road to becoming a Deity, every single step is extremely arduous. There have been countless Demigods in the Four Higher Planes who have spent hundreds of millions of years, or even billions of years, without being able to break through from the Demigod level to the God level."

"But what about the Overgods?" Linley immediately said.

"The Overgods?" Hodan laughed again. "You were asking me earlier if it was possible for humans to reach the Overgod level, right? Let me explain..."

"The Overgods..." Hodan continued to snicker at Linley. "Linley, the Overgods aren't people, nor do they have genders. They don't even have bodies."

"Uh?" Linley stared at Hodan in surprise.

"The four Overgods are manifestations of the Four Prime Laws. They are nothing more than the very embodiment of the Laws that flow through the countless planes! The Overgod of Death is the embodiment of the Laws of Death. The Overgod of Destruction is the incarnation of the Laws of Destruction. The Overgod of Life is the avatar of the Laws of Life. And the Overgod of Fate is the personification of the Laws of Fate!"

Hodan laughed as he looked at Linley. "You tell me. Can you become an Overgod through training?"

Linley understood.

The four Overgods were a natural part of the infinite planes of the multiverse. They were the heavens, they were the earth...they were part of the souls of every living creature.

They were the Laws themselves!

"The Overgods are beings of pure Law. They know nothing of love, hate, friendship, grudges, or other such emotions. They are cold. If you cursed an Overgod, they would ignore you. If you flattered them, they will not reward you. However...if you were to damage the planes themselves, then the Overgods would punish you."

Linley laughed.

Although the Overgods existed, they were the personification of the Laws of the multiverse. There was no need to pay them any heed or attention at all.

"Curse an Overgod? Someone would dare to curse an Overgod?" Linley asked, laughing.

Hodan stared at him, then laughingly berated Linley, "I was just giving an example. In all my years in the Netherworld, I've never heard of an Overgod manifesting in person. As far as you should be concerned, the most invincible power in the world is the power of the Sovereigns. The will of the Sovereigns is not to be disobeyed!"

Linley nodded, signifying understanding.

"Linley, the Seven Divine Planes are extremely beneficial for someone training in a particular Law. But the Four Higher Planes are different. No matter what sort of Law you are studying, the speed at which you train in the Four Higher Planes will be as fast as if you were training in the relevant Law in one of the Seven Divine Planes." Hodan said persuasively. "Thus, the Four Higher Planes are the best choices."

The Four Higher Planes – the Celestial Realm, the Netherworld, the Infernal Realm, and the Life Realm.

"Linley. The ancestors of your clan are all in the Infernal Realm. Why don't you go there as well?" Hodan continued.

Go?

Linley had already made up his mind.

The Infernal Realm only had the ancestors he had never met. There wasn't much point going there. By contrast, in the Yulan continent, he had his younger brother Wharton, and his dear bros, Yale, Reynolds, and George. He also had many friends such as Barker, his brothers, Jenne, and the others.

In addition...

He also had a goal that was unfinished. The utter destruction of the Radiant Church.

Seeing Linley's hesitation, Hodan continued to speak persuasively. "Linley, the Infernal Realm has countless races and all sorts of powerful species of creatures, which have all sorts of attacks. In the Infernal Realm, training is extremely exciting."

"No need."

Linley shook his head and laughed. "Mr. Hodan, thank you for telling me so much. However, I am still young, and I haven't even gotten married. I'm in no rush to go there."

Hearing Linley say this, Hodan could only nod with resignation.

As the Planar Overseer, he was forbidden from forcing people to leave this plane. If others were unwilling to leave, they could remain in their own plane as long as they liked, even to the point of becoming a Highgod.

"Mr. Hodan, I wish to ask you, if one goes to a Higher Plane, can one return?" Linley suddenly asked.

Hodan shook his head. "It is virtually impossible. Out of hundred thousand people who enter a Higher Plane, there usually isn't even a single person who can come back to his homeland. This is because returning home carries an extremely high price."

Linley understood.

No wonder the War God and the High Priest were unwilling to go to the Higher Planes. For even Deity-level experts to be unwilling to go, one could imagine how difficult returning was.

Not even one out of a hundred thousand would be able to return.

This probability was simply too low.

"Mr. Hodan, I'm so sorry to have wasted your time." Linley said humbly.

"Since that's the case, I'll leave now." Hodan stood up. "Linley, if one day you wish to leave this plane, you can come to the Arctic Icecap at the end of the North Sea to find me. I live atop a glacier in the Arctic Icecap."

Linley felt surprised.

"The Arctic Icecap?" This was the first time Linley had heard that at the end of the North Sea, there was an 'Arctic Icecap'.

"Mr. Hodan, what about at the end of the South Sea?" Linley was curious.

“The South Sea is far larger than the North Sea, and is virtually boundless. But at the end of it...at the end of it is the end of the Yulan plane. You’ll find nothing there but chaotic space.

Linley now understood.

After speaking, Hodan immediately flew into the air and left, heading north and quickly disappearing. Linley stood there, not moving for a long time.

This discussion with Hodan had a major impact on Linley.

“Boss, I’m actually pretty curious about the Higher Planes. Wow. All sorts of amazing species, and Saint-levels are just ordinary people there. That place must be awesome.” Bebe’s eyes were gleaming.

Linley patted Bebe on his little head. “Do you want to die?” Most likely, any expert in that plane could easily kill them.

Linley already had a plan for his future training.

Sovereign? That was too far away.

One step at a time. First, reach the Demigod level. Upon becoming a Demigod, Linley would have confidence in his ability to destroy the Radiant Church.

Linley knew his own limits. Given his current power, he wasn't yet strong enough to impose his will upon and act as he pleased in the Yulan continent.

"It's hard to say if I'd even be able to defeat Olivier." Linley didn't feel any confidence at all when it came to Olivier's spiritual attack in his obsidian sword.

Spiritual attack?

Linley suddenly thought of his Coiling Dragon ring. In the past, when divine power had entered Linley's soul, a burst of power had emanated from the Coiling Dragon ring to counter it.

"But Grandpa Doehring was also a master of the Coiling Dragon ring in the past. Why is it that at the point of his death, the ring didn't help him?" Linley was puzzled.

The mysterious power of the Coiling Dragon had to be activated somehow.

The divine power of the Radiant Sovereign had done just that, somehow agitating the power in the Coiling Dragon ring, causing it to manifest protectively. But Olivier's attack wouldn't necessarily also activate the Coiling Dragon ring's protective energy.

"I have no idea what secrets lie hidden within the Coiling Dragon ring. But no matter what, I can't just put all my hopes on the Coiling Dragon ring. In battle, the only one I can rely on is myself.”

Right now, the manor was filled with countless nobles and magnates, but Linley and his two magical beasts remained in the training courtyard in the rear of the manor. As if no one was present, Linley began to train.

“After going to the Infernal Realm, returning will be almost impossible. I can’t possibly hope that I will receive any support from my ancestors. Everything that I do in the Yulan continent, I will have to rely on myself.”

But Linley had forgotten something. Why was it that the dozens of Dragonblood Warriors as well as all of the other Supreme Warriors had left the Yulan continent en masse, and hadn’t left even a single Saint-level expert behind to look after their descendants?

The waters of the Yulan continent were far deeper than Linley could imagine.

By nightfall, many of the guests at the manor had left, and most of the nobles were now gone. The engagement banquet was an afternoon banquet. The people still remaining at the manor were all relatively important guests.

"Wharton, where is your big brother?" Yale poured two cups of wine, then walked to Wharton's side. "I haven't seen him for almost the entire afternoon, I think?"

"My big brother left with that Mr. Hodan. No clue where he went." Wharton shook his head.

"I'll go look for him. Given your big brother's personality, he might have run off to the training yard and started to train." Yale left the guest hall. Making his way down the corridors, he arrived at the training courtyard after a while.

"Drip." "Drip."

Water flowed down the manmade fountain. Each drip-drop of water could be heard clearly in the silent training courtyard. Linley was seated in the meditative trance on the grass, not moving at all.

If one moved closer and examined him carefully, one might see that Linley's muscles were contracting and expanding in a very rhythmic way. And as they did, a natural gust of wind seemed to have surrounded Linley.

His spirit had become one with the endless earth and attuned to the boundless wind.

"Boom!" "Boom!"

"Whoosh!" "Whoosh!"

His eyes shut, Linley could feel the trembling, vibrating spirit of the earth, and the formless wind which filled the skies. After a long time, Linley opened his eyes.

"His lordship issued the order that no one is to be permitted to enter without his permission."

"Not even me?" Yale sounded very resigned.

"Boss Yale, come in." Linley had a hint of a smile on his lips, and he immediately stood up. Only now did Yale walk in. Looking at Linley, he chuckled, "Third Bro, I knew it. You are training again. Why are you so hard working? You are already a peak-stage Saint-level. You are already incredibly powerful."

Linley glanced at Yale and chuckled.

To Yale, Linley could already be considered a peerless expert in the Yulan continent. Even the Emperor of the O'Brien Empire was incredibly courteous to Linley. But after having interacted with Hodan, Linley knew that he was still far from being adequate.

"Come, have some wine with me. I haven't had much of a chance to drink with you today." Yale put down two flasks of wine on the stone table.

Linley sat down as well, then retrieved two winecups from his interspatial ring.

"It's a pity that Fourth Bro couldn't be here." Linley shook his head and sighed. A month ago, when Emperor Johann had announced who would marry his daughter, Reynolds had left the imperial capital.

"He had no choice. The army had ordered him to return. He had to go." Yale said helplessly. "Last time, he just so happened to be on leave, which was why we three bros were able to have a reunion. It isn't so bad for Fourth Bro, but for Second Bro...if we want to see him, we have to go to the Yulan Empire."

The distance from the Yulan Empire to the O'Brien Empire was quite far.

Chatting idly with his dear bro, Linley felt extremely cheerful. Why would he want to give this up to go to a Higher Plane and engage in slaughter?

The most enjoyable part of training was in the spirit gaining a greater and greater level of understanding. It wasn't about the bloody slaughter.

"Third Bro, in a few days, I'll leave the imperial capital as well." Yale sighed emotionally. "Nothing for it. I'm still young. There are many things which the Conglomerate needs me to handle. Otherwise, in the future, I won't be qualified to manage it."

Linley understood.

An organization on the level of the Dawson Conglomerate definitely wouldn't award someone the leadership position just because one's father previously held it. Otherwise, the Dawson Conglomerate wouldn't be as powerful as it currently was. Of course, being the son of the Chairman had its advantages, but one also needed to have ability and a work history.

"Next month, Olivier will be doing battle with the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson. Doesn't that mean you'll miss it?" Linley laughed.

"Yeah." Yale laughed uncaringly. "I'm just a magus anyhow. How much would I understand from watching a battle between two Saint-level warriors?"

Linley suddenly put down his wine cup and looked at the door. "Someone is coming."

"Who?" Yale was puzzled. "Someone else knows that you are here?"

"Those two from the War God's College." Linley laughed calmly.

Saint-level experts could use spiritual energy to scan an area. The comparatively tiny manor could easily be totally covered by it. Naturally, they could easily locate Linley.

Castro and Lanke walked towards the back courtyard side by side. They were very surprised by their master's instructions.

"Although Linley's strength is not bad, there's no need for Master to act this way." Lanke shook his head.

"I don't understand either." Castro also felt puzzled.

Both of them were confused. Walking into the back courtyard, they saw that the guards had opened the door for them already. Castro and Lanke exchanged a glance.

"Linley knew that we were coming."

Castro and Lanke immediately saw Linley seated alongside Yale. Seeing that Yale was here as well, the two frowned.

Yale immediately stood up. "Third Bro, people have come to see you. Why don't you have a chat with them? I'll go to the main hall for now."

Linley nodded.

After Yale left, Castro and Lanke sat down. Linley asked, "Castro, Lanke, why have you come?"

Castro laughed. "Linley, the two of us have come bearing an invitation from our master to pay a visit to the War God's College."

"The War God is inviting me to the War God's College?" Linley could hardly believe it.

How could someone like the War God be inviting him?

Lanke nodded. "Linley, Master did indeed instruct us to have you come to the War God's College. And what's more, Master has instructed our senior apprentice-brother to welcome you personally. Linley, you must understand, even when the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, visited the War God's College in the past, our senior apprentice-brother didn't come to welcome him."

"Oh?"

Linley was intrigued. Who was this 'senior apprentice-brother' of the War God's College?

"Your senior apprentice-brother should be the first disciple of the War God, right? Wait...how old is he?" Linley suddenly came to a realization. Good heavens. The War God was someone who had reached this level over five thousand years ago.

Castro and Lanke both grinned.

"Right. Our senior apprentice-brother is already five thousand years old. He isn't much younger than our master." Castro nodded. "We were very surprised as well when we heard that Master instructed our senior apprentice-brother to welcome you."

Linley knew that the War God only accepted a personal disciple every three hundred years.

The youngest one was Blumer, only thirty years old or so. But the oldest was this senior apprentice-brother, and was five thousand years old.

"Alright. When should I go?" Linley asked with a laugh.

"You can come to the War God's College at any time. How about this? Here's my insignia. When you arrive at the War God's College, hand it to one of our fellow apprentices. They will inform me." With a flip of his hand, Castro retrieved a scarlet red medal which had Castro's name carved onto it.

Accepting the insignia, Linley laughed and nodded. "Don't worry. I will definitely go."

Castro and Lanke both nodded, then left.

Linley secretly wondered to himself...if the senior apprentice-brother of the War God's College was five thousand years old, how powerful was he?

Could he be weaker than the Monolithic Sword Saint?

Linley didn't much believe it. The Monolithic Sword Saint was only a few centuries old, while the senior apprentice-brother had been training in the War God's College for thousands of years with the War God's personal guidance. After five thousand years, how could he possibly not be strong?

The primary peak of the War God Mountain was covered with many buildings. These were the places where the honorary disciples of the War God stayed, along with Kenyon, Castro, and Lanke, who were in charge of the ordinary affairs of War God Mountain, great or small.

The mountain wind was very strong this day. Many of the honorary disciples of the War God's College were training.

"Haaargh!"

A boulder weighing dozens of tons was easily tossed from one person to another, who in turn kicked it back...the two honorary disciples of the war God's College were able to easily kick around this massive boulder.

Most importantly, the boulder wasn't damaged at all.

This required a very fine control of both physical strength and battle-qi.

Right at this time, a graceful figure appeared, soaring across the sky like blue smoke. It gracefully circled around War God Mountain, and in the blink of an eye it arrived at the War God's College.

"Hrm?" One of the honorary disciples of the War God's College looked at the arrival with surprise. He hadn't seen anyone earlier, but then all of a sudden, this person had appeared.

"Are you...Master Linley?" The honorary disciple could recognize him. On the day of the duel at the Colosseum, the honorary disciple had gone to support Blumer.

Smiling, Linley nodded. "Castro invited me to come. This is his insignia. Please go inform him." Linley tossed the insignia to the honorary disciple.

The honorary disciple hurriedly said, "I'll go report it right away. Master Linley, please take a rest first."

Linley nodded. Wharton's engagement ceremony had concluded two days ago, and today, Linley had accepted the invitation and headed off to the War God's College and see for himself what it was all about.

"That person is Master Linley. I hear he's only 27 years old."

"Even apprentice-brother Kenyon was easily defeated by him."

"I was there that day. It only took one blow. Compared to Linley, apprentice-brother Kenyon is very weak."

"Apprentice-brother Kenyon is only the 25th personal disciple of our master. It is understandable that he is a bit weaker. Most likely, apprentice-brother Castro is roughly on par with Linley. If the first ten disciples of Master had been the ones to do battle, most likely they would have easily beat Linley."

Many of the honorary disciples of the War God's College murmured in quiet voices while casting glances at Linley. All of these honorary disciples were geniuses in their own right, and they were all proud and arrogant. But compared to Linley, they had a long way to go.

"Linley." A bright voice rang out.

Castro ran out, his face wreathed in smiles. "You came after all. Come, let's go to Bluethunder Peak."

"Not here?" Linley was puzzled.

Clearly, this primary peak was the largest one with the most buildings. The other four peaks didn't have much construction.

Castro laughed. "Linley, we have many honorary disciples here at the War God's College, so we let them stay at the main peaks. Myself, Lanke, and Kenyon all stay here because we are in charge of them. The rest of our fellow apprentices are all on the other mountain peaks."

Linley nodded slightly.

Castro immediately led Linley in the direction of a different mountain peak. Linley and Castro walked up the steep mountain walls as easily as if they were travelling on flat land, their steps as graceful as flying birds.

"Castro, you are in which generation of personal disciples of the War God?" Linley asked.

"Me? I'm the 22nd personal disciple." Castro laughed.

"You've reached the peak-stage of the Saint-level by now, right?" Linley asked. When he was at the courtyard, he had heard the honorary disciples say that Castro should be on par with him. This was why Linley asked this question.

Castro nodded. "Right. But I most likely am not a match for you. Your speed is quite astonishing, on par with Olivier."

Linley was thinking nonstop.

Even the 22nd personal disciple had reached the peak-stage of the Saint-level. Then what about the earlier disciples?

"Castro, the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, is reputed to be the number one Saint in the world. Has he ever competed against your senior apprentice-brother?" Linley asked.

"No way."

Castro let out an involuntary chuckle. "Although Haydson already has a rather high grasp and understanding of the Laws of the Earth, the War God's College has quite a few people more powerful than him. The reason why Haydson is famous is because my senior apprentice-brother and second apprentice-brother are all over five thousand years old, and have retreated from the secular world thousands of years ago. How could they go out and compete against a junior who is only a few centuries old for the sake of fame and glory?”

Linley suddenly understood.

“Even aside from our War God’s College, I know others more powerful than him as well. For example, that King of Killers, Cesar. A thousand years ago, Cesar sparred against my senior apprentice-brother, and they were both on par with each other. I imagine if Cesar wanted to act against Haydson, he would be able to easily gain victory.” Castro said with certainty.

Linley was startled.

Cesar?

It seemed as though Castro didn’t know that Cesar had already reached the Deity-level. But for his senior apprentice-brother to have dueled Cesar to a standstill a thousand years ago meant that he was indeed an incredible person.

“We’ve arrived at Bluethunder Peak. Come. It’s been a long time since I’ve seen my senior apprentice-brother as well. Master has always said that amongst all of us disciples, senior apprentice-brother is the most likely to reach the Deity-level.” Castro’s face was filled with confidence.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 21, The Eldest Disciple

The mountain wind howled drearily. Walking up the mountain, Linley and Castro travelled a hundred meters with every two or three steps.

"On Bluethunder Peak, eight of us apprentice-brothers are living there. Our senior apprentice-brother is also living at the very top of Bluethunder Peak." Castro said with emotion.

But Linley was currently thinking about that battle the eldest disciple had with Cesar a thousand years ago."

"Castro, do you know anything about that duel between your senior apprentice-brother and Cesar?" Linley asked.

Castro said enviously, "When that duel occurred, I hadn't been accepted into the War God's College yet. I have, however, heard other fellow apprentices discuss it. That Cesar was extremely powerful, and he was extremely fast as well. Senior apprentice-brother's speed is the highest amongst all of us, but he was only able to match Cesar's speed."

"How fast were they?" Linley was also specialized in speed.

Castro laughed calmly. "I don't know either. After all, I didn't personally witness this duel. But I think...they should be much faster than you and Olivier."

Linley could understand. After all, his human form was not yet at the Saint-level. He still had a long way to grow. It was normal if he currently wasn't a match for them.

At the top of Bluethunder Peak.

The top of the mountain had an open space that was a few dozen meters wide. There were some stunted dwarf trees at the top of the mountain as well as some wild grass. Next to one of the old dwarf trees, there were two stone houses.

And at the top of the mountain, there was a man standing there, staring downwards.

Linley carefully looked at this man. He was dressed in a simple blue robe. He was rather skinny, but his back was ramrod straight. His short hair was only three inches, and it was also blue. Just by looking at him, one could sense that this man was possessed of a valiant, resolute air.

"Senior apprentice-brother." Castro said respectfully.

The blue-haired man turned to look at them. When his gaze landed on Linley, Linley suddenly sensed his own soul seem to tremble from the gaze.

Was this an attack?!

Linley instantly grew frightened. He was certain that against ordinary warriors, most likely the gaze alone of this senior apprentice-brother could destroy their soul. Fortunately, he himself possessed the spiritual energy of an Arch Magus of the ninth rank.

"Not bad." The man smiled and nodded. "You are Linley?"

"I am." Linley nodded as well.

"My name is Fain [Fa'en]." The man smiled. "Master instructed me to come welcome you. You drank dragon's blood in order to gain the ability to transform, I believe. You aren't a pure Dragonblood Warrior, right?"

"Hrm?" Linley frowned.

"After hearing about your Dragonform's appearance, I deduced this. I've met other Dragonblood Warriors of your Baruch clan." Fain said with a calm laugh.

"So what if I did drink dragon's blood?" Linley responded.

The eldest disciple, Fain, sighed with emotion. "Based on what I know, the Pure Dragonblood Warriors have tremendous potential, while the Variant Dragonblood Warriors who drank dragon's blood have slightly less potential. If you were a Pure Dragonblood Warrior, upon reaching the peak of your power, you would probably be able to do battle with me."

"Even the potential of a Variant Dragonblood Warrior most likely is greater than yours." Linley was very unhappy with the way this 'eldest disciple' was speaking.

Fain frowned.

He was a person of great status. Even the so-called 'most powerful Saint' in the world, the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, was nothing more than a junior in Fain's eyes, not even worthy of his attention. He truly was rather dissatisfied with the way Linley had just spoken to him.

But when he thought of the instructions the War God had given him, Fain simply smiled, no longer allowing himself to be angry.

"Indeed. Supreme Warriors, even non-pure ones, still have higher potential than normal people." Fain smiled, then glanced at the nearby Castro. "Apprentice-brother, you can go back now. For now, I will attend to Linley."

"Yes, senior apprentice-brother." Castro said very respectfully. He then looked at Linley meaningfully, signaling with his eyes for Linley to not be too arrogant. He then left the mountain.

Linley took a deep breath. He, too, understood that here at the War God's College, it was best to be a bit more humble.

"Linley, let's sit down and chat." With a wave of his hand, Fain caused two nearby wooden seats to fly over towards them, landing in front of himself and Linley.

Seeing this, Linley was extremely puzzled.

What technique had Fain used just now? Linley hadn't sensed him using any battle-qi.

"I hear that you refused Lord Hodan?" Fain laughed. Even Fain was extremely respectful towards Hodan. Hodan was, after all, a Deity-level expert.

"Indeed." Linley nodded.

"Wise." Fain laughed. "Linley, we should feel very lucky to have been born here in the Yulan continent."

"Oh?" Linley was somewhat confused.

Fain continued, "Many Saints have already been famous for centuries and have enjoyed all there is to enjoy. Most of their family members have died of old age. Without anything tying them down emotionally, a large number of them have gone to the Higher Planes."

Linley nodded. He understood this.

Eventually, one would grow weary of what the material plane had to offer. After the passage of centuries, all family members who had not reached the Saint-level would have died long ago. It was very normal for them to eventually decide to go to the Higher Planes.

"But what those people do not understand is that many of the experts of the Higher Planes wish they could come here to the plane of the Yulan continent." A hint of a smile was at the corner of Fain's lips. "Linley, five thousand years ago, many experts from different planes descended to the Yulan continent. Do you know of this affair?"

"I've heard of it." Linley nodded.

"I didn't expect you to know about this." Fain nodded. "Those countless experts all came to the Yulan continent. Naturally, it was because there was something about this plane which attracted them."

Fain shook his head and sighed. "But many Saints instead choose to run off to the Higher Planes, where experts are as common as the clouds. They give up what is close to them for something far away."

"Linley, let me just tell you this. Don't be in a hurry to go to the Higher Planes. Stay here. Eventually, you'll know what huge benefits this plane has to offer. As for what secrets lie hidden within the Yulan continent, for now, I cannot tell you." Fain said with a laugh.

Linley looked at Fain questioningly. "Why tell me this?"

Many Saints didn't know about this. Why had Fain decided to tell him?

"Master instructed me to." Fain said.

"The War God?" Linley truly didn't understand it.

This was the second time the War God had assisted him. The first time, he had ordered Emperor Johann to choose Wharton, while this time, he had Fain tell him these secrets.

Fain suddenly said, "Linley, I hear you are quite powerful. Let's spar together. What do you say?"

Linley's eyes lit up. He immediately nodded.

To train with someone on the level of Fain would definitely be beneficial. With a flip of his hand, Linley retrieved his Bloodviolet flexible sword. Leaping backwards, he retreated at high speed, while at the same time, those black scales covered his body, and those sharp, ferocious spikes appeared as well.

Staring at Linley's cold, remorseless dark golden eyes, Fain sighed in praise. "This Variant Dragonform of yours seems to be quite special. Come. Are you ready?"

Linley was already chanting the words to the Windshadow spell.

"Ready." Linley nodded.

Looking at Linley, Fain recalled his master's instructions. He couldn't help but let out a resigned sigh. The reason he actively asked Linley to spar was also at the behest of the War God.

According to the War God, it was time to let Linley have an idea as to how powerful the true experts of the continent were.

"Linley, I am extremely fast. Be careful." Fain said with a smile. In fact, Linley had chosen to use Bloodviolet precisely because he had heard that Fain was fast.

Bloodviolet could reach an astonishing level of speed when used correctly.

"Let's begin." Fain's eyes lit up.

"Swish!" An azure light suddenly flowed out from Fain's body, so powerful that it crackled and popped.

Fain suddenly moved.

Linley only felt an azure bolt of lightning suddenly streak towards him, at least twice as fast as Olivier's top speed. This terrifying speed rendered Linley completely unable to dodge.

"How frightening!"

Linley leapt backwards while hurriedly transforming Bloodviolet into a tornado of movement, creating countless flashes of violet light which attacked that azure bolt of lightning.

Profound Truths of the Wind – Rippling Wind!

Linley didn't dare to use any other techniques. If he were to use the 'Tempos of the Wind' instead, he probably wouldn't even be able to touch his opponent. Only by using this extremely fast technique could he just barely defend himself.

"Bam!" A terrifying force struck onto the tip of Bloodviolet.

And then, Linley could clearly sense that azure bolt of lightning seem to be transmitted through Bloodviolet towards him, striking onto his black scales.

"Bang!"

It was as though a heavy warhammer had struck Linley's soul. Linley flew upwards, then immediately collapsed onto the floor, his entire body trembling as that azure lightning continued to ripple across Linley's body.

His entire body felt paralyzed. Linley could sense that his muscles had lost all power, and he was barely able to remain conscious.

After a long period of time, Linley finally regained full consciousness, and his four limbs and his muscles slowly gained strength as well. Only now did Linley stand up, staring at Fain with disbelief.

When he had dueled with Olivier, Linley had believed himself to be a peak-stage Saint, which meant that there should be very few people in the continent capable of defeating him.

But now, after sparring with Fain, he realized that the difference between himself and Fain was extremely vast.

Fain was twice as fast as him. Although that didn't sound like much, when engaging in a battle of speed, even a tiny advantage in speed meant the faster party held an advantage. Twice as fast...this was an unbridgeable gap.

There was no way for him to counterattack.

What's more, that lightning-attack had stunned his very soul. Fain had actually held back from using his full power as he had not wished to injure Linley.

"What, you can't believe it?" Fain sat back down on his wooden chair, laughing.

Linley's mind was in a state of chaos. "Although I knew that you are strong, Mr. Fain, I didn't expect...I couldn't resist at all. Mr. Fain, have you reached the Deity-level?"

"No. I'm still just a peak-stage Saint." Fain shook his head.

"I'm also a peak-stage Saint. But..." Linley couldn't understand.

Laughing, Fain looked at Linley, then sighed with emotion. "Linley, don't be fooled by the four words, 'peak-stage Saint-level'. In the eyes of experts such as us, the so-called 'peak-stage' doesn't matter. The only thing that matters is how much and how well you understand the Laws."

"If you understand just the tiniest bit of the Laws, then you are a 'peak-stage' Saint in the eyes of ordinary people." Fain said disdainfully.

Linley was startled.

Right. That was indeed the case. When Linley's proficiency with the sword had reached the 'impose' level, that was merely borrowing the 'imposing force' of the heavens and the earth. It didn't have anything to do with the Laws.

But the techniques he had developed based on the Profound Truths of the Earth and the two techniques he had developed based on the Profound Truths of the Wind, the Rippling Wind and Tempos of the Wind techniques, were indeed based on what he himself knew was but a tiny bit of understanding of the Laws.

"According to what Master says, the Elemental Laws are as vast and boundless as the seas. If you've understood a single drop of water in those seas, you are a peak-stage Saint. If you've understood a hundred drops of water, you are still a peak-stage Saint. But there is a huge difference between the two!"

A hint of loneliness could be seen on Fain's face. "The Elemental Laws truly are vast and boundless. Supposedly, only after mastering 1% of a Law can one reach the Demigod stage."

"As for you and Olivier, you haven't even mastered 0.01%." Fain laughed as he glanced at Linley. "Tell me. Although both of you have gained some insights, can your insights compare with the likes of those of us who have been training for thousands of years?"

Linley understood.

No matter how much of a genius he was, he had spent less than ten years meditating on the Elemental Laws.

And Fain? He had been doing the same for thousands of years. Even if Fain wasn't as talented as him, how could his understanding of the Laws be lower than Linley's?

"Linley, most of the famous Saints in the world, such as that 'Monolithic Sword Saint' Haydson, all became famous in the past millennium. Those true experts who have been training for thousands of years are all far past the point of caring about worldly fame. All of them are meditating and training in private."

Linley was stunned.

The Monolithic Sword Saint had the reputation of being the most powerful Saint, after all.

"Those lists and rankings that you might have heard about are nothing more than the experts which most people of the continent know about. Do you know how powerful the experts you are unaware of are? All of the lucky survivors of those battles from five thousand years ago have been in training in secret since then. I refuse to believe that they would be willing to leave the plane of the Yulan continent." A hint of a smile was on Fain's face.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 22, The War God's Summons

After saying these words, Fain turned and walked to the edge of the peak, allowing the wind to buffet his long robes. As for Linley, he continued to sit there, digesting what he had just learned.

From the Planar Overseer, Hodan, Linley had learned that upon reaching the Saint-level, one could leave the plane of the Yulan continent.

From Fain, Linley had learned that the Yulan continent's plane contained a major secret. The descent of those experts from other planes five thousand years ago was also related to this mystery.

Actually, it was already quite incredible that Linley had reached his current level at the tender age of twenty seven. After all, those extremely powerful experts who were training in secret here in the Yulan continent had all been training for countless years.

"Whew." Linley let out a long breath.

"Why worry about so much? As long as my little brother and I are happy, and as long as I can exterminate the Radiant Church to avenge my parents, I should feel satisfied."

Linley's current goals required that he reach a certain level of power.

As for Linley himself, he truly enjoyed the path of training.

The path of training was filled with obstacles, treacherous cliffs, and dangers. Many powerful people had lost their lives on this path. How few would actually reach the pinnacle?

In the entire Yulan continent, there were only five Deities.

Ever since embarking on this path, Linley's goal was to stand at the very pinnacle of the Yulan continent. When he had embarked on this path as a youth, Linley had mentally prepared himself for the possibility of death and failure.

"When I was six, because I was unable to train in Dragonblood battle-qi, my dream was to become a warrior of the seventh or eighth ranks. Afterwards, I not only became a Dragonblood Warrior, I also became the genius magus of the Holy Union."

"When I was young, I dreamed of eventually reaching the Saint-level. And now, I have become a peak-stage Saint."

A hint of a smile was on Linley's lips.

He had confidence.

"Fain? In the not too-distant future, I will defeat him as well." Linley felt full of excitement. The more experts he surpassed and the greater the heights he achieved, the more satisfied he felt.

What truly moved a person wasn't the results he gained, but the overcoming of setbacks and breakthroughs which one made on the path to success.

Fain turned his head, looking at Linley.

"Rest here for now. At nightfall, I will take you to see Master." Fain smiled.

"The War God?" Linley frowned.

The War God wanted to personally meet with him?

"Naturally, Master has something he wishes to discuss with you. Just train here quietly for now. If there is anything you need, you can ask me." Fain didn't want to waste any more time on Linley. He walked to a stone that had already been polished smooth by him sitting on it countless times. Seating himself in the meditative stance, he closed his eyes.

Linley stared at the meditating Fain.

"What exactly does the War God want?" Linley didn't think about it for too long, as he also sat down and began to quietly meditate.

.....

Time passed. In the blink of an eye, the sun had set.

Fain had been quietly meditating on the boulder. Suddenly, his body began to turn blurry, then disappeared from atop the boulder and reappeared next to it.

Seeing that Linley had been quietly meditating this entire time, Fain couldn't help but secretly nod.

True experts had to learn how to endure solitude.

For example, Olivier had quietly meditated by himself atop that desolate mountain for three full years. Linley, in turn, had spent three painstaking years training in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. If one couldn't endure solitude, one's level of talent wouldn't make a difference.

"Linley, it is about time. Come with me to meet Master." Fain smiled.

Linley opened his eyes as well, and immediately followed Fain.

Fain walked to the side of the peak, and then began to fly downwards. Although Linley wasn't able to fly in human form, Linley leapt off the peak as well, allowing himself to gracefully drift downwards.

Based on his mastery of the wind, Linley could slow down the rate of his descent.

Soon, Fain landed at the half-way point down the mountain, and Linley landed as well.

"Come in with me." Fain headed straight for a natural tunnel. Linley felt rather puzzled. The War God actually lived in a tunnel?

The tunnel curved left and right. After a long time, it ended in that deep, bottomless pit. Looking down into it, nothing but darkness could be seen.

"Let's go down." Fain jumped down directly, and Linley followed him.

"Whoosh." "Whoosh."

The two fell down at high speed. Linley was secretly shocked. "We've definitely fallen for at least two thousand meters. We're below the ground level by now."

After falling for a long period of time, Fain and Linley gracefully floated to the ground.

And then, Linley followed Fain as they continued to move through the tunnel, but as they did, the tunnel's temperature grew higher and higher.

"What a high temperature."

Even Linley didn't dare to resist this terrifying heat with his body alone. He had to use his battle-qi to protect the soles of his feet, and even his skin and head was covered by a layer of azurish-black battle-qi.

Without the protection of his battle-qi, most likely Linley would have caught on fire.

The surrounding stone walls were all red with heat. After walking for a while, Linley saw a pitch-black stone door in front of him. Despite the extremely high temperature, the stone door hadn't turned even the slightest bit red. Clearly, it was made from no ordinary material.

"Whoooooosh."

Gusts of hot air came from the other side of the door, carrying with it a faint, majestic presence. Faced with this majestic presence, Linley actually felt the sudden urge to bow down towards it.

"Master, I've brought Linley." Fain said respectfully.

The War God?

The War God was past this door!

Linley had previously been calm, but now, his heart couldn't help but begin to beat faster. He was actually standing in front of one of the six ultimate experts of the Yulan continent, with only a stone door separating them.

"Alright. Fain. You can leave now." A calm voice rang out.

"Yes, Master." Fain respectfully departed.

Linley still stood there, quietly waiting for the War God to address him.

"Linley. Twenty seven years old. An Arch Magus of the ninth rank who has already embarked on the path of understanding the Laws..." The War God's voice remained very calm. "Linley, you aren't bad."

Linley frowned.

He could sense that the War God's voice seemed to be causing his soul to shudder. He had the sense that if the War God was to raise his voice a little bit, it would cause his soul to dissipate and collapse.

"Thank you for your praise, War God." Linley said humbly.

"I have already instructed Fain to tell you that which you need to know. Outside the door, there is a scarlet talisman of command. Take it. From today forward, you can be considered to be someone belonging to my side." The War God said calmly.

Linley's heart shook.

Considered to be someone belonging to the War God's side?

He turned to look at the side of the door. Indeed, atop a flat rock, there was a scarlet red talisman, which slowly rose into the air and began to fly towards Linley.

Atop the talisman, a single engraved word could be seen: "War"!

"What is this War God thinking? I'll be considered as belonging to his side?" Linley felt somewhat unhappy. The War God was forcibly recruiting him without even asking or negotiating with him.

The War God's calm voice once more rang out, "Given your current level of power, you actually aren't yet qualified to receive this talisman. However...I believe you will reach that level sooner or later, which is why I am giving it to you in advance. Once you have this talisman, you will be qualified to investigate the secrets of the Yulan continent."

"The secrets of the Yulan continent?" Linley said.

"When your human form reaches the Saint-level, or...when you defeat the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, come find me again. By then, you will be qualified to know this secret. Only then would you truly be worthy of this talisman." The War God said calmly.

From the War God's words, Linley could sense a certain lonely arrogance.

In the War God's eyes, the current Linley wasn't even qualified to possess this talisman. In his eyes, Linley's power was indeed quite weak.

Linley knew his own limits as well.

"War God." Linley said respectfully. "You just said when my human form reaches the Saint-level, or when I defeat the Monolithic Sword Saint?"

Does that mean you, War God, feel that only after my human form reaches the Saint-level will I be able to defeat the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson?"

The War God was momentarily silent.

"That Monolithic Sword Saint is reputed to be the world's strongest Saint. Although in the eyes of those other peak-stage Saints who lie hidden throughout the world, he doesn't live up to that reputation, Haydson's current level of power can still be considered on par with those who have trained for thousands of years.

Linley understood.

"As for reaching the Saint-level in your human form...if you remain unable to defeat Haydson even after your human form reaches the Saint-level, then I will feel embarrassed on your ancestors' behalf." The War God said calmly.

Linley laughed.

Clearly, as far as the War God was concerned, once Linley's human form reached the Saint-level, Linley should definitely have surpassed Haydson. But the War God seemed to currently feel that he was not yet able to overcome Haydson.

"I refuse to believe that the War God knows about the true offensive power of my 'Profound Truths of the Earth.'" Linley said to himself.

Although the War God possessed divine power, he wasn't omniscient.

"Linley, let me offer you a word of advice!" The War God suddenly said.

"War God, please speak." Linley's eyes lit up, and he immediately listened carefully. The War God had become a Deity over five thousand years ago. His advice could allow Linley to avoid many missteps.

That calm voice rang out from behind the stone door. "The Elemental Laws contain all sorts of truths. What you need to do is select a single path and follow it to its conclusion. It is best if you don't simultaneously train in multiple paths."

Linley was startled. The Elemental Laws were indeed quite boundless. For example, Linley was currently analyzing two aspects of the Elemental Laws of Wind. The first one was speed, the ultimate speed.

The second was in single-target sword attacks, such as his Tempos of the Wind.

"War God, why should I select just one path?" Linley asked.

"Naturally, if you so desire, you can simultaneously analyze multiple aspects of the Elemental Laws. No one can force you not to do so. Whether or not you choose to take my advice is up to you. Alright, I am finished. You can leave now." The War God said calmly.

Linley hurriedly said, "War God, I would like to ask, what sort of power or authority does this talisman confer upon me?"

“Possessing this talisman is a symbol that you are qualified to enter the ranks of those who know the secrets of the Yulan continent. As for everything else...even if you die, I won't get involved. You must rely on yourself.”

“Then War God, I would like to ask, right now, how many Deities exist on the Yulan continent?” Ever since meeting Fain, Linley had been wondering...

Was it possible that the Yulan continent had more than just five Deities?

“In total, there are five.” The War God said calmly. “That Cesar broke through just a few years ago.”

Linley felt secretly relieved.

The Yulan continent only had a few Deities standing at its peak after all.

“War God, why did you give me this talisman? Previously, why did you help my younger brother?” Linley asked. Linley had been puzzled about this the entire time. What sort of relationship did the War God have with him?

As far as Linley could tell, the War God shouldn't need anything from him.

After all, the War God was far, far more powerful than him.

"You ask too many questions."

The War God's voice turned cold. "You can go back now. For now, don't think about too many things. Focus on your training. After you defeat Haydson, or after your human form reaches the Saint-level, come find me again."

Hearing that the War God was starting to grow annoyed, Linley knew how he should act.

"War God, I bid you farewell then."

Linley immediately left. Casting the Windshadow spell, Linley flew out of the deep pit, then exited the tunnel. After exiting the tunnel and allowing the mountain wind to buffet him, Linley let out a long breath.

Despite being separated from the War God by a stone door, Linley still felt enormous pressure when speaking to the man.

"Someone belonging to his side?" Linley stared at the scarlet talisman in his hand. The scarlet talisman occasionally flashed with golden light. Linley had never seen this sort of material before.

With a flip of his hand, Linley stored the scarlet talisman into his interspatial ring, then headed down War God Mountain.

On the way down, Linley was still thinking about the War God's final bit of advice.

“The Elemental Laws contain all sorts of truths. What you need to do is select a single path and follow it to its conclusion.”

His current focus was the throbbing pulse of the world.

Linley shook his head. Without thinking about it any longer, he left War God Mountain and returned to the imperial capital.

The next time Linley would return to War God Mountain, it would be after he defeated Haydson, or when his human form reached the Saint-level.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 23, Pulseguard

Count Wharton's manor was very quiet. Zassler was in his room training, while Barker, his brothers, and Wharton were all training in the wide training yard in the back of the manor. Rebecca, Leena, and Jenne were chatting with the Seventh Princess, Nina.

"Whew."

After finishing his training, Wharton took a shower and changed into a set of clean clothes. Satisfied and content, Wharton walked into his manor. He had never felt as happy as he currently felt.

He was together with his big brother, and he was marrying Nina. Grandpa Hiri and Hillman were also enjoying the quiet, comfortable lives of nobles.

"Father. Mother. If you two were still alive, you would definitely be very happy." Wharton felt very satisfied, while at the same time, he felt very grateful to his big brother, Linley, who had brought all of this.

Linley was the pillar of the clan.

If it wasn't for Linley, would the Emperor have given Nina to him? If it wasn't for Linley, in the capital, he would only be an ordinary person amongst the nobles, at best considered a genius.

Wharton glanced at the distant Grandpa Hiri, who was reclining on a chair, idly sipping some fruit juice.

"Grandpa Hiri, where's my big brother?" Wharton asked as he walked over.

Housekeeper Hiri looked up and smiled. "Oh, Wharton. Young master Linley left early in the morning."

"He still isn't back yet?" Wharton nodded.

"You have nothing to be worried about. Your big brother is a Saint. Young master Wharton, you need to train hard as well." Housekeeper Hiri chortled.

"Right." Wharton nodded.

"Grandpa Hiri, next month is Olivier's duel against the Monolithic Sword Saint. Will you go watch?" Wharton laughed.

"Naturally. How could I miss a duel between two Saints?" Housekeeper Hiri's eyes shone. "The Monolithic Sword Saint is an expert amongst Saints. This duel will definitely be exciting."

Wharton's eyes were also filled with excitement.

"One day, I will be like my big brother, Olivier, and Haydson." Wharton secretly decided.

Just then, footsteps rang out.

Linley appeared outside the courtyard. Seeing his big brother, Wharton felt a warm feeling in his heart. He hurriedly went to welcome him. "Big bro, what took you so long to come back? Barker and I have finished our training. We are going to eat dinner soon."

"I went to see some people." Linley laughed.

Linley didn't tell his little brother about his trip to War God Mountain. As Linley saw it, it was best not to inform his little brother about certain affairs of the Yulan continent. When his little brother reached the Saint-level, there would be plenty of time to tell him then.

Within the rear of the courtyard was Linley's residence within the manor estate. The training grounds of the estate were extremely large, but Wharton, Barker, and his brothers all needed a great deal of space as well. Thus, Linley usually trained by himself in his own manor.

"Whoosh." "Whoosh." The wind blew about, scattering the fallen leaves on the floor, sending them dancing into the air. Linley's hair gently fluttered about with the wind as well.

Linley was wielding the adamantine heavy sword, with the tip of the sword touching the ground.

"I have already managed to generate 128 pulses of the vibrational attacks of the Profound Truths of the Earth." During the five years he had spent at Cloudpeaks Village, Linley had already mastered the Hundred Layered Waves during the fourth year.

Linley had improved quite rapidly when he had advanced from three waves to ten, then from ten to a hundred.

But after a hundred waves had been reached, Linley's rate of improvement had begun to drop. Despite all that time having passed, Linley had only reached 128 waves.

With each breakthrough, Linley only managed to increase the number of waves by one or two.

"I wonder what the absolute limit is for the number of waves?" Linley sat down into the meditative position.

"Thruuum." "Thruuum."

The sound of the throbbing pulse of the world rang out within Linley's consciousness. That unique rhythm had a miraculous cadence, capable of causing someone to unconsciously be subsumed within it.

Linley's muscles would occasionally expand or contract as they constantly vibrated, and wind arose out of nowhere around Linley. While meditating, Linley had previously noticed that his muscles would absorb earth elemental essence at an even faster pace when they were vibrating in pace with the rhythm of the earth's pulse, allowing his body to gain strength faster.

"Ah!"

Linley suddenly stood up, his eyes shining with terrifying light.

“The throbbing pulse of the world. The throbbing pulse of the world...” Linley had suddenly recalled that technique the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, had used to block himself and Olivier.

Haydson’s body had suddenly been surrounded by layered waves of earth-colored elemental particles which had hammered against him in waves, forcing him backwards.

“Back then, I had the feeling that Haydson’s defense seemed to have a very familiar quality about it. But at the time, I didn’t understand it, and I didn’t have time to analyze it. But now...”

Linley had a particular feeling, akin to seeing a bright moon which had been hidden behind a foggy veil gradually grow clearer in his mind.

“The throbbing pulse of the world isn’t just vibrational waves. It can also become invisible, and it can also be transmitted through battle-qi.” It was as though there had been an opaque film covering this realization. Having pierced through the film, Linley now began to understand.

“Using pulses for defense, haha...earth-style magic has the ‘Pulsating Guard’ forbidden level spell. It seems that they are based on the same principles. However, my ‘Pulseguard Defense’ would only be used to protect myself.”

Linley’s azurish-black battle-qi began to fill the area around him.

“No, that isn’t how it works.”

Linley shut his eyes, allowing his heart to merge with the throbbing pulse of the world, while also tuning his Dragonblood battle-qi to the same tempo. He already understood the general principles, but actually applying them wasn’t a simple task.

Linley stood there in the middle of the courtyard as waves of azurish-black battle-qi suffused the area around him.

The principle was actually quite simple. For example, a sheet of paper could easily be torn apart, but if the paper was folded six times into a braid, this braid of paper might be able to support up to a hundred pounds of force.

The same material, after being folded and braided, could support far more amounts of force.

Battle-qi was the same when used for defense.

The same battle-qi, when used in different ways, could defend against ten times or even a hundred times as much incoming force. The “Throbbing Pulse of the World”, in turn, was a very unique technique.

The Throbbing Pulse of the World was just one of the paths within the Laws of the Earth.

Linley had already reached a rather high level of understanding with regards to the Throbbing Pulse of the World. All he had to do now was to transform that understanding and use the same principles to create a Pulseguard Defense for himself. Since he already understood the principles, once he began to apply them, he would advance fairly quickly.

"Big bro, time to eat." Wharton walked over, with Barker and his brothers behind him. The five of them had just finished training and then showering.

But when they pushed the door open, they discovered...

Linley was surrounded by azurish-black battle-qi, which rolled out like waves of fog. Linley was hidden within those roiling waves of azurish-black battle-qi.

"Big bro?"

"Lord?"

Wharton, Barker, and the others all looked at each other. Although training was important, resting was as well.

"Don't bother the Boss." Bebe, resting in the corner of the courtyard, ordered.

"It is dinner time. Big bro should take a rest." As he spoke, Wharton headed towards Linley. Bebe and Haeru glanced at each other, but didn't block him.

Linley had already instructed Bebe and Haeru not to go near him, as they would otherwise be injured by those waves.

"Time to let this little punk learn a lesson." Bebe secretly said to himself.

Wharton remained cautious. The battle-qi around Linley was quite dense, but he was still fairly far away from Linley. The battle-qi here was still rather sparse. How could Wharton be truly worried about such a small amount of battle-qi?

But once he reached the edges of that azurish-black battle-qi, Wharton suddenly felt a bizarre surge of energy strike at him.

"Bang!"

Wharton was sent flying away. Wharton had the sensation of being struck dozens of times in an instant, and each time he felt as though he had been struck by a meteor.

"Wharton." Gates was the first to go forward and catch Wharton.

"Wharton, are you okay?" Gates asked.

"I'm fine." Wharton put his hand against his chest, the taste of blood in his mouth. He stared at Linley in disbelief. "Big bro is releasing his battle-qi, but I only touched the outermost perimeter. How could the power be so intense?"

Wharton didn't believe it. The battle-qi density closer to Linley was far higher, and it would most likely be far more dangerous as well.

"Wharton, his Lordship still hasn't stopped his training despite what just happened. Clearly, he must be at a critical juncture in his training. It's best if we don't disturb him." Barker said seriously.

Wharton nodded as well. "I will order the guards to prevent anyone from disturbing him."

"No need. Haeru and I will look after him." Bebe said disdainfully. "You can leave now. If the Boss doesn't finish his training, don't disturb him."

Wharton, Barker, and the others glanced at each other, then left.

At the same time, Wharton and Barker instructed everyone else not to interrupt Linley's training. That night, at dinner, Jenne, Nina, and the others were all astonished at how hard Linley was training.

"He's training so hard that he won't even eat dinner. Big lunk, your big bro really is hard working." Nina murmured.

But unexpectedly, the second day, Linley continued to train like this. The third day, the same...and just like that, one day after another went by.

In the blink of an eye, over ten days passed. May had arrived.

"In a few more days, it will be time for the duel between Olivier and Haydson. My big bro wouldn't be so caught up in his training that he will miss it, would he?" Wharton said to Barker and his brothers.

Wharton, Barker, and his brothers were all standing at the doorway to the courtyard.

Every day, after they finished their training, they would come visit Linley. Linley hadn't changed at all, and he was still surrounded by that azurish-black battle-qi. Only, compared to ten days past, that azurish-black battle-qi had actually shrunk quite a bit in area.

"I wonder how big brother's training is progressing." Wharton simply couldn't understand what he was seeing.

Barker and his brothers shook their heads as well. In terms of level of understanding, Barker and his brothers weren't much better off than Wharton, and weren't able to understand much of anything regarding the Elemental Laws.

"Whew." The sound of an exhaling breath.

Wharton and the Barker brothers, who had just turned and prepared to leave, all turned and looked back. Indeed, the azurish-black battle-qi had returned to Linley's body, and Linley was currently smiling while stretching.

"Wharton, you are here as well." Linley laughed.

"Big bro, you finally finished your training." Wharton said with excitement.

"Oh, right. Wharton, how much time have I spent in training?" Linley laughed.

"Almost fifteen days! Today is May 1st. In three days, it will be May 4th. That night, Olivier and Haydson will be dueling." Wharton said quickly.

"Fifteen days?"

Linley was slightly startled. Actually, he had been totally concentrating on sensing the 'Throbbing Pulse of the World' and constantly modifying and upgrading his Pulseguard Defense technique. He hadn't noticed time pass at all.

Unexpectedly, after closing his eyes, fifteen days had passed.

"Although I already had a high understanding of the 'Throbbing Pulse of the World' and also understood the general principles behind the Pulseguard, the actual development of the technique took fifteen days."

But Linley was actually quite satisfied.

In the past, his 'battle-qi armor' was created through the application of battle-qi in a very simple, crude manner. His current 'Pulseguard Defense' used the same amount of battle-qi, but was several dozen times stronger.

"But it seems my defense is different from Haydson's."

When he was developing his technique, Linley had thought their techniques were the same. But after developing it, Linley realized...that Haydson's defense was actually just a simple way of utilizing the 'Throbbing Pulse of the World'. Haydson's understanding of the Throbbing Pulse of the World definitely was not as deep as Linley's own level of understanding.

However, Haydon's defense was still frightfully powerful.

This was because the 'Throbbing Pulse of the World' was just a supportive part of Haydson's defense. His true power most likely lay in a different mystery of the Laws of the Earth.

"I wonder how my pure 'Pulseguard Defense' technique matches up against Haydson's defense." Linley secretly wondered to himself.

"Big bro, what are you thinking about? Let's go eat dinner." Wharton called out.

"Alright."

Linley turned to look at Bebe and Haeru. "Bebe, Haeru, let's go." Linley could guess that Bebe and Haeru hadn't left his side during these past fifteen days.

"And here I was thinking that the Boss had forgotten about us." Bebe hopped onto Linley's shoulders, then pursed his lips. "But Boss, I've gotta say, although we haven't left the courtyard a single time during these past ten or so days, those servants still delivered food to us every day. Alas, but tonight, nobody will deliver food. I, Bebe, will have to personally go get something to eat."

Linley, Wharton, and Barker and his brothers all couldn't help but laugh.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 24, Olivier vs Haydson

Yulan calendar, year 10009. May 4th. This night was guaranteed to be anything but an ordinary night. Many of the people of the imperial capital were unable to sleep, and instead came to the outskirts of the city. Tonight, there were no stars in the sky, nor was there a bright moon. Instead, a thick layer of clouds covered the skies.

Many citizens of the imperial capital had come with lit lanterns. In groups of three and five, they awaited the arrival of this battle.

“Hey, third brother. Where do you think Lord Olivier and Lord Haydson will hold their duel? Back then, when Lord Olivier challenged Lord Haydson, he didn’t clearly specify where they would fight. Only, that they would fight outside the city. But would it be outside the east gate or the west gate, or the south gate, or the north gate?”

“Who knows? We have no choice but to quietly wait.”

This question nagged at many people. Many people had even arrived from different cities. Aside from a small number of people who were indifferent, and a number of magi, many people came. Nearly half the population of the city had come to watch this duel. When the tourists from other cities were added to their number, there were definitely millions of people here today.

People were clustered outside all four of the gates of the imperial city.

Nobody knew where the duel would take place.

A large group of people from Count Wharton's resident had gone as well, naturally. But Linley's group was able to easily tell where the duel was going to occur. This was because...the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, was intentionally broadcasting his aura.

The Monolithic Sword Saint and Olivier had not clearly discussed where the duel would occur.

Thus, Haydson, the Monolithic Sword Saint, had chosen to head to the Channe River, located north of the imperial capital. He stood in the air above the river, which was a wide one, measuring several hundred meters across at its widest. However, in terms of length, it could not compare to the Yulan River, and the Channe River actually joined the Yulan River at its end.

Saints were extremely sensitive to the auras of others.

If a Saint-level battle were to occur at a specific location, Saints from hundreds of kilometers away would sense it. Linley didn't transform, because Haeru and Bebe could both clearly sense Haydson's aura.

"Above Channe River, north of the city. Let's go now. The duel will occur there. Lord Haydson is there." This information swept the city like a storm, quickly spreading to the people in the south, east, and west sides of the city.

The millions of people congregating in those places swept towards the north like a flood.

The vast majority of these people went cross country towards the north. After all, there were far too many people here. If they all went by the streets of the capital, it would simply be too congested.

"There really are quite a number of people here." Linley, Wharton, Barker and the others all stared at the local scene in shock.

Over a million people were standing on each side of Channe River. The 80,000 spectators in the Colosseum had already seemed like a sea of people. These million-plus spectators truly were a terrifying sight.

Both sides of Channe River were filled with people.

The worst part of it was...

People were continuing to arrive from the east, west, and southern sides of the city. It was as though three massive deluges of water were continually adding to an already flooded area. The population of people here only continued to grow.

"So many people. Jeeze, that Olivier...why did he have to insist on the duel being three months later? If it had been half a month, the people from the other provinces wouldn't have been able to make it over. Three months...even people from the Northwest Administrative Province have made their way over." Hillman shook his head.

Zassler only snickered. "The more the merrier. What an awesome spectacle."

Zassler seemed to be treating this sight as a way to reminisce about the sight of his million-body strong army of departed souls. His million-body undead army was also an extremely incredible sight.

"More importantly, how can we get to the front? Are we going to just watch from afar?" Seeing how tightly packed the people were in front of them, Housekeeper Hiri didn't have the courage to try and squeeze through.

Gates said delightedly, "That's easy. Let us five brothers lead the way and charge forward."

Given their massive frames, they definitely were capable of pushing to the front.

"No rush. Haven't you noticed that Emperor Johann's army has arrived?" Linley laughed. Indeed, just at this moment, the soldiers from the army had formed an orderly regiment and were marching in their direction.

There were millions of ordinary commoners here, and less than a hundred thousand soldiers.

But due to their tight formations and gleaming armor, the soldiers were able to awe and suppress the hearts of the commoners.

"Rooooaaaar!" "Groooooowl."

The millions of spectators had magical beasts in their ranks as well, some of which had been tamed by powerful experts. The cries of magical beasts could be heard as well, alongside the unceasing chatter of the humans.

It was a scene of utter chaos.

"SILENCE!"

A powerful voice rang out. "Everyone who is on a boat on Channe River, all of you, get to land, quickly! If you are on the river during Lord Haydson and Lord Olivier's battle, it is highly likely that your boats will be swamped by waves. People on the shores of Channe River, all of you move backwards by ten meters! Nobody is permitted to go near the shores of the river. The army will maintain order here!"

The imperial army began to organize the viewers.

The upper echelons of the Empire didn't dare to be careless. If something were to happen here, with millions of citizens present, it could be disastrous. A duel between two Saints was a joyous occasion. They couldn't let it turn into a tragedy.

"Lord Wharton, Lord Linley, please come with us." Two soldiers walked over to them.

Linley and Wharton grinned at each other.

Emperor Johann had already made arrangements early on. After having those spectators retreat by ten meters, the nobles of the Empire headed to the front, although they also didn't go to the edges of the shores. With the Channe River spanning several hundred meters, there was plenty of space for the two Saints to duel.

In addition, both of the Saints were dueling in mid-air.

The nobles, based on their prearranged spots, lined up along the banks of Channe River. Having the best viewing locations, they prepared to watch this incredible spectacle. The commoners of the Empire, seeing this, actually weren't angry.

There was a huge gap between the worlds of the nobles and the commoners.

Those who were able to become nobles were all people of talent, or who had rendered great merit to the nation. As long as you had ability, you could become a noble. The commoners of the Empire actually held the nobles in great admiration, and they too wished to become nobles.

The night wind was very cold, especially close to the river banks. The cold night wind caused many nobles to put on cloaks.

On each side of the river, there were countless lit torches, illuminating the entire Channe River. However, in the air above Channe River, the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, stood there in mid-air alone. Olivier had yet to appear.

"Master Linley, why hasn't Olivier appeared yet?" Emperor Johann said to Linley, who was now by his side.

Emperor Johann had personally requested that Linley be seated next to him. The first reason was because he wanted to strengthen his relationship with Linley. The second was because with Linley by his side, he would be a bit safer while watching these two Saints duel.

“Don’t be impatient, your Imperial Majesty.” Linley smiled. “Haydson himself is still patiently waiting. Your Imperial Majesty, you just need to quietly wait.”

“True.” Emperor Johann smiled and nodded.

In the air above Channe River, the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson stood, dressed in his simple gray robes, and carrying that earth-colored heavy sword on his back. His eyes were shut.

Suddenly...

Haydson opened his eyes and stared to the east. A human blur was flying through the air at high speed. In the blink of an eye, a second human figure had arrived in the air above Channe River.

It was Olivier, with his Lightshadow sword and the obsidian sword on his back. Today, Olivier was dressed in a long black robe. He looked very mysterious, and his white-streaked hair was flowing freely in the breeze.

“Lord Olivier has arrived!”

The millions who had been impatiently waiting suddenly let out an explosive shout of joy, filling the heavens like a physical wave of sound, causing the waters of Channe River to vibrate. One can imagine how loud millions of joyfully shouting voices were.

“Such a large number of people is really frightening.” Wharton sighed in amazement.

Linley chuckled.

In the air above them, Olivier and Haydson hadn’t been impacted in the slightest. They stared at each other in mid-air, with Olivier absolutely radiating an aura of battle.

“Haydson, there is no way I will hold back in our duel today. If I accidentally kill you, you can’t blame me.” Olivier said coldly.

The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, laughed calmly as he glanced at Olivier. “If you can kill me, then kill me. I definitely won’t blame you.”

These words from these two powerful Saints excited all the spectators to the point of trembling. Good heavens, was this going to be a life-and-death duel between two powerful Saints?

This duel between two Saints was not a duel between ordinary Saints. One was reputed to be the most powerful Saint in the world, the Monolithic Sword Saint. The other was the Prodigy Sword Saint, who had come today to avenge his humiliating defeat of six years ago. This battle had filled everyone with excitement.

After countless voices called out in excitement, everyone fell silent!

Millions of people were present, but not a single person made any noise. The only thing that could be heard was the rustling of animals in the grass and the ceaseless blowing of the wind.

“Today, I have to get a good look at these two.” Linley’s eyes were as sharp as lightning, and what’s more, the surrounding wind also served as his eyes. Despite the dark night, he could clearly ‘see’ everything going on in the air between these two people who stood in mid-air several hundred meters above.

According to what the War God had said, if Linley was capable of defeating Haydson, that would mean he was qualified to know the secrets of the Yulan continent’s plane. Haydson was also a practitioner of the Laws of the Earth. Naturally, Linley would carefully observe this battle.

As for Olivier...Linley had the sense that Olivier would also be a very powerful rival.

Not just Linley.

Blumer, Kenyon, Castro, Lanke, and other personal disciples of the War God had come over to watch this duel as well. After all, given Haydson’s power, even in the War God’s College, only those disciples who had trained for thousands of years were capable of defeating him.

"Six years ago, I wasn't a match for you at all. But today..." Olivier laughed coldly as he drew the pitch-black obsidian sword from his back.

"You are starting off with the obsidian sword?" Haydson smiled slightly, but then his face slowly grew solemn. He didn't move at all, nor did he draw his sword.

Olivier's face turned cold.

"Oh? Six years ago, you didn't draw your sword. Today, you still think you won't need to draw your sword in order to defeat me?" Olivier said coldly.

"If you have the ability, then force me to draw my sword." Haydson said calmly. At the same time, a rippling wave of earth-colored battle-qi surrounded Haydson, causing him to seemingly be ensconced in a wave of earth.

The two were separated by hundreds of meters of distance. Naturally, they spoke very loudly.

All the millions of spectators could clearly hear their words. They were stunned. The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, was so arrogant that he didn't even draw his sword.

"This Haydson probably doesn't know that Olivier's obsidian sword includes a spiritual attack component alongside the physical attack." Linley didn't say anything.

For Haydson to dare act in such a way meant that he probably had reason to be confident. Linley actually didn't desire Haydson to be killed by Olivier in one stroke. That would be too laughable.

A dream-like burst of white light flashed across the sky. With each streak of white light, an additional Olivier appeared in the sky. In the blink of an eye, 108 Oliviers appeared in mid-air.

"Using a technique like this? Olivier, can it be that you don't know that these techniques are useless against me?" Haydson stood there calmly in mid-air, ensconced by his earthen aura.

"Truly?"

Olivier laughed coldly. The strange thing was, those 108 Oliviers all moved at the same instant, charging towards the Monolithic Sword Saint at the same time.

Haydson stood there, occasionally taking a single step.

One step forward, one step back, left one step, right one step...each movement was simple, but every single step allowed him to instantly travel several dozen meters, easily dodging every single one of Olivier's attacks.

In terms of speed, Haydson wasn't the slightest bit slower than Olivier.

"Are you only capable of dodging?" Olivier shouted angrily.

"Even if I were to fight you head on, what would you be able to do?" Haydson's calm voice rang out, then he returned to his original position, and then he actually retracted that earthen aura, allowing it to cling on his body.

"Whoosh!"

Those 108 Oliviers all combined into one. Olivier's body was covered by a gloomy, cold black light which seemed to devour all the light surround him. Olivier's face couldn't be clearly seen.

"Hrm?" Linley was surprised.

The wind elemental essence couldn't even get near Olivier.

"Swish!"

A ray of devouring black light tore through the sky, striking directly at Haydson. Haydson stood there without moving, just using a simple punch to strike at it with his right fist...

"Bam!" A sonic boom could be heard.

That fist smashed down with the weight of a mountain, locking the surrounding air in place.

"Boom!"

Olivier finally appeared, his obsidian sword having chopped against Haydson's fist. When Haydson had punched out, Olivier actually hadn't tried to dodge, instead clashing his sword directly against it. That terrifying force from the punch passed through the obsidian sword, and with a terrifying splintering sound, Olivier's right arm contorted bizarrely, and he was knocked flying away by the power of that fist.

As for Haydson, he simply stood there, not moving.

"Haydson...seems to be in trouble." Linley carefully watched Haydson.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 25, As Resilient as a Monolith

“Splash!”

Olivier fell from the skies, slamming down into the waters of the river and kicking up an enormous geyser of water.

“Elder brother!” Blumer, who had been watching at the riverbank, roared loudly, while at the same time charging directly towards the location in the water where Olivier had fallen.

The millions of spectators were simply too numerous. Many of the people at the distant edges couldn't even see Olivier and the Monolithic Sword Saint do battle. They could only overhear what the people in front were saying about what had just happened. Instantly, the millions of onlookers began to murmur.

The difference between the two was simply too enormous!

After all, Haydson continued to stand there, as though he hadn't been injured at all.

“Master Linley, Olivier lost?” Emperor Johann said questioningly to Linley, by his side.

“It is still too early to come to any conclusion.” Linley was still staring up at the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, who remained unmoving in mid-air. Linley said to himself, "I wonder what the results are for Haydson, after he took on that attack head on."

The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, was feeling extremely uncomfortable right now.

He was extremely confident in his defense. He had roamed the Yulan continent for centuries now, and had never discovered anyone whose defense was stronger than his. Indeed, the obsidian sword's battle-qi attack just now hadn't breached his defense in the slightest.

However...

When the obsidian sword had struck against his fist, a strange energy had easily penetrated past his vaunted defense and directly attacked his spirit, catching him off guard and stabbing viciously into his soul.

He felt dizzy, and his head hurt so much it threatened to split apart.

"What a Prodigy Sword Saint. He's even managed to develop a soul attack technique." After a moment, Haydson regained his normal faculties. "A young fellow who isn't even a half-century old was actually able to develop such a unique attack."

Haydson had tasted this sort of attack long ago!

Soul attacks actually weren't that unique.

For example, that 'eldest disciple' of the War God, Fain, which Linley had met, had caused Linley to nearly faint when his lightning technique struck Linley. It had taken Linley quite a while to recover. This, too, was a form of soul-based attack.

For example, the War God, who simply by speaking could cause someone's soul to shudder.

The basic principle underlying soul-based attacks was quite simple; it was using one's spiritual energy to form an attack, then use it against the opponent's soul.

Simply put, it was a spiritual attack.

But although it was easy in theory, it was extremely difficult to do in practice. This was because spiritual energy, normally speaking, was very soft and malleable, like cotton. In order to do a spiritual attack, one had to transform the cotton into a sharp knife and use it to pierce the opponent's soul.

Even most Saints were only able to, at most, broadcast their spiritual energy. To use it to attack? To transform cotton into a knife?

Difficult!

But although it was difficult, those top-level experts who had been meditating on the Elemental Laws for a long time were capable of reaching that level. Haydson had previously experienced this sort of soul-based attack.

"Olivier's spiritual energy is not very strong. Most likely, it is only on the level of a magus of the eighth rank. If he had the spiritual energy of an Arch Magus of the ninth rank, I would most likely be badly injured. If it was on the level of a Grand Magus Saint..." Haydson laughed calmly.

And then, Haydson looked down into the Channe River.

The Channe River had already regained its usual calm, but Olivier hadn't reappeared yet.

"Olivier, it seems you won't come out until you've finished repairing your arm." Haydson laughed loudly, his voice shaking the heavens and reverberating throughout the land.

"Repairing his arm?" Linley frowned, feeling surprised.

"Splash!"

A waterspout suddenly erupted from the river, and a black blur instantly shot up into the sky, once more standing in mid-air and staring at Haydson. Olivier's damaged, twisted right arm had already returned to its normal condition.

Olivier laughed coldly as he looked at Haydson. "Repairing an arm? Haydson, even if you wanted to do such a thing, you wouldn't be able to."

"Light-style elemental essence is indeed miraculous. Some top-grade light-style magi are able to heal even the most grievous of wounds in an instant. However...in terms of defense and attack, the Laws of Light are inferior to the Laws of the Earth." Haydson said confidently.

The Laws of the Earth.

Linley, too, trained in the Laws of the Earth.

"How can you possibly understand the subtle mysteries of the Laws of Light?" Olivier said calmly. "Haydson, don't be over-confident. You didn't enjoy the feeling of my sword attack just now, did you?"

Haydson frowned.

Even an extremely powerful soul, upon receiving a soul-based attack, would suffer some wounds.

"With your soul damaged, will you be able to use 100% of your power?" Olivier drew his Lightshadow sword with his left hand.

He wielded his obsidian sword with his right hand, and his Lightshadow sword with his left.

"But I'm different. My arm was broken, but now it is healed. I'm not impacted in the slightest." Olivier dual-wielded his weapons, with a layer of dazzling white light covering his Lightshadow sword, while a layer of light-devouring cold black aura covered his obsidian sword.

Two diametrically opposite forces.

"I want to see how you will deal with these two totally opposite forces!" Olivier's eyes flashed with a cold look, and then he instantly transformed into a blaze of white light, as radiant as the sun, while at the same time, an unremarkable series of black lights flashed amidst his radiance.

His speed suddenly increased to his utmost limit!

The skies were once again filled with over 108 Oliviers.

"Clang!" Haydson, his face solemn, drew his earthen-colored heavy sword from his back.

"Haha...you've finally drawn your sword." Olivier's laughter shook the heavens. The countless spectators were all silent.

Tonight, the night sky was covered by thick clouds, giving the battlefield a very gloomy aura. The spectators below even had the feeling that those dark, thick clouds were so close to Olivier and Haydson that the two could touch the clouds just by raising their hands up.

"Boom!" "Boom!"

Terrifying sonic booms could be heard, as each time Olivier streaked through the sky at high speed, there would be an eardrum-rupturing sonic boom. The power of those sonic booms in the sky was so great that even those lit torches wavered, the flames pressing downwards from the pressure.

Gales of wind caused everyone's hair to begin to float upwards.

Countless people stared fixedly at this spectacle, hoping they could clearly see what was happening in the skies.

"Clang!" "Clang!"

Each time Olivier's dual swords clashed against Haydson's earthen-colored heavy sword, those two light-style and darkness-style bursts of energy would strangely combine and attack together, seeking to break through Haydson's attack.

"I didn't expect Olivier to have this sort of attack!" Watching the battle with his head raised, Linley sighed secretly.

He had to admit that Olivier was a genius. Light and Darkness were two diametrically opposed types of Elemental Laws, but Olivier not only was able to train in both at the same time, he was also able to use them together in a very perfect manner.

"Haha..."

With each consecutive blow, Olivier's loud laughter rang out. "Haydson, what, are you just going to defend? Can it be that your soul is so wounded that you can't even attack?"

"BOOM!"

A terrifying thunderclap could suddenly be heard from the cloud-covered skies as an enormous bolt of lightning snaked down and struck the ground. A few seconds later, a torrential rain began to fall.

In the blink of an eye, the world was covered with rain.

"Damnit, why does it have to rain now?" The millions of spectators began to curse aloud. Most people had not brought any rain gear. With the rain suddenly descending upon them, they were transformed into a series of half-drowned chickens. However, these spectators continued to raise their heads high, staring at the duel in the skies.

But thanks to the torrential rain, they couldn't even fully open their eyes as they stared upwards.

How miserable!

Many people were forced to take off their clothes and try to use their clothes to block some of the rain, so as to allow themselves to continue to stare upwards at this duel between absolute experts, which they might not have the chance to see again in a hundred years. But despite this... the thick, heavy rain prevented them from seeing much of the battle in the skies.

Right now, there were very few people who could clearly see what was going on in the skies.

Linley, of course, was one of them.

“Master Linley, what is going on in the duel above?” Emperor Johann asked Linley urgently. The imperial clan was still quite comfortable, because as soon as the rain had started, many large umbrellas were immediately deployed above them.

Linley and the others all continued to sit comfortably dry under those umbrellas.

“Your Imperial Majesty, Haydson continues to defend, while Olivier is wildly attacking him. However...it seems Olivier is totally unable to harm Haydson.” Linley smiled.

But although that was what he said, in his heart, Linley was wondering to himself, “Every single one of Olivier’s attacks contains a spiritual attack component. What sort of shape is Haydson in, exactly?”

The torrential rain continued to fall.

Those countless torches had been extinguished by the rain long ago. Right now, only the illuminating spells of a few light-style magi provided a bit of illumination in the area.

“Olivier, are you finished attacking?” Haydson said calmly.

“What?!” Olivier was suddenly stunned.

Could it be that despite him having attacked for so long, he hadn’t been able to injure Haydson at all? His soul-based attack was his secret weapon.

Wielding both swords in his hands, Olivier stood in mid-air, staring at Haydson.

Haydson looked calmly at Olivier. "When I received your first soul-based attack, I was indeed injured, but afterwards, since I was prepared for them, your attacks weren't able to harm me at all."

"Prepared?" Olivier was stunned.

How would one defend against a soul-based attack? Even Olivier himself had no idea.

"Olivier, you must understand, although soul-based attacks are special, you aren't the only one to use them. There have been quite a number of people in the history of the Yulan continent who have developed soul-based attacks, and I have tasted these attacks before as well. You are only a warrior, after all. Your spiritual energy is far too weak. Most likely, you are only at the level of a magus of the eighth rank. If you were at the ninth rank...then perhaps I would be injured even if I prepared for your attacks. If that were the case my victory today wouldn't be this easy."

The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, looked calmly at Olivier.

"What?!" Olivier found it difficult to accept this.

This was an unbelievably heavy blow to him!

“Olivier, you are already quite impressive, to have reached this level before even a half century of life.” Haydson gently stroked the earthen-colored heavy blade in his hands. “Now, prepare to receive my most powerful attack. Consider this my way of showing respect for your power. As to whether you will live or die, that will be up to heaven.”

Olivier felt that this was very laughable.

Whether he would live or die?”

“Haydson, don’t be too arrogant. If you have the ability to do so, then come and kill me. Enough talk.” Olivier’s body once more began to blaze with that brilliant white light, intermixed with that dark black light.

Half his body was covered with pure white light. The other half, pitch black.

“Come!” Olivier’s black and white hair flowed freely in the air. He radiated light in every direction, and the power of those two swords in his hands reached a crescendo as well.

Wielding his earthen-colored heavy sword in one hand, the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, had a smile on his face.

“This is my most powerful attack. The name of the attack is...‘Worldbreaker’. If you are to die, I wish you to die with full knowledge of what killed you!” Haydson had already forgotten how many so-called geniuses had died to him.

Was Olivier the sixth, or the seventh?

He had forgotten.

But Haydson knew that if a genius were to die, then they would no longer be a genius.

“Elder brother!” Blumer roared mightily into the skies. “Be careful!” Tears streamed down from Blumer’s eyes, but given the torrential rain, no one could tell if they were tears or just raindrops.

Although the torrential rain was thunderously loud, powerful experts were still able to clearly hear the words between these two combatants.

Hearing his younger brother’s shout, ensconced in black and white light, the corner of Olivier’s lips actually tugged upwards, forming a perfect curve. Surrounded by black and white light, Olivier was very dazzling to the eye. To the below spectators, Olivier seemed to be a bright star shining in the night rain.

“Boom!”

Olivier suddenly moved, and a terrifying sonic boom could be heard as he transformed into a dazzling line of light which streaked towards the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson.

“Haaaaaaaargh!” Haydson let out a loud yet calm shout.

The Lightshadow sword and the obsidian sword seemed to have merged together, and the dark light and the white light crackled and swirled together, as Olivier, his face fierce, viciously swung down both swords at close range for one final blow...

But as Haydson swung his giant earthen sword towards him, it seemed to carry the power to shatter the entire world.

"BAAANG!"

A terrifying loud collision sound could be heard, as though the world itself had exploded. At the same time, a terrifying gust of hurricane-like wind blasted in every direction as the torrential rain fell down in sheets, carried by the force of that blast of wind.

"Splash!" A human figured covered with dim black and white light fell at high speed into the Channe River...and on the surface of the Channe River, a large amount of a red colored liquid could be seen.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 26, A Time and a Place

In turn, Haydson's body had been knocked flying far away at high speed by this terrifying clashing force. Only after flying backwards for nearly a hundred meters did Haydson stabilize himself, and a hint of blood leaked out from Haydson's mouth.

Haydson wiped the blood away, staring down at the Channe River.

"What a fine Prodigy Sword Saint. His final attack truly was powerful." Haydson murmured to himself. At a do or die moment, Olivier's final attack had reached a new level of power, and had actually broken through Haydson's defense and struck Haydson's body, causing him to be injured.

"Rumble." The torrential rain continued to fall nonstop, and on the surface of Channe River, the waves of water roiled about. Quickly, that 'scarlet red' color atop the surface of the river dissipated and disappeared from sight.

A deathly silence!

Everyone had fallen silent, and the people at the two banks of the river stared into the Channe River. Everyone wanted to know, had that glorious Prodigy Sword Saint died, just like that?

"Elder brother!" Blumer didn't hesitate at all. Shedding bitter tears of pain, he threw himself directly into the turbid waters of the Channe River.

"Master Linley, did Olivier die?" Emperor Johann was worried.

Linley shook his head. "I'm not sure either." As he spoke, Linley lowered his head to glance at Bebe, who looked upwards at Linley with resignation. "Boss, Olivier's aura is extremely weak right now, and he isn't even breathing. I can only detect the barest hint of life in him. It seems he really is about to die."

The countless spectators were all discussing this situation in hushed tones, wondering if Olivier had truly died. But everyone still remembered...Olivier's dazzling final blow.

"Plop!" Water sprayed everywhere.

Carrying a body, Blumer rushed out of the water. Linley could instantly tell that Olivier's face was drained of all blood and was totally white, and his lips were ashen as well. He was no longer breathing.

Only by using spiritual essence to probe him could one sense that Olivier was still alive.

"Move, move!" Carrying the Lightshadow sword, the obsidian sword, and his older brother Olivier in his arms, Blumer charged directly towards the direction of Emperor Johann.

Blumer's eyes were filled with tears.

"Your Imperial Majesty, your Imperial Majesty, where are the healers? Quick, quick!" Blumer shouted frantically.

For this battle, Emperor Johann had prepared in advance for the most exalted Arch Magus of light magic of the ninth rank in the palace to come.

"Mr. Anders [An'te], quick, save Olivier." Emperor Johann immediately said.

A silver-haired old man immediately walked out from behind Emperor Johann and hurried towards Olivier's prone body. His hands glowing with white light, he touched Olivier's body. Soon, color began to quickly reappear in Olivier's face.

"How is he? How is my older brother?" Blumer said frantically.

Although Blumer was very stubborn and very cold towards others, in Blumer's heart, he loved Olivier like a father. His older brother had raised him ever since he was young. To Blumer, there was nobody more important than his older brother.

"Don't be hasty. Just now, all I did was heal the simpler wounds Lord Olivier has sustained. I need to use more healing magic to address his internal injuries." The silver haired old man nodded as he spoke, then immediately began to mumble the words to a magic spell. Blumer watched, feeling anxious and nervous, but he didn't dare to interrupt the work of this light-style Arch Magus.

Soon...

A starry light entered Olivier's body, and the wounds on Olivier's body began to rapidly heal. The efficacy of this healing magic was quite astonishing.

"Hrm?" The silver haired old man shook his head, puzzled.

"What is it?" Blumer asked frantically.

The silver haired old man shook his head, frowning. "Lord Olivier's body has been totally healed. His external injuries, his organs, and his broken bones are all restored. But Lord Olivier didn't wake up. This..."

Linley was carefully inspecting Olivier as well.

"Olivier's soul has been wounded." Bebe said mentally to Linley. "I can feel that his spirit is extremely weak right now."

Just at this moment, the gray-robed Haydson flew over slowly from the sky, agilely and gracefully coming to a halt in front of Emperor Johann.

"Haydson!" Blumer stared hatefully at Haydson.

His one and only older brother, his one and only family member. Blumer felt boundless hatred towards Haydson. If it wasn't for the fact that he was far weaker than him, Blumer probably would've charged straight for him.

"Stop staring at me. Your older brother's spirit was heavily wounded, and he is hovering at the point of life and death, but that isn't because of me. When executing his final attack, your older brother seemed to utilize some sort of forbidden technique to attack me, hoping to take me down with him." Haydson's face was rather pale as well.

"Forbidden technique?" Blumer frowned.

Suddenly, he remembered...

A while ago, he wanted to learn the obsidian sword technique from his elder brother, but Olivier had instructed to focus on learning the Lightshadow sword technique, and not to train in the diametrically opposite obsidian sword technique.

"Could it be that there really is some sort of taboo preventing people from utilizing two diametrically opposite Elemental Laws at the same time?" Blumer lowered his head to stare at his older brother.

Olivier's face was ruddy, and his body was clearly in peak condition. But he still didn't wake up, and his spiritual aura was extremely weak, as though it could be extinguished at any moment.

"Lord Olivier lost?"

"His brother carried his corpse out. Alas, the Prodigy Sword Saint has died."

"Who said he died? Maybe he's just unconscious due to his injury."

“No matter what happened, Lord Haydson, the Monolithic Sword Saint, seems to be fine, and even flew down from the skies. Clearly, he is far stronger than Lord Olivier.”

Those millions of spectators were all discussing this battle. Although the skies were filled with torrential rain, it couldn't douse their burning ardor. Everyone was filled with excitement at what they had just seen. Regardless of whether Olivier was dead or just passed out from his injuries, one thing was certain...

The victor of this duel was the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson!

This result was one which the vast majority had predicted. After all, Haydson had been famous for too long, and was reputed to be the most powerful Saint alive. He had never been defeated. It was very normal for him to be the victor of this duel.

Everyone would've been stunned if Haydson had lost.

The flood of spectators slowly began to melt away. Many began to head towards the imperial capital, while others headed towards some villages on the outskirts of the city.

The people slowly left, but the soldiers still stood guard.

“My elder brother won't die.” Blumer said coldly. And then, carrying his elder brother's body, he ordered his servants to carry the Lightshadow and obsidian swords and follow him. Blumer left, carrying his older brother in his arms.

"I hope Olivier can make it past this disaster." Emperor Johann sighed. Right now, Emperor Johann was surrounded by over a thousand people.

These people were all nobles. Many of them wished to know if Olivier was alive or dead.

"Lord Haydson truly is powerful. Once again, he won easily." A distant noble's voice rang out respectfully. Haydson laughed calmly.

And then Haydson looked at Linley. With a loud laugh, he said, "Actually, compared to Olivier, I'd rather have a competition against Master Linley."

A stunned silence.

Everyone was shocked. Haydson had just completed a major duel with Olivier, and now he wanted to challenge Linley to a duel?

Linley was silent for a moment, then spoke. "Haydson, what do you mean by this?"

Haydson smiled. "Last time at the Colosseum, you and Olivier didn't finish your duel, but Olivier had drawn his obsidian sword, and you had prepared your adamantine heavy sword. I remember at that time, you had said that your adamantine heavy sword techniques were based on the Laws of the Earth, right?"

"Indeed." Linley nodded.

"I, too, am a person who studies the Laws of the Earth. I imagine that if we were to engage in a competition, it would be of great benefit to both of us in our attempts to break through to a higher level of understanding." Haydson looked at Linley. "Linley, I'd like to invite you to spar. Would you accept?"

Neither the surrounding nobles nor Emperor Johann dared to make a sound.

One was reputedly the strongest Saint alive. The other was a Saint who was a genius the likes of which the world had never seen.

"Big brother..." Wharton couldn't help but speak out.

Linley turned to glance at his little brother. He chuckled.

Wharton, in his heart, was frantic and angry. He thought to himself, "This Haydson really is despicable. He just finished beating Olivier to the brink of death. Does he now want to kill my big brother as well? Is it because he saw both my big brother and Olivier are both geniuses, and are afraid that in the future, they would threaten his status?"

Wharton wasn't the only person thinking this. Many of the people present were thinking this as well.

After all, Linley and Olivier were both dazzling geniuses. One had been beaten to the point where whether or not he would survive was at question. And now, Haydson invited Linley to spar? Many people naturally questioned his real motives.

"What, you refuse?" Haydson asked with a laugh.

Linley looked at Haydson, a smile on his face. "Name a time, and name a place?"

Haydson was startled.

He immediately understood that this meant Linley was accepting his challenge. "I've already competed today against Olivier and am not in peak form. How about this. Three months from now, on August 4th, in the air above Mt. Tujiao, east of the city. Let's have our competition there."

"Fine." Linley smiled and nodded.

Linley wanted to duel with Haydson as well. He had just begun to understand this Pulseguard Defense technique. Combining that with his 'Profound Truths of the Earth' attack, Linley didn't think that he would be easily defeated. After all, he not only was protected by the Pulseguard Defense, he also was protected by his draconic scales. With such powerful defenses, most likely it would be hard to say if Haydson's was better or his own was better.

"Since this is the case, then your Imperial Majesty, Linley, I'll bid you farewell." Haydson nodded to each of them, then transformed into a gray streak of light as he flew away into the sky.

"Big bro..." Wharton ran over frantically.

"I'm fine. Victory and defeat is yet to be determined." Linley smiled confidently, and then he led his people back towards their residence.

As for those nobles and the members of the imperial clan, they were all engaged in endless speculation. After a while though, all of them returned back to the imperial capital as well under the cover of rain.

The Channe River once more regained its normal peacefulness. Only the mess left behind at the riverbanks gave testament to the earlier excitement.

.....

At the place where the Channe River and the Yulan River intersected, a six story tall enormous ship was sailing from the Yulan River into the Channe River. A row of knights were standing in a neat row on the deck.

Many of those powerful knights had magical beasts as well. Ordinary people did not have access to magical beasts; for so many of the knights to have magical beasts meant that the status of the person on this ship was quite extraordinary.

"When we arrive at the Channe River, we'll be only three days out from the imperial capital of the O'Brien Empire. Unfortunately, we'll have missed the duel between the Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier, and Lord Haydson."

The warriors on the ship's deck were chatting amongst each other.

Right at this time, a man with white streaked hair came out onto the top deck. He seemed to be a middle-aged man in his forties or fifties. By his side was a brown-furred bear that looked charmingly naïve. This bear was roughly as tall as a person was, and seemed very cute.

"Growl. Growl. Master. I really don't feel comfortable here on the water. Let's fly instead." That charmingly naïve seeming bear said to the middle-aged man.

"I know you hate water." The middle-aged man laughed as he walked to the chain linked side of the boat, staring down into the waves.

"Your Honor." Seeing the middle-aged man, the soldiers on the ship deck all said respectfully. Just at this time, a tall, golden-haired beautiful woman came walking out with a smile. Laughing, she headed towards the middle-aged man. "Teacher, we've already arrived at the Channe River. We should be arriving at the O'Brien Empire soon."

The middle-aged man laughed as he glanced at the golden-haired woman. "Haha. Indeed we are. Delia, I think you are even more impatient than I am."

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 27, The Yulan Empire's Special Envoy

That adorable looking bear laughed as well. "Right, right. As soon as Delia knew that Linley fellow was here, she immediately started scheming to come as well."

"Big Yellow, do you want to die?" Delia grabbed the big bear by his ear.

"It doesn't hurt. Haha. It doesn't hurt." The big bear said delightedly.

"Hrmph." Delia wrinkled her nose and pouted. "Big Yellow, I know you are powerful, alright? You are a Worldbear and you have thick skin. You aren't afraid of me twisting your ears." As she spoke, she walked over to stand next to the middle-aged man and ignored the bear.

The big bear rubbed its head, said in a deep, adorable voice, "Delia, don't be angry. It was my mistake, alright?"

Delia looked at him and started to laugh.

"Hatton [Ha'dun], Delia is just teasing you. She won't get angry that easily." The middle-aged man said with a calm laugh, and then he turned to stare at the skies. "Parry [Pa'lei] is coming back."

From the skies, a hawk with wingspan of five or six meters came swooping towards the ship at high speed. This hawk was extremely fast, and it seemed to move at the speed of lightning. Its eyes were golden, and it had a crest of blue feathers atop its head. It appeared very fierce.

This was a magical beast of the ninth rank – the Wildthunder Stormhawk.

The soldiers on the ship did not attempt to block it. Clearly, they recognized this Wildthunder Stormhawk, which flew directly towards and landed next to Delia and the others.

“Little Wind, did you catch anything?” Delia devotedly rubbed the head of the Wildthunder Stormhawk.

Retracting its wings, the Wildthunder Stormhawk stood up, rising to its full height of 2 meters high. Right now, the Wildthunder Stormhawk was enjoying Delia’s attention, closing its eyes as Delia continued stroking its head.

“Parry, get over here.” The big bear said unhappily.

The Wildthunder Stormhawk glanced at the big bear, then obediently moved over to it. The Worldbear was a Saint-level magical beast, and an extremely powerful type at that.

Actually, both the Worldbear as well as the Wildthunder Stormhawk were the magical beast companions of that middle aged man, a Saint-level Grand Magus of the Yulan Empire, Longhaus [Long’er’si].

Master Longhaus was a wind-style Grand Magus.

Wind-style Grand Magi were extremely terrifying. When Longhaus had brought his Wildthunder Stormhawk into the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun, he had used the Dimensional Edge spell to heavily injure this Worldbear.

The offensive power of the Dimensional Edge spell was simply too terrifying. It cut through the walls of reality itself.

Against this sort of attack, even a peak-stage Saint such as Haydson could be split into two halves. In addition, wind-style Grand Magi could control the wind to a terrifying degree, and could also move extremely quickly.

It could easily be said that, given enough time, a Grand Magus Saint could easily defeat a Saint-level warrior. But Saint-level warriors were no fools either. Thus, most Grand Magi Saints would work hard to acquire a Saint-level magical beast.

Alas, capturing Saint-level magical beasts was simply too difficult.

Delia stood atop the ship's deck, fiddling with her necklace as she stared to the east. A gentle wind blew, stirring her hair. She was a very beautiful, moving sight. Even those warriors off to the side couldn't help but stare at her and feel moved.

Delia had become extremely famous in the Yulan Empire. She was a genius who had reached the seventh rank as a magus at the young age of 22. In addition, she had an extremely powerful clan behind her, and had been accepted as an apprentice by the Saint-level Grand Magus, Longhaus. In terms of appearance, she could definitely rank in the top ten of the imperial capital as well. Such a glorious, outstanding girl definitely had many suitors and paramours.

But unfortunately, Delia had refused every single one of them.

Because of her clan and because she had grown up in the imperial capital, Delia was extremely eloquent and very astute in judging the intentions of others. Ever since the news of Linley's battle with Olivier had spread to the Yulan Empire, Delia had schemed nonstop, finally managing to convince the Emperor of the Yulan Empire to send a special envoy to the O'Brien Empire.

Before heading out, they had notified the O'Brien Empire, which had naturally agreed.

"Channe City..." Delia murmured.

That place which occupied her dreams had a person whom she longed for.

The river waters continued to rush forward rapidly. On the front deck, the Worldbear and the Wildthunder Stormhawk stood alongside Delia as the massive ship continued to sail forward at high speed.

Soon, the ship disappeared off into the horizon as it made its way through the Channe River.

The news that a special envoy from the Yulan Empire was coming quickly spread across the imperial capital, and the imperial clan as well as the nobles quickly learned of this as well. But as far as the imperial capital was concerned, they only cared about two things right now.

They only cared about two major duels.

The first duel was the duel which had just happened between the Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier, and the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson. The second one was the duel which would occur three months from now between the Dragonblood Warrior, Linley, and the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson.

Would Linley learn from the mistakes of his predecessor, Olivier? Or would he come to the same disastrous end?

Nobody knew.

But in the hearts of the citizens of the Empire, most believed that the strongest Saint, Haydson, would gain victory yet again.

Boulder Street. Count Wharton's estate.

"In the next three months, nobody is permitted to disturb Lord Linley unless there is something critical!" This declaration came forth from the manor ever since that stormy night.

The atmosphere in the estate was extremely tense.

In the rear training courtyard, Wharton trained for a short while. Then, not in the mood for more training, he placed the warblade 'Slaughterer' to one side, then sat down unhappily.

"That Haydson really goes too far." Wharton cursed. As soon as he thought about Linley, he began to worry. "Haydson, if you are so tough, why don't you wait ten years and let my big brother reach the Saint-level in his human form before dueling with my big brother! What's the point of dueling now?"

"fk his grandmother. He doesn't just go too far. He's absolutely vile!"

Gates walked over, saying angrily, "There are plenty of Saints in the Empire, and the War God's College has many experts as well. Why doesn't Haydson go challenge them? Instead, he challenges his Lordship. His Lordship is only twenty seven years old. That Haydson is several centuries old."

"No point in cursing him."

Barker walked over, resting his massive long-handled greataxe against the artificial hill. "His Lordship has already agreed to duel with Haydson. Right now, our only option is to hope that his Lordship will win."

"His Lordship definitely will win."

Gates clenched his fist and pumped it in the air several times as he said angrily, "I refuse to believe that Haydson's internal organs are as defensively powerful as his external defense. What's more, that weird thing which his Lordship developed a while ago seems to be really mysterious as well. It definitely must be extraordinary.”

Gates and the others didn’t really understand how powerful the Pulseguard Defense was.

Linley was within his private courtyard. Right now, he was seated in the meditative stance beneath a tree, constantly training in accordance with the ‘Secret Dragonblood Manual’. Right now, Linley already was at a very high level of understanding. All he needed was battle-qi.

Whenever Linley had any free time, he would train in battle-qi, trying to absorb as much of the energy from the Dragonblood in his veins as possible, ideally until reaching the Saint-level. However, training battle-qi actually didn’t require too much focus. As long as one trained in accordance with the set methods, that would be enough. Thus, right now, Linley was pondering other questions in his mind.

“Last time, when I encountered the War God’s first disciple, Fain, and when I encountered the War God, I found that they were both capable of soul-based attacks. Olivier also mastered such a form of attack. Most likely, there are many people who have mastered this type of technique. Should I also try to develop this sort of soul-based attack? Even if I don’t, I should at least learn how to defend against it, right?”

While cultivating his battle-qi, Linley continued to wrestle with this question in his mind.

What were the principles underlying soul-based attacks?

And how would one guard against it?

While Linley was thinking and training, Haeru lay resting against the ground, while Bebe was curled up comfortably on Haeru's back, his eyes half-closed.

"Bebe, do you think Master will be able to beat that Haydson in their duel?" Haeru said in a low voice.

"Naturally." Bebe opened his eyes and said with complete confidence.

But then, Bebe said in a low voice, "But of course, that Haydson seems to be really powerful as well. But no matter what, if the Boss ends up at the point of death in his duel against Haydson, I, Bebe, will immediately charge forward to assist. Hrmph. Two nights ago, everyone just watched as Olivier was beaten half to death. He still hasn't woken up yet. I can't let the Boss succumb to such a state."

"Isn't that a breach of rules?" Haeru said questioningly.

When two people dueled, regardless of victory or defeat, others were not to interfere.

"Screw the damn rules. The earth is big and the heavens are bigger, but nothing is bigger than the Boss. How can the rules compare in importance to my Boss's life?" Bebe said arrogantly. "What's more, so what if I, Bebe, interfere? My Boss is a magus, ya know! When a magus duels against a warrior, they usually bring their magical beasts. If I interfere, that isn't a violation of the rules." As he spoke, Bebe felt as though his argument had a lot of merit, and he laughed delightedly.

The gates to the imperial capital were open. The path from the imperial palace to the east gate of the city were all lined with guards from the imperial army, who had been divided up into two neat lines on each side of the street.

The knights of the imperial palace formed into lined regiments, following behind the Emperor's carriage, with a large number of nobles following behind them.

The Saint-level experts of the War God's College, Kenyon and Lanke, had both arrived as well.

This was because they knew that the delegation from the Yulan Empire included a Saint-level Grand Magus. If their side had no Saints present, then their side would seem weaker.

"Why aren't they here yet?" Emperor Johann said unhappily to a nearby palace attendant.

"Your Imperial Majesty, the ship of the Yulan Empire's special envoy is about to reach the river's harbor. Most likely, they'll be here soon." The palace attendant said respectfully.

Emperor Johann nodded.

Without question, the two most powerful nations in the Yulan continent were the Yulan Empire and the O'Brien Empire. Emperor Johann very much wished that his own O'Brien Empire could be superior to and suppress the Yulan Empire.

But alas, the Yulan Empire had its own strong points.

The Yulan Empire had been in existence for over ten thousand years now, and was an ancient nation. What's more, the Yulan Empire had become one of the greatest sources for magi in the world. If the O'Brien Empire had the most Saint-level warriors, then the Yulan Empire could be said to have just as many Saint-level Grand Magi.

After all, Saint-level Grand Magi were far more threatening than Saint-level warriors. For example, that wind-style Saint-level Grand Magus, Longhaus. Not even Haydson would dare say that he was totally confident of defeating him. After all, so long as Longhaus was given a bit of time to prepare, his Dimensional Edge spell could chop Haydson into two halves.

"They are here!"

The many spectators of the O'Brien Empire saw the enormous ship sail over. When they saw that adorable big bear on the deck, as well as that large hawk, many people felt astonished.

"A Worldbear? And a Wildthunder Stormhawk?"

Kenyon and Lanke exchanged glances. They couldn't help but feel astonished. Even if they joined forces, they weren't certain that they would be able to defeat a Saint-level Worldbear.

Delia was dressed in a beautiful long robe and standing next to the wind-style Saint-level Grand Magus, Longhaus. They disembarked together, and behind them came the two magical beasts, the warriors on the ship, and the magical beasts of the warriors.

"Clang!"

The knights of the Empire formed into two ranks, while at the same time raising their pikes high into the air. These knights were specially selected from the finest knights of the imperial palace. All of them were of the seventh rank, and their leader was a warrior of the eighth rank.

"Teacher, the warriors of the O'Brien Empire really are more powerful than those of our Yulan Empire. They even have a totally different aura. Our imperial capital is a bit too dissolute." Delia chatted quietly with her teacher as though no one else was present.

Longhaus nodded slightly as well.

The imperial capital of the Yulan Empire was an extremely ancient city, and the ancient clans of the capital only thought of enjoying life. To the contrary, the O'Brien Empire was a nation of warriors, and all of them strove to outdo each other. No wonder it was hailed as the most militarily powerful nation.

Emperor Johann, Lanke, Kenyon, and the palace attendants went to welcome them.

"Delia Leon, right? Haha..." Emperor Johann laughed loudly.

Delia very courteously curtsied. "Special Envoy Delia of the Yulan Empire pays her respects to the mighty ruler of the O'Brien Empire, Emperor Johann. I bring with me the sincerest greetings and well-wishes of the Emperor of the Yulan Empire."

"Emperor Johann, this is my teacher, Saint-level Grand Magus Longhaus." Delia smiled as she made the introductions.

Emperor Johann looked at Master Longhaus. "Very happy to meet you, Master Longhaus."

"I am very honored to meet you as well, Emperor Johann." Longhaus said with a smile.

Delia couldn't help but glance around at her surroundings. A hint of disappointment appeared in her eyes. She didn't see the person she was looking for. But at the same time, she said to Emperor Johann, "Emperor Johann, these two should be two powerful Saint-level experts, correct? Can you introduce them to me?"

Before Delia had arrived, she had already acquired quite a bit of information, and she already knew quite a bit about Kenyon and Lanke.

Special Envoy Delia of the Yulan Empire, the wind-style Grand Magus Longhaus, and the others had now formally entered the imperial capital of Channe, where a grand welcoming ceremony awaited them.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 28, Delia

Delia chatted and jested with Emperor Johann, and their conversation was full of humor and amusement. Emperor Johann's loud, clear laughter rang out nonstop.

Emperor Johann, Delia, Master Longhaus, Kenyon, Lanke and the others walked in front, with the palace servants and palace maids as well as many powerful knights taking up the rear.

The many other nobles followed behind the knights at a distance.

"What a beautiful woman." A group of young nobles of the imperial capital were clustered together. All of these young nobles had an extremely high rank in the Empire. Some were princes, while others were main branch descendants of major clans. They had never lacked for anything, and they often formed little cliques. Nobody in the imperial capital dared to offend them.

The words that had just been spoken came from the son of Prince Julin, Marquis Jeff [Ji'fo].

"I think her name is Delia." Another noble youngster next to him spoke. This young noble was named Scott, and he was the Eighth Prince of the Empire. "She's so beautiful and has such grace. There are very few like her, even here in the imperial capital."

Marquis Jeff, Prince Scott, and the others all stared from afar while rating her.

Indeed, Delia was an extremely alluring and charismatic figure.

Her every movement contained the grace and poise of an ancient clan, and as a magus of the seventh rank, her movements were filled with grace. What's more, Delia was beautiful to begin with, and her dazzling, soft golden hair shone like the sun.

Scott sighed emotionally, "Delia is a member of the Leon clan, and was previously a student at the Ernst Institute. Nowadays, she is the disciple of a wind-style Grand Magus Saint, Longhaus. In the Yulan Empire's imperial capital, she can be considered one of the most influential nobles. No doubt there are countless young nobles pursuing her."

Marquis Jeff's eyes were shining as he stared at Delia. "If I were to successfully woo her, I would be willing to never touch another woman again."

"Cousin Jeff, you are that determined?" Scott laughed as he glanced at Jeff.

"Of course!" Marquis Jeff said with conviction.

Emperor Johann was an extremely biased person. His one and only younger brother was Prince Julin, and Emperor Johann was extremely solicitous of him, to the point of even allowing Prince Julin to take over and rule the Southeast Administrative Province, one of the seven large Administrative Province's.

As the saying goes, love me, love my dog. Naturally, Marquis Jeff was doted upon by Emperor Johann as well. In the imperial capital, his status was extremely high, and this group of young nobles accepted him as their leader.

"Since you've made up your mind, cousin, then I can't let myself fall behind you." Scott laughed confidently. "Cousin Jeff, let's see which of us two bros will be able to successfully woo Ms. Delia."

"Fine." Jeff nodded. With an evil laugh, he said, "If we're successful, it can be said that we'll have really gained a huge amount of face on behalf of all the men of the O'Brien Empire. After all, those young nobles of the Yulan Empire hadn't been able to successfully woo Delia."

.....

"I imagine that Ms. Delia must be tired after her long journey, along with Master Longhaus. How about this. Let Us order some people to arrange places for Ms. Delia and Master Longhaus to rest. Later at night, after you've rested, you can attend the dinner banquet which We have arranged. What do you say?" Emperor Johann came to a halt once they reached Boulder Street and said.

The residences of Boulder Street had all been constructed by the imperial clan.

When the imperial clan bequeathed estates to nobles or received guests, it was usually all done within the confines of Boulder Street. The estates here couldn't be bought with mere money.

"Then we shall do as you suggest, your Imperial Majesty." Delia said with a smile.

At this moment, Scott and Marquis Jeff quickly walked forward. They, too, knew that Emperor Johann was about to separate from Ms. Delia. They had to seize the opportunity.

Given their status, those guards naturally wouldn't stop them.

"Ms. Delia and Master Longhaus, I imagine you two aren't too familiar with our imperial capital. We shall arrange a guide to accompany you." Emperor Johann said with a laugh.

"Thank you, your Imperial Majesty." Delia said with appreciation.

"Imperial father." "Your Imperial Majesty." At this point, Scott and Marquis Jeff's eyes lit up, and they called out without any hesitation.

Emperor Johann glanced backwards and saw that it was his son as well as his nephew.

"Scott, Jeff, what is it?" Emperor Johann was in a fine mood today.

Marquis Jeff said respectfully, "Your Imperial Majesty, you plan to arrange a guide? Scott and I are as familiar with the imperial capital as our own homes. I think that the two of us can be the guides. We would definitely make Ms. Delia very happy with our services."

Emperor Johann glanced at Jeff and Scott upon hearing these words. How could he not guess what these two really intended?

However, Emperor Johann also thought that Delia was a fine woman. If his nephew or his son were able to successfully woo this woman, that would be a good thing as well.

“Let Us ask Ms. Delia first.” Emperor Johann turned to look at Delia. “Ms. Delia, what do you think?”

Delia glanced at Scott and Marquis Jeff. Immediately, both of them stood slightly straighter, putting on gentlemanly appearances. A hint of laughter appeared in Delia’s eyes.

“Thank you. I’ll trouble you two to assist me then.” Delia curtsied slightly.

“No trouble, no trouble at all.” Scott and Marquis Jeff hurriedly said.

A hint of a smile could be seen on the lips of Master Longhaus, who was by Delia’s side. As his disciple, how could he not understand Delia? When they were in the imperial capital of the Yulan Empire, countless young men had pursued Delia. Given Delia’s skill, she had easily beaten them at their own game and played them like a fiddle.

“Milady Special Envoy, this will be the place where you will live while you are here in the imperial capital.” A palace attendant pointed towards an estate in front of them.

The nearby Marquis Jeff immediately said, "Ms. Delia, the Boulder Street is an extremely famous street within the O'Brien Empire. On this street, there are even several Saints who live here. For example, our Empire's Prodigy Sword Saint, Olivier, and his younger brother. They both live on Boulder Street. The genius Master Linley and his younger brother both live on Boulder Street as well."

While they passed between the estates, Marquis Jeff continuously introduced them to her.

"Right. These two geniuses would be considered the most outstanding individuals anywhere in the Yulan continent." Scott didn't want to fall behind either.

Delia, hearing their words, couldn't help but allow a complicated look appear in her eyes. But naturally, she quickly returned to her normal, friendly smile.

"That isn't necessarily the case." A deep, rumbling sound could be heard from the nearby bear.

Scott and Jeff looked at the big bear and immediately squeezed out a smile. When they were in the welcoming party, they had overheard that this big bear was a Saint-level Worldbear. Saint-level magical beasts could freely change their size. A Worldbear was usually well over ten meters high in their normal form.

He could easily crush them to death with a single paw.

“Delia’s older brother is very formidable as well. He is only twenty seven years old, but has become a magus of the eighth rank. What’s more, he has become the personal disciple of the High Priest.” The big bear looked at Delia. “Delia, am I right?”

Delia smiled slightly and nodded.

Becoming a twenty seven year old magus of the eighth rank was definitely an extremely terrifying accomplishment. At this speed, it would be quite possible for him to become an Arch Magus of the ninth rank before the age of forty.

It must be understood that someone who could reach the ninth rank before the age of forty was, without question, a definite world-shaking genius.

“Dixie is indeed the most talented magus I have ever seen.” Master Longhaus laughed as well. As they spoke, they entered the main hall of their estate.

“Magus talent?”

Lifting his head proudly, Scott said, “Master Longhaus, on the topic of talent as a magus, I understand that our Empire’s Master Linley, also twenty seven years old, is already an Arch Magus of the ninth rank. What’s more, he is a peak-stage Saint-level warrior.”

“A twenty seven year old Arch Magus of the ninth rank? Impossible!!!” Master Longhaus couldn’t believe it at all. “In the entire history of the Yulan continent, there has never been anyone who could reach the ninth rank before the age of thirty."

"Scott, is this true?" Marquis Jeff asked questioningly.

Scott said with absolute certainty, "It is true. My Imperial father personally told me this. When Master Linley dueled with Olivier, everyone learned how powerful he was as a warrior, but they didn't pay attention to his abilities with magic. He is indeed already an Arch Magus of the ninth rank."

Hearing Scott's words, although on an emotional level Longhaus still couldn't believe it, his intellect told him that this was probably true.

"Master Linley. An Arch Magus of the ninth rank." Delia wasn't too surprised.

In Delia's heart, Linley was a person filled with secrets and miracles. A sixteen year old grandmaster sculptor, and supposedly the number two genius magus in all of history. But now, he had become the number one genius magus in all of history. Why would that be 'impossible'?

"You can keep chatting. Delia, I'm going to go take a rest. If you need to talk to me, just notify Parry." Longhaus instructed.

"Yes, Teacher." Delia said humbly. Next to her, Scott and Jeff bowed as well.

"Gentlemen, I'm tired as well. I'll retire to my room and rest. Excuse me."

Delia rose as well.

Scott and Jeff knew that they couldn't push her, and they immediately nodded. Delia left, with that Wildthunder Stormhawk by her side.

Ever since Master Longhaus had tamed the Worldbear, the Wildthunder Stormhawk's primary responsibility became guarding Delia. From this, one could tell how much Master Longhaus cared about her.

"He's also living on Boulder Street. Maybe he's very close to me."

Delia stood in front of her window quietly.

That night at Wushan township, when she had bid Linley farewell, then left the Holy Union and returned to her own ancestral nation, she had been preparing to return to the Holy Union after the Yulan Festival. But then, she had heard of the Apocalypse Day which had occurred.

The entire Kingdom of Fenlai had been reduced to rubble and become the playground for magical beasts.

And according to the news available to her clan, a few days before the Apocalypse Day, in the estate of the magus genius, Linley, a demon appeared, attempting to murder the king of the Kingdom of Fenlai. Most likely, Linley himself had already died.

This news had caused Delia to suffer a major illness.

It had taken a full year before she had fully recovered.

In years after this, she had no news of Linley at all, and she had even made up her mind to abandon love and instead focus on carrying out the affairs of her clan and train in magic. But she didn't expect...that a while ago, news came to the Yulan Empire of Linley and Olivier's duel.

This news caused Delia's deadened heart to immediately grow excited. She felt as though she were full of energy and full of hope.

After a few machinations, she arranged for today's visit.

Delia had planned to wait until the next day before visiting Linley, but after spending merely half an hour in her room, she felt as though she had waited for half a year.

Especially after learning that Linley also lived on Boulder Street...she could no longer resist.

"Little Wind, tell Teacher that I plan to pay Linley a visit." Delia said to the Wildthunder Stormhawk. A while later, Master Longhaus appeared outside her door.

An indulgent smile was on Master Longhaus' face. "Delia, I knew that you wouldn't be able to sit still for long before deciding to go see him." Longhaus knew everything there was to know about his student Delia's affairs.

A bashful red flush crept onto Delia's face.

"Teacher!" Delia wrinkled her nose. "Stop making fun of me. Let's go."

"Fine, fine." Longhaus laughed.

Delia and Master Longhaus, followed by the Worldbear and the Wildthunder Stormhawk, left the estate. When they did, they saw Jeff and Scott waiting outside, seated.

"Ms. Delia?" Jeff and Scott's eyes lit up, and they immediately rose to their feet. "Where are you headed?"

Delia's forehead creased, but she still managed to say with a smile, "I was planning to go pay a visit to your so-called genius, Master Linley."

"Oh, so you are going to visit Master Linley?" Marquis Jeff hurriedly said. "That's a good idea. But I'm afraid that it will be difficult for you to see him. This is because over two months from now, Master Linley will be engaging in a duel with Lord Haydson at Mt. Tujiao."

"What?" Delia was stunned, and for once, lost her cool.

"Oh, you just arrived, so you didn't know. Two days ago, Olivier and Lord Haydson dueled, with the result being that Lord Olivier was badly injured to the point of death. Lord Haydson then immediately invited Master Linley to a duel as well, and Master Linley has already accepted." The nearby Scott explained.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 29, Meeting Ten Years Later

“Linley and Haydson?” Master Longhaus said in surprise as well.

Marquis Jeff nodded repeatedly. “Right. Two nights ago, Lord Olivier was injured by Lord Haydson so badly that he is still in a coma. Immediately afterwards, Lord Haydson challenged Master Linley.”

Marquis Jeff and Scott’s words both contained some resentment, suggesting that Haydson was going too far.

“This Haydson is reputed to be the most powerful Saint. For him to be able to injure Olivier so badly that he entered a coma means that Haydson’s reputation is definitely deserved. No matter how much of a genius Linley is, he is only twenty seven...” Master Longhaus was somewhat dissatisfied as well.

He knew that his disciple, Delia, liked Linley. Naturally, he himself looked favorably on Linley as well.

“Olivier was injured to the point of entering a coma?” Delia’s eyes were blazing. “How could he be in a coma after receiving treatment from light-style magic?”

No matter how serious the injury, light-style magic could easily and totally repair it. And what’s more, there was another type of magic which was even more effective than light-style magic for healing; Life Magic!

The three types of High Magic; Necromantic Magic, Oracular Magic, and Life Magic.

As long as one didn't die, even if one's soul was heavily damaged, Life Magic could heal it.

"It seems it has something to do with his soul." As a prince, Scott knew quite a bit.

"His soul?" Master Longhaus frowned. "Can it be that Haydson possesses a soul-based attack?" Actually, Grand Magus Saints were generally proficient in soul-based attacks.

Generally speaking, after beginning to gain insight into the Laws, it wasn't hard for them to use soul-based attacks, given their powerful spiritual energy.

"In your opinion, does Linley have any chance of defeating Haydson?" Delia suddenly asked.

"Of course not." Scott said bluntly. "Lord Haydson has been famous for centuries, and nobody has ever been able to defeat him! Master Linley competed a while ago against Lord Olivier, and the two were roughly on par. Since Lord Haydson was able to beat Olivier into such a terrible condition, it is very possible that he might badly injure Linley or even kill him."

No matter how calm and collected Delia was, she was beginning to worry for Linley.

What if Linley was killed?

Delia didn't even dare to imagine such a thing.

"Would Haydson truly be so merciless as to go full force?" Delia's face still maintained its calm.

"Ms. Delia, two days ago, when Lord Haydson dueled Lord Olivier, he went full force on Lord Olivier. How could he be merciful with Master Linley?" Marquis Jeff said.

Master Longhaus shook his head. "When Saints do battle, unless there is a huge gap in power, we do not dare to hold back. If you hold back but your opponent goes full force, you might die."

Delia was silent for a moment.

"Ms. Delia?" Scott and Marquis Jeff called to her softly.

"Nothing. Let's go." Delia's face returned to her normal, professional smile, but her smile was somewhat forced.

Marquis Jeff and Scott both nodded.

At Count Wharton's estate.

"Ms. Delia, as I said earlier, you won't necessarily be able to see Master Linley." Marquis Jeff laughed, then casually spoke to the gate guard, "Go report that the Eighth Imperial Prince, Marquis Jeff, and the Special Envoy from the Yulan Empire have come here to meet with Count Wharton."

"Yes. Please wait here a moment."

One of the guards outside the estate ran inside to make his report.

Delia and the others knew that given Linley's current status, meeting him would be very difficult. Right now, their only option was to first see Wharton, and then ask to meet with Linley.

"Everyone, please come in."

Delia, Master Longhaus, Marquis Jeff, and Scott all entered the Count's residence.

Within the main hall.

"Wharton." Scott walked into the main hall, laughing in a very familiar manner. "Let me make some introductions. This beautiful young lady is the Special Envoy from the Yulan Empire, Ms. Delia."

Scott was the Imperial Eighth Prince, while Nina was the Imperial Seventh Princess. Wharton naturally was extremely familiar with Scott.

"The Special Envoy from the Yulan Empire? Why has she come to meet me?" Although Wharton was very surprised, he still smiled politely. "Ms. Delia, an honor to meet you."

"Count Wharton." Delia smiled as she spoke. "This is my teacher, the wind-style Grand Magus Saint, Master Longhaus."

Wharton was startled. Housekeeper Hiri, standing behind him, was startled as well.

In the O'Brien Empire, Saint-level warriors would be seen from time to time, but they had never seen a Saint-level Grand Magus. After all, there were extremely few Grand Magi in the O'Brien Empire.

"Wharton, the Special Imperial Envoy has arrived?" A loud, brash voice rang out. It was the fifth of the Barker brothers, Gates.

Wharton had been in the middle of his training with Barker and his brothers. Hearing the report from his subordinates, he had stopped training and come out to welcome the guests. Out of curiosity, Gates had come over as well.

"Whoah. What a pretty girl." Gates' eyes shone.

"Gates, this is the Special Imperial Envoy, Ms. Delia. This is the wind-style Grand Magus Saint, Master Longhaus." Wharton made the introductions, afraid that Gates would cause a diplomatic disaster.

Gates' attention immediately turned to Master Longhaus.

"Whoah! A Grand Magus Saint!" Gates' eyes were as wide as an ox's.

Master Longhaus secretly sighed to himself. Good grief. Where did these people come from? Wharton's massive physique had already shocked Longhaus, but Wharton was at least relatively handsome. Gates was totally different. His waist was astonishingly thick, and the man himself looked like a giant bear.

"Step away from my Master." A deep voice rang out.

The big bear behind Master Longhaus suddenly began to grow in size. Originally, he was only two meters tall, but suddenly he increased to three meters in height. The Worldbear lowered his head to stare at Gates, a hint of delight in his eyes.

"A Saint-level magical beast?" Gates raised his head to stare at the Worldbear.

Delia immediately went straight to the point. "Count Wharton, my teacher and I have come for the purpose of meeting with Master Linley."

"To see my big bro..." Wharton frowned.

These people didn't have a low status, and they even had a Grand Magus Saint with them. However, to Wharton, his big brother's training was more important. After all, in more than two months time, he would be in a major duel.

"Very sorry, but my big brother is focusing on his upcoming duel with Haydson, and he can't be disturbed." Wharton said. When he mentioned Haydson's name, he didn't have the slightest bit of respect to his voice.

Hearing these words, Delia, as well, felt that Linley's preparation for his duel was more important. After being silent for a moment, she said, "Then...I won't disturb him."

Longhaus, by her side, sighed secretly, then said in a loud voice, "Count Wharton, my student, Delia, was previously also a student at the Ernst Institute, and she was a very good friend and classmate of your big brother's. They haven't met for ten years."

"A student of the Ernst Institute?" Wharton's heart was swayed.

Actually, every day, Linley would still eat and rest like normal. After all, he didn't train nonstop like when he was developing his Pulseguard Defense. It wasn't a big deal if he paused for a bit to welcome some guests.

If they were people that Linley didn't know, Wharton would refuse them.

But this was his big brother's old schoolmate.

"Then...come with me." Wharton nodded.

Delia's fists clenched nervously. She took a deep breath to calm herself down. By her side, Master Longhaus laughed as he patted Delia on the shoulders. "Relax."

"An old classmate?" Scott and Marquis Jeff were both surprised.

But Delia walked in front of them, not paying attention to them in the slightest. Scott and Jeff therefore quite conscientiously maintained their silence.

After walking for a while...

"Ms. Delia, my big bro is training in the courtyard in front of us." Wharton laughed, while Gates hurriedly said, "I'll go inform his Lordship."

Delia could feel her breathing grow more rapid.

Ten years!

That year Linley's father had died, Delia had parted ways with Linley. In the blink of an eye...it had been ten full years. Delia's eyes closed for a moment. Once her eyes opened again, she had returned to her normal calm.

"Bebe, out of the way. I have something important to report." Gates' loud voice rang out from the courtyard.

"Your Lordship, there's someone named Delia outside. She says she's your old classmate and wants to see you?"

"Delia?" A calm voice that carried a hint of surprise rang out from within the courtyard. The voice wasn't very loud, but to Delia, the words seemed to ring in the skies with the power of a thunderbolt.

No matter how calm or tranquil one normally was, when one met with someone one had been thinking about for ten years...she couldn't prevent her heart from shaking.

"Whoosh!" A gentle gust of wind blew past the surrounding trees, gently lifting up Delia's long golden hair, causing it to sway with the wind.

Delia couldn't help but narrow her eyes due to the wind.

Just at this moment, the figure she had dreamed about over a million times appeared in front of the courtyard's gate. The man wore a light blue robe, and his formerly short hair had grown long.

Delia carefully looked at him.

"He's a bit taller than he was, and much more mature." Seeing the man of her dreams, for a moment, Delia couldn't speak.

"Delia. It really is you." Linley suddenly spoke out in a startled, joyful tone.

"It is me." Delia finally was able to speak.

Linley's eyes were as dark and profound as the sea. Quickly, he noticed Master Longhaus by Delia's side, as well as his Worldbear. "A Saint-level magical beast. Worldbear?"

"Linley, this is my teacher, the wind-style Grand Magus Saint, Master Longhaus. The Worldbear is his magical beast companion." Delia finally recovered from her earlier stupor.

"Come in." Linley smiled.

Seeing Linley's smile, for some reason she herself didn't understand, Delia felt a hot gush of warmth in her heart. "Is this feeling...happiness?" Delia's eyes were turning red.

"Wharton, you can help welcome these two." Linley glanced at Marquis Jeff and Scott, then didn't say anything else.

Scott and Marquis Jeff weren't angry at all. They immediately left respectfully. After all, the man was a Saint. Even his Imperial Majesty would be respectful to him. How could he possibly waste time on nobles like them?

Around a stone table in the courtyard.

Linley, Delia, and Longhaus were all seated around the table.

"What are you looking at?" The Worldbear glanced at the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru. As a Saint-level magical beast, the Worldbear was an extremely proud creature.

"You, you stupid bear." Haeru sneered aloud.

"Saint-level magical beast?" Longhaus and Delia, hearing Haeru speak, both turned to look at Linley in astonishment.

"Don't squabble, Haeru." Linley glanced at Haeru, and Haeru immediately crouched down, no longer paying any attention to the Worldbear. Actually, Haeru himself knew that he wasn't a match for the Worldbear. But at the same time, Haeru wasn't afraid either...because the Worldbear's speed was inferior to his own.

But Bebe actually waved his claws in a threatening manner towards the Worldbear.

"Bebe." Delia was extremely delighted. "Come here."

Very obediently, Bebe made a single hop and landed directly into Delia's arms.

"Bebe, long time no see." Delia devotedly petted Bebe on his glossy fur, and Bebe closed his eyes contentedly.

Although she was petting Bebe, Delia was still looking at Linley.

In the past, Linley had been very hard and callous. But now, he seemed more gentle and much more natural and at ease.

"Master Linley, I hear you are going to duel with Haydson?" Longhaus started off the conversation.

"Right."

Linley smiled and nodded.

Delia turned her head to stare at Linley and said, "Linley, can it be that you are confident that you can defeat Haydson?"

"No." Linley said honestly. Delia was one of his extremely few close friends at the Ernst Institute. Aside from Yale, Reynolds, and George, Delia was probably his closest friend.

Seeing Delia, Linley couldn't help but think back to their final meeting from ten years ago.

That night...

Delia had come late at night to see Linley and tell him that she was leaving the Holy Union. She said that before leaving, she wanted a hug. But who would've expected that their goodbye hug would have turned into a goodbye kiss?

Linley truly had been stunned by that kiss.

Even today, upon seeing Delia, Linley couldn't help but think back to that night.

"You aren't confident?" Delia chewed her lips, then asked, "Then, Linley... can you cancel the duel and not compete against him?"

Master Longhaus shook his head. "Delia, how can you say something so foolish? After two Saints have already agreed to a duel, how can one back out?"

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 30, Delia's Protector

Master Longhaus could clearly tell that his disciple cared about Linley so much that she had lost her wits.

"Delia, it is fine. Don't worry!" Linley laughed. Linley felt very moved at Delia's obvious concern.

"Okay." Delia nodded.

However, Delia was still worried. After all, the person dueling with Linley was reputedly the most powerful Saint alive; the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson.

Longhaus looked at Linley, then at Delia. Laughing, he said, "It's been quite a while since you two classmates have met with each other. I won't disturb you. Let me go for a walk. The two of you can have a nice chat. I imagine, after ten years, you have many things to say to each other."

Delia cast a grateful glance at her teacher.

Clearly, Master Longhaus was giving her a chance to have some alone time with Linley.

As he spoke, Master Longhaus led his Worldbear away from that courtyard, leaving behind only Linley, Delia, Bebe, and Haeru.

Delia lowered her head, continuing to stroke Bebe's fur. She was waiting for Linley to speak.

A beautiful woman, petting an adorable pet. This was a soul-stirring image...but Linley only felt awkward. If he was facing a Saint, Linley wouldn't feel any fear at all, but facing Delia, Linley felt very complicated.

The female of his age group whom he was most familiar with was definitely Delia.

After all, they grew up together.

Linley wasn't a dummy. He knew how Delia felt...and this was why Linley felt so awkward. Especially now that he was alone with her.

"These past few years, have you been well?" After a long silence, Linley finally managed to force out this rather blunt and graceless phrase.

Delia raised her head, glancing at Linley. She actually let out a chuckle. "Linley, you are already a Saint-level expert. Since when have you become so shy? I've been fairly well these years. With my clan and my teacher backing me up, who would dare to mistreat me?"

After hearing Delia's words, Linley felt slightly more relaxed.

"What have you been up to these years?" Delia said softly.

"Not too much." Linley seemed to once again think back to what had happened ten years ago. Ten years ago, after learning of his father's death, he had given up everything and set his mind upon avenging his father.

He had walked farther and farther along the road to revenge, and in the end he had indeed killed Clayde. But due to the encirclement and battle with those six Special Executors of the Radiant Church, in the end, his most dearly beloved Grandpa Doebling had sacrificed his soul for him...

Three years of painstaking training in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, six years of quiet meditation in the O'Brien Empire.

That battle with Stehle, that battle with those six Angels, that sparring match with McKenzie...one scene after another appeared in his mind. As they did, without holding anything back, Linley began to tell Delia what had happened.

Delia stopped petting Bebe, intently listening to every single word Linley said.

Right now, Linley spoke in a very calm, simple manner, as though he were very relaxed. But Delia could totally imagine what Linley's past ten years of life had been like. After finishing speaking, Linley couldn't help but sigh repeatedly.

"Linley." Delia suddenly reached out to take Linley by the hand, gripping it tightly!

Linley raised his head to stare at Delia in surprise. Delia was staring at him. "Linley, don't let your life be so exhausting. You've done very well already.”

Delia’s hands were rather cold.

But Linley could feel the beat of Delia’s heart through her tight grip. It was beating very quietly. Linley felt a surge of warmth in his own heart, slowly thawing a small part of his frozen heart.

“Thank you.” Linley said softly.

“Don’t say thank you to me.” Delia shook her head, her scorching gaze on Linley’s face.

The air between the two of them grew warm. For some reason, Linley felt himself grow a bit muddle-headed. Scenes of himself and Alice would drift to his mind, but then they would be replaced by that kiss he had shared that night with Delia. His heartbeat sped up as well. Linley actually was growing a bit frantic.

“Bebe.” Linley looked at Bebe, then looked at Delia. “Delia, do you know how powerful Bebe has gotten?” Under that sort of atmosphere, the only thing the panicking Linley could do was immediately change the topic.

Linley didn’t know what he might end up doing if that atmosphere continued.

Thus, Linley decided to simply change the topic.

Delia secretly sighed to herself. She was skilled in negotiations, and thus she naturally was a student of psychology as well. When she had been at the Ernst Institute, she had already begun studying psychology. In fact, the reason she started psychology was to better understand Linley.

Delia understood Linley very well.

Delia knew that, after having experienced what he had with Alice, although Linley had seemingly already forgotten about her, in truth...the after-effects of that relationship were not something which Linley could simply forget about as easily as that.

First love was actually very fragile.

Especially for a stubborn person such as Linley. Once he truly loved someone, then he would place an even higher value on that first love than normal people. The failure of that first love would unconsciously cause Linley to have somewhat of a phobia towards love.

Even if other females tried to approach him, Linley would naturally recoil.

Delia understood that a layer of ice had already covered Linley's heart. If one wished to melt that layer of ice, one couldn't be too hasty. It would have to be melted one step at a time.

Delia deeply loved Linley, and in her heart, she felt pain on Linley's behalf.

Linley had suffered so much. One loved one after another had left him. True, he was extremely accomplished, having become a peak-stage Saint at the age of twenty seven. But how much bitterness and suffering had occurred on the path he had taken?

Delia truly didn't wish for Linley to continue exhausting himself. For Linley's sake, Delia had already made up her mind to spend as much time as would be needed. As long as she could help Linley be a bit more relaxed and a bit happier, she would be very satisfied.

"Delia, what are you thinking about?" Linley saw that Delia seemed to have gone daydreaming.

Delia immediately snapped out of it and laughed, "What am I thinking about? I'm thinking about you." Linley couldn't help but be stunned. Seeing the look on Linley's face, Delia laughed. "I'm joking."

Linley laughed as well.

"What did you want to say about Bebe just now?" Delia laughed.

"Bebe, want to say a few things to Delia?" Linley laughed as he looked at Bebe.

"Say a few things?" Delia looked at Bebe in surprise. That ordinary little Shadowmouse she had seen at the Ernst Institute could speak? All magical beasts capable of speech were at the Saint-level.

Bebe jumped to his feet, clambering onto the stone table. Standing tall, Bebe raised his little head proudly and said in a loud voice, "Ms. Delia, let me tell you a secret. When the Boss and I were in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, the Boss would often talk to me about you. He even said that you had forcibly kissed him once!"

"Whap!" Linley immediately slapped towards Bebe, but Linley's palm passed straight through 'Bebe'. It was nothing more than Bebe's after-image!

Bebe was standing in mid-air, laughing at Linley delighted.

"Bebe, you little rascal." Linley didn't know whether to laugh or cry.

He had never said such a thing before. Bebe actually made that all up.

"Bebe, be good, come over to me." Delia stretched her hand out, and Bebe immediately hopped into Delia's bosom again. In Delia's warm embrace, he seemed to feel very comfortable, and even winked a few times at Linley.

Thanks to Bebe's intentional 'teasing', Linley and Delia were both laughing constantly. Time flew by very quickly, and soon, the sky gradually began to darken.

Seeing how the sky was darkening, Delia suddenly remembered that tonight, Emperor Johann had arranged a major welcome banquet for her.

"Linley, it's getting late. I need to leave for now. Tonight, Emperor Johann has arranged a dinner banquet for me. I have to attend." Delia said apologetically.

Linley nodded slightly. "Then I won't keep you any longer."

"Will you go tonight?" Delia suddenly asked.

"Me?" Linley laughed. "Emperor Johann didn't invite me, and I don't like dinner banquets. Forget it."

Delia nodded slightly.

Actually, how could Emperor Johann not have invited Linley? Only, Wharton had already refused on his older brother's behalf. He knew that Linley didn't like banquets, and also didn't like dealing with those nobles.

"Farewell." Delia said softly.

"Farewell." Linley looked at Delia.

Delia stood there for a moment before slowly leaving the courtyard. After she walked outside, she turned to look back at Linley. It was already growing dark, and there wasn't much light. As Delia turned to look at Linley, her hair was swept up by the night wind.

A dazzling smile, and then she left.

Watching this beauty depart into the night, Linley stood there without moving, thinking who knows what.

"Big bro, what are you looking at?" Wharton walked over, laughing. "It is time for dinner."

"Your big bro feels the stirrings of spring!" Bebe's little head popped up from behind Linley.

Night descended, but the entire imperial capital was filled with lights. Right now, in the imperial palace, a huge banquet had been prepared, and the palace musicians were performing beautiful songs. Men and women were displaying their graceful dance steps in the middle of the hall.

Delia was seated in a seat next to a wall of the main hall. Next to her was the Wildthunder Stormhawk. She was the guest of honor today. After all, this banquet was for the sake of welcoming her.

But aside from exchanging a few polite words with Emperor Johann, and singing a few words to a beautiful song, Delia claimed that she wasn't feeling well and went off to one side to rest.

A handsome young noble walked over to Delia, a smile that he probably thought was friendly on his face. Bowing slightly, he said, "Beautiful Ms. Delia, might I have the honor of asking you to a dance?"

"I'm sorry, I'm not feeling very well." Delia shook her head.

The young noble left regretfully. Not feeling well? Who was she trying to fool? Many girls who didn't want to accept an offer to dance would say this. What's more, Delia was a magus of the seventh rank. How could she so easily become ill?

From afar, quite a few young nobles were staring at Delia.

"What number is he?" Scott laughed towards a nearby young noble.

"The eighth." The young noble laughed.

"The eighth what?" Marquis Jeff, who had just finished a dance, laughed as he walked over. Right now, Marquis Jeff was in a splendid mood.

Indeed, as Marquis Jeff was the son of Prince Julin. As his heir, Marquis Jeff would one day be the controller of the entire Southeast Administrative Province! His status was very high, even higher than a prince who wasn't in line for the imperial throne. Naturally, many young noble ladies were desirous of becoming his wife.

Unfortunately, although many young noble ladies had been bedded by Marquis Jeff, none of them had gotten anything.

"I was talking with his Imperial Highness regarding Ms. Delia. This is already the eighth person to ask Ms. Delia to dance, only to be refused. It seems the others have lost confidence. No one else dares to go invite her." The young noble laughed.

Scott laughingly looked at Marquis Jeff. "What, cousin Jeff, do you wish to try?"

Marquis Jeff nodded confidently. "It's just a dance, right? Watch me." Marquis Jeff smiled as he walked over towards Delia, smiled quite brightly.

"Ms. Delia." Marquis Jeff walked in front of her. "Might I have the honor of asking you to a dance?"

"I'm sorry. I'm not feeling well." Delia gave the same response.

Marquis Jeff very naturally sat down next to her, maintaining a practiced degree of distance between the two of them. Although the distance between the two wasn't very far, it wasn't so close as to be threatening.

"If you aren't feeling well, you should rest." Marquis Jeff, being quite experienced, knew exactly how he should approach this sort of situation. If one was able to get into physical contact with a girl, it would be easier for the two to feel more intimate with each other.

As to how to get into physical contact...

"Oh, Ms. Delia, your shoulder has some..." As he spoke, Marquis Jeff reached out with his hand towards Delia's shoulder.

But before he could get the word 'dust' out of his mouth...

"Ah!!!" Marquis Jeff let out an agonized scream. That scream stunned the main hall, and everyone turned to look at him. Even the distant Emperor Johann, who was chatting with the Imperial Left Premier, had their attention drawn to them.

"What just happened?" Emperor Johann immediately walked over.

"My hand! My hand!" Marquis Jeff was almost crying. A large wound had appeared on his hand, and a large chunk of flesh was missing. Blood was flowing nonstop, staining the floor.

Delia hurriedly stood up. "Emperor Johann, my apologies. Teacher instructed his Wildthunder Stormhawk to protect me. The Wildthunder Stormhawk will attack anything which touches my body in a manner it deems threatening. Before I even had a chance to react, the Wildthunder Stormhawk immediately pecked at him."

Everyone looked at the Wildthunder Stormhawk.

The Wildthunder Stormhawk was dangling a chunk of flesh off its beak, which was stained with blood. The Wildthunder Stormhawk swallowed that chunk of flesh in one gulp, then stared death at Marquis Jeff with its two golden hawk eyes.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 31, The Anticipation of the Crowd

“The Wildthunder Stormhawk will attack anything which touches my body in a manner it deems threatening.” These words seemed very simple, but all of the nobles present were extremely intelligent. They immediately realized what had happened when they heard Delia say this.

All of the nobles turned to stare at Marquis Jeff, who was currently clutching his wounded hand. His face was pale and very ugly to behold.

“This Marquis Jeff actually tried to make a physical move on her. Jeeze...” Many nobles secretly cursed him in silence. Although they didn’t speak aloud, it was only natural that their gazes would convey their thoughts. Marquis Jeff felt extremely awkward.

Emperor Johann glanced at his nephew with dissatisfaction as well.

He knew that the Wildthunder Stormhawk behind Delia was a magical beast of the ninth rank belonging to her wind-style Grand Magus Saint teacher, Master Longhaus. Most likely, Delia really was unable to react to the Wildthunder Stormhawk’s attack on Marquis Jeff, and in turn the Wildthunder Stormhawk was unable to speak with Delia.

A situation like this most likely wasn’t a result of Delia intentionally acting against Marquis Jeff.

Indeed...

Delia hadn't intentionally acted against Marquis Jeff. Before arriving at the banquet, Delia had already told the Wildthunder Stormhawk that if anyone wished to try and make a physical move on her, the Wildthunder Stormhawk was to 'peck' them in punishment.

None of the other young nobles had dared to make a physical move on her, but Marquis Jeff did. Naturally, he was the one who took the spear in the belly.

"Attend me! Take Jeff to the healers." Emperor Johann snapped an order to his servants.

Marquis Jeff didn't try to explain, only hanging his head while holding his hand, with that astonishingly large hole in it. He rapidly left the main hall. Only then did Emperor Johann say comfortingly to Delia, "Ms. Delia, sincere apologies that you had to experience something like this. This was our fault. We hope you won't be too upset."

"No, no. Emperor Johann, this was Little Wind's mistake. When I go back, I'll definitely ask Teacher to rebuke him." As she spoke, she intentionally 'glared' at the Wildthunder Stormhawk.

And then, Delia said apologetically, "Emperor Johann, I'm not feeling very well today. I'll go home now. I hope you will forgive me."

"That's a good idea. Ms. Delia, when you get back, you need to have a good rest." Emperor Johann said in a very gentlemanly manner.

With the guest of honor, Delia, having left, the other nobles began to buzz and chatter. Poor Marquis Jeff, naturally, became the center of their gossip.

After this event and after having his wound healed by light-style magic, Marquis Jeff actually fearlessly and shamelessly went to serve as a 'guide' for Delia, and Eighth Imperial Prince Scott accompanied him as well.

But unfortunately...

Although Ms. Delia was very friendly, those two magical beasts were terrifying.

Once, when Ms. Delia stumbled while walking, as she was about to fall, Prince Scott reached out with 'good intentions' to help steady Delia by embracing her. Welcoming him, however, was a peck from the Wildthunder Stormhawk. This time, the injury was even more severe than Marquis Jeff's, as a hole was pecked straight through Prince Scott's right hand.

After this experience, both Scott and Marquis Jeff learned their lessons and no longer dared to reach out with their hands. But just as they thought they were being nice and proper, misfortune came again.

That Worldbear suddenly stretched out its two palms and sent both Scott and Marquis Jeff flying into the air.

How terrifyingly strong were the paws of a Worldbear? Even a casual slap from the Worldbear was enough to injure Scott and Marquis Jeff to the point of vomiting blood. They were beaten to the brink of death, but fortunately, light-style magi were there to heal them.

This is what the Worldbear, Hatton, said to them: "You two keep swaggering around every day in front of me, Lord Hatton. You are so motherf*cking annoying. In the future, every time I see you, I'll beat you!"

Good heavens!

Who would dare anger a Saint-level Worldbear? Even for the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, defeating a Worldbear wouldn't be a simple task. After all, a Worldbear was definitely a top-class magical beast, even amongst Saint-level magical beasts. If it hadn't been that Master Longhaus' Dimensional Edge spell was simply too terrifyingly powerful, how could he possibly have subdued such a creature?

Having learned their lessons, Scott and Marquis Jeff no longer dared to bother Ms. Delia again.

Those other young nobles of the imperial capital who had ambitious designs on Ms. Delia, seeing the disasters which had befallen Marquis Jeff and Prince Scott, no longer dared to try anything. There was nothing for it. If they were swatted to death by that Saint-level Worldbear, they wouldn't even have a chance to cry.

Emperor Johann, while chatting with Delia, finally learned that Delia had actually been classmates of the same year with Master Linley at the Ernst Institute. In addition, Delia was in no hurry to return to the Yulan Empire, and was planning to stay and watch the duel in the O'Brien Empire between Linley and the Monolithic Sword Saint.

Emperor Johann naturally was very welcoming and magnanimous.

Although a stay of several months from a foreign Special Envoy was quite long, Emperor Johann expressed welcome to her, saying that the longer she stayed, the better.

Time passed, and in the blink of an eye, nearly three months had passed. Tomorrow was August 4th. Countless people in the imperial capital were discussing the upcoming Saint-level duel. Even the towns outside the imperial capital were beginning to fill up with people who had come from distant places.

This was because there were simply too many people coming to watch this duel. The imperial capital was totally full.

On Boulder Street. Count Wharton's estate. Hillman and Housekeeper Hiri were drinking wine and chatting idly.

"Uncle Hiri, have you noticed that recently, at mealtime, Linley smiles a lot more than usual, and often cracks jokes." Hillman's face was all smiles.

Housekeeper Hiri's ruddy nose was as red as ever. He chortled as well. "Hillman, I imagine you know the reason why as well. Ms. Delia comes to visit young master Linley every day. How can young master Linley not be happy? As I see it, this Ms. Delia is a fine young lady. And I feel that Ms. Delia is interested in young master Linley."

"Right. When Ms. Delia eats with us, I recognize that look in her eyes when she looks at young master Linley." Hillman spoke with the air of experience.

Hillman and Housekeeper Hiri were both quite satisfied with Delia.

However...

"But young master Linley himself always dodges this topic. I've raised it with him several times." Hillman shook his head helplessly.

"No rush. As long as both of them are willing, when the time is right, they'll definitely get together." Housekeeper Hiri was actually quite confident.

Right at this time, Wharton, Barker, and his siblings all came from the back courtyard's training fields. Those six massive bodies formed an amazing sight.

"Grandpa Hiri. Uncle Hillman." Wharton called out to them from far away.

As soon as Wharton entered the living room. "Eh? My big brother and Ms. Delia haven't arrived yet." Right now, every day, Delia would come have lunch with Linley.

"They'll be here soon. Don't be impatient." Hillman said.

"They are here." Gates, who was at the back, turned his head and saw Linley walk in alongside Delia, both dressed in light blue robes. The Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, was behind them, while Bebe was standing on Haeru's back.

Both dressed in light blue robes, the natural, at-ease Linley and the beautiful, moving Delia did appear to be a match made in heaven indeed.

"Big bro, time to eat. You're still busy chatting? Don't you think you've chatted enough?" Wharton's loud voice boomed out.

Linley and Delia looked at Wharton, and Wharton laughed while shaking his head.

Yulan calendar, year 10009. August 4th. Afternoon. Today, the weather was excellent. The sky was pure blue, with only a few clouds in the sky. The wind wasn't too strong, and the soft wind gently blew comfortably against everyone's faces, as gentle as the caress of a lover's hand.

West of the city. Mt. Tujiao!

This was a small mountain that was only around a thousand meters high, and a few thousand square meters in area. It wasn't a large mountain. Compared to War God Mountain, it was far smaller. Today, however, the area surrounding the mountain had already been divided into countless regions by various painted lines. Over a hundred thousand city guards were there maintaining order as well.

There was an extremely high number of spectators here today, even more than during that last duel between Olivier and Haydson. Although many people had come, with those millions of people all divided into one region after another, it was quite orderly, with each region having an army regiment standing guard.

Mt. Tujiao didn't have any people on the mountain itself. But in the air above Mt. Tujiao, Linley stood in mid-air!

Even the nobles stood several hundred meters away from the base of Mt. Tujiao, with the city guards maintaining a perimeter.

Wharton, Barker, and his brothers naturally were in the front, quite close to Emperor Johann. As for Delia and Master Longhaus, they were quite close to Wharton's group.

Wharton and Delia both raised their heads, staring at Linley's figure with concern.

"My big bro will definitely win." Wharton murmured silently to himself.

Master Longhaus gently patted Delia on her shoulders. Delia looked towards her teacher, her eyes slightly red. Delia felt tremendous mental pressure.

"It'll be fine. Linley will be fine." Master Longhaus said comfortingly.

"He definitely will be fine." Delia said softly to herself, as she looked up towards Mt. Tujiao again.

"F*ck, why hasn't that Haydson come yet?" Gates cursed angrily. He didn't care about the Monolithic Sword Saint at all, and cursed as he pleased.

Right now, Wharton, Housekeeper Hiri, Hillman, Delia, Barker and his brothers, Jenne, Rebecca, and Leena...all of them were quietly hoping and praying for Linley's victory.

"For Linley to win will be very hard." A gray-robed figure suddenly appeared next to them.

"Olivier?" Wharton and Gates stared at this man in astonishment.

Olivier had come back to life!

Olivier's face was ashen pale, but his aura was even more restrained than before. Blumer was standing by his side. Olivier glanced at Wharton, then said calmly, "That Haydson's defense is extremely powerful, and his attack force is very astonishing as well. You should remember how when I fought him, my arm broke from aiming a single sword blow at him. His strength far exceeds mine. In addition, his spiritual energy is very powerful, and he is also very fast...he is essentially flawless. Beating him will be hard."

"Olivier, our Lord is not you." Gates said unhappily.

Olivier laughed calmly and fell silent. He walked with his younger brother to a different area, quietly awaiting the coming battle.

"Lord Haydson has arrived!" A surprised shout came from somewhere within that endless sea of humanity.

Everyone turned to stare at a figure that was flying over at high speed from the east. In the blink of an eye, Haydson appeared in the air above Mt. Tujiao, standing opposite from Linley.

Right now, Linley and Haydson were only a thousand meters off the ground.

The dwellers of the Yulan continent all had good eyesight. In broad daylight, they could clearly make out these two figures who were a thousand meters away.

Delia's hands were balled into tight fists, and her palms were sweaty.

At this moment, none of the millions of spectators surrounding Mt. Tujiao made any noise. It seemed as though they were all holding their breaths, as they all felt an incredible pressure.

Everyone's gaze was fixed on those two figures high up in the air.

"Linley, you arrived rather early." Haydson said casually as he stood in mid-air.

Linley just looked at him calmly. A gentle wind surrounded him. Linley was currently in his human form. The reason he was able to fly was because he had already utilized the wind-style spell of the ninth rank, Windshadow.

The Soaring Technique was a spell of the seventh rank, while the Airwings spell was a spell of the eighth rank. The Windshadow spell of the ninth rank combined the Airwings spell with the Supersonic spell. When using this spell, not only could one fly, one would also possess astonishing speed.

Linley casually removed his outer garments, collecting them into his interspatial ring, then stared coldly at Haydson. "Haydson, let's cut the crap. Prepare to fight." As he spoke, Linley's body quickly began to be covered with black scales, and those sharp spikes appeared from his elbows, knees, forehead, and spine. That iron-whip-like tail swung about behind him, and those dark gold eyes stared coldly at Haydson.

"Oh, how refreshingly blunt. Come, then...let's see if you are qualified to make me draw my sword!" The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, looked at Linley with confidence, and he laughed calmly as he spoke in a bright voice.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 32, Desperate

Linley and Haydson stood there in mid-air, staring at each other from over a few hundred meters apart. Naturally, they used battle-qi to speak to each other, and their voices were very loud. The viewers below could hear their words clearly.

"How arrogant!" Wharton frowned.

"F*ck his grandmother, when his Lordship beats him to the point of being unable to fight back, this Haydson will know how ignorant and sheltered he is." Gates cursed unhappily.

Although most of the spectators below felt Haydson was arrogant, they also knew...that Haydson had the power to be arrogant. After all, he was the Monolithic Sword Saint, famous for his defense!

In mid-air.

The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, finished his words, and the area around him became covered with those earthen swirls of energy. The density of that roiling energy had reached a terrifying density and power.

"Force you to draw your sword?" Linley's lips curved upwards.

"Bang!" A dense azurish-black battle-qi exploded forth from Linley's body, surrounding Linley like a thick black swirling fog. But compared to Haydson's, the protective energy around Linley actually made one's heart rate change. It contained within it some sort of strange vibrational pulse.

"Oh?" Staring at Linley's Pulseguard Defense, Haydson's eyes lit up. He immediately stared carefully at Linley and laughed, "Linley, I didn't realize that when you dueled with Olivier, you had been hiding this ability. I confess...you are qualified to make me draw my sword."

Haydson was extremely experienced.

Although Linley's Pulseguard Defense was different from his, the power of his defense was definitely not any inferior than Haydson's. Just based on this astonishing defensive power, Haydson had to draw his sword!

"Clang!" Haydson drew his earthen colored heavy sword from the sheath on his back, staring steadily at Linley.

With a flip of his hand, that adamantine heavy sword appeared in his hands, glowing with that faint blue light. He immediately adopted a ready position, prepared to deliver a fierce blow at any moment.

"He drew his sword. Lord Haydson drew his sword."

The heartbeats of the millions of spectators increased in speed. Olivier frowned. "Linley's defense. It seems...to be rather special. I didn't expect that he had been hiding this ability."

Delia was so nervous that her forehead was covered with sweat, but she didn't notice it at all.

One was surrounded by earth-colored energy, while the other was surrounded by azurish-black energy. The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, looked like a wargod of the earth, while Linley looked like a demon from another dimension, making those who saw him feel fear.

"Careful!" Linley let out a cold shout, then he moved.

"Boom!" The gentle wind suddenly transformed into a howling tempest which filled the skies. Linley's body suddenly blurrily merged with the wind which began to blow around the entire Mt. Tujiao. "Crack!" A tree was shattered in half by the force of the wind, and many other trees began to bend as well. Leaves were blown everywhere into the sky, and countless leaves and pebbles were swirling about in the air above Mt. Tujiao.

Everyone below scrunched their eyes, carefully watching this oncoming battle.

"He's actually reached such a high level of understanding with regards to the Elemental Laws of the Wind." The wind-style Grand Magus Saint, Longhaus, sighed quietly in praise as his eyes lit up.

The others all watched the battle with baited breath.

The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, wielding his earthen heavy sword in his hands, stood arrogantly in mid-air. He seemed as stable as a mountain, despite the wind howling about him. Linley's body could be blurrily seen at multiple places throughout that wild wind.

"Hooooowl!"

Suddenly, a bizarre, bestial howl could be heard as a black blur suddenly charged towards Haydson. Haydson's face changed. Linley's speed was simply too fast. Because his speed had reached a certain limit, the wind itself had howled in rage.

The only thing Haydson saw was Linley's two dark golden eyes. They stared at each other.

"Hrmph!" Haydson wasn't afraid at all.

"Haaaaaaaargh!"

"Haaaaaaaargh!"

Two angry roars rang out at the same time. The adamantine heavy sword howled with the wind, carrying tremendous force as it chopped down towards Haydson. But Haydson's earthen heavy sword seemed to carry the force of a mountain as it swung towards Linley.

The two swords collided!

"BANG!!!"

It was as though two mountains had collided. The terrifying power of that collision produced waves of energy that one could see with the naked eye. Those waves of energy were knife-sharp, and the trees directly beneath the battle on Mt. Tujiao were split apart. Some boulders were chopped into rubble, while countless rocks and pebbles blasted in all directions.

"Your Imperial Majesty, careful!"

A boulder actually smashed down directly towards Emperor Johann's direction. Immediately, warriors charged towards it, kicking that ten-thousand pound boulder away. One powerful warrior after another protected each of the nobles. Many of the spectators were powerful warriors, and some were magi.

"Everyone, be careful!" Those spectators were all stunned.

This power was simply too terrifying.

"Linley!" Seeing Linley's Dragonblood Warrior transformation and his astonishing strength, Delia felt pride for the person she was in love with.

Linley and Haydson both retreated nearly a hundred meters.

"What astonishing strength." Linley felt shocked. When he had dueled against Olivier, Linley had only used Bloodviolet and therefore had not shown off his incredible strength. After all, Dragonblood Warriors were famous for their strength! When using the adamantine heavy sword, he was able to put his terrifying, earth-shaking power on full display.

"Dragonblood Warriors live up to their reputation as Supreme Warriors."

Haydson laughed loudly. "But Linley, just now, I only used pure strength and none of the Laws. You need to be careful of my next attack."

For example, that 'Worldbreaker' attack Haydson had used last time contained the insights he had gained into the Laws of the Earth.

The power of that attack had increased tremendously as a result.

"With my next technique, I too shall use my Profound Truths of the Earth. You be careful as well." Linley looked calmly at the distant Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson.

In this battle, he definitely couldn't hold anything back. If he held back but the opponent didn't, he would probably die.

"His Lordship is about to use the Profound Truths of the Earth." Barker, his brothers, and Wharton all grew nervous. Bebe and Haeru both exchanged glances. Haeru had shrunken his size dramatically today, which was very rare for him.

"Swoosh!"

While everyone stared upwards into the sky, Bebe and Haeru scurried towards Mt. Tujiao, moving as fast as lightning. These two magical beasts quickly arrived at the tip of Mt. Tujiao, and in the blink of an eye, Bebe and Haeru hid within some of the wild grass at the mountain top.

"We'll watch from here. If the Boss wins, that's fine. If the Boss loses and that Haydson continues to go full force on him, then it'll be time for us to charge." Bebe stared evilly at the mid-air Haydson.

Haeru nodded as well.

Last time, Olivier had nearly lost his life. Haeru and Bebe didn't want to see that scene repeat itself.

Linley was wielding the adamantine heavy sword while the battle-qi in his body began to rise rapidly, and his power quickly grew. The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, was building his power as well.

The two experts were preparing to use their ultimate techniques.

"Boom!" "Boom!"

Terrifying sonic booms rang out as two blurs slashed through the air. In the blink of an eye, those two experts slammed into each other like two massive colliding meteors.

"Profound Truths of the Earth – Hundred Layered Waves!" Linley's dark golden eyes grew even colder, and his adamantine heavy sword floated as agilely as a soft breeze, having attained a bizarrely fast speed, as though it was passing through reality itself.

"Worldquake!" Haydon's face was very solemn, and the light covering his earthen heavy sword grew even more concentrated, and the heavens and the earth in the area around them began to congeal and solidify.

“Bang!”

The earthen heavy sword collided against the adamantine heavy sword. This collision was very strange. Linley was smashed downwards from the skies like a meteor, falling downwards at extreme speed. Only after falling several hundred meters did he manage to somersault and then halt his descent.

Linley could sense that the flow of blood in his body had been disrupted and was roiling about.

“What terrifying attack power.” Linley stared in amazement at the mid-air Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson. Linley’s Pulseguard Defense was extremely powerful, several dozen times more powerful than the normal battle-qi armor which protected most Saints. Such a terrifying defense was generally immune to the attacks of most Law-based techniques of peak-stage Saints.

Linley’s defense was not one bit weaker than Haydson’s.

But despite that, Haydson’s Worldquake technique was simply too terrifying. It was as though the weight of an entire enormous mountain had concentrated itself onto Haydson’s sword as it chopped down against Linley. It had broken through Linley’s Pulseguard Defense, exhausting the majority of its power as it did so, but Linley was just barely able to defend against that remaining amount of power via his draconic scales.

“This Monolithic Sword Saint’s attack power actually contains a hint of similarity to my Profound Truths of the Earth.” Linley could sense that Haydson's Worldquake technique actually carried a bit of vibrational power as well; only, there was but a single vibrational wave.

A single vibrational wave was only capable of causing the blood in Linley's body to be roiled and disturbed.

"His insight into the Throbbing Pulse of the World is quite low."

The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, didn't actually focus on the Throbbing Pulse of the World when training in the Laws of the Earth. He had gone a different way.

"I imagine Haydson isn't feeling too well right now either." Linley stared upwards at Haydson.

"Urgh!" Haydson's body trembled, a hint of blood leaking out from his lips as he stared down at Linley in astonishment.

When the adamantine heavy sword had intersected with his earthen heavy sword, at first he hadn't felt any force at all. But then, a strange vibration passed into his body through the sword, and Haydson felt as though countless warhammer-like blows were smashing into his internals. In the blink of an eye, he had been struck by a hundred vibrations.

"Fortunately, I've reached a certain degree of mastery into the 'Massive' aspect of the Laws of the Earth, which fortified both my soul and my internals. Otherwise...this attack by itself probably would've taken my life."

Haydson's defense was very powerful indeed.

Not only was his external defense formidable, his spirit and his internal organs were protected as well. After all, the earth was the mother to us all. The path Haydson had chosen was a path of extreme defense and extreme offensive power.

If Linley had used fifty layered vibrational waves to attack Haydson, he probably wouldn't have been able to injure Haydson at all. But Linley had used the Hundred Layered Waves attack. No matter how strong Haydson's defense had been, he had still been injured.

One stood in mid-air above Mt. Tujiao. The other stood in mid-air, halfway down Mt. Tujiao. The two stared at each other, both sensing how powerful the other was.

"What a terrifying attack." Haydson felt terror in his heart. This was the first time he had experienced such a bizarre attack.

"What astonishing defense, and what terrifying strength." Linley, seeing that the opponent had received his 'Hundred Layered Waves' head on without dying, also felt stunned.

Below them was a sea of silence. Nobody knew what the result had been between this clash of experts.

"Haha...Linley, wonderful. You are the first Saint to cause me to be heavily injured." Haydson's voice rang out brightly, but then it grew seriously. "But now, I'll no longer hold back anything. Prepare to receive my Worldbreaker attack. If you die, don't blame me!"

Watching from below, Olivier's face changed. Last time, it had been the Worldbreaker technique which had nearly taken his life.

The Worldbreaker technique was far more terrifying than the Worldquake technique.

"It remains to be seen who shall be the one to die!" Linley said coldly, his voice also ringing in the skies.

In truth, Linley had already reached the level of being able to generate 132 layers of waves. Just then, Linley had only utilized the Hundred Layered Waves, but that wasn't Linley's limit.

"Boom!"

"Boom!"

Two sonic booms once more split the air, as these two ultimate experts charged towards each other in mid-air. One flew upwards at high speed, while the other charged downwards. These two experts collided with tremendous force at the outskirts of Mt. Tujiao.

Worldbreaker!

Profound Truths of the Earth – 132 Layered Waves!

The absolute most powerful attacks of these two experts!

"Bang!" Linley's body was actually slammed into the side of Mt. Tujiao itself, creating a giant crater. "Crack!" "Crack!" Instantly, the entire mountain began to crack, and with a rumbling noise, countless boulders began to fall and trees began to split apart. As the boulders came tumbling down towards them, many of the spectators below immediately began to block them.

"Boom!" Linley came charging out from within the deep crater. His body was stained with blood, and even parts of his draconic scales were shattered.

The power of the Worldbreaker technique was many times higher than the Worldquake technique. Linley had taken this attack head on, but despite being protected by two layers of defense, the Pulseguard Defense and his draconic scales, he had still been heavily wounded and vomited blood.

"Paaargh!"

Haydson's throat convulsed, and he vomited out a large mouthful of fresh blood, his face instantly turning white. Both of these mighty Saints were now covered with blood.

The battle had reached a desperate point!

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 33, Astonishment

The millions of spectators below were stunned. Haydson had vomited blood, while Linley's shattered scales were covered with bloodstains. Clearly, this battle was growing extremely desperate.

"How is this possible?"

"How is this possible...Master Linley and Lord Haydson..."

The countless spectators were all stunned. These two dominating experts had actually battled to such a point. What was truly shocking was...the reputed most powerful of Saints, Haydson, had vomited a large mouthful of blood. Clearly he had been deeply injured.

As they saw it, Linley was only twenty seven, despite being a genius.

But wasn't Linley previously just on par with Olivier? Olivier had been defeated by Haydson, and Linley should've suffered the same fate. But clearly, the results were totally different.

"Linley, he..." Olivier's forehead was locked into a frown. He fell silent.

Actually, if Linley hadn't gained insight into his Pulseguard Defense, most likely the Worldquake technique of Haydson would have badly injured him, and the Worldbreaker should have directly killed him. But now that Linley had his Pulseguard Defense, his protective abilities were extremely high. Even when Haydson used his ultimate technique, he could only badly injure Linley at most.

“Linley!” Delia was at the point of tears.

Especially when she saw Linley’s body covered with bloodstains, her heart quivered.

“Big bro.” “Lord!” Wharton, the Barker brothers, Housekeeper Hiri, Hillman, Jenne and the other girls...all of them were worried for Linley.

The battle had truly reached a desperate state.

“What a bizarre attack. There is no way to defend against it at all.” Haydson stared at the distant, demonic-looking Linley, thinking at high speed.

Profound Truths of the Earth – 132 Layered Waves!

Even Haydson, whose internal organs were under special protection, had been heavily injured. Haydson knew very well that he could perhaps endure a single additional blow from his opponent’s ultimate attack, but if he were to be hit a third time, he would definitely perish.

“How could Linley’s defense be so powerful? My Worldbreaker attack was unable to kill him.” Haydson couldn’t believe it.

He hadn’t met any opponent who would dare take his attack head on. The Worldbreaker was his ultimate attack. If he wasn’t capable of killing his opponent with it, how would he win?

"I can't take another one head on. I'll have to rely on my speed to try and avoid his attack while landing mine on him." Haydson decided. He believed that Linley wouldn't be much better off than him. It was already incredible that Linley would still be battle-worthy after having taken his Worldbreaker attack. He trusted that so long as he was able to land another Worldbreaker, Linley definitely wouldn't be able to take it.

Haydson's thoughts were actually mirrored by Linley's own.

Given his current condition, he definitely couldn't take another attack head on.

"Shudder..." The earthen flows of energy surrounding Haydson began to contract, forming a thinner, almost armor-like layer around him.

Linley was also retracting the area of his Pulseguard Defense.

If the defense was too spread out, their high speed flying maneuvers would be impacted. Without question, for both experts to do this meant that they were about to engage in a battle of agility.

The countless spectators below all stared in the sky, barely breathing.

Those people who had been absolutely certain that the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, would win, no longer dared to say anything anymore.

"Whoosh!" "Whoosh!" Hurricane like winds once more split the sky open, and Linley's body once again began to move in that graceful, bizarre manner. His speed had reached its absolute limit. Relying on the force of the wind, Linley's movements were extremely bizarre and totally unpredictable.

Wielding his earthen heavy sword, Haydson moved as well. With each step he took, he seemed to teleport, traversing tens of meters. His movements were bizarre as well!

"Swiiish."

Haydson's earthen heavy sword suddenly appeared in front of Linley, chopping down at him. But it passed through 'Linley' as though Linley was nothing but air. This 'Linley' turned into a blur and disappeared. It was just an after-image.

"Swish!" The adamantite heavy sword struck out as well.

But as it neared Haydson's body, Haydson suddenly appeared several dozen meters away.

Both of these experts knew how formidable the other's attacks were. They didn't dare to take them on head on, and they all desired to use their agility to allow themselves to deliver a vicious blow towards their opponent.

"Where are they?"

"We can't even see them!"

Those countless viewers stared carefully at the skies, but Linley and Haydson were simply moving too fast. With the wind howling as ferociously as it was, they could only occasionally see a solid blur.

Delia's forehead was covered in sweat, but she still stared unblinkingly at the heavens.

The atmosphere was incredibly tense!

With a single step, Haydson appeared at the top of Mt. Tujiao. Haydson had decided to use the boulders and trees of Mt. Tujiao to serve as cover and restrict Linley's speed.

"Whoosh!"

Linley charged downwards at high speed, heading straight towards Haydson.

With a single step, Haydson moved a great distance, and with a second step, he appeared behind a giant boulder. Linley was currently located on the opposite side of the boulder.

"Worldbreaker!"

The earthen heavy sword chopped down with boundless power. That man-sized boulder split apart as easily as tofu, shattering into pebbles as soon as the energy surrounding the heavy sword touched it. Linley, however, had already retreated at high speed, having sensed that the situation had turned dangerous.

“Bang!”

The entire Mt. Tujiao suddenly had a terrifying large crack which was hundreds of meters long appear in the mountain itself, with the crack three or four meters wide. Countless stones rained down in every direction.

“God!” The millions of spectators were stunned.

They saw how, before their very eyes, an enormous crack had appeared in the mountain itself. The thousand meter tall mountain had been half-split!

“Boom!” Linley struck out once more with his Profound Truths of the Earth – 132 Layered Waves, chopping at Haydson.

Haydson once more dodged.

Linley’s heavy sword struck on a nearby tree. “Rumble.” With a bizarre sound, the tree turned into dust, while at the same time, the vibrations from the adamantine heavy sword’s chop travelled in a straight line from the top of the mountain to the center of the mountain, and then expanded outwards.

“Rumble...”

In the middle of the mountain, a man sized tunnel began to appear, and countless crushed rocks came flowing out from within it. Those rocks had been completely crushed to dust, to the point where they floated upwards into the wind, covering the entire mountain with dust.

In the blink of an eye...

A tunnel that passed straight from the top of the mountain to the center of the mountain could clearly be seen by the countless spectators.

The countless spectators were deathly quiet.

Emperor Johann’s throat clenched twice.

Good heavens. What sort of terrifying power was this? Who could possibly withstand a single blow from these two? One sword split half the mountain, while the other bore a tunnel straight through it, turning the stone into dust. This was simply inconceivable.

“That’s the Profound Truths of the Earth!” Barker and the others were excited, but at the same time, they were alarmed by the astonishing power of the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson.

Olivier silently watched everything.

The wind blew wildly. Linley, hiding his body within the wind, would constantly appear in multiple places. As for Haydson, he continued to dodge nonstop in that bizarre method. The spectators below only heard those nonstop powerful exploding sounds, followed by the sound of boulders splitting apart and trees either exploding or disintegrating.

“Boom!” Part of the mountain peak was actually split off and sent flying downwards. Tumbling down the mountainside, countless trees were split apart in its path, and the spectators below began to cry in alarm.

Kenyon of the War God’s College, one of the spectating Saints, immediately went forward. With a sweep of his sturdy staff, he borrowed the force of the titanic rock and sent it flying towards an empty space at the base of the mountain. Only then did the nearly hundred-meter wide rock roll away.

“Retreat! Retreat!”

The soldiers of the army immediately issued orders, directing the spectators to begin retreating. The imperial clan and the nobles began to retreat as well. Good heavens, this battle was far more than they had thought it would be. At such a close distance, it would be simply too dangerous.

Everyone began to retreat.

Linley and Haydson’s battle grew more and more frantic and more and more reckless. With just three or four full force sword chops, Haydson had all but chopped the entire Mt. Tujiao into several pieces, while Linley’s attacks were causing Mt. Tujiao to split apart. Soon...

"Rumble..."

Mt. Tujiao simply couldn't sustain the damage anymore. The utterly ravaged Mt. Tujiao collapsed, sending countless amounts of dust flying everywhere. The spectators immediately began to retreat, frightened. Fortunately, they had already retreated earlier, and they had multiple Saints protecting them.

After the dust and rubble settled down, a field of rubble roughly two or three hundred meters high appeared in front of them.

Mt. Tujiao was gone!

All that was left was an enormous pile of rubble!

"Good heavens!" The countless spectators stared at the two people standing above the rubble. Linley and Haydson were both covered with blood, and their faces were pale. But their auras were still incredibly fierce.

None of the viewers would ever be able to forget this battle. Regardless of who would be the winner or who would die, they wouldn't think for an instant that the loser was weak or had performed poorly.

"Linley, you lose!" Haydson stared coldly at Linley.

Linley's dark golden eyes stared silently at Haydson.

“Even after you Dragonform, your battle-qi is weaker than mine. After such a long, exhausting battle, your speed has already begun to slow down.” Haydson said confidently.

Indeed.

In his human form, Linley was only of the ninth rank, and after Dragonforming, his battle-qi was only at the level of a mid-stage Saint. But Haydson was someone who had trained for centuries. His reservoir of battle-qi was far deeper than Linley’s. After such a vigorous battle, Linley’s battle-qi was almost empty. Without sufficient battle-qi to support him, his speed naturally would decrease.

Haydson’s lips curved up.

“Boom!” Haydson suddenly moved. An explosive sonic boom could be heard as Haydson charged forward at high speed, while Linley also dodged at high speed, relying on his powerful Dragonform as well as the support of the Windshadow spell.

But with his battle-qi almost all gone, Linley’s speed was now slower than Haydson’s.

“Worldbreaker!” Sensing his chance, Haydson aimed a final blow at Linley.

“Shkreeeech!” An ear-piercing, heart-shaking screech shook the heavens, while a vicious black shadow appeared from within the rubble and charged at high speed, appearing between Linley and Haydson.

At the same time, it expanded in size.

"Bebe." Linley was startled.

Bebe had transformed to be two meters tall and four meters long, while at the same time, he slammed his sharp claws viciously against that earthen heavy sword.

"F*ck off!" Bebe howled angrily.

"Boom!"

The earthen heavy sword and Bebe's sharp claws collided.

Haydson was knocked flying, and he spat out a mouthful of blood. As for Bebe, he too was knocked backwards by the terrifying power of that attack.

"F*ck, that hurts!" An angry howl.

Fast as lightning, Bebe once more appeared in front of Haydson. Despite having taken the Worldbreaker attack head on, Bebe's body only had a hint of blood on it. He hadn't suffered a severe injury at all.

Haydson had fallen onto the ground. Seeing this freak charge towards him, he had no idea where it had come from. All he knew was...if he didn't block, he would die.

Haydson immediately jumped to his feet.

Where had this freak come from? It had taken his Worldbreaker blow head on without injury!

"Worldbreaker!" Haydson went all out to try and preserve his life.

"Bang!"

Bebe slammed both claws directly against the earthen heavy sword, sending it flying out of Haydson's hands. Haydson was sent flying backwards as well, and fresh blood once more spewed forth from his lips as he fell heavily to the ground.

All of the onlookers were stunned, and their mouths gaped open.

"You want to kill my Boss? You wanna die?" Bebe howled angrily as he charged forward yet again.

"Bebe, stop." Linley immediately shouted.

"Boss, what are you doing?" Bebe turned to look at Linley. Linley glanced at Haydson. After this duel, Linley knew that Haydson actually wouldn't be a huge threat to him in the future.

Linley shook his head, then mentally said, "Bebe, forget it."

Bebe was extremely dissatisfied. He jumped next to that earthen heavy sword, lifted it up, then put it into his mouth. "Crunch." "Crunch." With two crunching sounds, he actually devoured and swallowed that earthen heavy sword.

"I, Bebe, will spare your life. I'll eat your little toy though. Consider this your punishment." The giant Bebe said casually as he stared down at Haydson from mid-air with two cold eyes.

"How...how is that possible?" Haydson forced himself to his feet, staring in disbelief. His sword had been forged through an alloy of countless precious materials. It wasn't much weaker than Linley's adamantine heavy sword, but it had actually been eaten by this magical beast."

"Master Linley, this...this magical beast?" Emperor Johann asked from afar.

Bebe turned to stare at Emperor Johann angrily. "What? My Boss is a magus. When a magus engages in a duel, it is very normal for him to bring his magical beast companions. Why can't I help? I, Bebe, have already been quite forbearing, since Haeru hasn't even come out yet. Otherwise, if my Boss, myself, and Haeru were to join forces, killing Haydson would've been as easy as eating that sword just now. Haeru, show yourself!"

"Groooooowl." At this time, an angry growl could be heard as another magical beast came charging out of the rubble. It also began to grow in size. It was the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru. Haeru flew directly next to Bebe, standing in mid-air alongside Bebe as he glanced at Haydson.

Right now, both Linley and Haydson were badly injured.

But the distant, countless spectators were no longer paying any attention to them. Their attention was on these two Saint-level magical beasts that had suddenly appeared, especially that first one. The first one was too terrifying.

He had taken a hit from the Worldbreaker attack without any problems.

With a few crunchy chomps, he had eaten Haydson's personal weapon.

"Hey, Haydson, you got any issues with that?" Bebe lowered his head to scowl at Haydson.

Seeing the cold light flashing in Bebe's eyes, Haydson knew that if he were to protest strongly, Bebe would probably claw him to death. Even at full strength, it would be hard for him to win against a magical beast like Bebe, with such astonishing defense, attack, and speed. Much less now.

Haydson turned his head, maintaining his silence.

"Haydson, I admit that I lost this duel." Linley said.

Haydson glanced at Linley. In his heart, he was beginning to admire Linley. "Linley, today, actually, the two of us fought to a draw. I was able to rely on my deeper reservoir of battle-qi to take a slight advantage. As for your magical beast..."

Haydson glanced at Haeru, then looked at Bebe.

Bebe immediately stared at him. Haydson laughed bitterly. "Your magical beast is the most terrifying Saint-level magical beast I have ever seen." Hearing these words, Bebe raised his little head up arrogantly.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 34, Fame Spreading Far

With a flip of his hand, Linley retrieved a long robe from his interspatial ring. He returned to his human form, then put on the long robe. With a calm laugh, he said, "Bebe, Haeru, let's go back." At the same time, Linley looked at Haydson. The Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, was looking at him as well.

Both Haydson and Linley's faces were rather pale. After this duel, both of them had suffered severe injuries, internal injuries.

These two ultimate experts both nodded slightly. And then Haydson, paying no attention to anyone else, rose into the air and flew away towards the east. He transformed into a blurred black dot, then disappeared into the eastern horizons.

Linley walked in front, with Bebe and Haeru, his two Saint-level magical beasts, behind him.

Seeing the man and his two magical beasts, Emperor Johann, Kenyon, Lanke and the others all felt great pressure. Linley and his two Saint-level magical beasts all possessed astonishing power.

"Master Linley." Emperor Johann was the first to walk forward and greet him warmly.

Linley nodded slightly, his face still rather white. "Emperor Johann, I've gained some insights as a result of this duel. I need to go back and train."

Emperor Johann was startled, but then he hurriedly said, "Alright, alright. Master Linley's training takes priority."

Linley smiled politely, then headed towards his own people. Wharton, Delia and the others immediately went forward to welcome him, and Wharton immediately gave Linley a bearhug.

"Big bro." Wharton's eyes were red, but he managed to laugh.

"Let's go. Let's go home." Linley said as he glanced at Delia. Delia's beautiful eyelashes were wet. When she had seen Linley in danger just then, Delia had cried from worry.

Linley felt a surge of warmth in his heart.

"Let's all go together." Linley laughed as he looked at Delia, who looked back at him and nodded slightly.

Linley's group immediately left. The countless bystanders all quite conscientiously parted, giving them a path out. Virtually everyone was staring at Linley with a worshipful look in their eyes. A twenty seven year old youngster could actually fight with Haydson, the reputedly strongest Saint in the continent, on such a level. And what's more, he even had two Saint-level magical beasts, one of which was so powerful that it could suppress Haydson.

"Elder brother..." Blumer looked towards his older brother, Olivier.

Olivier was publicly hailed as a prodigy, but three months ago, he had been defeated by the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson. Nobody blamed him for losing; after all, his opponent had been Haydson. Everyone in the Yulan continent still felt Olivier was an absolute genius.

However...

Linley was younger than him, much younger!

But the result of Linley's duel with Haydson was clearly different. Even Haydson himself had said that if it weren't for the fact that Linley's battle-qi was insufficient, he wouldn't have been able to defeat Linley.

Victory thanks to superior battle-qi?

In the eyes of many experts, that couldn't even be considered a victory. This was because the understanding of the Elemental Laws was far more difficult than cultivating battle-qi. As long as one had sufficient time, one's battle-qi could definitely be increased.

"Second brother, I plan to go train in the Arctic Icecap. Take care of yourself." Olivier said calmly towards his younger brother.

"Elder brother!" Blumer stared at him, his eyes wide.

He had heard his older brother speak of the Arctic Icecap in the past. The Planar Overseer was there, along with some Saints who had hidden themselves there to train in those wild, desolate, lifeless lands.

Olivier turned his head to glance at his younger brother. "Second brother, remember. You are the younger brother of Olivier. Don't disappoint me."

"Right." Blumer nodded solemnly.

Olivier smiled, and then flew into the air, streaking towards the north. His robes fluttering in the wind, and carrying those two longswords on his back, Olivier disappeared off into the horizon, heading towards the Arctic Icecap.

"Haydson, Linley...when I return, I will definitely defeat both of you!"

Olivier stared towards the north, his eyes filled with newfound resolve.

Under the direction of the army, the millions of spectators quickly dispersed in every direction. Even as they left, they all felt extremely excited and jubilant, forming small groups as they discussed today's battle.

One sword split the mountain. Another sword tunneled through it.

A thousand meter high mountain that had an area of several square miles had been turned into a giant pile of rubble.

And then, those two magical beasts had appeared.

All of these events had caused the spectators to feel uncontrollable excitement. After this duel, everyone was filled with awe towards Linley. A twenty seven year old who was able to fight so well against Haydson, and had two such incredible magical beast companions! By the looks of it, one of the magical beasts was capable of beating Haydson.

If he fought together alongside his two magical beasts, who in the Yulan continent would dare stand against them?

"It is fortunate that I had chosen Wharton. Thankfully, our ancestor, the War God, guided me." Emperor Johann let out a long sigh. "I didn't realize that Linley was this formidable. Fortunately, he's become in-laws with our imperial clan."

After this battle at Mt. Tujiao west of the imperial capital, the millions of spectators began to spread the news with astonishing speed. Soon, Linley's fame resounded throughout the world, becoming one of the most famous names in the entire Yulan continent!

He was able to fight the most powerful Saint, Haydson, to a standstill!

Only twenty seven years old!

An Arch Magus of the ninth rank!

And a grandmaster sculptor!

And what's more, he was in control of two terrifying Saint-level magical beasts, one of which was capable of defeating Haydson.

This seemed like something out of a legend. Whether as a sculptor, as a magus, or as a warrior, Linley had reached a legendary level. It was as though multiple legends had taken form.

Without question, he was an unequaled genius.

Linley's name and fame as a Saint quickly spread across the entire Yulan continent, much like how the War God's had in the distant past. With some gossipers further exaggerating these legendary events, countless youths began to set Linley as their goal and began to train all the harder!

Linley was guaranteed to leave behind a thick stroke in the history books of the Yulan continent.

What's more...Linley's glory had just begun. He was only twenty seven years old. His future prospects were unlimited!

The news of Linley's duel with Haydson quickly reached the intelligence networks of the Radiant Church, and arrived at the Sacred Isle via flying magical beast couriers.

The waves crashed against the Sacred Isle. Located in the sea, it was extremely peaceful, and within it there was the powerful force of the Radiant Church.

On the ninth floor of the Radiant Temple.

The Holy Emperor, Heidens, was quietly flipping through the treasured holy scripture of the Radiant Church. Suddenly, two rapping sounds could be clearly heard on his door.

"Come in." Heidens voice was as steady as always.

Guillermo, dressed in a long red robe, hurried in. He stared at the Holy Emperor, Heidens, and said in a serious voice, "Your Holiness, word has come regarding Linley's duel with Haydson."

Heidens raised his head to glance at Guillermo.

The look on Guillermo's face aroused Heiden's suspicions. He accepted the piece of paper from Guillermo and casually flipped through it. As he did, his previously calm expression froze.

"Your Holiness?" Guillermo said in a quiet voice.

Heidens sighed softly, then tossed the parchment onto his desk. Rising to his feet, he walked to the nearby window. Staring at the distant, boundless sea, he said, "Linley...I knew that you are a genius, but I didn't expect that in ten short years, you could have grown so much."

Long ago, Heidens had predicted that Linley would become very accomplished. Otherwise, he wouldn't have sent six Angels to kill Linley.

But who would've imagined that soon after those six Angels failed, Linley would cause such a huge stir. First, he fought Olivier to a standstill, which had already shocked the Radiant Church. But this time...

"Your Holiness, what should we do?" Guillermo asked in a low voice. "Currently, Linley is already roughly on par with Haydson."

"Haydson..."

Heidens continued staring outside the window, his back to Guillermo. "Haydson is indeed quite strong. If I wanted to defeat him, I'd have to expend quite a bit of effort."

Although Haydson was reputed to be the strongest Saint, there had been many people who had never competed against him. Aside from those experts who had been quietly training for many years, there was the Holy Emperor, the Dark Patriarch, and a number of other experts who didn't care about fame.

Oracular Magic was one of the three types of High Magic, after all.

A peak-stage Saint-level practitioner of Oracular Magic was extremely powerful, far more so than an ordinary peak-stage Saint-level Grand Magus. Heidens was confident that if he were to go all out, he would be able to defeat Haydson.

That was only if he went all out. What's more, the intelligence network had reputed that Linley also had two terrifying magical beast companions, one of whom even Haydson apparently couldn't do anything to.

"Linley has those two Saint-level magical beasts. If I and Osenno were to both attack, most likely at most we would only be able to force Linley to flee. To kill Linley...we would need to have all the experts of the Church come!" Heidens said in a low voice.

To defeat and to kill were two totally different concepts.

That combination of Linley and two magical beasts was simply too terrifying. Even the Radiant Church needed all of its most powerful experts working together in order to be confident of killing him.

"But even if we succeeded, the Radiant Church will suffer heavy losses. And the imperial capital is the territory of the War God..." A gold light flashed in Heiden's eyes.

Heidens' heart was filled with anger!

"Bam!" The glass window in front of him transformed into glass shards.

"We previously could have killed Linley, but we didn't go full force against him. But now, we no longer have a chance." Heidens looked towards Guillermo, then announced helplessly, "The price of killing Linley is simply too high. We can't afford to pay it. And what's more, we wouldn't necessarily succeed...from today onwards, no longer act against Linley. If we don't make trouble for him...I refuse to believe he would dare come and attack the Sacred Isle."

At this point, this was the only option left to the Radiant Church.

"Yes, Your Holiness." Guillermo laughed bitterly in his heart.

Guillermo couldn't help but think back to the first time he had met Linley, when he had been in a hotel within the Ernst Institute. At that time, Linley was just a hopeful future prospect.

Only ten years had passed!

That youngster had already become one of the most powerful people in the Yulan continent, and the Radiant Church could no longer do anything about him.

Heidens was frowning.

His heart was filled with hatred!

Did the Church truly lack the power to deal with Linley? No! It had the power! In addition to its high level experts such as the Holy Emperor and the Praetor, the Radiant Church actually had a number of even more terrifying people in their ranks.

These people had all been training for thousands of years, some even longer.

However...

These people no longer served the Radiant Church.

"These traitors have all forsaken the Lord and only care about themselves!" Heidens' heart was filled with anger. Those people were all extremely powerful, but none of them cared about the 'Radiant Sovereign' any longer, nor did they care about religion or worship.

This group of people had once been the pride of the Radiant Church.

They even included past Holy Emperors. But now, most likely they wouldn't even care if the Radiant Church were to be totally obliterated. The goal of these people was to become Deities!

To enter the Deity realm!

"Your Holiness?" Guillermo saw that Heidens was daydreaming and quietly called out to him.

Heidens let out a long sigh, then looked at Guillermo. He instructed, "Right, Guillermo, that Dylin of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts dealt us a severe setback. Many followers perished...we must quickly establish ourselves in the Anarchic Lands. We must let the radiant glory of the Lord illuminate that place."

Guillermo immediately nodded.

The more followers the Lord had, the greater the gifts the Lord would bestow. The 48 Anarchic Duchies were like a piece of juicy meat which the Radiant Church had set its eyes on for a long time now. They had already been engaged in turmoil and strife for thousands of years. The Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows both wanted to subjugate that area, but neither had been successful in their struggles to do so.

The Anarchic Lands bordered both the O'Brien Empire and the Rohault Empire, as well as the great plains to the far east which were ruled over by the ruthless steppe horsemen...

To tame the Anarchic Lands was extremely hard.

"You can go now." Heidens said calmly.

When Guillermo left, Heidens felt a certain sourness in his heart. "The Cult of Shadows. The Anarchic Lands. And Linley, who will be a great danger in the future..."

He knew that Linley would be a threat, but what could he do?

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 35, Target: Anarchic Lands!

The gentle wind blew softly against Linley's hair as he sat quietly in the meditative posture on the ground, his eyes shut. His soul had become one with the earth and one with the wind.

"Rumble..." Linley could sense the heat of the scorching hot magma in the depths of the earth.

"Swish..." Linley could sense the changes in the speed of the wind. In the upper atmosphere, the wind was very strong, but the wind within the imperial capital's manors was much weaker. Linley could clearly sense all the changes of the wind.

Linley enjoyed the sensation of training. Each time he gained a new insight and each time he made a breakthrough, he felt his spirit be uplifted and be transformed!

This was a very emotional event which made his heart tremble each time.

"The War God's words were perhaps accurate. It is good to focus one's attention on a single path of training. The Laws of the Earth are vast and boundless, while the 'Throbbing Pulse of the World' should be a fairly deep, profound subset of those laws." Linley could sense this.

Although he and Haydson both studied the Laws of the Earth, they had taken different routes.

His own vibrational attacks were clearly on a higher level than Haydson's!

"Thruuum." "Thruuum." The unique rhythm and tempo of the earth totally absorbed Linley's attention. Linley once more allowed himself to be totally submerged into it as he worked hard to understand the profound secrets hidden within it.

Ever since that battle with Haydson, Linley had become publicly acknowledged as one of the most powerful experts people knew about in the Yulan continent. He was already someone who was spoken of as being on the level of Haydson, the Holy Emperor, and the Dark Patriarch. In the imperial capital of Channe, the status of the Baruch clan had become even more extraordinary as well.

Clearly, although he had become famous, no one dared to come disturb Linley any more.

"With each new insight, I have a different sensation." Linley opened his eyes, a smile coming unbidden to his face. Linley sighed with amazement to himself, "Even the 'Throbbing Pulse of the World' contains such immeasurably deep and abstruse secrets. How vast and boundless are the Laws of the Earth, then?"

No wonder it was so hard to become a Deity.

And even an incredible person such as the War God remained at the Demigod level despite five thousand years having passed.

"Big bro!" Wharton and the Barker brothers ran over.

"I knew you were coming." Linley laughed and stood up. When he had been in tune with the earth, Linley had sensed Wharton and the others walk over.

After everyone finished lunch.

"Zassler." Linley rose to his feet and smiled as he gestured at Zassler. He brought Zassler into his own courtyard, and the two sat down facing each other.

"Lord Linley, is there something you need?" Zassler asked questioningly.

A complicated expression was on Linley's face. He sighed, "Zassler, you know much about the affairs of my Baruch clan." Zassler had been here at the estate for a long time now. Naturally, he had learned everything there was to know. Zassler immediately nodded.

Linley said calmly, "My parents are both dead now, and the primary culprit is the Radiant Church. In the past, when I left the city of Hess, I swore an oath that one day, I would eradicate the Radiant Church and pull it out by its roots."

Zassler knew of this goal of Linley's.

Linley looked at Zassler. "I know that right now, my power is increasing steadily. What's more, with Bebe, Haeru, and the Barker brothers...I have confidence in my ability to deal with the Radiant Church. I am preparing to start acting against the Radiant Church!"

"You are starting?" Zassler was startled.

Linley was planning to openly act against the Radiant Church?

"Linley, although it is true that our power is now quite formidable, the roots of the Radiant Church are very deep as well..." Zassler hurriedly tried to dissuade him. Although he, too, wished to destroy the Radiant Church, they had to be wise about it.

Linley smiled and waved his hand. "No, I'm not going to fight them head on yet."

"Last time, I heard you talking about the Anarchic Lands. Didn't you say the Radiant Church highly values that area? And that there is a lot of power there?" Linley asked.

Zassler was over eight hundred years old, and he had spent many years living in the Anarchic Lands.

"Of course they value it!"

Zassler explained in detail, "Linley, based on my understanding of the Radiant Church, aside from sacrificing pure souls to the Radiant Sovereign, the Radiant Sovereign also needs sufficient worshippers! The more worshippers they have, the more faith is generated. The Radiant Church always prattles on about 'spreading the Lord's light across the entire world', precisely because of this goal."

Linley nodded slightly.

Zassler clicked his fingernails together. "Linley, in the entire continent, the most chaotic areas are the great plains of the far east, the Anarchic Lands, and the Eighteen Northern Duchies!"

"Of those places, the Eighteen Northern Duchies are engaged in constant warfare, while the steppe riders of the great plains are famous for their savagery. Bloodlust is bred into their very bones. How could they possibly worship the Radiant Sovereign? The very nature of the steppe warriors guarantees that the Radiant Church would not be able to succeed with them." Zassler chatted slowly. "As for the Eighteen Northern Duchies, those Eighteen Northern Duchies already worship the Frost Goddess."

"The Frost Goddess?" Linley actually didn't know much about the Eighteen Northern Duchies.

"Right." Zassler nodded. "Although the Eighteen Northern Duchies engage in constant battle amongst themselves, the Frost Goddess Shrine holds absolute dominion amongst them. And the secrets of the Frost Goddess Shrine are immeasurably deep...and what's more, the Frost Goddess Shrine isn't ambitious, and has remained within the Eighteen Northern Duchies this entire time. Naturally, the Radiant Church wouldn't go and provoke them and create a powerful foe."

Linley laughed.

Linley had always wondered about this. The Eighteen Northern Duchies were located to the north of the Forest of Darkness. The only nation it bordered was the O'Brien Empire, and the area it covered was roughly that of an Administrative Province. Given the power of the O'Brien Empire, taming it shouldn't be hard.

But why hadn't they?

Only now did Linley understand that this had to do with the Frost Goddess Shrine.

"Since these two places are out of the question, the only place left is the Anarchic Lands!" Zassler sighed. "The Anarchic Lands are extremely chaotic. Terrifyingly chaotic."

"Chaotic? How so?"

Zassler sighed emotionally. "First of all, in the past, according to calculations, there were 48 Duchies. But the boundaries in the Anarchic Lands constantly shift. Every few years, the number of Duchies will change. Perhaps there would be fifty, or perhaps there would be forty. It is hard to say. This is the first reason why it is chaotic."

"The second reason why it is chaotic is because of their borders. They are located next to the O'Brien Empire, the Rohault Empire, and the clans of the great plains in the far east. All three of these powers have designs upon them!"

“The third reason they are chaotic is because both the Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows have desired to hold sway over the Anarchic Lands. In these lands, both of these religions are very powerful and have great influence. The two religions are diametrically opposed, and the struggles between them persist unabated.”

Listening to this, Linley couldn't help but sigh. If, given all of these conditions, the Anarchic Lands wasn't in a state of chaos, it wouldn't make any sense at all.

“There is a fourth reason why they are chaotic!” Zassler sighed with feeling. “To the north of the Anarchic Lands is the vast Forest of Darkness. The Forest of Darkness contains a multitude of magical beasts, with the total number being not much less than the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Every few decades, or perhaps every decade, there will be a wave of magical beasts...countless magical beasts will come from the Forest of Darkness and charge towards the Anarchic Lands. This is no ordinary disaster!”

Linley's face changed.

An explosive surge of magical beasts?

After having experienced the Apocalypse Day of the Holy Union, Linley knew exactly how terrifying a large wave of magical beasts could be. That definitely was a day of doom.

“Of course, although it is described as a wave of magical beasts, it can't compete with the 'Apocalypse Day' in terms of how terrifying that day was.” Zassler laughed. “Most of the magical beasts which come from the Forest of Darkness are middle-rank or low-rank beasts. Only very few are high ranked magical beasts. And although they are numerous, at those times, all of the Duchies in the Anarchic Lands will work together and be able to wipe out all of the magical beasts."

Linley now understood.

If there were few high ranking magical beasts, the damage that these waves could cause would be much lower. In addition, the numbers weren't as large as when the Holy Union had been invaded. Naturally, the amount of damage which could be caused would be limited.

"Linley, but the difference between this and what happened in the Holy Union is that the wave of magical beasts coming from the Forest of Darkness doesn't just happen once. It happens every decade or every few decades, and as a result, the Anarchic Lands can never be truly at peace." Zassler sighed.

Linley secretly sighed as well.

Due to these four reasons, the Anarchic Lands would indeed be forever chaotic.

"Although the Duchies are small, all 48 Duchies combined make up a large amount of territory. The Anarchic Lands definitely rival roughly half of the O'Brien Empire in scope. In fact, the size of the area which the Anarchic Lands covers is roughly the same size as the current Holy Union."

Linley nodded as well.

After the Apocalypse Day, the Holy Union only had two thirds of the territory it previously held. And of course, the O'Brien Empire was a territorially vast Empire to begin with.

It made sense that the Anarchic Lands, being half the size of the O'Brien Empire, was roughly the same size as the current Holy Union.

"Such a vast territory naturally attracts the interest of the Radiant Church. The Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows both have many experts there, and their roots are deep."

Hearing this, Linley laughed.

How many people would the Radiant Church send to a territory which was roughly equal in size to the entire Holy Union?

"If the Radiant Church has twenty or thirty Saints, they would at least have to send five, six, or seven Saints over there." Linley said to himself.

The Sacred Isle was definitely the place where most of the Radiant Church's experts would cluster.

The Saints sent to the Anarchic Lands most likely should not be the most powerful experts the Radiant Church had.

"After my little brother's wedding, we'll head to the Anarchic Lands."

Linley looked at Zassler, smiling. "Let our war against the Radiant Church commence in the Anarchic Lands."

Destroying the roots which the Radiant Church had painstakingly cultivated over thousands of years in the Anarchic Lands would definitely enrage the Radiant Church to the point of insanity.

"The Anarchic Lands?" Zassler's eyes lit up. "Excellent!"

Linley smiled. Destroying the influence which the Radiant Church had built up there over thousands of years definitely wasn't something that would be accomplished in a year or two.

"I'll spend part of my time training while spending the rest of my time dealing with them. After destroying their forces in the Anarchic Lands, I should have reached the Saint-level in my human form. By then, my understanding of the 'Throbbing Pulse of the World' should be very high as well. At that time...we can directly engage in battle against the Radiant Church."

Linley had a very clear series of plans in his mind.

They would act in accordance with these plans. They wouldn't be impatient or rash. One step at a time, they would rip out the roots of the Radiant Church.

Wharton had previously said that his mind would be too unsettled to be able to have his wedding with Nina before Linley's duel with Haydson. They had now set the date of the wedding: September 15th.

It was now the beginning of September. Both the Count's estate as well as the imperial clan were busy making preparations for this grand wedding.

The wedding banquet was far more important than the engagement banquet.

Count Wharton's estate. Linley's residence.

"Linley, our ship and our crew are planning to return to the Yulan Empire. I need to go back with my teacher." Delia looked at Linley, her lips curving downwards as she spoke. Linley had previously been smiling, but suddenly, his smile froze.

Knowing that Delia was about to leave, Linley couldn't help but feel a bit heartsick.

The past few months he had spent with Delia had been the most relaxed period in the past ten years of Linley's life. Every day, he was filled with smiles.

"You are leaving?" Linley forced out a smile. "Then let me wish you a safe journey."

Delia actually smiled. She could tell that Linley was unwilling to part with her. "However...I told my teacher that he can go back first, and that I would stay here as a private citizen."

"Ah?!" Linley didn't know whether to laugh or to cry.

"Are you unhappy?" Delia frowned.

"Happy, happy!" Linley hurriedly said, but then he looked solemnly at Delia. "Delia, there's something I need to tell you."

"What?" Delia looked expectantly at Linley.

"After my younger brother's grand wedding, I will most likely need to go to the Anarchic Lands." Linley said.

"Oh. Then I will go as well." Delia didn't hesitate in the slightest.

But just at this moment, a series of excited shouts could be heard, while a human figure rushed at high speed to Linley's residence. From outside the door, Gates' loud voice could be heard shouting, "Lord, my fourth brother has also broken through and reached the ninth rank!"

Of the five Barker brothers, four now had the power of Saints.

"Yet another Saint?" A smile couldn't help but appear on Linley's face. These five brothers were indeed capable of easily bringing people wonderful surprises.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 36, Reynolds' Crisis

Of Barker and his brothers, at this point, Barker, Ankh, Boone, and Gates had all reached the ninth rank. After transforming, they had the power of a Saint. As for the third brother, Hazer, he was just one small step away from reaching the ninth rank and could break through at any moment. Of the five brothers, Barker, Gates, and Hazer had already mastered the art of 'wielding something heavy as though it were light'.

"After my little brother's grand wedding, we'll head for the Anarchic Lands. With the assistance of Barker and his brothers, things will be much simpler." Linley's eyes glowed with an unspoken light.

Linley was extremely excited and couldn't wait to begin his future life in the Anarchic Lands, where he would do battle against the Radiant Church.

Aside from the wonderful surprise of Boone reaching the ninth rank, everyone was also eagerly anticipating the upcoming wedding. Wharton was all smiles every day as well.

This time, Wharton and Nina would be holding their wedding ceremony in the imperial palace. The excitement and hustle bustle would far exceed the engagement ceremony.

Within a quiet courtyard.

After having finished his training, Linley sat next to a stone desk. With a flip of his hand, he retrieved a flask of fruit wine. While drinking wine, he stared forward, pondering. From the look of him, he was clearly thinking about something.

Bebe stealthily peeked at Linley.

"Swish." Bebe suddenly scurried onto Linley's table.

Linley was startled by Bebe. "Bebe, what are you doing?"

Bebe stood up straight, folding his claws over his chest, staring at Linley with an appraising gaze. "Based on the observations of myself, Bebe, I've discovered that you, Boss...are thinking lustful thoughts about love!"

Bebe spoke with the aura of absolute conviction.

Linley didn't know whether to laugh or to cry. "I'm thinking about those dear bros of mine. In a few days, it will be Wharton's grand wedding. But Boss Yale, Second Bro, Fourth Bro...none of them will be able to come..."

Linley let out a long sigh.

"I wonder how the three of them are currently doing." Yale, Reynolds, and George, these three dear friends of Linley, held a very firm position in Linley's heart. Their love for each other was as deep as that of real brothers.

Reynolds wasn't doing very well. After that short break, he had returned to the army. Even after learning of Linley's duel with Haydson, he hadn't had a chance to come watch.

This was because, as a soldier, he had to follow orders and procedures.

Although Reynolds was quite sloppy and lazy, when he was in the army, he absolutely was a man who would do what he said he would and who would obey orders without question.

At the borders of the Southeast Administrative Province of the O'Brien Empire, in the area south of the city of Neil [Ne'er], was the area where the O'Brien Empire intersected with the Rohault Empire. This was also a fairly chaotic area.

The Rohault Empire was located to the south of the Anarchic Lands and west of the great plains of the far east.

Due to constant warfare with the steppe riders of the great plains, the Rohault Empire had a very ferocious, martial spirit, and their armies of mounted knights were legendary for their prowess. The Rohault Empire and the O'Brien Empire constantly engaged in warfare in the area near Neil City, and the blood from those countless battles had stained the very dirt itself a dark red color in the wilderness outside the city.

"Whoosh!" "Whoosh!" The strong wind howled through the wild grass, which was half the height of a man. The wild grass bent from the wind. Through it, one could see that there was a small creek nearby, where dozens of stallions were drinking water with their heads lowered.

Several dozen knights were seated on the ground, resting, while several others were maintaining a watch.

Right now, Reynolds was sitting atop a tree, his hawk-like eyes constantly scanning their surroundings. When he was in the army, Reynolds was very different from how he acted in private. Right now, he wore a deep blue armor which had a golden insignia of a flame emblazoned onto his chest. This represented that he was a member of the 'Golden Flame Legion', one of the elite legions of the O'Brien Empire.

And the design of his armor gave testament to his rank; senior captain.

Reynolds withdrew a watch from his breast-pocket and checked the time. "Three in the afternoon. At five, the others should have arrived."

"Milord." A blue-haired knight walked over with a laugh. "The Rohault Empire is currently not in a state of warfare with the O'Brien Empire. Don't you feel that we are wasting energy by maintaining such a long watch?"

"Tiger, stop talking." Reynolds frowned.

"Yes sir." The blue-haired knight no longer dared to laugh.

Commanding this squadron of knights was actually a downgraded position for him as a senior captain. In total, there were three medium-sized squadrons with nine hundred people total. Right now, they had been separated into eighteen smaller squads and taken separate routes. The squad which Reynolds was leading was actually his personal squad, and a very powerful one.

He had already been in the army for quite a few years, and Reynolds had slowly risen through the ranks from common soldier to his current position.

"Although the Rohault Empire has not been in open warfare for over ten years with our O'Brien Empire, aren't there always small skirmishes? Each year, the Empire suffers over ten thousand casualties from these border skirmishes." Reynolds said solemnly. "And based on my calculations, it has been a very long time since a large battle. I imagine the population of the Rohault Empire has already reached its limits, and they will therefore force some battles. Thus, we must be careful."

The meaning of warfare was very simple.

When the population rose too much and there wasn't enough land or food to support the people, the Empires would naturally begin to war against each other. If they didn't, the Empires would fall into internal chaos. After two Empires both suffered a high amount of casualties, the reduced population would mean that the amount of land they had was sufficient to sustain their people. Naturally, they would cease fighting.

In truth, this was one of the most basic principles.

After all, to most commoners, the most important, basic necessity was that of sufficient food and a place to live.

"Yes, milord. We will be careful." The blue-haired knight laughed.

“Right. Milord, you previously were at the Ernst Institute with Master Linley. I heard that he fought Lord Haydson to a standstill?” The blue-haired knight said quietly.

Hearing his subordinate ask him about Linley, Reynolds couldn't help but begin to grin.

“The only reason he suffered a slight loss was because he didn't have enough battle-qi.” Reynolds said calmly. In his heart, Reynolds actually felt quite regretful that he hadn't been able to go watch this life-and-death battle of his beloved bro.

Turning his head to stare westwards, Reynolds squinted his eyes due to the scorching rays of the sun. His dear brother Linley was in the imperial capital to the west.

“In a bit more than a year, my ten year commitment will be up and I'll be able to leave the army.” Reynolds secretly sighed to himself.

The eight-plus years of army life had caused Reynolds to truly enjoy being in the army, but Reynolds knew that per the regulations of his clan, if the descendants of the clan were able to reach the rank of legion commander or deputy legion commander, they would be permitted to remain in the army. If they did not, then they would have to return home to the clan.

Right now, Reynolds was only a senior captain. He was still one step away.

But although Reynolds did rather enjoy the army life, he didn't want to spend his entire life in the army. He still wanted to quietly train his magic in peace. He was already a magus of the seventh rank. If he spent another hundred years in painstaking training, he still had a shot at becoming an Arch Magus of the ninth rank.

While he quietly waited, the other squads began to arrive. By around 4:50 PM, around 400 people had gathered here, with 500 yet to arrive.

"Hrm?" Reynolds suddenly frowned.

He suddenly had the sensation of impending danger, as though an invisible, murderous force was stealthily creeping towards them. As a magus, Reynolds had an extremely powerful spiritual force, and his premonitions were far stronger than most people's.

"Everyone, be careful!" Reynolds suddenly shouted coldly.

"Yes, milord!" All the surrounding knights answered, but right at this moment, the sound of frantic hoof beats could be heard, drawing closer to them at high speed.

"Enemy ambush!" Enemy ambush!" That fierce shout shattered the calm skies.

Virtually all of the knights reacted very quickly, snatching up their spears and raising their shields as they all charged at high speed towards their horses. But just at this moment, sharp arrows began to rain down upon them from afar...

"Swish!" "Swish!"

The arrows rained down upon them at high speed like a plague of locusts. All of the knights immediately knelt down while raising their shields to protect themselves, while moving closer to each other.

The Empire's shields were of very high quality. In battle, it was rare that ordinary arrows would be able to pierce through them. And indeed, many of the arrows struck the shields, but the shields would only tremble slightly as the arrows fell to the ground, spent. But ten or so arrows passed straight through the shields, as though they were made of paper...

"Pierce!"

A fast-moving arrow tore straight through a shield, then pierced straight through the knight's head. Brain matter exploded out.

Reynolds, seeing this, felt heartsick. These knights were his personal squad, and had followed him for six years. Six years of living together had resulted in deep bonds of affection. But Reynolds instantly could tell: "To be able to pierce through shields from hundreds of meters away means they are definitely experts of the seventh or eighth ranks. And there are quite a few of them."

"Rumble." As those distant people moved nearer, the sound of their horses' hoof steps grew clearer. This group of people all wore gray armor, and the hooves of their horses were covered with cloth.

In front of these people, over ten bloodstained knights were fleeing.

"Rossi [Luo'xi]." Reynolds' face changed. Those ten knights belonged to his squad.

"Milord, flee, quick! These are the soldiers of the Rohault Empire, and they number in the thousands! Quick...ah!!!" A bloodied knight ran past at high speed, but in the blink of an eye, an arrow went straight through his throat.

"Kill them all! Let none survive!" A cold voice rang out from afar.

"Flee!"

Reynolds shouted loudly. Fight against an opponent numbering in the thousands, while he only had a few hundred people? And what's more, they were being ambushed, and the enemy had multiple elite warriors of the seventh and eighth ranks.

In addition, their duty was reconnaissance. They had to go back and spread the news.

The lucky survivors immediately vaulted onto their warhorses. Perhaps because their enemies wanted to acquire those several hundred horses, the arrows that had rained down on them just now had only struck the knights. Not a single warhorse had been killed.

Flee!

Flee!

The only thing on Reynolds' mind was to flee at high speed. At the beginning, four hundred men had tried to flee, but right now, only a hundred were left. That a hundred were left was because Reynolds had used magic to intimidate their enemies. While fleeing, Reynolds was still muttering the words to even more magical spells.

With Reynolds at the center, eight swathes of flame shaped like greatswords suddenly exploded forth, scattering in every direction and charging directly towards the pursuing armies.

Fire-style magic – Decapitating Inferno!

"Crackle, crackle." The blazing flames slashed down on the bodies of those knights, who immediately began to scream in agony. Their metal armor rapidly melted, and in the blink of an eye, they were turned to char. The surrounding grass began to blaze as well, and the following knights were forced to slow down.

"Chase, chase!" That blonde, tousled-haired leader stared angrily at the distant Reynolds.

If it hadn't been for that distant magus, he would've wiped out this group of people long ago. But because of that magus and because it was autumn and the grass was dry, the grass had easily begun to burn and caused a huge wildfire, blocking their pursuit.

Magical force wasn't endless.

Reynolds didn't dare to use any actual spells of the seventh rank. All of the spells he had used were of the sixth rank. But despite that, nearly all of the mageforce in Reynolds' body had been exhausted.

Only a single squad of three hundred soldiers of the Rohault Empire continued their pursuit, but this squad had over ten experts of the seventh rank. Clearly, this was an elite squad. And in Reynolds' squad, there was only a single warrior of the seventh rank, and of course himself, a magus of the seventh rank.

"The city of Neil! I can see the city of Neil!" One of the knights shouted loudly.

"Neil city!" Reynolds saw the distant, hazy outlines of the city. His eyes were filled with hope, and he frantically urged his horse forwards.

"Swish!" Yet another arrow shot at them from behind, and the exhausted Reynolds once again frantically dodged while raising his shield to block. With a 'slash' sound, the arrow pierced through the shield and into Reynolds' shoulder. The powerful force of that arrow actually caused the exhausted body of Reynolds' to sway, and he nearly fell from his horse.

After running for two hours, it was almost dusk.

The walls of the city of Neil were manned by quite a few warriors, as well as a number of nobles who were on the walls strolling about aimlessly.

“Open the city gates, quick! There are soldiers of the Rohault Empire behind us. Kill them all!!!” Reynolds roared furiously.

In the blink of an eye, Reynolds and his tens of wounded surviving soldiers reached the outskirts of the city of Neil, but the gates to the city didn't open.

“Don't open it! Don't open the city gates!” A shrill, ear-piercing voice could be heard coming from up above. “Fire your arrows! Shoot the enemies to death!”

That pursuing squad of the Rohault Empire stopped just outside of bow range. Ten of them actually dismounted, then charged directly towards the city walls. They easily dodged the arrows aimed at them from above, and all of them were covered with a sheath of battle-qi.

These were mighty warriors indeed.

“Kill that magus.” The leader of those ten men stared fixedly at Reynolds. They had chased all the way over here for the sake of killing Reynolds. A magus without mageforce was simply far too weak.

Right now, Reynolds couldn't fight back at all.

“Open the gates!” Reynolds’ squad of knights felt totally hopeless now. Although they had several dozen people and their enemy only had ten, just from looking at their opponents’ battle-qi, they could tell that the leader of their enemies could probably kill them all by himself.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 37, Grievous News on the Wedding Day

"Open the gates!"

"Open the gates!"

Reynolds and his men continuously howled with anger. The enemy only had three hundred in total, while Neil City had tens of thousands of soldiers. What was there to be afraid of? After making their way back here, Reynolds and his men had thought that their lives had been saved, but now...

"Slash!" A warblade chopped down towards a knight's neck, bifurcating him into two pieces. His intestines rolled out.

"Die, all of you, die!" The leader of the enemies laughed wildly.

Reynolds' side was quickly decimated. In the blink of an eye, only a few were left. Staring at the enemies, Reynolds couldn't help but feel despair.

"Am I going to die?"

Reynolds had many goals and dreams which he had yet to accomplish. But now, he was about to die.

On the city walls, a group of nobles were surrounding an ashen-faced middle-aged noble.

"Your Imperial Highness, are you alright?"

"Don't be afraid, your Imperial Highness. The enemies won't be able to break in."

After continuous reassurances, the middle-aged noble slowly calmed down. This man was the administrator of the Southeast Administrative Province, the younger brother of the Emperor, Prince Julin.

Prince Julin wasn't born with any spine or ability, but he was the younger brother of Emperor Johann, and Emperor Johann doted on this younger brother. Thus, Prince Julin was living quite a comfortable life.

He knew that it had been over a decade since the O'Brien Empire and the Rohault Empire had engaged in any large scale battles. Thus, he had been happy to come here to 'take a look at the borders'. His arrival had caused all the local nobles of Neil City to surround and pamper him.

But who would've thought that just as he was bragging about the military might of the Empire up on the wall, an arrow had shot towards him. Fortunately, the guards next to him had blocked the windows.

"Open the gates!" A desolate, angry howl from below.

The surrounding warriors' eyes were turning red at the scene. There weren't many enemies. If the army of Neil City were to charge out, they could definitely kill all the enemies with ease. But Prince Julin refused to let them open the gates.

"Your Imperial Highness, there aren't many enemies below. Let me lead my men to go kill them." A military officer begged.

"Bullshit." Prince Julin pointed at his nose and cursed, "What the hell do you know? Can't you see that far away, there are several hundred soldiers?"

"But your Imperial Highness, our city of Neil has thirty thousand soldiers." The military officer argued.

Prince Julin sneered, "It is dusk right now, and in the distance, there is a great deal of tall grass. Who knows how many enemies are lying in wait? Think about it, for just a few hundred people to dare attack, surely they must have some sort of support, yes? It isn't worth the risk and the additional bloodshed just to rescue a few dozen soldiers of the Empire."

Prince Julin spoke with authority and determination.

"But your Imperial Highness..." The military officer didn't know whether to laugh or to cry. Clearly, this Prince Julin didn't know anything about military affairs. Given how sturdy the city of Neil was, even if their enemy had a hundred thousand soldiers, they wouldn't find it easy to break through the defense of Neil City and its thirty thousand soldiers.

What's more, his side was just going to go kill the enemies below the city walls. It wasn't as though they were going to chase and counterattack.

Prince Julin wiped away the cold sweat from his forehead.

"Isn't it just a few dozen common soldiers? If they die, they die. I don't want to be in any risk." Prince Julin secretly said to himself. He immediately said with severity, "Remember, you are not to attack without authorization. Otherwise, if something happens, don't blame me for being merciless."

"Your Imperial Highness, the leader of those people seems to be Reynolds." Someone suddenly said.

"Which Reynolds?" Prince Julin frowned.

"The Reynolds who is in the principal line of descent for the Dunstan clan."

"The Dunstan clan?" Prince Julin frowned, but then he laughed uncaringly. "To die for the sake of the Empire is a glorious thing for their clan. In addition, the Dunstan clan is a large one. So what if a single descendant dies?"

Prince Julin didn't care in the slightest.

"Open the city gates!" That desolate cry rang out again. And then, there were no more cries to be heard from outside the city.

Reynolds body slumped down, falling against the city walls. An arrow was in his shoulder, and a terrifying wound could be seen in his chest. Fresh blood flowed everywhere.

Reynolds had already lost consciousness.

"Senior captain?" Reynolds' armor revealed his status.

The leader immediately grabbed Reynolds, tossing him onto his shoulder, then shouted to his men, "Let's go." As he spoke, those ten men left as fast as lightning.

From start to finish, aside from shooting arrows atop the city walls, the defenders of the city of Neil didn't open the city gates or engage the enemies in battle at all.

The Dunstan clan possessed tremendous influence in the military. Soon, the news of how Reynolds' entire unit had been wiped out, while Prince Julin had given the ridiculous order that his men were not to leave the city and engage in battle, reached its way to the Dunstan clan.

Not long after Prince Julin returned to his residence, his subordinates told him something shocking.

"Your Imperial Highness, that Lord Reynolds who died in battle was an extremely close friend of Master Linley. The two studied together at the Ernst Institute, and their affection for each other rivals that of real brothers." A bearded middle-aged man said respectfully to Prince Julin.

"What? Master Linley? The two are as close as real brothers?" Prince Julin instantly jumped to his feet.

"Those...those bastards! Why didn't they tell me up on the wall?" Prince Julin said frantically.

"Your Imperial Highness, there aren't many people who know of the relationship between Linley and Reynolds. Even in the imperial capital, only a few nobles know. How could those distant nobles of Neil City know about this?"

Prince Julin immediately began to frown.

He wasn't afraid of offending the Dunstan clan. No matter how powerful the Dunstan clan was, they relied on being in the good graces of the Emperor. It was just one clan member, after all. All he had to do was to say something to the Dunstan clan, and this matter would definitely be at an end.

But offending Linley was something else entirely.

"Immediately reach out to the Dunstan clan. Also...prevent any news from coming out of the city of Neil. Don't let the information get to the imperial capital, especially to Linley. Just say that Reynolds' death was in battle and in service to the Empire." Prince Julin was truly beginning to panic.

Yulan calendar, year 10009. September 15th. This was the day when Wharton and Nina were going to get married. Wharton was the younger brother of the world-famous Master Linley, while Nina was an Imperial Princess.

Their grand wedding was naturally an incomparably important affair.

Within the palace, beautiful music wafted throughout the halls like flowing water. All the nobles were toasting each other while chatting and laughing.

"Emperor Johann, excuse me." Linley said with a calm laugh as he nursed his cup of wine.

Linley truly was not accustomed to dealing with these nobles. After saying a few words to a few people, Linley left the main hall and headed towards a garden, with Delia soon following him there.

"What is it, Linley?" Delia laughed.

"Not comfortable." Linley chuckled.

"It seems that today you aren't in a very good mood." Delia saw that an unhappy look was on Linley's face. Linley nodded. "I don't know why, but for some reason, I feel anxious and irritable."

When one's spirit had reached Linley's level, it was quite rare that one would feel irritable and uncomfortable.

"Today is Wharton's grand wedding. Be happy." Delia consoled.

Linley let out a long breath and nodded.

While Linley and Delia were in the garden, Emperor Johann received a secret letter. His personal attendant said in a soft voice, "Your Imperial Majesty, Reynolds of the Dunstan clan died in battle."

"Reynolds died? Which Reynolds?" Emperor Johann glanced at his personal attendant. Why did a single person's death have to be brought to the attention to the Emperor? Did he, the Emperor, have nothing better to do than to worry about this?

"This was a classmate of Master Linley's at the Ernst Institute. He is on extremely good terms with Master Linley." His personal attendant said in a quiet voice. "Your Imperial Majesty, this matter involves his Imperial Highness, Prince Julin."

"Julin?"

"According to our reports, Reynolds and his men were pursued by the soldiers of the Rohault Empire to the walls of the city, but Prince Julin ordered his men not to open the gates and to strictly defend only."

"Defend? How many soldiers did the enemy have?" Emperor Johann frowned.

"Three hundred." The palace attendant said.

Emperor Johann's eyes bulged out. "Three hundred, and he had them defend only? This Julin...jeeze..." Emperor Johann felt a surge of anger, but then, in the blink of an eye, he understood what had just happened.

He understood his younger brother very well.

Julin was a person without much ambition. His main problem was that he was a bit of a coward. Emperor Johann didn't consider this much of a flaw. After all, he didn't need to rely on Julin to lead his armies or to do anything else.

But now, the situation had just gotten complicated. If Linley were to find out...and if Linley were to cause trouble...

Thinking back to the terrifying power Linley had displayed at Mt. Tujiao, and how powerful those two magical beasts were, Emperor Johann immediately understood that unless the experts from the War God's College were to intervene, there was no way he could suppress Linley's forces at all.

But how could the War God's College intervene for the sake of a mere prince?

This was impossible.

"Julin. All he ever does is create disasters for me." Emperor Johann rapidly considered what to do. Although he was furious, he still had to protect his little brother.

"Your Imperial Majesty, as Prince Julin tells it, they didn't have a chance to rescue Reynolds before Reynolds and his men were killed at the base of the city walls. At that time, it was already very dark, and they weren't sure as to exactly how many men the opponents had." The palace attendant said softly.

Emperor Johann nodded slightly. He carefully considered how to manage this affair.

There was no way this could be totally hidden!

This was Emperor Johann's first reaction. It was best not to try and hide something from a peak-stage Saint like Linley. Otherwise, once the lie was discovered, things would go catastrophically wrong.

Emperor Johann immediately walked out of the hall and headed towards the garden in search of Linley.

"Emperor Johann?" Linley, who was strolling alongside Delia, saw Emperor Johann walk over with a dire expression on his face. He couldn't help but call out to him questioningly.

When Emperor Johann saw Linley, the look on his face became all the grimmer.

"Emperor Johann, what exactly has happened?" Linley frowned.

Emperor Johann sighed. "Linley, I'm going to tell you something, but you have to be calm."

"What happened?" Linley was growing nervous. These past few days, Linley kept feeling irritable and restless. Hearing Emperor Johann's words, he began to worry.

It seemed as though something terrible had happened.

Emperor Johann let out a low sigh. "Just now, we received word from the Golden Flame Legion based in the Southeast Administrative Province. A squad of knights led by Reynolds was ambushed by enemy forces, and was chased back the entire way..."

Linley's heart instantly sank.

"Reynolds and a few people managed to make their way towards Neil City, but the soldiers of Neil City didn't have enough time to save them. Reynolds and his men...all died in battle!"

"All died in battle!" "All died in battle!" "All died in battle!"

These four words struck Linley like thunderbolts, reverberating and echoing in Linley's mind. Linley felt as though his mind had gone blank, and all strength had left his body. Everything had gone blank!

After a long time...

"Fourth Bro...Fourth Bro...he died?" Linley stuttered.

"Hi there. I'm Reynolds, from the O'Brien Empire." Linley could still clearly recall how he had met Reynolds for the first time, as they were registering to enroll in the Ernst Institute. The first person he had met was Reynolds. At that time, Linley had been with Uncle Hillman, while Reynolds had been with his Grandpa Lomu.

Two young children had become friends, just like that.

The eight years after that, they had been together day and night. Reynolds' sloppiness, his mischievousness, his sincerity...his joyful laughter. One scene after another swam to the forefront of Linley's mind.

"Fourth Bro, he died?"

Linley couldn't believe it. Just a while ago, his Fourth Bro had been chatting and laughing with himself and Boss Yale. But just like that, he had died in battle.

Linley could clearly remember how he had looked and how he had sounded.

How could Fourth Bro have died?

"Master Linley, I hope you can restrain your grief." Emperor Johann, seeing the look on Linley's face, began to grow nervous. He was afraid that Linley would go crazy.

Linley turned to stare at Emperor Johann, his gaze stabbing at Emperor Johann like sharp daggers. In a low voice, he said, "Emperor Johann, tell me, what exactly happened? I hope you won't lie to me. If you are wise, you can probably guess what the results would be for someone lying to me! Tell me, what exactly happened?"

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 38, Is it True?

Emperor Johann couldn't help but frown at Linley's attitude. No matter what, he was still the Emperor of the O'Brien Empire.

"Emperor Johann!" Linley's voice grew even deeper, and his eyes stabbed at Emperor Johann.

Emperor Johann suddenly had the sensation that he was sinking into a cold, dark abyss. Linley's stare was making it somewhat hard for him to breathe. Emperor Johann's throat clenched, and he managed to say, "Master Linley, what is the meaning of this? Don't you trust Us?"

By his side, Delia maintained her silence.

Linley stared at Emperor Johann. In a deep voice, he said, "Emperor Johann, it isn't that I don't trust you. Only, Reynolds is my close friend. All of a sudden, you tell me that he died in battle? Tell me...how could I not want to try and find out the truth of the matter?"

"The truth of the matter?"

Emperor Johann stood erect and said angrily, "Master Linley, can it be that We are not telling the truth? Let Us tell you once again, Reynolds was pursued and killed by the forces of the Rohault Empire to the walls of Neil City, where he died in battle. There is no question about this!"

"Neil City?" Linley's eyes couldn't help but narrow. "Emperor Johann, if Reynolds had already fled to the walls of Neil City, how could it be that those many soldiers of Neil City were unable to rescue Reynolds?"

Emperor Johann hesitated, but then said firmly, "At that time, We were not there. However, according to what We have learned, just as Reynolds arrived at the walls of Neil City, he was killed before the soldiers of the city had a chance to rescue him."

His Fourth Bro had died!

Linley didn't wish to believe it. When he had been interrogating Emperor Johann, scenes and memories of the time he had spent with his Fourth Bro came drifting uncontrollably to his mind, causing Linley's baleful feeling in his heart to grow even stronger.

Emperor Johann could sense that Linley's mood was transforming. The aura of the surrounding environment had become terrifyingly oppressive. Giant beads of sweat appeared on Emperor Johann's forehead, but he only stared at Linley.

No matter what, he couldn't open his mouth and spill the truth. He had to insist that Reynolds' had died in battle, and the soldiers of the city of Neil didn't have a chance to rescue him.

Linley closed his eyes, forcing down that demonic feeling in his heart. He let out a breath.

When his eyes opened, they flashed like lightning. Under Linley's gaze, Emperor Johann felt tremendous psychological pressure. As an ordinary warrior, how could his spiritual energy compare to that of an Arch Magus of the ninth rank like Linley?

"Emperor Johann, you must understand, perhaps what you are telling me is true. But are you able to guarantee that the person who brought you this information also told the truth?" Linley's voice was very low.

Emperor Johann nodded without any hesitation, saying firmly, "Linley, you must believe Us."

Linley glanced at Emperor Johann, then said calmly, "Emperor Johann, I'm not in a good mood today. I'm going back home. Let my little brother and Nina know."

Although his forehead was covered in sweat, Emperor Johann still squeezed out a smile. "Master Linley, We can totally understand how you are feeling. Master Linley, go home and get some rest. We shall definitely inform Wharton and Nina."

Linley nodded, then left the imperial palace alongside Delia.

Watching Linley leave, Emperor Johann finally let out a sigh of relief. Wiping the sweat from his forehead, he secretly said to himself, "Good heavens, lying in front of Linley is absolutely terrifying. If Linley were to have let loose his anger, no one here would have been able to stop him."

After calming himself down, Emperor Johann once more summoned that noble, majestic smile to his face and returned to the main hall.

Linley and Delia walked shoulder-to-shoulder on Boulder Street. On the way back from the imperial palace, Linley had been silent the entire time. Next to him, Delia could sense how much pain Linley was in.

After a long moment, Delia said softly, "Linley."

Linley was startled out of his reverie by this voice. Having escaped his memories for a moment, he looked at Delia. "What is it?" Delia said in a gentle, comforting voice, "Are you thinking about Reynolds?"

Linley nodded gently. "Delia, in my heart, Boss Yale, Second Bro, and Fourth Bro are like true brothers to me. I've never even considered the possibility that Fourth Bro would die in battle." Although he was calm when saying these words, Delia noticed that Linley's eyes had turned red.

Despite being such a resilient person, Linley's eyes were moist. One could imagine how much pain he was in.

Even if he didn't actively think about past events, the memories of his youth swam to him unbidden. He still remembered how the four of them had drank together and played together, laughing merrily. He still remembered how, in their dormitory, they chatted about the girls of the Institute. At that time, both Reynolds and Yale were very animated. Thinking back to Reynolds' sloppy, lazy demeanor, Linley couldn't help but feel even more miserable.

They had arrived at Count Wharton's manor.

"Milord." The gate guards said respectfully.

After staring at the estate, Linley then turned his head towards Delia.
"Delia, you can go back for now."

"Where are you going?" Delia asked questioninglly. Hurriedly, she said,
"Linley, please don't do anything rash." Delia knew that given Linley's current condition, it was possible that he might cause some sort of disastrous catastrophe.

Linley shook his head. "No, I'm just going to Reynolds' home...the Dunstan clan!"

The Dunstan clan was also one of the oldest clans of the O'Brien Empire.
In the army, the Dunstan clan had an extremely large amount of influence.

The Dunstan clan was located not too far from the imperial palace.

Using the Windshadow spell, Linley soared as gracefully as the wind itself through the streets of the city. Before most people even had a chance to notice Linley, he would have already moved a hundred meters past them.

"Man, I told you to be careful and to not piss off the Madame. Jeeze..."
Two guards of the Dunstan clan were talking to each other. One of them was laughing at another one.

The other guard nursed his face, which had a bright red handprint on it.

"I didn't do anything to irritate her! Only, when the Madame arrived, I didn't move back far enough, so the Madame yelled at me and gave me a slap. Damn, man. So not fair."

"Don't complain about fair or unfair. Young master Reynolds just died in battle. Whoever angers the Madame right now is asking for death."

The two guards casually chatted, but suddenly, with a gust of wind, a human figure appeared in front of the gates to the Dunstan clan's manor.

The two guards were startled.

"Might I ask who you are, milord?" One of the guards said.

"Go make a report and state that Linley wishes to meet with the leader of the Dunstan clan." Linley's voice was calm, but it had a certain penetrative, soul-shaking power.

"Master Linley?" The two guards exchanged glances, amazement in their eyes.

What sort of a person was Linley? He was one of the most powerful experts in the entire Yulan continent, on the same level as the Holy Emperor or Haydson.

The two guards immediately bowed deeply.

"Master Linley, please wait a moment. I will immediately go make the report.” One of the guards immediately ran at high speed inside the manor. Linley quietly waited there outside the gate, standing as straight and as stiff as a spear.

Shortly afterwards, three middle-aged men ran over at high speed. The leader of these three was the leader of the Dunstan clan, and Reynolds’ father: Neon [Ni’en] Dunstan.

Neon Dunstan, upon learning that Linley had come, had immediately ran over to welcome him.

They knew that today was the day of Wharton’s grand wedding with Nina. But because of Reynolds’ death, the Dunstan clan was extremely depressed, which was why the Dunstan clan had not attended Wharton and Nina’s wedding banquet.

“Is this Master Linley?”

Neon Dunstan spied Linley from afar. Linley was an important figure of the world. Neon could sense at a single glance Linley’s astonishing presence.

This was a sort of spiritual pressure.

When experts trained to a certain level, their spirit and their soul would both transform. Saint-level experts, even if their clothes were tattered, would generally seem much more noble than most nobles.

Linley turned his head and saw Neon and the other two arrive.

When his electric gaze swept past the three men, all of them took a deep breath before warmly saying words of welcome. The clan leader, Neon, was the first to speak. "Master Linley, if there is anything you need, you could've sent someone for us. I would've come to speak with you. There was no need to trouble you to come in person, Master Linley."

Linley didn't mince words, immediately heading into the Dunstan clan's estate. He passed by those three people and headed directly inside.

Neon Dunstan and the others were puzzled, but they immediately followed him.

Given Linley's current understanding of the wind, he only needed a thought to activate the Windscout spell, allowing him to 'see' everything within several kilometers. As Linley walked into the main hall of the Dunstan clan, he saw that many people were already clustered there. All of them were men.

"Respectful greetings to Master Linley." All of the men bowed respectfully to him.

Linley forced out a smile, then said, "Everyone, no need to be so courteous. I imagine everyone here knows why I have come today."

Neon Dunstan and the others exchanged glances. All of them were stunned for quite a while.

"Reynolds is dead." Linley's gaze swept the men surrounding him, his voice growing deep. "Reynolds was one of my best friends. We were as close as real brothers!"

Linley's voice filled the entire hall with a stifling aura.

"Right now, what I want to know is, how exactly did Fourth Bro die? Was it truly due to the so-called 'reason' of the soldiers of Neil City not being able to rescue him in time, resulting in him dying in battle!" Linley's gaze came to a halt on Neon Dunstan.

Neon Dunstan sighed deeply. "Linley, Reynolds was my son. I am in great pain over his death. But there is nothing for it. In war, people will die. The Dunstan clan can't kick up a huge fuss and racket just because my son died. The Dunstan clan is a military clan. The original reason why we decided long ago to have every single son serve for ten years in the military was to make sure that they were all mentally prepared to die in service to their country. If they aren't able to be tempered like steel, how can they become of use?"

"I understand this."

Linley looked calmly at Neon Dunstan. "To sacrifice one's life for one's homeland is nothing to be ashamed of. However...for some reason, I feel that Reynolds death in front of the walls of Neil City is something hard for me to believe. Could it be that Neil City didn't have any experts present? Wouldn't it be easy for them to simply jump down the city walls and rescue them?"

"Uncle Neon!" Linley stared fixedly at Neon Dunstan. "You must understand. My brother is dead. If he had died a glorious death in battle,

I will only feel proud of him! But if he died a meaningless death, or died due to some other reason, then I must definitely find out everything there is to know about what happened to my dear brother!”

“If his death involved some other people who intentionally caused my brother to die? Then I will make them die as well!!!” Linley’s eyes were like daggers.

Neon and the others all felt their hearts tremble.

“Uncle Neon!” The way in which Linley had addressed him had caused Neon’s heart to quiver as well.

“Tell me. Your son. My brother. Did he die an unjust, meaningless death?” Linley stared at Neon Dunstan, waiting for his response.

A very complicated look was on Neon Dunstan’s face, but he looked directly at Linley and replied firmly, “Master Linley, thank you so much. However, my son died gloriously in battle. His death was not an unjust one!!!”

Linley swept everyone’s faces with his gaze.

“Then I bid you farewell.” Linley turned and immediately left the Dunstan clan.

Watching Linley depart, Neon Dunstan and the others all let out secret sighs of relief. Neon Dunstan immediately ordered in a bright voice, “Everyone, go back to your usual affairs.”

After speaking, Neon Dunstan immediately left the main hall and returned to his study.

"Reynolds...forgive your father!" As he walked, Neon's eyes turned red.

Given the influence and power the Dunstan clan held within the military, they naturally knew exactly what had happened. Neon's son had done battle with the enemy for quite some time at the walls of Neil City before being killed. But Prince Julin had personally ordered that nobody was to open the city gates and rescue them.

His death had been an unjust one!

Neon's heart was filled with bitter tears. "Master Linley might kill Prince Julin in order to avenge you. But his Imperial Majesty dotes on Prince Julin very much. Although he wouldn't dare to seek revenge against Master Linley, he would definitely do so against the Dunstan clan."

There was nothing for it!

If a man was dead, he was dead. They had to act for the sake of the living!

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 39, The Cover-Up and the Truth

Linley returned to Count Wharton's manor. When he did, he locked himself into his courtyard, forbidding anyone from entering. Although it was Wharton and Nina's wedding, after learning that Reynolds had died in battle, Wharton knew how his big brother must be feeling right now.

Nobody in the Count's estate dared to go disturb Linley.

The courtyard door remained firmly shut.

Linley sat at a stone table. There was a single flask of wine and two wine cups on the table. One wine cup was in front of Linley; the other was opposite of him. Only...nobody was sitting opposite of Linley.

Linley poured wine into both of the cups, then raised one of them in a toast.

"Fourth Bro..." Linley stared straight ahead, his gaze seeming to pierce through the walls of reality. His eyes, however, were red. "Have a good journey."

Raising his head, Linley gulped the entire cup of wine down.

Fourth Bro had died.

Linley simply couldn't accept this.

But first he had interrogated Emperor Johann, and then he had interrogated the people of the Dunstan clan. He had even carefully inspected the expressions on the faces of the Dunstan clan's people. Linley had come to the conclusion...

That perhaps, his Fourth Bro truly had died a glorious death in battle. Perhaps it hadn't been anyone's fault at all.

But what Linley didn't know was that only the three or four core members of the Dunstan clan knew the truth. Neon Dunstan knew that Linley would pay attention to their expressions, which is why he hadn't told anyone else the truth.

There was one other person who knew the truth. Reynolds' mother!

This was the so-called 'Madame' the guards had mentioned earlier. Reynolds' mother was heartbroken. Neon knew very well that in front of Linley, Reynolds' mother wouldn't be able to dissemble at all, which is why no women were present at all in the main hall. Naturally, Reynolds' mother hadn't been there either.

"Fourth Bro, you were the smallest of us four bros. I didn't expect that you would have been the first to depart." Linley's heart felt as though it had been stabbed by knives, and two trails of tears began to flow down uncontrollably.

Snatching the wine flask with his hands, Linley raised his head and began to drink.

"Cough, cough." After drinking so fast, Linley began to cough. But after coughing two or three times, Linley once again raised his head high and drank it all down.

Bebe and Haeru stood in the corner of the courtyard, not daring to disturb Linley at all.

"This is the fourth time the Boss has been so heartbroken." Bebe said to himself. The first time was when he had broken up with Alice. The second time was when he had learned of his father's death. The third time was when Grandpa Doebling had passed away...

Family members. Friends. One after the other, they had left him.

Linley felt great pain, but Linley knew...he had to be strong. Because he had other family members and other friends. He had to be strong, both for the sake of the dead as well as for the sake of the living.

"Let me just wallow in my misery for three days, then."

Linley painfully cracked his lips into a laugh. Then, without holding back at all, he cried as he wished, drank as he wished, laughed as he wished, mumbled as he wished, reminisced as he wished...or even spoke to Reynolds as though he were there.

Three days later!

“Creaaaak.” The door to the courtyard swung open. Delia had been waiting outside the courtyard the entire time for the past few days, and had asked a servant to bring a stone bench over. She had been sitting there, reading as she quietly awaited Linley.

Three days!

Linley had shut himself in his courtyard for three days, and Delia had waited outside for three days.

Hearing the door creak open, Delia turned her head in surprised pleasure. Right now, Linley was dressed in a long, light blue robe. His back was still ramrod straight, and he didn’t look the slightest bit downtrodden.

“Linley...” Delighted, Delia immediately went over to welcome him.

Linley looked at Delia, and as he did, he felt a warm, thankful feeling in his heart. Given Linley’s current level, how could he have been unaware that Delia had been waiting outside for three full days?

Although he was inside the courtyard and was separated from Delia by a gate, Linley could sense Delia’s presence at all times.

Linley suddenly reached out and took Delia into his arms.

Delia was stunned.

Linley had never hugged her on his own accord before!

Holding Delia in his arms, Linley lowered his head. The tip of his nose brushed against Delia's fragrant hair. The smell was so intoxicating. Smelling her scent, Linley felt his heart grow calmer.

It was as though a lonely little boat had finally reached a harbor.

"Delia. Thank you." Linley's voice sounded out next to Delia's ear.

Hugging Linley and resting her head against Linley's chest, Delia felt happier than she ever had been. She had spent years in the Institute hoping for this, then ten more years waiting...now, it seemed as though her dreams were closer than ever before.

After the day Linley exited the courtyard, him and Delia had drawn a step closer. Sometimes, they could tell what the other was thinking from a mere glance. Only, Linley didn't push past the final barriers between them, and Delia didn't try to do so on her own accord either.

"How is his Lordship doing?"

Gates spoke softly to Wharton in the training courtyard of the manor.

A hint of a smile was on Wharton's face. "After exiting his courtyard, my big brother's been quite close with Ms. Delia. When I saw him just now, he was even smiling. Most likely, he's feeling much better now."

Gates nodded slightly. "When his Lordship didn't leave for three days, it really was quite worrisome."

"Fifth brother, do you think his Lordship is like you, so easily abandoning himself to despair?" Another terrifyingly large and powerful man nearby said with a laugh.

"Second brother, why are you criticizing me?" Gates said unhappily.

The Count's estate was very peaceful. Linley continued to live a life of quiet training, while at the same time, making his preparations to head out to the Anarchic Lands.

.....

"Your Imperial Majesty, Master Linley seems to be acting as he always has. He's focused on his training. There are no abnormal activities. But of course, on the day of Lord Wharton's wedding, Master Linley paid a visit to the Dunstan clan." The palace attendant reported respectfully.

Emperor Johann's face was covered with smiles.

"Wonderful. You can leave now." Emperor Johann said calmly.

Knowing that Linley hadn't acted out of the ordinary, Emperor Johann felt much relieved. "Fortunately. Fortunately, Linley really believed that what I said was the truth."

"The Dunstan clan knew how to act as well." Emperor Johann was very satisfied.

He knew that given the influence the Dunstan clan had in the military, they definitely knew the truth of the matter. Most likely, they had found out about it even before Emperor Johann himself had.

But clearly, Linley hadn't learned anything from his trip to the Dunstan clan, and truly believed that Reynolds had died in battle, with the soldiers of Neil City unable to rescue him.

.....

Delia stared at a letter in her hands, then stared at Linley. She had a miserable look on her face.

"Delia, what is it?" Linley looked questioningly at Delia.

Delia shook her head helplessly. "This is a letter from my parents. They say that my grandmother is seriously ill, and want me to go home immediately. My grandmother..." A worried, sad look was on Delia's face.

Linley reached out to hold Delia's hand. Staring at Delia, he consoled her, "Don't worry. Your grandmother will be fine."

"Linley, I have to rush home." Delia looked helplessly at Linley. "I had planned to go with you to the Anarchic Lands, but now..."

Linley smiled and consoled her, "It is fine. You go home first. Given my squad's abilities, we should be able to quickly set up a base in the Anarchic Lands. In the future, when you come looking for me, it will be easy to find me."

Delia looked at Linley, unwilling to part from him.

But her grandmother was seriously ill. Her parents' letter had made her extremely worried. There was nothing she could do...she could only choose to leave and return to the Yulan Empire.

The next morning, Delia mounted on the back of the Wildthunder Stormhawk and flew directly back to the Yulan Empire.

.....

With a prefectural city in the Central Administrative Province of the O'Brien Empire. Within a courtyard owned by a high, luxurious hotel. Yale was casually flipping through a number of letters he had received.

"Hrm? Something about Fourth Bro? What happened to Fourth Bro? Can it be that he rendered military merit and is about to be promoted?" A hint of a smile was on Yale's face.

In the past, of the four bros, Yale and Reynolds were both the playboy types. They had chased after girls together. The two of them had acted degenerately together, while George and Linley had been rather self-controlled.

Opening the letter, Yale began to read.

And as he did...

Yale's face immediately turned white. His body suddenly began to shake uncontrollably. Yale held his head in his hands and closed his eyes. After a long time...Yale finally opened his eyes.

His face was totally ashen. Not a hint of blood could be seen.

"Impossible."

Moisture could be seen in Yale's eyes. Soon, they turned red. Forcibly swallowing the grief in his heart, Yale continued to read.

After finishing...

"Fourth Bro!!!!" Yale's tears began to flow.

If one was to ask Yale who were the people that he cared the most about? It definitely wouldn't be his older biological brother. The relationship between them was relatively cold. After all, within the Dawson Conglomerate...there were many struggles and much infighting.

In the ten years after leaving the Ernst Institute, although Yale had come to trust some people, he hadn't truly treated any of them as lifelong friends. In his heart, there were only three lifelong friends. The three he had made in his youth.

George. Linley. Reynolds!

Yale stood there, his entire body shaking uncontrollably. Suddenly, a flash of electricity appeared in his hands, turning the letter into ash.

Yale was a lightning-style magus. He was the weakest of the four bros, having only reached the level of magus of the sixth rank.

"Prince...Julin?" Yale ground his teeth, his entire body still shaking.

"You actually just stood there and watched, and let my brother die!!! I don't care who you are. I will make sure you die!" Yale took a deep breath, closing his eyes.

He forced himself to calm down.

The Dawson Conglomerate was very influential amongst the common-folk, and border cities such as Neil City were cities which the Dawson Conglomerate viewed as being of great importance. The merchants and nobles there had many dealings with the Dawson Conglomerate.

Perhaps this secret could be kept from Linley, but there was no way they could keep this secret from the pervasive, world-spanning Dawson Conglomerate!

"There is no way that father would mobilize the forces of the Conglomerate to deal with a prince for my sake. In addition, even if he tried to, he wouldn't necessarily be successful." Yale understood this.

Prince Julin was the administrator for the Southeast Administrative Province. He controlled a huge number of soldiers. How could the Dawson Conglomerate fight against him?

"Third Bro!" Suddenly, Linley came to Yale's mind, unbidden.

"Third Bro hasn't avenged Fourth Bro yet?" Yale knew very well how much each of the four of them cared about the others. He was certain that if Linley knew why Reynolds had died, he would definitely go seek revenge. "It must be that Prince Julin and that Emperor-whatever hid this from him. Third Bro doesn't have an intelligence network."

Whenever Yale thought of that adorable youngster who had followed him around and drank and dallied alongside him at the Jade Water Paradise, he felt bitter pain in his heart.

"Fourth Bro, I promise you, Third Bro and I will definitely avenge you." Yale murmured to himself.

Suddenly, Yale roared loudly. "Attend me! Make preparations for me immediately. I am going to the imperial capital right now. Quick! I am going immediately!"

In just five short minutes, Yale was mounted atop a fine stallion, with two guards by his side. He rushed towards the imperial capital at full gallop. On the way, Yale stopped for nothing, travelling day and night, neither eating nor drinking.

On the way to the imperial capital, he switched horses at several cities, continuing to make haste towards the imperial capital at full gallop.

After two days and one night, Yale and his men managed to arrive at the imperial capital. Due to his high speed journey, both of Yale's eyes were bloodshot, and his face was so ashen and pale that it looked like the face of someone who was seriously ill.

"We're here."

From far away, Yale saw Count Wharton's manor. After two days and a night of travelling, Yale finally felt a glimmer of hope.

"Lord Yale?" The guards at the manor naturally recognized Yale. In the past, Yale had often come to visit Linley. There was no need for them to make any report before letting Yale enter. Only, the two guards were puzzled as to why Yale looked so haggard.

"Third Bro!"

Yale charged into the manor, then began shouting at the top of his lungs, "Third Bro, come out! Third Bro, quick, come out!!!" As soon as Linley heard Yale's first shout, he immediately ran at high speed out of his courtyard.

Seeing the distant Yale, Linley was stunned.

Right now, Yale's face was extremely pale, and his hair was an absolute mess. Was this the impeccably dressed, handsome, and cheerful Boss Yale?

Seeing Linley, Yale immediately ran over, grabbing Linley by the shoulders. His bloodshot eyes stared at Linley, and he said in a sobbing voice, "Third Bro, you absolutely must get revenge for Fourth Bro!"

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 40, The Secrets of the Yulan Continent

These words stunned Linley.

Get revenge? For what?

“Wait a second!” Linley immediately understood. Fourth Bro had indeed died an unjust death.

Linley grabbed Yale by the arms. “Boss Yale, calm down. Come. Come to my place. Tell me everything you know in detail.” Yale nodded slightly.

They arrived in Linley’s courtyard.

“What were the circumstances around Fourth Bro’s death?” Linley’s face was extremely serious.

Yale said with solemnity, “Third Bro, that day, Fourth Bro had led his men in a scouting mission outside the city. Who would’ve thought that they would encounter the soldiers of the Rohault Empire? Fourth Bro was vastly outnumbered. Despite going all out, only himself and a few dozen of his men escaped. Fourth Bro and his dozens of men fled to Neil City, and at that time, only three hundred enemies were pursuing them.”

“Three hundred?” Linley simply couldn’t believe it.

“Right. But simply because the Rohault Empire’s soldiers fired an arrow at the wall near where Prince Julin was currently standing, Prince Julin was terrified. He immediately ordered that nobody was to be allowed to open the city gates. He ordered his men to only stand guard inside the city. This was done solely to protect himself. As for Fourth Bro and his men, they kept on screaming angrily, 'Open the gates!', but nobody dared to do so...and just like that, Fourth Bro and his men were all slaughtered."

Linley's heart was beginning to blaze with fury.

He could see the scene as if he himself was there. His Fourth Bro had miserably screamed for them to 'Open the gates!', but Prince Julin had forcibly ordered people not to open the gates. Nobody dared to go rescue them either.

And so, Fourth Bro had died.

His death was an unjust one, a pointless one. He didn't have to die!

"Where is Fourth Bro's body?" Linley immediately asked.

Yale said in agony, "According to our Conglomerate's intelligence network, Fourth Bro was hit by an arrow on the shoulder, and then the enemy used a warblade to slash open his chest. Fourth Bro collapsed at the corner of the walls. And then, the leader of the enemy soldiers took Fourth Bro's corpse away as a spoil of war."

"What?!" Linley couldn't believe it. "Three hundred people before the gates of Neil City. Not only did the guarding forces not attack, they even allowed the enemies to take away Fourth Bro's corpse?"

This was an absolute joke.

"Precisely speaking, the large majority of those three hundred soldiers stayed outside of bow range. The real attackers only numbered ten or so. Those ten experts didn't care about arrows at all." Yale's heart was filled with bitter pain. "Those ten or so experts killed Fourth Bro, then took his corpse away...but given Prince Julin's orders, none of the guard soldiers dared to venture out to do battle."

The soldiers of the O'Brien Empire were extremely disciplined and would follow orders.

But such laughable orders, in all honesty, were extremely hard to accept for them.

"Fourth Bro..." In Linley's mind, he could see the scene of how his Fourth Bro had angrily, desperately, screamed 'Open the gates!' outside the walls of Neil City, but the soldiers atop the walls had coldly refused to do so.

Such an unjust death filled Linley's heart with endless rage.

Fourth Bro shouldn't have died at all!

"Johann and the Dunstan clan both dared to deceive me." Linley, knowing the truth, immediately understood that most likely, the Dunstan clan had done so due to their fear of offending Prince Julin and Emperor Johann.

"So it turns out that this was all due to that Prince Julin!" Linley's rage was building.

He had heard of Prince Julin long ago. Emperor Johann was famous for his bias and partiality, and had made his incompetent younger brother the administrator of an Administrative Province. From this alone, one could tell how much Emperor Johann doted on his younger brother.

"Third Bro, only you are capable of avenging Fourth Bro." Yale said with pained fury.

Yale's heart was filled with self-reproach. He, too, wanted to avenge his Fourth Bro, but he personally was simply too weak, and the Dawson Conglomerate didn't belong to him.

Linley nodded, a cold light shining forth from his eyes. "Since that Prince Julin caused Fourth Bro's death, then he definitely must die." Linley turned to stare at Yale. "Yale, take a rest. I need to make a trip."

"What are you going to do? Are you going to act against him now?"

"No."

Linley slowly, calmly shook his head. "If I were to directly kill Prince Julin, most likely that Emperor Johann would revenge himself upon the Dunstan clan...Fourth Bro is already dead. I don't wish for his clan to collapse as well."

.....

War God Mountain.

Linley stood in front of the tunnel which led to the War God's training area, quietly waiting. Right at this moment, someone flew towards him at high speed. It was Castro.

"Linley, what are you doing here?" Castro questioned.

"I wish to see the War God." Linley replied.

Castro nodded. "If that's the case, then let me report your arrival." But right at this moment, a voice rang out next to Castro and Linley's ears at the same time. "Linley. Come in."

Linley had already prepared the Windshadow spell, and so he flew into the tunnel. Those familiar, winding pathways led him deeper into the tunnels until he arrived at the pit. He dropped down several thousand meters, arriving at the bottom.

A few moments later, Linley arrived at that pitch-black stone door.

"Rumble." That terrifying heat was still there, turning the stone walls scarlet red.

Linley said respectfully, "Lord War God, I imagine that you already know about my duel with Haydson. I imagine that I should now be qualified to learn of the secrets you previously spoke about."

"Enter, then." The War God's calm voice rang out.

"Rumble..." The pitch-black stone door swung open on its own, revealing a tunnel within. A terrifying blast of heat blasted out from within.

Linley formed his Dragonblood battle-qi into his Pulseguard Defense.

"What a hot place." Staring deep into the tunnel, Linley was astonished. On the far end of the tunnel, Linley saw an enormous magma pool that was at least a hundred meters wide. The lava boiled and hissed and swirled about, but this wasn't the astonishing part.

The astonishing part was...in the air directly above the magma pool, there was a ball of fire at least three meters long.

This ball of fire was pure, scarlet red. It was constantly emanating waves of terrifying heat from mid-air. For Linley to be forced to use the Pulseguard Defense to protect himself, one could imagine how terrifyingly hot this ball of fire was.

The temperature of ordinary lava wouldn't be able to hurt Linley, even if he went near it.

Even if he were to walk on top of lava, all he had to do was to control his battle-qi to protect himself. There was no need to use the Pulseguard Defense. Linley suddenly realized something...

“Where is Lord War God?” Linley looked suspiciously in every direction.

In the blink of an eye, he could make out the surrounding area. Aside from the central pool of lava, everything could be seen clearly in this area. But there wasn't a human figure in sight.

“Linley!” The War God's calm voice suddenly drifted down from within the ball of fire.

Linley stared in astonishment at that hovering ball of fire.

Could it be that the War God was that ball of fire?

A blurry human figure slowly drifted out from within that ball of fire. In the blink of an eye, that blurry human figure appeared next to the pool of magma.

This man was indeed the War God.

Linley carefully inspected this War God, whose legend was known throughout the Yulan continent. The War God wasn't an extremely tall man, only around 1.8 meters tall or so. He had the appearance of a man in his thirties. He had thick eyebrows and scarlet red hair which had grown to his waist. Due to his careful observations, Linley suddenly realized that atop the War God's scarlet red hair were multiple blazing flames.

The War God's face was as hard and cold as granite, and his eyes were extremely sharp.

With every single action, he radiated absolute certainty. In particular, he possessed a terrifying presence which caused Linley's heart to quiver.

Such power!

"Respectful greetings to you, War God." Linley said courteously.

The War God carefully looked at Linley, a hint of a smile appearing at the corners of his lips. He nodded calmly. "Not bad. I watched your duel with Haydson. Your attack technique is quite interesting."

A hint of a smile appeared on Linley's face as well.

"Lord War God, I should now be qualified to learn about the secrets of the Yulan continent, right?" Linley had already decided long ago that before heading out to the Anarchic Lands, he would come visit the War God once.

And now, he had to seek vengeance for his Fourth Bro as well.

Linley had already made careful calculations. After avenging his Fourth Bro, he would immediately head out for the Anarchic Lands. In addition, this meeting with the War God wasn't solely for the sake of learning the secrets. It was also to use the War God's influence to suppress Johann.

Who did Johann fear the most? Without question, it was the War God!

"Linley, the attack you have developed is quite unique indeed. Your current level of power is indeed on par with Haydson, and is enough to qualify you to be made aware of the secrets of the Yulan continent." The War God said calmly.

Linley listened carefully.

"Linley, do you know how I became a Deity?" The War God suddenly looked at Linley.

"Wasn't it through gaining sufficient insight which allowed you to break through the limits of the Saint-level and reach the Deity-level?" Linley looked at the War God, puzzled.

The War God shook his head slightly. "It isn't so easy to break through to the Deity-level. Even Cesar, with his extraordinary talent, spent five thousand years before reaching the Deity-level. As for me...although in the past, I had indeed reached the limits of the Saint-level, it was very hard to take that last step and break through. Five thousand years ago, during a battle, I was fortunate enough to acquire the divine spark of a Demigod. I absorbed and fused that divine spark...and thus, I became a Deity."

Linley was stunned.

So the almighty War God whom everyone praised to the high heavens had actually broken through because he had acquired the divine spark of a Demigod.

"What, are you very disappointed?" The War God laughed calmly.

Linley shook his head. "No. It is very incredible that in the past, you were able to reach the limits of the Saint-level after only a few hundred years. Your eldest disciple, Fain, has spent thousands of years training. By now, he should be at the limits of the Saint-level as well."

The War God laughed.

He was very satisfied with Linley's response. Indeed, reaching the limits of the Saint-level in a few centuries was extremely difficult.

"It is hard to reach the limits of the Saint-level. For someone to reach the limits of the Saint-level definitely means that they have already arrived at the very end of the path of the Elemental Laws they have chosen. To break past that barrier, what they need is a sudden insight! In an instant, they must fuse together and combine every part of the aspect of Elemental Law they are training in. Only then will they succeed in breaking through."

The War God sighed, "In the entire Yulan continent, up until a few decades ago, there had been six Prime Saints who had reached the limits of the Saint-level and only needed to take one more step before breaking through to the Deity-level. Now that Cesar has broken through, there are five Prime Saints remaining who are at the limits. One of them is Fain."

"Currently, in the Yulan continent, aside from those five Deities, the most powerful people are Fain and the other four. You should already know by now how powerful Fain is."

Linley nodded slightly.

Linley was now beginning to truly interact with the hidden aspects of the Yulan continent.

“Lord War God, what level of power does the Holy Emperor have, in comparison with those hidden experts?” In the future, Linley would definitely have to deal with the Holy Emperor. Naturally, he needed to ask this question.

“The Holy Emperor?”

The War God paused for a moment, then said, “Amongst the hidden experts of the continent, aside from the Deities, Fain and the other four Prime Saints are the most powerful. They need only a single step to reach the Deity-level. Beneath them are the likes of the Holy Emperor. There are roughly ten or so people on this level. Below them are those people on Haydson’s level. Most of the experts who lie hidden here in the continent are on Haydson’s level.

“The Holy Emperor is more powerful than Haydson?” Linley memorized this little fact.

The War God cast a warning glance at Linley. “The Holy Emperor trains in Oracular Magic. Oracular Magic is extremely powerful. It is normal for him to be on a higher level than Haydson.”

Linley looked at the War God, then asked, “Lord War God, then what are the secrets of the Yulan continent? What are they?” Linley had been curious this entire time.

For what reason had the Yulan continent attracted so many experts to remain here on this plane?

"In the Four Higher Planes, there is another name for the plane of the Yulan continent." A hint of delight was in the War God's face.

"What name?" Linley's eyes lit up.

"The Necropolis of the Gods!" The War God said softly.

"The Necropolis of the Gods?" Linley's heart thumped. "Lord War God, even if Deities were to die, there's no reason they would have to come to our Yulan continent to be buried, is there?"

"Of course not." The War God laughed calmly. "Five thousand years ago, many of the experts who descended from other planes were Deities. There were even Gods and Highgods. They engaged in warfare and slaughter here in the Yulan continent. In the end, aside from a few who left, virtually all of those experts died here."

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 41, The War God's Favor

"During one of those battles, I was extremely lucky. Although I had hidden far away, I managed to acquire a divine spark, and what's more, it was the divine spark of a Demigod. If it had been the divine spark of a full God, I wouldn't have been able to absorb and fuse with it at all." The War God laughed calmly.

Linley suddenly began to understand.

There were certain preconditions for one to fuse with a divine spark.

Someone who had not yet become a Deity probably would only be able to fuse with a Demigod's divine spark.

"Why did those experts from other planes descend to the Yulan continent and engage in battle here?" Linley immediately asked.

The War God glanced at Linley. "For now, you don't need to know about this." Clearly, the War God didn't wish to tell Linley.

Linley had no choice but to remain silent.

"The Necropolis of the Gods will be opened once every thousand years. Each time it is opened, those who have received acknowledgment and permission from us Deities are permitted to enter the Necropolis of the Gods and engage in exploration." The War God glanced at Linley. "But I must tell you, the Necropolis of the Gods is extremely dangerous!"

"Has anyone ever succeeded?" Linley asked.

"Of course." The War God said with certainty. "But only one person. And the funny thing was, as soon as he acquired a Demigod divine spark and broke through, he immediately headed off to the Higher Planes."

Linley secretly laughed.

To become a Deity was extremely hard.

But wouldn't it be so much simpler to just acquire a divine spark from within the Necropolis of the Gods and then fuse it? No wonder so many of the lucky survivors of the past had decided to remain hidden here in the Yulan continent.

After all, it was virtually impossible for a Saint to acquire a divine spark in the Higher Planes.

"Lord War God, are there any differences between becoming a Deity through fusing with a divine spark and becoming a Deity through personal understandings and breakthroughs?" Linley asked.

The War God nodded and sighed. "There are. After absorbing and fusing with a divine spark, one's future training becomes much more difficult. After all, the divine spark you fused with wasn't one which had naturally descended upon you and formed within your soul. There are qualitative differences."

Linley nodded.

In his heart, Linley deeply appreciated the fact that the War God had provided him with this important piece of information.

"But despite that, so what? Linley, if I placed a divine spark in front of you and told you that if you fused with it, you would become a Demigod, with the price being that your future training would be slower and more difficult...would you be willing to fuse with it?" The War God looked at Linley.

Linley was startled.

Indeed. If a Demigod's divine spark was placed in front of him, which represented the chance to become a Deity, despite knowing that one's future training would become more difficult...most likely, many people would choose to immediately absorb and fuse with the divine spark.

"Enough. Linley, if there's nothing else, you can leave now." The War God said calmly.

Linley hurriedly said. "Lord War God, in a few days, I plan to go to the Anarchic Lands. My little brother Wharton will probably remain in the imperial capital. I am worried that the forces of the Radiant Church will threaten my little brother.."

"Don't worry. The imperial capital is not a place where the Radiant Church can act as they please." The War God said calmly.

Hearing these words from the War God, Linley felt calmer.

“Lord War God, the current Emperor, Johann...” Linley didn’t even finish speaking before the War God frowned and said, “I gave you my talisman. Just show it to Johann, and he will know that it represents my authority. Each generation of Emperors knows this.”

Linley was startled.

The talisman with the word ‘War’ on it which the War God had bequeathed unto him previously actually had this function as well?

The War God glanced coldly at Linley. “But you had better not use the talisman too wildly. If you throw the Empire into a state of chaos, then you will be the one to fix it. Oh, right. When you go to the Anarchic Lands, there is a person you must remember not to offend.”

“Who?” Linley was startled.

The Anarchic Lands didn’t have any famous experts, right?

The War God said calmly, “One of the five Prime Saints lives in the Anarchic Lands. His name is Desri [De’si’li]. He trains in the Laws of Light. His power is on par with Fain’s.”

Linley immediately memorized this name.

Someone who was on par with Fain was a person who was only a step away from becoming a Deity.

"Enough. You can leave now." The War God said calmly.

Linley immediately bowed, then turned and prepared to leave.

"Remember to treat with kindness that magical beast of yours, Bebe." The War God said with a sudden sigh.

Shocked, Linley turned his head to stare at the War God. Linley wasn't surprised that the War God knew of Bebe's existence, but why had the War God just told him to treat Bebe well?

The War God paid no more attention to Linley. With one step, his scarlet hair flowing around him, he entered that hovering ball of fire once more and returned to his training.

"Bebe?"

Linley actually felt that the War God was being a bit too nice to him. Whether it was with regards to Wharton's wedding, or telling him so many things on this visit...Linley now felt that this had to do with Bebe.

Bebe?

Linley still remembered how Bebe had told him that he came from a clan known as the 'Beirut' clan.

“Bebe’s power is terrifying, and his rate of growth is astonishing as well. And he comes from the Beirut clan. Now, the War God says...” Linley suddenly began to question Bebe’s identity.

The imperial capital of Channe. The imperial palace. Within the flower gardens.

Emperor Johann was in a wonderful mood. He leisurely strolled about in his flower gardens, enjoying the sight of all sorts of beautiful flowers. With Linley no longer looking into Reynolds’ affair, he naturally felt much more relaxed.

“Your Imperial Majesty, someone is flying over.” His personal attendant suddenly said.

Someone was flying over?

A Saint-level expert!

Emperor Johann immediately turned to look. In the skies, he saw a blue-robed Linley soaring in his direction. In the blink of an eye, Linley arrived in the flower gardens.

“Oh, so it is Master Linley.” A smile immediately blossomed on Emperor Johann’s face. “Is there something you need, Master Linley?”

Linley glanced at the palace attendant.

"Leave for now." Emperor Johann said to his nearby attendant, who immediately walked far into the distance. Now there was only Linley and Emperor Johann, with no one else nearby. Even the guards were over a hundred meters away.

Linley stared emotionlessly at Emperor Johann.

Stared at by Linley in such a manner, Emperor Johann began to feel puzzled and uneasy. Could it be that Linley had discovered that Reynolds' death had to do with Julin?

"Emperor Johann, do you still believe that you've told me the complete truth regarding Reynolds' dying in battle?" Linley stared at Emperor Johann.

Emperor Johann's heart immediately plummeted. He felt as though he had suddenly fallen into a bottomless abyss.

Emperor Johann was no fool. Hearing Linley's words, he naturally could guess that Linley perhaps already knew everything.

"Linley, that was the report that came from the military. It shouldn't be fake." Emperor Johann said seriously. The meaning of his words were clear; even if the information was wrong, it was the fault of the military reporters, and didn't have anything to do with him, Johann.

Linley glanced at Emperor Johann.

"Emperor Johann, based on what I have learned, my dear friend

Reynolds had led a group of knights in a scouting trip, but had been pursued by the forces of the Rohault Empire to the walls of the city of Neil. The pursuing forces of the Rohault Empire numbered only three hundred! But at that time, Prince Julin actually ordered the soldiers to stay put and guard the city from inside, out of fear!"

The look on Johann's face changed.

"Faced with three hundred people, why would a garrison of tens of thousands of soldiers have to stand their ground inside the city of Neil?" Linley's voice grew even colder. "My brother, Reynolds, and his dozens of subordinates were shouting for the gates to be opened from the base of the walls. But Prince Julin actually ordered that the gates were to remain shut. And thus like that...Reynolds and his men lost their lives, for no purpose whatsoever!"

Linley stared coldly at Johann. "Emperor Johann. Tell me. How should we resolve this affair?"

Emperor Johann already knew that there was no way to favorably resolve this situation. He didn't dare to lie or to equivocate. In front of a peak-stage Saint, would excuses be of any use?

Johann's face turned steely. "Julin, that bastard!"

Johann looked at Linley with fury in his eyes. "Master Linley, We had no idea that Julin actually did something like this. He has brought utter shame upon our Empire. Master Linley, please don't worry. We guarantee you that We will definitely take severe actions to censure him. Tomorrow, no, immediately, We shall send our senior ministers to go to the Southeast Administrative Province and strictly investigate this matter. We definitely will not let off anyone who committed any major crimes with a light punishment!”

Linley had seen through Johann’s little ploy from the very beginning.

Johann would ‘send someone’?

Even if they discovered anything, they wouldn’t find Prince Julin guilty of any serious crime.

“Your Imperial Majesty, no need to trouble yourself. Whoever caused my brother to die, I shall make them die.” Linley’s voice was cold and fierce, causing Johann’s heart to quiver.

But Emperor Johann was frantic as well.

Linley was actually saying he was going to directly kill Julin! He was going to go kill Johann’s brother? He, Johann, only had a single brother. What was Reynolds? Nothing more than a common noble. If he died, he died.

How could Reynolds’ life compare to Johann’s brother’s life?

“Linley, the Empire has our imperial laws.” Emperor Johann said in a cold voice.

For his little brother’s sake, he had decided to try and face Linley head on for once.

Linley looked at Emperor Johann. With a cold, calm voice, he said, "Dare I ask, according to military law, what is the punishment for someone who is afraid to do battle against an enemy of just three hundred soldiers, and even stands by and does nothing as his own soldiers are slaughtered?"

"The penalty is indeed death." Johann nodded. "However, an investigation is still needed to find out exactly what happened."

Linley glanced at Johann. "What happened is quite clear. I've only come to inform you of what I am going to do. Johann...do not press your luck. Do not think you can use worldly laws to bind and restrict me."

Saint-level experts were indeed free of worldly laws and restrictions.

Emperor Johann stared at Linley. Suddenly, he said in a soft, begging voice, "Linley, you have a little brother as well. You should understand how I feel."

"Haha..." Linley laughed loudly. "Your Imperial Majesty, it seems you are suggesting that so long as one has an older brother, then they can kill any of my brothers with impunity, and then have their older brother say to me, 'You have a little brother as well'? And then let me pardon their little brother?"

Linley's face was so cold, it seemed like a layer of frost was covering it. "How laughable!"

It was indeed laughable. Someone had killed his bro, and now was trying to stir up sympathy by talking about the relationship between older and younger brothers.

“Linley, you...” Emperor Johann was furious.

“Johann, I hope that you won’t let yourself act rashly. Otherwise...” With a flip of his hand, Linley retrieved the scarlet talisman which the War God had given him.

Emperor Johann, upon seeing the talisman in Linley’s hands, seemed to have had a bucket of ice water poured onto his head. His entire body began to shake.

“The War God’s Talisman?” Johann stared disbelievingly at the talisman.

After the founding of the O’Brien Empire, the War God, O’Brien, had abdicated and given the throne to his son, who had passed it down over time to future generations. Every generation of Emperors knew that the War God’s Talisman represented the War God himself!

Whoever held this War God’s Talisman even had the power to force the Emperor to abdicate!

Naturally, very few people were in possession of the War God’s Talisman, and those people wouldn’t dare to falsify an order from the War God.

“It’s good that you recognize the War God’s Talisman.” Linley looked calmly at Emperor Johann. "Emperor Johann, I don't care about the fact that you don't handle affairs with impartiality. I, Linley, am not the sort of person to consider myself the epitome of honor and righteousness. However, don't try to put on any airs around me and restrict me. I won't offend others, but I don't wish for others to offend me either."

"Also. I do not wish to see you scheme against or act against the Dunstan clan, the clan of my friend Reynolds." Linley said calmly. And then, Linley immediately took to the air and flew off towards the east.

Johann watched as Linley flew eastwards.

He knew...that Linley was heading to the Southeast Administrative Province to go kill his younger brother. But did he dare to stop him? Right now, Johann didn't even dare to try and verbally argue with Linley.

He was the Emperor, true.

But who had given him his authority? The War God! A single word from the War God could force him to abdicate. By then, he, Johann, wouldn't have any authority at all. The loss of his younger brother's life, or the loss of his Imperial power...which was more important?

Johann chose himself.

The wind blew with dreary force as Linley flew at high speed towards the Southeast Administrative Province. At this time, a black light suddenly flew towards him at high speed from the imperial capital, soon reaching Linley's side. It was Bebe!

"Boss, how'd it go?" Bebe asked.

"Although Johann dotes on his little brother, he values his Imperial power even more. I didn't have to say anything. All I did was take out the War God's Talisman, and he no longer dared to make a sound." Linley chuckled.

Worldly power?

That was nothing more than secondary, and bequeathed upon you by others at that. Only true personal power, developed by training, was truly effective. No wonder the War God didn't want to be Emperor, but instead spent his time in quiet training.

Linley and Bebe, the man and the magical beast, flew east at high speed, and in the blink of an eye disappeared into the eastern horizon.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 42, The Southeast Administrative Province

Emperor Johann lay down on a bench within the imperial palace's flower gardens, feeling utterly powerless. A weak, pale look was on his face. His eyes were closed, and he was silent. The only thing the nearby palace attendant could do was to carefully take care of him. The palace attendant was very puzzled. "Just then, his Imperial Majesty was in a fine mood. But after chatting a while with Master Linley, he became like this?"

Emperor Johann's eyes suddenly opened.

"Transmit this decree. Marquis Jeff is to go to the Central Administrative Province and join with the Jacques Legion. Let Legion Commander Lace arrange a relaxed assignment for him. Unless there are special circumstances, Marquis Jeff is not to be permitted to return to the imperial capital." Emperor Johann said calmly. He truly did not wish to see Marquis Jeff again. Whenever he saw Marquis Jeff, he would be reminded of Prince Julin.

The event which occurred today was the deepest humiliation in Emperor Johann's heart. But Emperor Johann knew that there was nothing he could do about it. All he could do was accept it.

Although the palace attendant was puzzled by the Emperor's orders, he still said respectfully, "Yes, your Imperial Majesty!"

Emperor Johann sat back down on his seat. Suddenly, he seemed to have become much older.

From the imperial capital to the Southeast Administrative Province, even flying at high speed in a straight line, over two thousand kilometers had to be traversed. In mid-flight, the impatient Linley transformed into his full Dragonform, making haste towards the southeast at top speed.

When Linley had left the imperial capital, the sun had already sunk down to and reached the edges of the eastern horizon.

When Linley arrived at the provincial capital of the Southeast Administrative Province, the entire world had begun to grow dim, and the countless commoners had begun to sit down in their homes and prepare for dinner.

"Whoosh!" While flying towards the top of provincial capital in his Dragonform, Linley suddenly spread out his spiritual energy, easily encapsulating that luxurious castle in the center of the city within it.

Prince Julin was living there. "Boss, should I handle it?" Bebe was flying side by side with Linley.

"No!" Whenever Linley thought of his bro, Reynolds, the flames of fury in his heart burned ever hotter. Although he had flown here at high speed, Linley still felt that this trip had been a long one. Too long!

Linley's dark golden eyes had turned slightly bloodshot.

"Julin!" Linley ground his teeth and said in a low voice, and then his dark golden eyes became all the more grim and callous.

Thousands of guards were currently on patrol outside the administrator's castle of the Southeast Administrative Province's provincial capital. There were many beautiful maids and servants walking about the castle as well.

Within one quiet, secluded room within the castle. Behind a hazy gauze screen. The sound of low panting. A coquettish voice moaning nonstop. Two bodies intertwined with each other.

After a long moment...

A low growl. And then, the room returned to utter silence.

"Your Imperial Highness." A soft, sweet voice.

"Baby, you really are bewitching. You are much better than my wife." Prince Julin opened the gauze screen, then put on his long robe and left the bed. "Baby, rest here. I'll order someone to bring you food."

"Thank you, your Imperial Highness." The woman behind the gauze screen had jade hair which cascaded down like a waterfall, and her eyes seemed utterly bewitching.

A hint of a satisfied smile was on the corner of Prince Julin's face.

He was very satisfied with his life.

What was so good about being an Emperor? As a Prince, he had as many servants as he wished and as many women as he wished. Wasn't this sort of life even better than that of a god's?

"That big brother of mine. Jeeze. All I did was cause that Reynolds to die, but he lectured and berated me." Prince Julin pursed his lips disdainfully.

His life was extremely valuable.

If a common noble died, he died. What was the big deal about it? Prince Julin's absolute bottom line was this; anything which might threaten his life, no matter how small, had to be stopped.

Prince Julin walked out of the room, feeling satisfied.

"Your Imperial Highness." The two female attendants outside the room said respectfully.

Prince Julin gently stroked the face of one of the female attendants. Laughing lightly, he said, "Baby, tonight, you can come serve me."

"Yes, your Imperial Highness." A hint of joy actually appeared on that female attendant's face.

Just as Prince Julin was feeling that his life was simply too perfect, a cold voice rang out from the skies above, covering the entire castle. "Prince Julin, are you enjoying your life?" That voice was filled with resentment and hatred, causing Prince Julin to suddenly tremble.

"Who is it?!" The castle guards all raised their weapons and roared angrily.

"Up above. Ahhh! It is a demon!" A guard saw Linley standing in mid-air.

Prince Julin's heart was filled with terror and fear. He didn't know who had come to act against him. The people whom Prince Julin had offended were all people who were inferior in status to him. Prince Julin knew very well that some powerful experts were not to be offended. So who was this? Prince Julin raised his head high...and his face turned ashen in terror.

Linley was currently standing in mid-air above Prince Julin's residence. In full Dragonform, Linley was surrounded by a dense fog of azurish-black battle-qi, which swirled and roiled about him. Linley did indeed look like a demon from the abyss.

His dark golden eyes were staring down at Prince Julin.

All Linley had done was to use his spiritual energy to search and investigate. After hearing Prince Julin's words to the two female attendants, he knew that this person was indeed Prince Julin.

Linley's body suddenly descended, and a terrifying surge of energy blasted out in every direction.

"Boom!"

The nearby buildings were all blown apart by this terrifying blast of force. Linley landed heavily on the ground, and the stone floor of the residence instantly cracked and shattered, as though it had been struck by a massive falling boulder.

"Milord, who are you?" Prince Julin squeezed out a smile, appearing to be incredibly humble.

The man in front of him was a Saint. Prince Julin was absolutely certain of this.

Prince Julin deeply cared about his life, so he never offended any Saints.

"Milord, is there perhaps some mistake? Why have you sought me out?" Prince Julin forcibly maintained his smile, but just at this time, from afar, a guard's voice could be heard. "Your Imperial Highness, that person is Master Linley. I went to the imperial capital and watched his duel with Lord Haydson."

Many people had watched the duel between Linley and Haydson. People from the Southeast Administrative Province had gone as well. Naturally, that guard recognized Linley.

Prince Julin hadn't gone.

To Prince Julin, watching experts fight wasn't as interesting as playing around with some beautiful women. It was fortunate for him that he was the Emperor's younger brother, because otherwise, in a country like the O'Brien Empire, where people worshipped experts and valued training and personal strength, his life would have been terrible.

“Master Linley?”

Prince Julin’s heart shook. What he had feared the most had come! Previously, at Neil City, he had caused Reynolds’ death. After Prince Julin had discovered the relationship between Linley and Reynolds, he was filled with regret, but it was too late.

“What the hell did my big brother do? Didn’t he say that Linley didn’t know that this affair had something to do with me?” Prince Julin began to curse Johann in his heart. Meanwhile, Linley just stared at Prince Julin.

His dear brother, Reynolds, had died because this Julin had extinguished Reynolds’ last chance at life due to his own cowardice. His dear brother didn’t have to die.

“Do you know why I have come?” Linley was unable to restrain his fury any longer.

“Ah! So it is Master Linley!” Prince Julin hurriedly said. “It is Julin’s honor to be able to welcome you here, Master. But I actually do not know why you have come here, Master.”

By now, groups of people had clustered around them, watching.

There were many of Prince Julin’s women, some of his children, and many guards and female attendants. They all watched with terror. Even the two experts of the ninth rank who were Prince Julin’s special guests stood far away, their hearts filled with terror.

"Master Linley, if there's anything you want, please speak calmly. I think, Master, you must have some sort of misunderstanding about his Imperial Highness." The caretaker of the castle said from the side in a trembling voice.

Linley turned back to glance at the caretaker, whose face instantly turned white.

"Misunderstanding?"

Linley walked towards Prince Julin, one step at a time. Cold sweat poured from Prince Julin's forehead. He was so frightened that not a hint of blood could be seen in his face. Linley's lips quirked upwards, revealing a terrifying smile.

"Whoosh!" Linley's ferocious black draconic tail suddenly moved, wrapping around Prince Julin's body and constricting him like a whip.

"Ah!!!" An shrill scream burst out from Prince Julin's throat, sounding like a woman being molested.

Linley's dark golden eyes stared remorselessly at Prince Julin. "Why are you screaming? I haven't even used any force, but you are already screaming. If I were to use force..."

"Spare me, Master Linley, spare me." Prince Julin said, terror-stricken.

"Spare you?"

Linley's voice suddenly turned into a guttural growl. "Me, spare you? What about my brother Reynolds? Who spared his life?" Linley's black draconic tail, radiating a cold light, began to squeeze while lifting Prince Julin into the air.

Prince Julin was constricted and lifted into the air by this draconic tail which was as thick as a strong man's arm. As the tail began to tremble slightly, Prince Julin began to howl in terror. "Ah!!" "Slash." Fresh blood began to dye Prince Julin's clothes red.

"Stop!" Many of the loyal guards raised their weapons from afar and howled angrily. They didn't dare to charge forwards, but they did dare to at least shout.

"F*ck off!" Linley frowned, his heart filled with fury.

"Boom!" A terrifying surge of energy erupted from Linley, blasting out in every direction. All of the surrounding guards and female attendants were sent flying. Some unlucky guards ended up smashing into walls head first, with their brains splattering. Others fell to the ground and were heavily injured.

In the blink of an eye, aside from Linley and Prince Julin, not a single person was still on his or her feet.

"The Boss has really gone crazy." Bebe watched quietly from midair.

Linley retracted his gaze from the surrounding people, turning to stare at the bloody-faced Prince Julin. "Julin, don't worry. I'll let you live for a bit longer...I'll let you have the sensation of a slow death." Linley's voice was very soft, but it filled Prince Julin with the utmost fear.

"Master, please spare me. I'll do anything you want, give you anything you want, as long as I am capable, anything is fine, but the important thing, don't kill me." Prince Julin still thought that he could escape from this situation alive.

Linley didn't pay any attention to Prince Julin's squabbling. The only thing in his mind was the smile of his Fourth Bro, Reynolds. That adorable youngster, so dissolute and lazy, had spent ten days and ten nights waiting for him in a blizzard when he had been carving 'Awakening From the Dream'.

"Crunch." A cringe-inducing sound could be heard from Prince Julin's entire body.

His waist had suddenly become compacted to the waist of a slender young lady. Prince Julin's face was utterly red. He wasn't able to say a single sentence, and fresh blood was leaking forward from his mouth.

"Spare...spare..." Prince Julin stared at Linley in terror.

The distant serving women and attendants all watched with terror as Prince Julin's waist visibly became smaller and smaller.

"Crunch!" Yet another bone-splintering sound could be heard. Blood was pouring forth from Prince Julin's mouth, and his face had turned the color of purple jam.

The internal organs in his body had been squeezed to the point of rupture. This sort of pain made Prince Julin wish he could die.

"You can't die so fast." Prince Julin's endurance was far weaker than that of Clayde's, from all those years ago.

Suddenly, Linley's draconic tail loosened and retracted. That nearly-dead Prince Julin fell to the ground. Prince Julin let out a sigh of relief, but before he even hit the ground...

"Bam!" Linley's right leg kicked viciously against Prince Julin's body.

Prince Julin's eyes turned round from utter terror.

Prince Julin's body was sent flying from this kick, and he smashed hard against a distant wall. That thick, sturdy wall was actually shattered by the collision. As for Prince Julin? His weak, fragile body instantly disintegrated into a pile of mud-like flesh and bone, strewn everywhere.

"Fourth Bro, don't worry. I won't spare a single one of those people who caused you to die." Linley said softly to himself. A hint of moisture could be seen in those dark golden eyes.

Linley turned to look at Bebe in mid-air.

"Let's go. We're heading to Neil City!"

"Whoosh!" Linley rose straight into the air, flying towards the southeast at high speed with Bebe by his side. The thousands of people in the area below were utterly, deathly silent. Only, Prince Julin's utterly disintegrated corpse was so eye-catching and so frightful to behold!

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 43, The Corpse

If Reynolds was alive, he wanted to see him. If Reynolds was dead, he wanted to see Reynolds' corpse!

From Yale, Linley had learned that Reynolds' corpse had actually been taken away by the enemy. On this trip, no matter what, he had to bring his friend's corpse back. However, before that, Linley had to pay a visit to Neil City. After all, the soldiers of Neil City should have known exactly what happened on the day Reynolds was killed.

"Boss, don't be too heartbroken." Bebe said softly.

Linley stared at the distant horizon, then turned to glance at Bebe, forcing out a smile. "Bebe, I'm fine." But it was hard to make out any expressions on the face of the Dragonformed Linley; all that could be seen was the corners of his lips curving slightly.

After flying for a while, the distant Neil City appeared in the desolate landscape.

"We're arriving." The temperature around Linley suddenly dropped by a level.

The army of the O'Brien Empire was currently camped a few dozen kilometers outside Neil City. Ten kilometers away, facing them, was the army of the Rohault Empire. The two armies stared at each other.

After Prince Julin had left the city, the Golden Flame Legion had quickly exacted revenge for Reynolds. But the Rohault Empire had been prepared already, and they wouldn't lower their heads either. The two armies had engaged in multiple engagements, with tens of thousands of casualties. They were now at a temporary halt, but the next attack could come at any moment.

Right now, the garrison of Neil City was fairly relaxed. After all, there was an army of tens of thousands in front of them.

"Man, that Prince-whatever was such a coward. He let the enemy make it all the way to our walls, and didn't even let us go out." A couple of garrison guards were huddled together in a corner of the walls, chatting idly.

"What a tragedy. Senior Captain Reynolds died such an unjust death, and even his corpse was taken away."

The Golden Flame Legion was, without question, an extremely elite legion. What happened last time at the walls of Neil City was, without a doubt, a mark of shame for the entire Golden Flame Legion. But the military commanders at that time hadn't dared to disobey the orders of Prince Julin.

"Who are you?!" Suddenly, terrified, angry shouts could be heard from outside. One soldier after another stopped resting in their cubbyholes and came out, but when they saw the Dragonformed person standing in mid-air, wrapped within a cocoon of azurish-black mist, they were all stunned.

They were elite soldiers, elite soldiers who constantly lived on the line between life and death.

But when they saw this expert standing in mid-air, they understood that this aberration was definitely a Saint-level expert. These soldiers didn't have any ability to fight against him at all.

"You...you are Master Linley?" Suddenly, a military officer whispered these words.

The eyes of the surrounding elite soldiers suddenly lit up. Linley's Dragonformed appearance had become the stuff of legends. Those elite warriors carefully inspected the cloud-shrouded Linley's appearance. Indeed, he looked very much like how the legends said he did.

"It is I." A dark whisper drifted out from within that azurish-black mist.

Master Linley. A genius magus. A grandmaster sculptor. A peak-stage Saint. The pride of the entire O'Brien Empire...countless people in the Empire worshipped Linley. After realizing that this aberration was Linley, the surrounding warriors actually began to feel that Linley's transformation was extremely 'manly' and very 'ferocious'.

These were valiant warriors indeed.

"Master Linley, if there is anything you need, please just ask us." The military officer hurriedly said.

"A while ago, a group of your scouts were encountered and attacked by the Rohault Empire's forces, and were chased all the way to the city walls. The senior captain of that group was named Reynolds, correct?" Linley's voice was hoarse.

The military officer said, "Yes, Master Linley."

All of the surrounding soldiers felt a deep sense of humiliation. Even Master Linley had learned of the Golden Flame Legion's shame. All of them felt extremely awkward and embarrassed.

"Where is Reynolds' corpse?" Linley asked.

"Master Linley, Lord Reynolds' corpse was taken away by the enemies." The military officer's face was turning a bit green. He truly felt ashamed. Before their very eyes, three hundred people had not only killed Reynolds and his men, they had even taken away Reynolds' corpse.

Linley asked, "Who here personally witnessed what had happened on that day?"

Many people looked at each other. These people had only heard of what happened to Reynolds. That squad of soldiers who had been on the walls and had personally witnessed what had happened had all been punished and sent to the front lines to do battle with the enemies.

Seeing the expression on their faces, Linley frowned.

"I...I witnessed it." An ancient-sounding voice rang out from behind. All of the soldiers parted, allowing a lavishly dressed old man walk over. This old man was the governor of Neil City.

"Lord Governor!" All the surrounding soldiers bowed respectfully.

Staring at Linley and the azurish-black cloud surrounding him, the city governor sighed secretly. As the city governor of a border city like Neil City, how could he possibly be a soft, spineless person? At that time, he had been accompanying Prince Julin. When he had seen Reynolds and the others being pursued, he was just about to order his men to go rescue them.

But at that time, Prince Julin's attitude clearly showed that he would not permit anyone to go outside. They had to stand their ground inside the walls! The city governor was already quite old, and he had sons and grandsons. He didn't dare to disobey the order of Prince Julin.

"You are the city governor of Neil City? Good. Clearly explain to me what happened that day when Reynolds was pursued here and killed." Linley said coldly.

The city governor nodded. "When Reynolds and his men fled here, they had all been wounded. There was an arrow sticking out from Reynolds' shoulders. When they reached the walls, ten or so experts of the enemy came rushing over, ignoring the arrows of the garrison troops as they immediately began to slaughter Reynolds and the others. Reynolds was slashed to death by a blow to his chest, and then the leader of the enemy forces took him away."

Linley secretly nodded to himself.

The Dawson Conglomerate's intelligence was indeed accurate.

"The leader of the enemies? Do you know where he is?" Linley stared at the city governor of Neil. "I must find and reclaim Reynolds' corpse."

The city governor of Neil nodded. "Right now, the legions of the Rohault Empire are currently in a deadlock against our legion. They are located a few dozen kilometers outside of Neil City. I imagine their leader is there as well. Right...the leader should be a warrior of the eighth rank."

"Oh..."

Linley turned to stare towards the south. He could clearly smell the scent of battle and blood in that direction. The bloody scent created by the deaths of tens of thousands was extremely thick!

"Bebe, let's go."

"Boom!" A terrifying sonic boom could be heard as Linley and Bebe, the man and the magical beast, slashed through the air, disappearing into the southern horizons. Seeing this, the city governor of Neil had a hint of excitement on his face. "Looks like those bastards of the Rohault Empire are in for it now."

The city governor of Neil immediately descended from the walls and led a small squad out of the city into the direction of the Golden Flame Legion's camp.

The two armies of the two Empires stared at each other. Within the central battlefield, many soldiers were carting away the corpses of their own people. At a time like this, the two legions had quite conscientiously paused their battle.

The corpses were carried away, one after the other. At this time, the already faintly red earth was stained even more crimson, and the stench of blood had attracted quite a few locusts.

In the camp of the army of the Rohault Empire's, their military flag was gently waving in the breeze. Multiple squads were out on patrol. Suddenly, an azurish-black cloud appeared in the air above the Rohault Empire's camp.

"Not here?" Linley's spiritual energy had encompassed the entire military camp, but he couldn't find Reynolds' corpse.

Senior Captain Hugh [Hu'ke] was currently in his tent, taking large gulps of strong liquor. He was in a wonderful mood. Hugh was certain that, after this battle, he would definitely be promoted.

"At the very least, I will be promoted to deputy legion commander." Hugh mused to himself.

But right at this moment, a powerful force suddenly ripped apart his sturdy tent. Hugh was shocked. "What on earth? Have the enemies broken into our camp?" While thinking this, Hugh quickly rushed out, but when he did, he felt the wild, howling wind, so powerful that he couldn't even stand straight.

Staring at his surroundings, Hugh's face turned pale. He saw countless gusts of energy swirling about throughout the Rohault Empire's camp, and all of the soldiers found it hard to stand stable.

After a while, the wild wind disappeared.

"All of the military officers of the Rohault Empire are to report to the central gathering location. Quickly." A calm voice rang out from the sky. Everyone craned their heads upwards. They saw that constantly flowing azurish-black mist, and within that mist, they could vaguely see the form of a terrifying creature.

"I am Legion Commander Chastre [Sha'si'te] of the Rohault Empire's Wright [Lai'te] Legion. Might I ask why you have come here, esteemed expert?" Legion Commander Chastre said respectfully.

From the power the man had just displayed, Chastre knew that this was a terrifyingly powerful expert with the ability to destroy this entire legion.

The azurish-black mist was drawn closer to Linley's body, allowing the people below to clearly see what Linley looked like.

"Freak!"

"Demon!"

Many soldiers let out quiet cries of fear. Linley's body landed heavily on the ground, causing it to shake and cracks to appear. Linley's draconic tail swished about, gouging deep holes into the ground wherever it passed.

"Dare I ask, esteemed expert, are you Master Linley?" Chastre said respectfully.

Linley glanced at Chastre. The man was quite experienced, and lived up to being a legion commander. After Linley had become famous, news about his Dragonformed appearance had been widely spread as well.

"It is I." Linley said calmly.

The countless surrounding soldiers immediately felt a terrifying sense of pressure. They had all heard of how powerful Linley was, but Linley belonged to the O'Brien Empire's side. Right now, they were currently engaged in battle against the O'Brien Empire.

"Master Linley, can it be that you are going to violate the laws of war? As a Saint-level expert, are you also going to participate in this battle?" Chastre said in a voice that was neither humble nor offensive. When two Empires engaged in battle, unless it was a do-or-die final battle, Saint-level experts generally were not permitted to participate.

Linley glanced at him coldly. "I dislike others threatening me."

Chastre immediately no longer dared to make a sound. If Linley were to go wild, he was truly capable of annihilating this entire army. He didn't have any recourse...

"Speak. A while ago, you sent some people out on ambush and chased a scouting party of the O'Brien Empire to the city of Neil. Who was the leader of that squad of three hundred?" Linley said coldly.

When he said this, virtually all the surrounding soldiers turned to stare at the nearby Hugh.

Hugh's body quivered.

No one needed to say anything. Linley turned to look at Hugh as well, and Hugh immediately said respectfully, "Master Linley, a while ago, I did indeed lead my troops to kill a large squad and utterly annihilated them in the end."

"Utterly annihilated?" Hearing these words, the muscles beneath Linley's eyes twitched once.

Linley stared at Hugh, his cold gaze causing Hugh to feel as though he had suddenly sunk into a frozen land of ice. "I heard that you not only killed all the people in that squad, you also brought back the corpse of the senior captain."

"It is true." A look of arrogance appeared on Hugh's face. As far as Hugh was concerned, this was something worth being proud of.

Linley's heart shook.

The man in front of him had admitted to it, but the military camp didn't have Reynolds' corpse within it. Could it be that Reynolds' corpse had already been destroyed? When he thought of this possibility, the angry flames in Linley's heart burned even hotter.

With a flicker, Linley appeared in front of Hugh.

"Ah." Hugh didn't have the chance to run away. Stretching out one arm, Linley's powerful right hand clutched around Hugh's throat, lifting Hugh into the air.

Linley's dark golden eyes stared death at Hugh. "Do you know? The name of that senior captain was Reynolds. He was a friend for life of myself, Linley!" Linley ground his teeth.

The surrounding soldiers now all understood why Linley had come and done such a thing.

Hugh's eyes were filled with shocked understanding as well. At the same time, he could sense that the force Linley was exerting around his throat was increasing. His face turning red, he forced out one word after another with difficulty. "No...that...that Reynolds...he...he didn't die!"

Linley was stunned.

His hand loosened, and Hugh collapsed to the ground. Hugh immediately held his throat in his hands and began to cough.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 44, Enslaved

“Fourth Bro didn’t die?” Stunned, Linley blurted these words out, but then he immediately came to himself. “Did you just say that Reynolds didn’t die?”

Right now, Linley’s heart was thumping madly. Shock, joy, worry, disbelief, excitement, fear...all sorts of emotions were intermixed in Linley’s chest. Right now, the only thing Linley could do was to stare expectantly at this military officer of the Rohault Empire in front of him.

Holding his throat, Hugh frantically said in fear, “It is true. He didn’t die. He really didn’t die.”

“Hugh, when you reported your military success, didn’t you say that the senior captain you captured had died already?” The nearby legion commander, Chastre, was frowning.

Lying to a Saint was extremely foolish. Chastre thought that Hugh was perhaps concocting a lie out of fear.

Linley stared at Hugh as well. He truly hoped that Hugh wasn’t lying.

“Speak, now.” Linley stared at Hugh. Every single person in the now-chaotic army camp was staring at Hugh. Hugh straightened his body, then hurriedly explained, “Master Linley, I truly am not lying. Back then, when I recovered that senior captain’s corpse, that is, Reynolds’ corpse, I carried the body myself. But afterwards, I discovered that this ‘corpse’ suddenly moved. Only then did I realize that he hadn’t died!”

Linley's heart tightened.

An awkward look appeared on Hugh's face. "Master Linley, this Reynolds was extremely handsome, and he was a noble, valuable magus. Based on the magic he used when my comrades and I were chasing him, he should most likely be a magus of the seventh rank. A handsome young magus of the seventh rank is extremely valuable on the slave market."

Hearing this, Linley instantly understood.

The surrounding military officers all understood as well. In times of war, there would often be large numbers of slaves sold to slave trading organizations. The army was often on good terms with these organizations, and a handsome young magus of the seventh rank would definitely be a valuable commodity.

A magus of the seventh rank was a high and mighty figure.

To cause a magus like this to become a slave was something which some noble ladies truly liked. They would be willing to pay enormous sums of money to purchase such a slave. The price one would get from selling such a magus of the seventh rank would probably be far greater than any reward money which Hugh would have received from the army.

"Are you saying...that you sold Reynolds to a slave trading organization?" Linley asked.

"Right." Hugh said in terror. He now knew that Reynolds was Master

Linley's bosom friend.

"How badly was Reynolds injured?" Linley said with concern. From the reports he had heard, Reynolds had suffered life-threatening wounds. Linley was worried about him.

Hugh said with absolute certainty, "Master Linley, don't worry. When I took Reynolds back, I immediately invited healers to come treat him. And then, after he was sold to the slave trading organization, those slave traders definitely wouldn't let such a valuable commodity die."

Valuable commodity?

In his heart, Linley was worried about his friend. Reynolds had fallen to the point of becoming a slave?

"Let's go. You will come with me to find that slave trading organization. You should know where it is, right?" Linley grabbed Hugh by his clothes, and Hugh hurriedly said, "Yes, this humble one remembers it very clearly."

The nearby Chastre snapped, "Hugh, from today onwards, you are to accompany Master Linley. Whatever Master Linley wishes you to do, you must obey." Chastre looked at Linley and said apologetically, "Master Linley, our deepest apologies. I hope you won't be too upset with us."

Chastre truly didn't have any other options.

Generally speaking, in times of war, both sides wouldn't dare to get the family and friends of Saints involved. After all, if a Saint was to go berserk, that would be quite terrifying.

In the annals of history, there had been more than a few cases of a Saint going berserk and killing tens of thousands of soldiers.

However, generally speaking, Saints were high and mighty people who stood above the fray. So long as you didn't offend them, they wouldn't stoop to causing troubles with ordinary people.

Linley glanced at Chastre, then snatched Hugh up. "Let's go." He suddenly rose into the air, and then flew alongside Bebe towards the south...

Watching Linley fly away, the entire military camp let out a collective sigh of relief. Facing such a powerful Saint, all of the warriors present truly didn't have anything they could do.

"Commanders, go now and manage your subordinates. I'm worried that the Golden Flame Legion will seize this opportunity to launch a sneak attack." Seeing how disorderly and dispirited the army camp was, Chastre couldn't help but feel worried. After all, their army was already in a state of disorder, and the spirit of the army had already been suppressed by Linley.

Chastre's prediction was correct. Not too long afterwards, the Golden Flame Legion once more began their ferocious assault.

Within a border city within the Rohault Empire. Hugh in hand, Linley descended upon a seemingly unremarkable estate, which had a number of exquisitely dressed guards within.

"Whoosh!" A sudden gust of wind came out of nowhere. Linley, now in human form again, appeared on the ground with Hugh in his clutches. Linley was no longer as grief-stricken and furious as he had been at the beginning, when he was preparing to avenge his brother's death. He was much calmer, now.

No matter what, at least his Fourth Bro was still alive.

"Old White [Huai'te]! Old White!" Hugh immediately began to yell at the top of his lungs as soon as he landed.

"Who are you guys?" Old White didn't come out, but quickly, over ten guards appeared in a circle around them, all of whom had their weapons at the ready, prepared to attack at any moment. Only then did a silver-haired old man in a gentleman's suit appear from a side door. Seeing Hugh, the silver-haired old man laughed loudly. "Oh, so it is my dear Hugh. Why are you in such a rush, to the point of charging straight in?"

"Hugh, who is this?" The old gentleman named 'White' had very sharp eyes. He instantly could tell that this man dressed in a black robe was quite extraordinary. After returning to human form, Linley hadn't changed his clothes, and so his pants were ripped and torn.

Linley frowned, glancing coldly at this Old White.

"Old White, this is Master Linley!" Hugh said hurriedly.

"Master Linley?" Old White was startled, and then a look of shock appeared on his face. "Could it be that this is the Dragonblood Warrior of the O'Brien Empire, Master Linley?"

Hugh hurriedly nodded. "I was flown over here by Master Linley."

Old White didn't dare to believe it. He was nothing more than a local supervisor for his slave trading organization. How could he be worth Master Linley, one of the towering figures of the Yulan continent, to come and visit him?

"Old White..." Linley looked at Old White.

"Master Linley." Old White was extremely humble.

Linley went straight to the point. "Old White, roughly a month ago, Hugh brought a young magus of the seventh rank and sold him to you, I believe."

Old White glanced at Hugh, then nodded towards Linley. "That is correct."

"That magus of the seventh rank, his name is Reynolds! He is the bosom friend of me, Linley!" Linley's voice was very calm, but his eyes stared coldly at Old White.

Old White's eyes instantly turned as round as an ox's. "Mas...Master Linley's bosom friend?!" Old White's eyes were filled with shock, terror, and disbelief.

Although these slave trading organizations were quite powerful and had some connections to the four major assassin's guilds, no matter how powerful they were, they wouldn't dare offend a Saint, much less a peak-stage Saint such as Linley!

"Hugh, you..." Old White stared furiously at Hugh.

It was Hugh who had sold that Reynolds to their organization. Their organization dared to sell almost anyone, even the disciples of major clans, but why had Hugh sold them the close friend of a Saint?

A bitter smile was on Hugh's face.

He didn't know either. If he knew, would he have dared to offend Reynolds? Now, Hugh's life was in Linley's hands.

"Old White." Linley spoke.

Old White's reaction speed was extremely fast. He hurriedly said to Linley, "Master Linley, don't worry. Since this Mr. Reynolds is your friend, Master Linley, our organization definitely will not do anything to Mr. Reynolds. I will immediately send someone to inform our headquarters..."

"What's the matter? Where is Reynolds?" Linley asked.

"This...this..." A hint of terror was on Old White's face. After all, Reynolds had been sold off as a slave almost a month ago.

Linley could sense that something was wrong, and he immediately barked, "Speak!"

Old White had a feeling of terror in his heart. If a Saint such as Linley were to grow angry with him, it was totally possible that their entire organization would be wiped off the map. He hurriedly said, "Master Linley, when Mr. Reynolds was brought here, we first arranged for his wounds to be treated, and then roughly ten days later, we sent him off with a large group of slaves in one shipment. From my understanding, Mr. Reynolds should probably already have arrived at our headquarters."

"Headquarters?" Linley frowned.

Hugh was puzzled as well. "Old White, what's this all about? Doesn't your organization usually sell off slaves directly at the slave markets? Why would you send Mr. Reynolds to your headquarters?"

Old White hurriedly said, "We do sell off ordinary slaves at the slave markets, yes, but Mr. Reynolds was different. He is a magus of the seventh rank! He poses an extremely great risk. If we were to sell Mr. Reynolds to a customer, and then Mr. Reynolds was to use a magic spell and kill the customer, then our organization would have to pay a huge fine."

Linley stared at Old White.

"Therefore, for powerful people such as Mr. Reynolds and other dangerous, top-quality slaves, they all are sent off to the headquarters, where they will be trained for three months. They will be trained and taught to never dare to disobey a command and obediently obey their masters. Only then would we deliver them to customers.” Old White explained.

Linley’s face changed.

Train them so they wouldn’t dare to disobey? Obediently obey their masters’ orders? The person being trained was an expert like Reynolds... Linley could totally imagine how sinister and terrifying this ‘training’ was.

“Where is your headquarters? Take me there.” Linley’s face changed and he immediately shouted.

Old White hesitated for a moment, but seeing the terrifying look in Linley’s eyes, he immediately nodded. “Yes, Master Linley, I will immediately guide you to our headquarters.”

“Our headquarters is deep within the Rohault Empire and is far from the borders. Given the winding roads, it is a journey of three thousand kilometers from here.” Old White said.

“My Boss can just fly you over there.” The nearby Bebe said unhappily. Bebe was worried for Reynolds as well. After all, when they were at the Ernst Institute, Bebe would often have fun alongside and play around alongside Reynolds.

Old White hurriedly nodded. He didn’t dare to say a word.

“Master Linley, there’s no need for me to go with you, right?” The nearby Hugh was filled with terror.

Linley turned to stare at Hugh. Currently, Reynolds was probably being tormented by those people in the slave trading organization's headquarters. Thinking of this, Linley couldn't help but feel a hint of fury.

"Slash!" A blurred claw swiped out. Hugh clutched his throat with terror, but fresh blood still flowed out of his throat. A few moments later, Hugh toppled to the floor.

Floating in mid-air, Bebe cast a dissatisfied glance at Hugh. "You bastard, you thought you would be able to save your worthless skin? Are you damn stupid or what? When you were killing the soldiers of Reynolds' corps, you thought it was quite enjoyable, right? Well, today, when I, Bebe, killed you, I felt it was very enjoyable as well."

Seeing this scene play out, Old White's body was trembling slightly.

"Old fellow, don't be afraid. As long as you obediently follow my Boss's orders, I, Bebe, definitely won't mistreat you." Bebe smiled widely, revealing his sharp fangs.

Old White had heard of how, during Linley's duel with Haydson, Linley's two Saint-level magical beasts had appeared, one of which seemed to be a mouse-type magical beast and which had easily trampled Haydson. Staring at the hovering Bebe, Old White was beginning to suspect that this Bebe was most likely that very terrifying magical beast.

Terrified, Old White could only force himself to smile at Bebe.

Linley snatched Old White then soared into the air, flying towards the southeast. "Old White, lead the way for me!" The terrified Old White cleared his throat a few times, stared at the ground below, then began to direct Linley towards their headquarters.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 45, Cruelty

Let us return to year 10009 of the Yulan calendar, September 21st. A few days had passed after Wharton and Nina's grand wedding. At this time, Linley was under the belief that Reynolds had died.

However...

"This is the third day on this ship. That bastard just tortured another slave to death, then tossed him into the river." Through the steel-barred windows, Reynolds could see the outside world. He had watched a seemingly powerful, yet bloodstained body be tossed into the river. A human being, just like that, sank into the river with a 'plop'.

In the army, Reynolds had already seen how worthless a human life was.

However, on this slave journey, Reynolds had been truly shocked by how terrifying these slavers were. Fortunately, he, Reynolds, was an extremely valuable commodity, and so those slavers didn't dare to kill him.

"Whap!" A whip struck Reynolds heavily on his body, and then against Reynolds' face. Instantly, a bloody welt could be seen forming on his face, and his ragged clothes were covered with rips as well.

"Motherfucker, what are you looking at?" A large whip-wielding thug shouted angrily at Reynolds.

Reynolds could only huddle into a corner of the ship, not daring to make a sound. He had learned to be obedient. If he wanted to try and be brave and stare back at him...he probably would be tortured this entire night.

This slaving vessel was extremely large. The bottommost deck held those cheapest of slaves. Those slavers would sometimes go down to that deck, and if they saw someone they disliked, they would strike them heavily.

Reynolds, as an extremely valuable slave, was imprisoned within a special room in the second level. The windows to this room were barred with steel, and there were two thugs on watch at all times.

Quite a few thugs were stationed in the other rooms on the second floor as well.

The third and uppermost floor was used for transporting the leaders of this slaving vessel. One was an expert of the eighth rank, while two were experts of the seventh rank. If it wasn't for Reynolds, this slaving vessel wouldn't have had an expert of the eighth rank sent along with it.

On the deck of this ship, a tall, strong, bald man walked down from the third floor.

"Lord Peel [Pi'er]." The surrounding thugs said respectfully.

Seeing the bloodstains on the deck of the ship, the bald man frowned. "Wipe those bloodstains away. Also, slaves are worth fucking money. All of you be careful when you hit them. Don't kill them. If you kill a slave, that means the organization will lose some money.”

Those thugs didn't dare to make a sound.

The bald man snorted, then walked to the chain links at the deck's edge. The cool night wind blew against him as he enjoyed the beautiful night scenery of the Bonai [Bo'nai] River.

“Right. What's going on with that magus?” The bald man snorted.

A nearby thug immediately said obsequiously, “Lord Peel, that little pretty-boy magus started off all high and mighty, but after the boys spent a bit of time trainin' him these past few days, he's learned his lesson.”

“Excellent.” The bald man said calmly, “All of you, be careful and keep a close eye on that magus. The only valuable commodity we are escorting this time is that magus of the seventh rank. And, by the looks of it, this magus is a noble. When we sell him, the price will be extraordinarily high.”

Those thugs all nodded.

A young magus of the seventh rank was definitely one of the best auction items that would appear in the slave markets. People would go even crazier for him than they would for a beautiful virgin.

“What's that noise?” The bald man suddenly frowned, then turned his head and stared at the cabin. “That sick bastard keeps on coughing. Drag him out. Motherfucker, he pisses me off.' A hint of bloodlust was in the eyes of the bald man.

Soon, a skinny young man was dragged out. By the looks of him, he was eighteen or nineteen years old. His body was covered with a foul odor as well as bloodstains. The eyes of this youngster were rather vacant. This long period of imprisonment had caused him to go crazy. He was nothing more than a young man who had left his hometown in search of his dreams, but who would've thought that he would suddenly have been seized and sold to a slaving organization? Just like that, he had entered a nightmare.

"Hrm?" The bald man stretched his hand out, and a nearby thug very conscientiously filled it with a whip.

Holding the whip, the bald man cracked it in the air, creating a clear, crisp sound. Suddenly, a hint of fear appeared in the blank eyes of the youngster.

"If you aren't dead, why do you keep coughing? You ruined the wonderful mood I was in." The bald man suddenly landed a vicious whipping blow onto the skinny youth.

This whip blow was far stronger than the blows of those common thugs.

The skinny youngster's body suddenly trembled violently, and a terrifyingly deep whip-scar was left from his face to his waist. Blood immediately began to flow out. As for his clothes, they were destroyed long ago.

"Whap!" "Whap!" "Whap!" "Whap!"

The bald man viciously whipped him, fully venting his temper on this poor young man's body. The skinny youngster, quite experienced by now, immediately tried to protect his head and curled into a ball. What he thought was that as long as he could endure, he might still be able to preserve his life.

Sadly. Although the bald man didn't dare to kill Reynolds, the bald man dared to kill him.

"Lord Peel, he's dead." A nearby thug whispered.

The bald man casually tossed his bloodstained whip to a nearby thug, then turned back to stare at the raging river waters, stretching lazily. "Damn, that feels good. You guys, toss that piece of trash overboard. Also, make sure you scrub the deck clean."

"Yes, Lord Peel." The surrounding thugs quickly began to work as instructed.

"Plop!" With a plopping sound, yet another body was tossed into the river.

Each slaving ship carried several hundred slaves within it, and on each trip, over ten would be tortured to death. The ones which the thugs would beat to death were the ones who were physically the weakest. The physically stronger ones would be able to hold on for longer. Thus, the slaving organization didn't lose too much.

"Yet another one." Reynolds sighed in his heart. He didn't expect that after managing to escape Neil City alive, he would have fallen to such a state.

Reynolds didn't know what his future would be like.

"Be a slave?" Thinking about the debased, dark life of a slave, Reynolds shuddered.

"Pretty-boy, what are you mumbling? Do you want to cast a spell?" With an angry roar and a 'WHAP!' sound, another whip blow came, striking him directly on his face.

Pain. Humiliation!

These thugs clearly knew that Reynolds was a magus of the seventh rank. All of those petty, despicable thugs wanted to whip Reynolds whenever they could, so as to satisfy their petty pride.

"Motherfucker, fk off!" Reynolds was truly angry now.

The more he endured, the more overbearing these men became.

"Oh ho!" The thug with the whip raised an eyebrow, his lips curving into a sneer as he looked at Reynolds. "You still have the gall to be arrogant?" As he spoke, he struck out with another whip.

A ferocious light flashed in Reynolds eyes, and his lips quickly muttered the words to a magic spell.

"BAM!" A series of fireballs the size of a person's head erupted out from Reynolds, striking out wildly towards those two thugs. In the blink of an eye, they had been encircled by over ten balls of fire.

"Ah!!!" Those two thugs screamed miserably, their entire bodies covered with flame. What's more, these flames burned much hotter than ordinary, fire-stoked flames. The two thugs quickly had their skin turned into char. Soon, they stopped breathing.

Immediately after casting the spell, Reynolds charged outside.

But just then...

"Bam!" A sudden hole appeared in the ceiling of the room, and a one-eyed man wearing a red robe descended into the middle of the room. With a flash, he reached Reynolds, and then kicked Reynolds with his leg.

"Bam!" Reynolds was knocked into a corner of the cabin, hard. Blood spewed from his mouth.

The one-eyed, red-robed man glanced back at the two charred corpses, then stared coldly at Reynolds. "You are asking for death!" Reynolds stared back at the red-haired and red-robed one-eyed man.

"No wonder the organization insists on three months of special training. All of you are miserable wretches." The one-eyed man cursed. Simply capturing an expert such as a magus of the seventh rank was not enough. To make them feel, in the deepest parts of their hearts, unable to resist any orders, was extremely difficult. If they were angered, they would go all out.

Moments later...

Multiple thugs grabbed Reynolds by his limbs, making sure he couldn't move. The red-haired one-eyed man and two bald men stared coldly at Reynolds.

"Pretty-boy, I've reminded you that you need to be a good boy on my boat. But you, you make me very angry." The red-haired one-eyed man said in a cold voice. "Peel, help him improve his memory."

Reynolds' face immediately turned pale.

He remembered the threat which the one-eyed man had previously made to him. The terror-stricken Reynolds stared with bulging eyes, but the bald man named Peel only laughed as he walked over. "Hold one of his hands down for me." Immediately, the thugs grabbed Reynolds' hands and pressed them against the deck.

From the deck, Peel retrieved a pair of steel pincers that were used for cutting through iron chains. He pressed the steel pincers around two of Reynolds' fingers. Sensing the cold feeling from his fingers, Reynolds' heart trembled.

"Hrmph. Squeeze." The one-eyed man sneered coldly.

The steel pincers clamped down, and as easily as cutting through cloth, Reynolds' two fingers were cut off. Fresh blood flowed out as piercing pain wracked Reynolds' body.

The pain of losing two fingers was far worse than even when he had received a blade chop on his body.

Hearing Reynolds agonized moans, the nearby thugs began to grow excited. The one-eyed man sneered coldly, "Pretty-boy, remember this. Today, all I did was teach you a little lesson. If you forget this lesson again, I guarantee...you will never forget the next lesson again." After speaking, the one-eyed man turned and walked away.

Dark night.

Reynolds was curled into the icy cold corner of the room, his body still trembling slightly. His severed finger-stubs had already clotted. The two nearby thugs occasionally looked at him, their eyes filled with madness.

Reynolds had killed two of their friends. These thugs naturally were filled with hatred towards him.

"Motherfucker. Pretty-boy."

A whip suddenly flashed out, aimed at Reynolds' wounded hand. Reynolds tried his best to hide his injured hand behind his back, but part of that whip still clipped his hand. An extreme wave of pain and agony came from his hand...the wound burst open yet again. In particular, the pain of the whip striking upon striking his finger bones was especially agonizing. It was as though his fingers had been chopped off yet again.

"Enough. Stop hitting him." The nearby thug said.

Actually, the two thugs were also afraid that Reynolds would go crazy once more and cast magic at them. However, the thug which had just hit Reynolds was on extremely good terms with one of the two thugs that had been killed. Naturally, he wanted revenge.

"I can't do this. I have to escape." Curled into a ball in the icy corner, Reynolds secretly thought to himself, "If this sort of life continues, I really will go insane."

Reynolds knew that even if he was able to persevere and hold on to his sanity, the only thing which would welcome him was the life of a slave.

"Tomorrow. Tomorrow, when the ship reaches the shore, I'll make my move." Reynolds had no time for any misgivings. Actually, every day this ship would stop at the shore. One reason was to replenish their food supplies; the other was because the one-eyed man didn't like to eat dry food. He preferred eating fresh delicacies. Thus, they had to go ashore to do so.

However, the one-eyed man was very careful. Whenever he went ashore to eat, the other two experts of the seventh rank would watch Reynolds.

Time passed very slowly. Lying on the floor late at night, Reynolds felt even colder. What's more, throbbing pain continued to come in waves from his severed fingers. He gritted his teeth and endured.

Slowly, the sky began to turn bright.

Those two thugs whipped Reynolds a few more times, but Reynolds only huddled in the corner, quietly accepting the blows. He knew that he couldn't resist. The first time he resisted, he had lost two fingers. The next time he resisted...then perhaps, like the one-eyed man had threatened, the next 'lesson' would be one he would never forget!

Reynolds quietly waited for the boat to near the shore.

After a long, long time...

"We've reached the shore." Ringing sounds could be heard from the deck above. Soon afterwards, the sound of footsteps could be heard. Clearly, the two experts had walked down.

"Peel, you two stand watch. I'll go rest for a bit, and then I'll come and change places with you two." The one-eyed man's voice could be heard.

"Milord, don't worry." Peel's voice rang out as well.

Hearing the footsteps head away from the ship, Reynolds let out a silent sigh of relief, and then he shut his eyes, once more mentally going through his escape plan.

The plan was very dangerous, but he had to give it a try.

Glancing at the two nearby thugs, Reynolds curled into a corner and lowered his head, and his lips began to slightly move...

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 46, The Order

The red-haired one-eyed thug led a group of thugs off the slave ship, while Peel and the other bald man stood on the deck, casually chatting while occasionally glancing towards Reynolds.

“Peel, tomorrow, we’ll finally reach the provincial capital. At that time, we’ll send off those common slaves and have ourselves a good time. Spending every day on a boat is a damnable way to live.” The bald man cursed in a whisper.

Peel began to laugh as well.

But just at this time, Peel suddenly heard a terrifying roar from a magical beast...

“Hooooowl!” All of a sudden, a terrifying, enormous flame serpent, as thick as a water barrel, came exploding out of the cabin, blasting a hole into the side of the ship.

The enormous fire serpent was as thick as a water barrel and over a hundred meters long. Howling, it circled around the slave ship, which instantly was set aflame. At the same time, the fire serpent charged directly towards the interior of the ship, blasting a hole through the entire vessel. Aside from around ten or so slaves in the bottom hold who were burnt to the death, the hundreds of other slaves wildly charged out from the hole in the ship which the fire serpent had made.

“Motherfucker. That pretty-boy!” Peel said, his face changing.

“Quick! Catch him!”

The two bald men immediately ran towards Reynolds room. At this time, they didn't care about the common slaves at all, but that enormous fire serpent actually charged straight towards the two of them.

“Motherfucker, a Blazing Fire Serpent. Be careful!” Peel and the other man were both nervous now.

Fire-style, spell of the seventh rank: Blazing Fire Serpent!

This was the most powerful spell which Reynolds could cast; the Blazing Fire Serpent. If this spell were to advance in level, it would transform into the eighth-ranked spell, 'Dance of the Fire Serpents'. The 'Dance of the Fire Serpents' would create and attack with seven enormous fire serpents , and the temperature of the serpents would be even hotter. As for the Blazing Fire Serpent, it was still extremely powerful.

Most warriors of the seventh rank wouldn't dare to fight it head on.

The bald man, Peel, dodged as agilely as a fish, avoiding the attack of the Blazing Fire Serpent, while at the same time moving towards where Reynolds previously had been staying. In the room, Peel saw nothing but ash. Those two thugs' bodies had been charred to dust, and there were two large circular holes in the walls.

Clearly, Reynolds had fled via these two holes.

"Ah! Ah!!!" A miserable scream could be heard nearby. The other bald man hadn't been able to completely dodge the Blazing Fire Serpent. As soon as it had brushed by the man, the Blazing Fire Serpent immediately wrapped itself around him. The bald man's battle-qi armor quickly was depleted, and the sickly sweet smell of burnt flesh appeared.

Seeing this, the look on Peel's face changed.

"Dale [Da'luo]!!!!" Peel went insane. "You motherf*cking bastard!"

By now, many of the slaves who had escaped from the bottom of the boat had begun frantically fleeing in each direction. After having been captured as slaves, they had felt utterly hopeless, but now, all of them were filled with hope once more, and they frantically fled.

Peel charged out from within those two holes as well, and with a mighty leap, arrived directly onto the shore.

"That damnable pretty-boy." Peel stared at the slave ship in the Bonai River. The utterly demolished ship was slowly sinking, and it continued to burn with sheets of flame. Filled with smoke and fire and water, this ship was clearly finished.

"Peel, Dale!" A furious roar from afar.

The red-haired one-eyed man ran over at high speed, his single eye filled with unspeakable rage. Staring at Peel, he howled angrily, "Peel, where is he? Where is that magus?"

"Milord, that magus cast the Blazing Fire Serpent spell. No idea where he fled to. Dale died." Peel was furious as well.

The one-eyed man panted with fury.

The Blazing Fire Serpent was capable of dealing with warriors of the seventh rank, but if it had encountered the one-eyed man, given his power as a warrior of the eighth rank, he definitely would've been able to destroy the Blazing Fire Serpent and seize Reynolds.

This was the reason why his slaving organization had sent him, a warrior of the eighth rank, on this mission.

But the one-eyed man hadn't expected that right after he had taught that magus a lesson, he would dare to go all out like this.

"Quick, seize him. Bring that magus back." The one-eyed man immediately shouted towards the surrounding thugs. "The ten of you, split up and search upstream and downstream. The dozens of you over here, start searching the nearby area. You must bring that magus back to me. Quickly!"

"Yes, milord!"

The furious thugs scattered every which way. Most of their forces were concentrated in the surrounding area, while only five thugs were sent searching upstream and downstream.

Reynolds was dressed like the other slaves, in absolutely raggedy clothes, and his body was covered with scars. Because the other slaves had fled as well, on many occasions, those thugs would see some other slaves, think they were Reynolds, and immediately rush over to seize them. Unfortunately, they were wasting their time.

An hour later.

The one-eyed man stood at the harbor, his heart filled with rage as he stared angrily around him.

"Milord, we've discovered over ten slaves downstream, but we didn't find that magus." A thug ran over to report. The speed at which they had travelled on land was definitely faster than the speed of the flowing river.

"Milord, we didn't find that magus upstream either."

"Milord, we didn't find that magus in the surrounding areas. All we found were those common slaves."

Hearing one report after another from his subordinates, the one-eyed man stared at the surrounding area. He was so angry he could die. This harbor was the harbor for a small township. Their organization didn't have any forces here.

This was why the one-eyed man had no choice but to send those few dozen thugs to search for Reynolds.

Several dozen people had spent an hour without finding Reynolds. Then...there was no way he could be found. Because one hour was more than enough time for a person to travel a great distance. And how could several dozen people search an area of several dozen square kilometers?

"Bastard!" The one-eyed man snarled and cursed. "Let's go. We have to report this immediately to the organization. That pretty-boy better hope that I don't catch him. Otherwise...I will make sure his fate is worse than death."

The sky was dark now. The one-eyed man and the others had already left helplessly. Several thousand meters away, next to the riverbank, a human form emerged from the water.

"Patooley." Reynolds spat out the breathing reed from his mouth.

Glancing at his surroundings, Reynolds finally let out a long sigh. Reynolds hadn't dared to be the slightest bit incautious during this escape attempt. After casting his spell, he had immediately dove into the water, then plucked a hollow reed and used it to breathe. Each time he dove down, he would travel more than a thousand meters before daring to raise his head.

"I'm very far away now. Those people can't possibly find me now." Reynolds went onto the shore.

Reynolds body suddenly began to emit a white steam. A few moments later, Reynolds tattered clothes were totally dry again. Glancing at the surrounding area, Reynolds centered himself through using the flow of the river.

“That slaving organization has people in all the major cities. It is better if I stick to the smaller cities. I can’t go back through the border between the two Empires. The slaving organizations have quite a few people in the border cities.” Although Reynolds believed that they wouldn’t spend too much effort searching for him, it was better for him to be careful. Reynolds had decided to first enter the Anarchic Lands through the Rohault Empire, and then return to the O’Brien Empire through the Anarchic Lands.

.....

The world was very dark now. The only light that could be seen was sporadic campfires. A dark shadow was flying through the skies, slashing through the air at high speed.

“Whoooooosh!” Their high-speed flight caused Old White to unconsciously narrow his eyes. From the skies, he could clearly make out the various roads, and so it was easy for him to make out the various landmarks.

“Oh? That little town is your organization’s headquarters?” Linley glanced at Old White. The town seemed no different from any other ordinary little town. In the darkness, a few lamp lights could be seen.

Old White hurriedly nodded. “It is. This is just some of our organization’s camouflaging abilities.”

"Whoosh!"

Linley immediately charged down, leaving a black shadowy trail of afterimages behind him. He landed in the middle of the headquarters of the slaving organization...this countryside town.

Linley was wearing a deep blue robe. Hovering up into the air, he loosened his hand, allowing Old White to fall to the ground. "Have the leader of your organization come out."

Old White didn't dare to disobey.

At this moment, a number of people ran over at high speed, surrounding them. But when they saw Linley was standing in mid-air, they were all stunned. Generally speaking, only Saints were capable of flight. Naturally, powerful wind-style magi could fly as well. In truth, right now, Linley was only capable of flight without transforming because he had already cast the Windshadow spell.

"Old White, why have you come?" A middle-aged madame glanced at Linley, then whispered to Old White.

Old White shouted loudly, "Quick, quick, have the leader come! This is Master Linley, the mighty Dragonblood Warrior, Master Linley!"

Master Linley?

These words were quite effective. A slaving organization, in terms of power, was far inferior to even the three major trading unions or the four great assassin's guilds. Naturally, it didn't dare to offend a Saint. Many people immediately ran to get their leaders, and all of the high-ranking people quickly began to assemble.

Linley stood there in mid-air, calmly waiting. Bebe stood atop of Linley's shoulders.

"Boss, this little town looked quite ordinary, but the insides of these buildings are quite unique! Many of them have underground basements." Bebe spoke to Linley mentally.

Linley nodded slightly.

In just a short while, a large group of people began to head in this direction from afar, with their leader being a tall, thin man who was dressed in a gaudy long robe. This man was half-running, half-walking, his forehead covered with sweat.

"Master Linley, my name is Dennis [Dan'ni'si], and I am the leader of this organization. Is there something we can do for you, Master Linley? If there is, please inform us, Master." The tall, thin man said humbly, filled with terror.

Although he had never met Linley before, a Saint who could hover in mid-air, no matter who he really was, wasn't someone he dared to offend.

Linley glanced at him, then said, "Dennis! A month ago, you bought a magus from Old White over at the border city. He should have arrived here by now."

Dennis was startled.

A somewhat fatter, older man next to Dennis hurriedly said, "Master Linley, I was responsible for this assignment. Halfway here, at the Bonai River, that magus burned our slaving vessel and fled."

"Fled?" Linley was surprised but also relieved.

Fourth Bro was quite impressive, to be able to escape from the clutches of the slaving organization.

Only now did Dennis come to his senses, and he nodded. "I'm aware of this event as well. After the magus fled, we sent our forces to some cities to try and recapture him, but we've yet to find him. This was over ten days ago now."

"Leader, that magus is Master Linley's bosom friend!" Old White hurriedly said.

Dennis' face immediately turned ugly to behold, while at the same time he was filled with fear.

Linley glanced at them. "From today onwards, you are forbidden from attempting to capture my friend." Dennis hurriedly said, "Of course. If we find him, we will definitely treat him as an honored guest."

Linley nodded calmly. Without wasting any more words, Linley and Bebe flew off and left.

Given the current situation, the slaving organization didn't really matter much now. Fourth Bro had escaped over ten days ago. By now, he should've fled quite far.

In mid-air.

"Bebe, you go back first. Immediately have Zassler and the others head out towards the Anarchic Lands. I plan to spend a bit of time scanning the area around the Bonai River and between the borders of the Rohault Empire and the O'Brien Empire. I want to see if I can find Fourth Bro. After I finish my search, I will join up with you." Linley had already come to this decision.

Searching using spiritual energy was actually quite a painful experience for most Saint-level warriors.

Most Saint-level warriors would only be able to occasionally search using their spiritual energy, because in truth, their spiritual energy wasn't extremely strong. It was magi who had powerful spiritual energy. In terms of spiritual energy, that Haydson who had been training for centuries was at most on par with Linley.

It would only take a short hour to cover that distance, but if one were to search carefully, one would definitely have to spend at least several days.

"Got it." Bebe obediently nodded his little head, then flew at high speed towards the O'Brien Empire.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 47, Establishing a Base in the Anarchic Lands

Transforming into his Dragonblood Warrior form, Linley began to trace from the Bonai River all the way to the border city of Neil, carefully scanning the surrounding areas. Every so often, he would have to rest to recover his spiritual energy.

He spent six full days and nights searching, and viewed all the nearby cities as well.

However...

He didn't find Reynolds.

"Master Linley, don't worry. As soon as our Dawson Conglomerate discovers young master Reynolds, we will definitely make sure he safely makes it back home."

A supervisor for the Dawson Conglomerate within one of the prefectural cities at the border of the Rohault Empire said respectfully to Linley.

Linley nodded slightly.

Right now, the only choice he had was to entrust this task to the Dawson Conglomerate. In his heart, Linley felt a bit puzzled. "Where did Fourth Bro run off to? Why didn't he go to the Dawson Conglomerate's branch headquarters? The Dawson Conglomerate has branches in each of the various prefectural cities.”

Actually, Linley didn’t understand.

Reynolds had been truly terrified by his time spent aboard that slaving vessel. Reynolds had decided that so long as he was within the borders of the Rohault Empire, no matter what, he would not enter any large cities. Although large cities had branch headquarters of the Dawson Conglomerate, it also had slaving organizations. If he were to be caught by slaving organizations, once he was discovered by them, he would be in dire straits.

“Any risk of being caught is too much risk. I’d rather take some side routes.” Reynolds was very firm in his decision.

Given his power, heading towards the Anarchic Lands via some cross country travelling wasn’t too hard. Once he reached the Anarchic Lands, he would then make contact with the Dawson Conglomerate. By then, he would be able to return safely.

By nightfall, in an ordinary courtyard within a prefectural city of the O’Brien Empire’s Southeast Administrative Province. Zassler, the Barker brothers, Rebecca, Leena, and Jenne were all here.

The sound of knocking could be heard. Carrying that massive greataxe on his back, Gates strode forward and threw the door open. In front of the door were three attendants, all pushing food carts.

"What took you so long?" Gates swept the three men with his ox-like stare, causing their hearts to tremble. In front of the massive Gates, the three of them were like small children.

Suddenly, a bestial roar could be heard from the courtyard. The three attendants turned towards the sound...

The Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, lazily padded his way over. The natural, baleful aura of a top-class magical beast such as the Blackcloud Panther was more than enough to set hearts trembling. Haeru glanced at the three with his dark, cold eyes, and then disdainfully turned his head and lay down on the ground.

The three attendants exchanged glances, not daring to make any sound.

They immediately put all the plates of food onto the table, then quickly left. When they walked out of the courtyard, they wiped the cold sweat from their foreheads.

"Who the hell are these guys? Those five men were enormous!"

"And those axes were so huge. They have to weigh at least a thousand pounds each."

"And that old man. He looked like a skeleton. All he did was glance at me, and I felt fear. But those three ladies were certainly pretty. If I could marry such a beautiful girl, I'd be willing to have my lifespan shortened by a few dozen years."

In the eyes of these hotel attendants, the guests in this courtyard were definitely extremely, terrifyingly powerful entities. While Zassler and the others ate, Bebe and Haeru remained within the courtyard. This was because they could sense...that Linley was heading back at high speed.

A short while later, Linley, dressed in a deep blue robe, landed from the skies.

"Lord Linley." Barker and his brothers ran over to welcome him excitedly. Jenne, Rebbeca, and Leena all came over to welcome him as well.

"Linley, how did it go? Did you find Reynolds?" Zassler asked.

Linley shook his head. Right now, Linley was in a fairly good mood. Since the slave trading organization hadn't found Reynolds, given Reynolds' power as a magus of the seventh rank, as long as he didn't anger someone powerful, he shouldn't be in any danger.

"Fourth Bro has been a soldier for many years now, and the slave trading organization is no longer after him either...given the circumstances, he should have a 100% chance of escaping and returning." Linley was very confident in his friend.

"If Reynolds isn't able to make it back safely under such favorable conditions, he wouldn't be worthy of being your bro, Lord. The Rohault Empire is usually very stable and very safe." Gates said loudly. "In the past, when we brothers were just warriors of the seventh rank, we lived a wonderful life in the Eighteen Northern Duchies."

Linley laughed.

He entered the room with the others and began to eat dinner.

"Linley." Zassler put down his utensils, then asked, "We are about to head off to the Anarchic Lands. What are your plans?"

Linley knew that Zassler was the most experienced member of his team. With an eight hundred year old man by his side, many things would be much easier to accomplish.

"Zassler, what do you feel we should do?" Linley asked.

Barker said, "Lord Linley, actually, I imagine that the Anarchic Lands must be very similar to our Eighteen Northern Duchies. You do all your talking with your fists. Given our tremendous power, we definitely would be able to quickly establish a mighty force."

Zassler nodded. "What Barker just described is one type of method, yes. Linley...I believe we have two options right now. The first is what Barker just said. Using our reputation as Saints, we can quickly dominate a very wide swathe of territory. In the Anarchic Lands, the rally call of a Saint is very effective."

Linley nodded slightly.

The Anarchic Lands were often in a state of chaos and warfare. The citizens caught in these chaotic battles desperately hoped for their leader to be a powerful figure. If he publicly announced himself as a Saint, there would definitely be many people willing to follow Linley.

After all, Saints would be able to provide their followers with a good deal of safety and security.

"The second method is to, at least at first, not announce your status, Linley. We'll start in the smaller regions. First, we'll find an ordinary little city where the lives of the commoners are unbearably bad. Even if I were to act by myself, I could easily take over such a small city. And then, we will slowly expand to larger cities, then erect our own Duchy. And then, we continue, one step at a time. In the past...I was a Grand Duke in the Anarchic Lands, myself." Zassler laughed.

The second method was the method which many ambitious people used.

After all, the first method could only be used by powerful experts with overwhelming force.

"Milord, what method do you wish to use?" Zassler looked at Linley. "The benefit to the first method is that it is fast. Within a year, we can easily take over countless Duchies in the Anarchic Lands. The second method is slower, but it allows us to have a more stable foundation."

Jenne, the other two girls, Barker, and his brothers all stared at Linley, waiting for his decision.

"Zassler, we'll carry out the second method." Linley made his decision after pondering for a while.

"Our target is the Radiant Church, and the Radiant Church is very skilled at seducing the masses. We need to move slowly, one step at a time, and let the commoners be fully willing to follow our orders. We need to give them a strong sense of belonging. Otherwise...even if we take over a large amount of territory, when we fight against the Radiant Church, we will have many traitors and riots." Linley said.

Zassler laughed and nodded.

"Very well then. We'll secretly expand. We won't attract any attention. Otherwise, if we start raising Linley's banner from the start, we will attract a great deal of hostility from many areas."

Zassler was quiet for a moment, then continued. "Linley, the Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows both have tremendous influence in the Anarchic Lands. If you wish to expand there, I think...the first step would be to begin closer to the Forest of Darkness. In other words, the northernmost area of the Anarchic Lands."

Linley raised an eyebrow. "The northern part of the Anarchic Lands?"

"Right. The area near the Forest of Darkness. Because it often suffers attacks from the magical beasts of the Forest of Darkness, the people of that area are extremely sturdy and very violent. Few of the citizens of that area have much faith in the Radiant Church. They worship the strong. In addition, given our power, we don't need to fear those low-rank and medium-rank magical beasts at all." Zassler smiled.

Hearing Zassler's words, Linley agreed in his mind.

"From the east edge to the west edge of the northern part of the Anarchic Lands is roughly a thousand miles. There are many small cities with only a few tens of thousands of citizens in them. There will be plenty of options for us."

Zassler said confidently.

As Zassler saw it, occupying and taking over a city in the Anarchic Lands which had a population of just a few tens of thousands was as easy as breathing. Either Zassler or the Barker brothers could easily erect a Dukedom in the Anarchic Lands, all by themselves, much less occupy a small city.

Linley's team was truly powerful.

He had a whole group of Saints, and Linley, Bebe, and Haeru were peak-stage Saints. Most likely, even the powerful hidden force the Radiant Church had within the Anarchic Lands couldn't match Linley for power.

For such a team, building a base in the Anarchic Lands was incomparably easy.

The Anarchic Lands was more than half the size of the O'Brien Empire, and was definitely on par with the size of the current Radiant Church, Rohault Empire, and Rhine Empire.

Long ago, when a calculation had been run on the Anarchic Lands, it was found that the 48 Duchies had a total population of over three hundred million. Such an enormous population wasn't much lower than the population of the Rhine Empire and the Rohault Empire. The countless years of chaotic battles hadn't lowered the population all that much. Instead, all it had done was make the people of that area even more vicious and violent.

This sort of chaotic region was a veritable playground for powerful experts!

After passing the border, Linley and his team entered the Anarchic Lands. Upon entering the their very first city in the Anarchic Lands, Linley could sense what a state of frenzy and chaos the people here were in.

"Long years of warfare have caused food to become extremely expensive in the Anarchic Lands. Although some Duchies have worked hard to try to bring an end to warfare during the harvest seasons, sometimes, they are still forced to do battle..." Zassler sighed.

The Anarchic Lands were totally different from the Holy Union and the O'Brien Empire.

In the cities of the Holy Union and the O'Brien Empire, one could sense a peaceful, amiable aura. Noble madams and young noble ladies there all wore lavish clothes and casually strolled about the streets.

But in the Anarchic Lands, heavily armored warriors could be seen everywhere, and the cities were filled with a ferocious aura, giving the sense that a single wrong word could result in murder. This was the norm, here.

Linley's team continued to travel towards the north. As they travelled, they carefully observed the local areas, gaining a better understanding of the Anarchic Lands.

"A priest?" Linley saw from afar someone dressed as a priest. "Damn the Radiant Church. Chapels can be seen everywhere in the Anarchic Lands, and all of them openly preach and proselytize for the Radiant Church..."

As they continued to travel, Linley's heart grew heavy.

The Radiant Church's influence here was indeed tremendous.

Linley's team moved quite quickly. After journeying for roughly ten days, they arrived at the northern part of the Anarchic Lands. Linley and his people entered a small city known as 'Blackdirt City'.

It was noon.

Within a private room in an ordinary hotel, Zassler said to Linley, "Based on my investigations from earlier this morning, the city governor of this place, Blackdirt City, is a classic example of all brawns, no brains. All he wants to do is be the ruler of a small city and enjoy the life of a local tyrant. He is extremely tyrannical and oppressive to the common folk...I think that this should be quite suitable for us to take over as our first little city."

"But this is only the first city we've considered!" Linley was rather surprised.

Zassler laughed. "This is normal. In the Anarchic Lands, aside from a very few Duchies, most rulers are extremely oppressive towards their citizens. After all, war could break out at any time and they might lose their power. Naturally, they'll want to enjoy it while they can."

Linley nodded slightly.

"Fine. Then let's start with this Blackdirt City." Linley immediately decided.

The eyes of the nearby Barker brothers lit up. Gates was the first to say excitedly, "Lord, don't worry. You don't need to do a thing. We'll just head on over and kill that leader, and then terrify those few thousand soldiers into submission. There'll be nothing difficult at all about it."

The five Barker brothers had led armies to war in the Eighteen Northern Duchies. They very much loved that sort of blood-pumping life.

"Lord, don't worry. Tonight, you'll be living inside the governor's mansion of Blackdirt City." Barker slapped his chest as he spoke.

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 48, Administration

Noon time. The blazing sun hung high in the western skies, baking Blackdirt City with its scorching rays. The garrison soldiers of Blackdirt City were lazily and casually strolling about within Blackdirt City, while a few poor guards were being baked by the sun while standing guard on the walls.

“This damn weather. It is unbearably hot during the day, and deathly cold at night!” A large man dressed in tattered armor cursed softly. Him and the nine companions by his side were one of the squads belonging to the city guard.

Whenever the common citizens of the city saw these soldiers, they immediately fled away, their faces full of fear.

Seeing this, another warrior cursed softly. “Now that I’m working under that greedy, fat pig, some of my elders are beginning to look down at me. That fat pig is too greedy!”

“That motherfucker. If it weren’t for the fact that I have a wife and son to feed, I wouldn’t do this job.” Another warrior agreed.

In Blackdirt City, that fat city governor had an extremely poor reputation. These warriors who had joined the army for the sake of feeding their families all secretly cursed this vile city governor behind his back, but they didn’t dare to fight against him. This was because the city governor had an extremely powerful and despotic son, who was a peak-stage warrior of the seventh rank. That sort of power was more than enough for one to become a local tyrant in small cities such as this.

"Faster, faster!" From nearby, the hoof steps of a knight's horse could be heard coming towards them at high speed. Seeing the soldiers from afar, the knight immediately cried out loudly, "Brothers, quick, come and pay your respects to the new city governor! That greedy, fat pig is dead! Quick, go pay your respects to the new city governor!"

The ten men in the squad were startled. They glanced at each other, then immediately began to laugh with excitement.

"Haha...quick, let's go to the governor's mansion."

In the Anarchic Lands, the common citizens had virtually no sense of belonging. This month, they would be ruled by one city governor; next month, it might be a different one. The commoners didn't ask for much; they only wanted to have enough to feed themselves and their families.

The governor's mansion of Blackdirt City could be considered a city within a city.

Blackdirt City's army was divided into two major battalions, with each battalion having 1800 people. One of the battalions was the city guard, while the other was the city governor's personal guard. One could imagine how afraid of death the city governor was, to use half of his military force to protect his own mansion.

There were a large number of soldiers currently centered within the city governor's mansion. All 3600 soldiers quickly assembled there.

The city governor's mansion could easily fit in 1800 people. Atop a broad training field, Barker and his brothers stood in the center. Their rippling muscles and massive, powerful bodies made them look like gods of battle. Those terrifying black greataxes they carried on their back were especially frightening.

The soldiers all stood there, keeping quiet out of fear.

"Brothers." A powerful man with short golden hair roared loudly, "That vile, fat pig and his son have already been chopped into meat paste by these five lords. These five lords are all mighty combatants of the ninth rank. Invincible combatants of the ninth rank!!!"

As soon as they heard the words, 'combatants of the ninth rank', all of the soldiers were stunned.

"Combatants of the ninth rank? Combatants of the ninth rank would come to a little city like ours?" Whispers could be heard circulating throughout the crowd.

"Bam!" Gates took a few steps forward, his demonically powerful aura causing the nearby soldiers to all take a step back. Gates laughed thunderously, "All of you, listen up. From today onwards, Blackdirt City belongs to we five brothers. My big brother, Barker, is the city governor!"

Gates drew out the greataxe from his back. Staring at the surrounding people, he said, "If any of you have any objections to my big brother, Barker, being the city governor, you are welcome to come compete with me!"

Who would dare compete against such a terrifying god of battle?

The city governor's son, who had terrified Blackdirt City for so long, had been chopped to death by a single blow from Gates' greataxe. Then again, most of the soldiers present hadn't personally witnessed this themselves. The natural, violent atmosphere of the region caused some of the soldiers to stare at Gates questioningly. Just being physically big didn't necessarily mean someone was very powerful!

"This greataxe of mine was made from countless precious materials. It weighs 5300 pounds!" Gates casually tossed his greataxe forward, and it soared agilely through the air, landing against a nearby boulder which the soldiers used for weight training.

The ten-thousand pound boulder didn't even move when struck. Many of the watching soldiers were stunned. "Could it be that this greataxe is made from wood, and it just has a layer of metallic dye on top of it?"

"Boom!" The boulder suddenly exploded and disintegrated into a storm of dust.

Wielding something heavy as though it were light!

All the onlookers stared with their mouths gaping open. These soldiers had heard of people being able to smash a ten-thousand pound boulder, but to cause it to instantly disintegrate into a pile of dust...this wasn't something which could be accomplished just through brute strength. All the soldiers turned to look at Gates with adoration and worship in their eyes.

Gates delightedly let out a thunderous laugh. He had used this technique in the past in the Eighteen Northern Duchies as well. The Anarchic Lands and the Eighteen Northern Duchies were very similar; powerful experts were deeply venerated.

"Looks like there are no objections." Gates said loudly. "Wonderful. From today forward, you are now the soldiers of my big brother. There's a benefit to working for my big brother. In the future, your military pay will be triple that of your current military pay!"

Triple military pay?

The three thousand plus soldiers stared in shock, but then, they all let a thunderous, sky-shaking cry...

"Long live Lord Barker!"

What more could they ask for? These five experts possessed unbelievable power, and they gave a very high military pay. Naturally, they loved leaders like this!

.....

The city of Blackdirt now had a new city governor. It was the mighty Barker and his four brothers, all of whom were powerful warriors of the ninth rank. Their weapons alone weighed 5300 pounds! Having such a powerful leader was something which all of the citizens of Blackdirt City celebrated over.

The most exciting thing was...

The Lord City Governor had declared that as long they were obedient and faithful, the citizens of Blackdirt City would be forever exempted from paying taxes!

Forever exempted from paying taxes! In the Anarchic Lands, this could be described as a miracle. After all, if there were no taxes, where would one have money to pay their soldiers? But this problem, to Linley, was no problem at all. He held the terrifying amount of wealth which the royal clan of the Kingdom of Fenlai had accumulated for thousands of years.

He could casually pull out a hundred million gold coins, and that would already be more than enough.

Powerful leaders and high salaries, combined with no taxes...given the above, the people here quickly gained the hope and desire to forever live under this administration. And because of the high military pay, many people now desired to join the army.

At the same time, when some of the commoners nearby Blackdirt City learned about this, they hurriedly immigrated to Blackdirt City.

.....

Half a year after the change in leadership in Blackdirt City.

Within the city governor's mansion. The newly selected housekeeper, Nemi [Nei'mi], was currently giving a detailed report to this mysterious

'Lord Ley'. As the administrator for various matters in Blackdirt City, Nemi knew that although the city governor was nominally Barker, in truth, the highest authority here was that mysterious Lord Ley.

"Milord, the population of Blackdirt Town numbers nearly eighty thousand. If we add that number to the large number of surrounding villages, then in total...the population under Blackdirt City's control is a total of around 700,000. Currently, our military is expanding as well. We now have a total of five battalions, all at full strength. The five battalions number a total of nine thousand soldiers." Nemi said respectfully.

Linley, seated above him, nodded slightly upon hearing this.

"Enough, Nemi. You can retire now." Barker glanced at him.

"Yes, Lord City Governor." Nemi immediately left respectfully.

Right now, the people seated in the room were Linley and the other core members of the team. According to the decision which Zassler and Linley had originally made, to outsiders, they said that Lord Barker was the city governor. 'Barker' was a very ordinary name. Nobody else knew which 'Barker' this was.

"Lord, you really gave us a good scare when you casually brought out a magic crystal card with a hundred million gold in it." Barker chortled.

Linley laughed. "Don't worry about the financial side of things!" In the past, Linley had essentially stripped away thousands of years of accumulated wealth from the Kingdom of Fenlai.

Zassler said, "Linley, the reason we are being so generous to the citizens of Blackdirt City is because we want Blackdirt City to become our strongest, most resilient base, and to make sure that the people here are absolutely loyal to us! It is enough that we exempt this city from paying taxes. In the future, at most, we can just lower the tax rate in our cities. In addition, in order to function well, a nation needs to be able to be self-sufficient. It can't always rely on outside money. It has to be self-sustaining!"

Linley nodded.

"I don't know much about managing a country. I'll let Zassler and Jenne handle these matters." Linley laughed as he glanced at Jenne. Zassler had controlled a Duchy before in the Anarchic Lands, while Jenne had helped her little brother administrate the affairs of the prefectural city of Cerre for multiple years. Both of them knew much more about city management than Linley did.

Jenne nodded and laughed. "Big brother Linley, the most important part of being a leader is knowing who to use. Just let me handle it."

Zassler concurred. "Jenne is right. Linley...you are our standard-bearer. In the Anarchic Lands, an ultimate expert has a great deal of influence. Look at the War God. The War God always stays on War God Mountain and never gets personally involved in anything, but everyone understands that so long as the War God is alive, then the O'Brien Empire will never collapse."

"Lord, in the future, your relationship to our nation will be the same as the War God's relationship to the O'Brien Empire." Barker agreed.

Linley nodded slightly. "I understand your reasoning. Oh, right. Yesterday, I took a stroll around Blackdirt City. I saw that a few dozen kilometers northeast of Blackdirt City, there is a small mountain known as Mt. Blackraven. I plan to train there."

Linley could sense the vastness of both the Laws of the Earth and the Laws of the Wind. Linley wished to spend a large amount of time subsuming himself in them, and spend some time attuning to them and understanding them.

.....

In the central-southern part of the Anarchic Lands, there was a prefectural city with hundreds of thousands of citizens. Within a room on the fifth floor of a five story tall hotel, an old man with white-streaked hair opened a letter, carefully reading its contents.

"What I feared the most has come to pass!" The old man began to frown. "The Emperor ordered us not to act against Linley and just observe him. A while ago, we learned that Linley's group had entered the Anarchic Lands. At that time, we thought he was just engaging in tourism. Who would've thought that they'd take over a city? What exactly are they planning?"

The old man had a bad feeling.

Linley was a major foe of the Radiant Church. A foe which they didn't want to have to fight.

But now...

"I hope Linley is just messing around and having fun in the Anarchic Lands." The old man was frowning. What he feared the most was...that Linley had come to the Anarchic Lands expressly to deal with the Radiant Church. "We don't want to stir up trouble with him, but if he insists on stirring up trouble with us, we'll have to act."

The old man was a high level manager for the Radiant Church in the Anarchic Lands. He knew exactly how powerful Linley's side was.

"As for now...let's just watch. Let's see what Linley plans to do."

.....

Outside of Blackdirt City, in a small mountain roughly a thousand meters tall which was located in the direction of the Forest of Darkness, Linley was seated in the meditative position on the top of a large tree. The treetop swayed along with the blowing wind, and Linley swayed along with it, as gently and as agilely as a leaf.

He was carrying a 3600 pounds adamantite heavy sword, and yet he was seated on the crown of a tree. Linley had indeed reached a very high level in his ability to control the wind.

"Slow. Fast. It isn't that simple..." Linley was constantly pondering his 'Tempos of the Wind' technique. The Tempos of the Wind was actually utilizing two contradictory aspects of the wind in perfect harmony, with the clash between these two aspects creating a terrifyingly sharp blade of air.

But Linley was discovering that as he continued to study the individual aspects of 'Slow' and 'Fast', these aspects had additional astonishing secrets that had yet to be revealed to him.

"The limits to the Profound Truths of Slowness...the limits to the Analytics of Hyperspeed..." Linley was totally absorbed in his meditations on the Elemental Laws. This sort of meditation relied entirely on a single sudden spark of insight. Perhaps Linley would suddenly gain an insight onto the Laws of the Earth, at which point Linley would begin to analyze the Laws of the Earth. If he suddenly gained insight into the Laws of the Wind, he would go study that instead.

Those days he spent in training on Mt. Blackraven passed very quickly....

Book 9, His Fame Shakes the World – Chapter 49, The Mysterious Mountain Village

The sun was high in the sky. Reynolds was currently hiking through a particularly large mountain.

“I should have entered the Anarchic Lands by now.” Reynolds himself wasn’t too clear how far he had walked, after having hurried for ten days. Reynolds generally headed in whatever direction looked the most desolate. Even if he saw cities from afar, he wouldn’t enter them.

The mountain that Reynolds was now hiking on was extremely large and took up an enormous amount of land.

After hiking for a long time, Reynolds arrived at one of the mountain peaks and gazed around him. Suddenly, he discovered that this giant mountain actually had a tiny little mountain village in the center. Reynolds licked his dry, chapped lips. Grabbing a fistful of long rattan vines, he began to climb down into the little mountain village in the center of the mountain.

This little mountain village had people inside it. When they saw Reynolds walk in, they glanced at him with curious stares.

Clearly...they rarely saw visitors.

There were quite a few people in this little mountain village. Guessing based on what his eyes had seen, Reynolds estimated that there were several thousand people here. There was even an open-air inn that was rather simply made. Reynolds walked over and immediately sat down and said, "Two cups of water, and then some dishes and a bottle of wine."

But as soon as he sat down, Reynolds noticed something...

"This place..." Reynolds' heart shook.

He suddenly had discovered that every single person here emanated the aura of an expert. From what Reynolds could tell, there were many warriors of the sixth and seventh ranks, and even warriors of the eighth rank...as well as some mighty magi. Not warriors. Magi. And extremely powerful ones.

"Friend, how did you end up here?" A bald man came over with a bottle of wine and two bowls. "Come, let's drink."

Reynolds now sensed that this mountain village was no ordinary place. He immediately replied, "I came from across the border with the Rohault Empire. I was planning to enter the Anarchic Lands. I didn't take any of the main roads, and hiked my way through the mountains to the north. Whenever I encountered a river, I swam my way through. Whenever I encountered a mountain, I hiked through. I didn't expect that while hiking through this mountain, I would've run into this little mountain village."

The bald man nodded and laughed. "So that's the case."

"No wonder. There's no roads near our village, and this mountain is extremely desolate. Generally speaking, we'll usually go eight or ten years without seeing a single outsider." Another man walked over, laughing.

Reynolds was growing anxious.

The two people in front of him were both exceedingly powerful, perhaps at the seventh or the eighth rank.

"What in the world is this place? Why are there so many experts here?" Reynolds secretly wondered.

Drinking and chatting with these two people, Reynolds discovered... that the people of this mysterious mountain village weren't totally cut off from the outside world. In fact, they knew a great deal about the outside world.

"Princess Monica [Meng'ni'ka] is coming." The bald man suddenly said. Many people turned to look in one direction, and Reynolds did as well...

He saw a beautiful young woman with long jade hair walk over with a serving maid behind her, while greeting the other villagers along the way warmly. Seeing this beautiful woman, Reynolds instantly was stunned. That beautiful face...that friendly smile...

Despite often having dalliances amidst the flowers, Reynolds felt utterly bewitched and smitten.

"I think...I have found the place I was meant to be."

The playboy Reynolds had dallied with quite a few young noble ladies. But there hadn't been a single person who had successfully moved his heart...which was why he was still single up till now. But this girl in this mysterious mountain village had a very unique aura, one which made Reynolds' heart shake.

The girl named Monica glanced at Reynolds. Reynolds instantly discovered that Monica's clear eyes contained a hint of jade light. She looked like one of the legendary spirits, utterly bewitching. Monica laughed and spoke to him. "Hello there, outsider."

Reynolds immediately rose to his feet and said with great courtesy, "Beautiful Princess Monica, my name is Reynolds."

Monica suddenly glanced at Reynolds' left hand. She opened her mouth in surprise, then looked at Reynolds. "What happened to your hand?"

"It was injured by someone." Reynolds said casually.

Monica immediately walked towards him. "Stretch your hand out." Reynolds didn't ask any questions, immediately stretching his left hand out. The wound which had been left by those steel pincers was heart-shakingly frightful to behold. Monica's lips began to move slightly, and a short while later...

Countless specks of light entered Reynolds left hand like a mirage-like nebula. Reynolds could clearly sense that the wound on his left hand was rapidly healing, and two new fingers were growing out from it. In the blink of an eye, Reynolds' left hand returned to a perfect state, as though it had never been injured.

“This...this...” Reynolds was shocked, and he stared at the young lady named Monica in surprise.

He hadn’t expected that this young lady named Monica was a light-style magus, and an extremely powerful one. Her power wasn’t one whit inferior to Reynolds’.

When Reynolds saw the look of concentration on Monica’s face, his heart immediately began to thump wildly.

.....

Nightfall. The sun was setting in the west, and the skies had a large amount of red, flame-like clouds.

On the grass by the mountain village, Reynolds and Monica were walking side by side. Reynolds looked at Monica’s beautiful face, and in his heart, he felt a hint of contentment. He had already stayed here in this mysterious mountain village for more than a month now.

No one in the mountain village had suggested that he leave.

During his month in the mountain village, Reynolds had learned that the vast majority of the villagers here had never left the mountain village. Only a very small percentage would occasionally make trips to the outside world. When they returned, they would inform the other villagers of the events of the outside world.

Monica was only twenty years old, but she was already a light-style magus of the seventh rank. In terms of talent, she was actually superior to Reynolds. She was even more talented than Reynolds.

"I can't continue like this. I have to inform my parents and Third Bro that I am alive." Reynolds wanted to meet his friends and family, but Monica's allure for him was simply too strong. And to Monica, this outsider, Reynolds, knew many things. Whenever she chatted with him, Monica found that she could learn many things about the outside world.

Reynolds was particularly good at making conversation. This made Monica very happy whenever she was with him.

"If I were to always be with Monica, how wonderful would that be?" Reynolds' heart was filled with hope.

"Miss Monica." A voice suddenly came from behind them, and a silver-haired middle-aged man walked towards them. Reynolds was startled. He hadn't noticed this man approach them. Clearly, the man was extremely powerful.

"Uncle Miller [Mi'le]." When Monica turned her head and saw this middle-aged man with short silver hair, she immediately called out in laughter.

Miller had a simple, honest face. Glancing at Reynolds, he then laughed towards Monica in a friendly manner. "Miss Monica, it is getting late. Your mother is waiting for you to go home and eat dinner." Monica nodded, then smiled towards Reynolds. "Big brother Reynolds, I'm going home for now. See you later.”

Reynolds smiled and nodded as well.

After Monica left, Miller stared at Reynolds. “Outsider kid, you’ve been in our mountain village for some time now. You now need to make a choice...”

“Choice?” Reynolds felt surprised.

Miller nodded calmly. “Since you’ve been able to find us, that means that destiny has led you here. You now have two choices. The first is to forever stay in our mountain village, and become one of our villagers, never to leave. The second is to immediately leave, and never enter again. You only have two choices. If you disobey, you will definitely die.”

These cold, calm words made Reynolds’ heart quiver.

Leave forever? Or never leave the mountain village again?

Reynolds didn’t want to make either choice.

“Mr. Miller,” Reynolds hurriedly said, “Based on what I know, aren’t there some people in the village who occasionally go outside?”

Miller glanced at him, then chuckled. “True. Our mountain village has a yearly contest. Anyone who makes it into the top ten during this tournament is permitted to leave the village and make a trip to the outside world. But given your current power...you aren't even able to rank in our top hundred, much less top ten."

Reynolds was very anxious.

"Although I currently can't make the ranking, in the future I might." Reynolds had already made his decision. "Mr. Miller, I have decided to become a member of this village." Although Reynolds loved his parents, when he was in the army, he often went a year or two without seeing his parents a single time. So long as his parents knew that he was alive, that was all that matter. In the future, he would have a chance to meet them. There shouldn't be too much of a problem.

Reynolds knew that his parents could definitely live for another century or two.

But Monica...Reynolds was worried that if he left, he would regret it for the rest of his life.

Miller nodded slightly. "Welcome to the village. Remember. You are not allowed to leave the village without permission. If it is discovered that you did...you will definitely die. No matter what, you had best not harbor any doubts about how powerful our village is." Miller immediately turned and prepared to leave.

"Mr. Miller." Reynolds hurriedly said.

Miller turned to look at him. "What is it?"

"When the other people in the village leave, can they help me carry a message out?" Reynolds asked.

Miller nodded. "Yes they can. However, you cannot reveal any information regarding the village. In two days, I'll be leaving the village. If you have any messages, I can help you transmit them."

Reynolds felt a surge of joy, and he hurriedly said, "Lord Miller, when you leave the village, please go to any of the Dawson Conglomerate's branches and tell them that I, Reynolds Dunstan, am not dead. Right now, I am happily alive, and I hope my friends and family won't be worried about me."

"The Dawson Conglomerate?" Miller glanced at him, then nodded.

"Lord Miller." Reynolds suddenly realized something. "Didn't you just say that only the top ten in the annual tournament are allowed to make a trip? Why is it that you can leave whenever you want?"

Miller glanced at him. "Once you are my level of power, you can also leave whenever you wish." As he spoke, with a single movement Miller suddenly vanished from in front of Reynolds. Reynolds' heart was filled with shock; this speed was simply too terrifying!

"Milord, that Reynolds isn't very powerful, but it seems as though Miss Monica feels rather..." Miller stood to one side respectfully, while a handsome, refined-looking middle-aged man with long black hair sat on a stone chair, casually sipping wine.

The refined middle-aged man laughed calmly. "Monica is free to like whoever she wants. Don't force her. For Reynolds to choose to remain in the village means that he has courage, at least."

"But the Madame..." Miller said.

The refined middle-aged man laughed. "Haha...as for that, there's nothing I can do either. If that Reynolds really has taken a liking to my daughter, then all I can do is suggest that he work hard. Otherwise, he won't even be able to pass my wife's approval."

"Tomorrow, when you head to the Forest of Darkness, be careful. Don't irritate the King of the Forest of Darkness." The refined middle-aged man glanced at Miller.

"Yes, milord." Miller said respectfully.

The next morning, a blur suddenly streaked out at high speed away from the mountain village. In the blink of an eye, it pierced through the skies as it flew towards the north at high speed. The speed at which it travelled was a good deal faster than even Linley's speed in full Dragonform. An hour or so later, that blur arrived at the Forest of Darkness.

"Hrm?" The astonishing speed lessened, and from high up above, Miller stared down below.

Blackdirt City was located quite close to the Forest of Darkness, only fifty or so kilometers away from it. Miller was currently directly above Mt.

Blackraven. Although he had been flying at high speed, he could sense a powerful amount of wind-style energy coming from below.

“Someone else who also trains in the Laws of the Wind?” Miller’s eyes lit up.

Miller was studying the Laws of the Wind as well. He carefully examined Mt. Blackraven, and saw a human form, dressed in a deep blue robe who was wielding a violet longsword. That human form constantly flickered about in multiple places in Mt. Blackraven at an astonishingly fast speed.

“His level of understanding is quite excellent. It has been centuries since I’ve sparred with another wind-style expert.” Miller’s heart itched. He flew down at high speed.

By now, Linley had noticed this human form flying down from the skies at high speed.

Miller landed directly atop the crown of a tree on Mt. Blackraven. Standing on the tree’s crown, he stared at the nearby Linley and laughed loudly, “I am Miller, also a student of the Laws of the Wind. My friend, would you be willing to have a competition with me?”

Linley looked at the man standing on the tree crown.

His short silver hair made him look very energetic and intrepid. That wavy blue robe fluttered in the wind, making him seem agile and graceful.

“An expert!” Linley had the feeling that this silver-haired man’s power was no less than his own.

“I am Linley.” Linley didn’t try to hide his identity.

“Linley? The O’Brien Empire’s Linley?” Miller said with surprise, but then he laughed. “I’ve long heard that the O’Brien Empire has a twenty seven year old genius, who has reached a high level of achievement as a sculptor, as a magus, and as a warrior. I didn’t expect that today, I’d be able to encounter you. You were on par with Haydson. I, Miller, would like to spar with you, brother.”

Linley had a very good impression of Miller as well.

Miller was open and direct, just the type of person Linley liked.

“Very well. Then I will have a good sparring match with you, brother Miller.” Having spent such a long period of time in training, Linley also desired to have a good sparring match against an expert. Perhaps he would gain a sudden insight.

Linley removed the deep blue robe covering his upper body, letting it be bare. And then, black scales quickly began to cover Linley's body, and those ferocious spikes emerged from his forehead, spine, elbows, and knees. Seeing this, Miller's eyes lit up. "Dragonblood Warrior. Haha, I've heard of this for some time now..."

Linley's body began to be covered with that roiling, swirling layer of azurish-black battle-qi.

Wielding Bloodviolet in his hands, Linley looked at Miller. "Come."

With a flip of his hand, Miller withdrew a silvery-white longsword from out of nowhere. Laughing loudly, he said, "Linley, you must be careful. The power of my sword technique isn't much weaker than Haydson's attack." Miller spoke with total confidence. Linley was secretly startled. Linley knew very well how powerful Haydson's "Worldbreaker" attack was.

"Careful!" Miller shouted loudly, then his body slashed through the air, immediately appearing next to Linley.

With a kick of his feet, Linley leapt backwards at high speed, but Miller's longsword still brushed against Linley's Pulseguard Defense. In the blink of an eye, Linley appeared atop a large tree several hundred meters away. "Such incredible speed. It seems I have to use the Windshadow spell."

From this exchange, Linley immediately understood that in terms of understanding the 'Speed' aspect of the wind, he was inferior to this man.

Linley began to chant the words to the Windshadow magic spell. As for Miller, he paused for a while, still wielding that silver longsword as he waited for Linley to complete his Windshadow spell. Only when Linley did so did Miller charge towards Linley at high speed again. "Linley, show me your ultimate attack."

"Whoosh!" "Whoosh!"

Linley's body moved at a similarly high speed. Right now, the two were on par as far as speed went, and they dodged and attacked at high speed. Towards the attacking Miller, with a flip of his hand, Linley utilized the 'Rippling Wind' technique, and in an instant, countless violet sword tips slashed down, covering Miller's entire body.

"Excellent!" Miller laughed loudly, and suddenly, the silvery-white longsword seemed to slowly draw a circle in front of him.

Although it seemed to be slow, in actuality, before Linley's 'Rippling Wind' attacks managed to land on Miller, they were all destroyed by that 'circle'. Linley was secretly delighted. "Has Miller trained in a type of extremely 'Slow' aspect of the wind?"

Slow. Fast!

The so called 'slow' and 'fast' weren't purely about 'speed'; it was about a higher level of understanding. For example, although Miller's attack seemed to be slow, in actuality, it wasn't the slightest bit slower than Linley's 'Rippling Wind' technique.

"Miller, take another one of my attacks." Linley shouted loudly.

Linley and Miller were constantly dodging. With each light tap against the tree leaves, the two could instantly change direction at high speed. Suddenly, the two once again clashed in the air above Mt. Blackraven. Linley's dreamlike Bloodviolet longsword seemed to encompass both an extremely fast speed as well as an extremely slow tempo, combining these two polar opposites into a single seemingly perfect whole.

"Excellent." Miller let out a loud shout of surprised joy.

Miller's longsword suddenly reduced in speed to an extremely low level, as though it weighed ten trillion pounds and could barely move. Linley could sense how extremely slothful the movements of the opponent's sword had become!

But his Bloodviolet sword remained unable to break through this sword.

"Boom!" The two swords collided.

Linley felt as though he had suddenly been hit at high speed by something weighing ten trillion pounds. His body shuddered and was sent flying against the nearby mountain cliffs, smashing into the heart of the mountain. On the cliffs, a human-shaped tunnel could now be seen.

"Whoosh." A while later, Linley came flying back out.

Miller was extremely excited. "Linley, your sword art... 'Slow' and 'Fast'? Two totally opposite aspects. This...this..." Miller felt as though a light had gone off inside his mind, as though he had suddenly realized something. Linley was also extremely shocked and delighted as well.

Linley didn't even care about that line of blood trailing down from the corner of his lips. The only thing he was thinking about was that sword technique his opponent had just used. "Miller defended against my 'Rippling Wind' attack using a technique which was gentle as a breeze. But this technique he just used was extremely powerful, not one whit inferior than Haydson's 'Worldbreaker' technique. If it wasn't for the fact that I have gained some additional insights into the 'Throbbing Pulse of the World', I probably would've been severely injured."

"That sword technique was derived from a variation of the 'Slow' aspect of the Laws of the Wind. During that moment, it seemed as though space itself had frozen." Linley could still clearly remember how he had felt when facing that sword.

That sword had moved so slowly, as though it weighed ten trillion pounds, but space itself seemed to have frozen as well. Linley had clearly sensed that his opponent's sword was extremely slow, but despite the fact that his own sword was extremely fast, in that moment, it somehow wasn't faster than his opponent's.

Miller and Linley both had looks of surprised delight on their face. They smiled, standing there in mid-air.

Recovering from their ponderings, the two looked at each other and grinned. Clearly, both had gained certain insights.

"Linley, I had never imagined that two opposite aspects could actually be used to aid each other...you truly have helped me out." Miller was a little bit excited. Indeed, in that mysterious mountain village, none of his friends trained in the Laws of the Wind, and thus they were unable to help him."

Linley spoke words of thanks as well. "Miller, I've been pondering how to continue analyzing the 'Slow' and 'Fast' aspect and how to train them. You've helped me clearly see how I should go about it as well."

"As far as my insights into the Laws of the Wind go, I don't have any deeper insights to show you. Let's just call a stop to it for now. What do you say?" Linley advised.

Miller pursed his lips. "Linley, don't be modest. I know...that your true, most powerful attack is with a heavy sword. Supposedly, despite Haydson's ridiculously strong defense, he was still heavily injured by you. Come. Let me have a try." Miller said expectantly.

Linley hesitated slightly.

Once the 'Profound Truths of the Earth' was used, it would be very dangerous. It might kill him.

"It's fine. Linley, just come. Let me have a taste of your most powerful attack. My defense is extremely formidable." Miller laughed confidently.

Seeing how confident the man was and how he had requested Linley repeatedly to attack, Linley nodded. At the same time, Linley had made up his mind that he would execute the Hundred Layered Waves attack of the Profound Truths of the Earth. He wouldn't go all the way to his limits of 138 Layered Waves. Given the power his opponent had displayed, he should be able to withstand the Hundred Layered Waves.

In the air above Mt. Blackraven, Linley and Miller stood, facing each other. Linley was now wielding the adamantine heavy sword.

"Come." Miller said with a bit of excitement.

"Miller, be careful." As he spoke, Linley suddenly charged towards Miller, creating a terrifying sonic boom. Miller just stood there, casually wielding his silvery longsword and slowly waving it in front of himself.

Space once again froze.

Linley's adamantine heavy sword agilely and lightly smashed downwards. A silvery longsword that was very light, but seemingly weighed ten trillion pounds. An adamantine heavy sword that was very heavy, yet seemed to move very agilely and gracefully. As soon as the adamantine heavy sword drew near that silver longsword, it was caught within the 'frozen space'.

The two swords intersected!

"Boom!"

Profound Truths of the Earth – Hundred Layered Waves!

What shocked Linley was that when those vibrational waves passed through that 'frozen space', it quickly began to weaken in power. By the time it passed through and entered Miller's body, it had lost more than half of its power.

But despite that...

Miller's eyes lit up. His entire body suddenly was surrounded by waves of energy, but despite that, a hint of blood still came out from the corner of his lips. He stared at Linley in astonishment. "Linley, your attack truly is bizarre. My defense can be considered a very special one, but your attack..."

When experts did battle, they had to be proficient in speed, defense, and attack. If they were weak in a single area, then they would find themselves in danger.

Miller's defense was very special as well.

As he circulated the Dragonblood battle-qi in his body, Linley's wounds rapidly began to heal, but he stared at Miller in astonishment. "Miller, that sword of yours...I keep on having the feeling that it seems to have caused space itself to change." It was precisely because space had changed that Linley's vibrational attacks would weaken so much when passing through it.

Miller laughed. "It does indeed cause space to change. I can't clearly explain it. When you gain insight on this aspect, you will naturally understand it."

Linley nodded slightly as he returned to his human form.

"Alright, then. Linley, I'm very glad to have met you today and made friends with you. If you ever want to come looking for me, you can come to the southern reaches of the Anarchic Lands. There's a relatively well-known city there known as 'Southmount City'. Roughly a hundred kilometers south of Southmount City is a large mountain, and within that mountain there is a small mountain village. I live there." Miller laughed.

Linley nodded in appreciation. "When I am free, I will definitely go."

"Several of my good friends, as well as my Lord, live there as well. If you come there and spar, you will improve more quickly as well." Miller said warmly. "I have some business in the Forest of Darkness. I'll have to bid you farewell for now."

After saying his goodbyes to Miller, Linley watched as Miller rapidly flew towards the north, into the endless Forest of Darkness. Then Linley chuckled and, with a leap, flew to a nearby flat stone. He sat down atop of it into the meditative posture, quietly reflecting on the insights he had gained on various profound mysteries during that sparring match...

....

To the north of the Yulan continent was the boundless Northern Sea. North of the Northern Sea was the Arctic Icecap. The Arctic Icecap was extremely vast, several times larger than the entire Yulan continent. However, aside from some powerful magical beasts who lived there, there were virtually no inhabitants. The Arctic Icecap was formed from nothing more than extremely hard ice.

"Whoooooosh."

Cold wind slashed past the glaciers like icy knives, shearing pieces of ice off. The Arctic Icecap was an extremely cold place, and extremely dangerous. Even powerful warriors would find it very hard to live here. However, this bitter, desolate environment did have a few experts who lived here quietly.

Beneath an iceberg that was tens of thousands of meters high, two experts engaged in battle at high speed. One of them was Olivier, with his opponent being a very well muscled, yet skinny, cruel looking man with short jade hair. The cruel-looking man was using nothing more than a pair of dark golden boxing gloves.

"Whoosh!" Lightshadow flashing, Olivier appeared in the air above the cruel-looking man, then chopped downwards with his sword.

The cruel-looking man dodged this attack, and then immediately viciously kicked out with his leg against Olivier. On the surface of the leg was a clearly visible edge of air, and it chopped against Olivier like a warblade. The blade of air was far more distinct and visible than the one produced by Linley's 'Tempos of the Wind' technique.

"Boom!"

Olivier and his sword were both sent flying by this kick, landing and smashing viciously against the tough, frozen ground. "Boom!" The icy ground split apart, and dozens of enormous cracks appeared. Olivier vomited a mouthful of fresh blood onto the ground.

“Hmph. Olivier, you dare challenge Lord Rutherford [La’si’fu’de]? You can’t even beat me. In the Arctic Icecap, you are nothing more than the bottom rung. Train hard.” The cruel-looking man said coldly, and then he flew into the skies at high speed, disappearing into that enormous iceberg that was tens of thousands of meters high.

Olivier coughed once, then stood up. Staring upwards at the iceberg, he said, “Next time, I will definitely defeat you.” And then, Olivier’s body flickered, then disappeared from the snowy land.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 1, Delia and Linley

“Whooooosh.” The desolate cold wind blew across the world, bringing countless snowflakes to cover it.

Delia, wearing a white fur robe, was standing quietly in front of a window, staring at the outside world. Behind her were two magical beasts. One was the Worldbear, Hatton. The other was the Wildthunder Stormhawk, Parry. Neither of the two beasts made a sound.

A sigh escaped from Delia’s lips.

“Father, mother...” A bitter smile was on Delia’s face. She really hadn’t expected her parents to deceive her. They had told her that her grandmother was seriously ill, but after she raced home on the back of the Wildthunder Stormhawk, she had discovered that her grandmother was quite healthy.

That very first night back...

Delia had angrily asked her parents, “Father, mother, why did you two lie to me to get me home?”

Delia had originally intended to stay with Linley.

Delia’s father, Dylla [Dai’ya] Leon, had looked at Delia and had asked her, “Delia, have you fallen for that Dragonblood Warrior, Linley? Ever since you first returned those many years ago, you refused to accept any other boys. Was it because of him?"

Delia had been very surprised. She hadn't told her parents.

"How did you know?" Delia had immediately asked.

Her mother had sighed. "Delia, why didn't you tell us how you felt? It was your master, Master Longhaus, who informed us upon returning to the Empire. He told us to prepare for you and Linley's wedding."

The previously furious Delia had suddenly become bashful.

Her parents had glanced at each other, shaking their heads and smiling bitterly. Her father, Dylla, had said seriously, "My beloved daughter, I must solemnly tell you that it is impossible for you and Linley to be together."

"What?" Delia had stared at her father.

Her father had said seriously, "Delia, Linley's younger brother is the husband of the Seventh Imperial Princess of the O'Brien Empire. Without question, Linley is a Saint belonging to the O'Brien Empire. But you should understand the state of the relationship between our Yulan Empire and the O'Brien Empire."

"True, both our Yulan Empire and the O'Brien Empire are two mighty Empires who are enemies to each other, but what does that have to do with Linley?" Delia had been very upset. "Could it be that you believe, father, that me being with Linley would impact the clan?"

"Yes."

Dylla Leon had nodded. "If a clan were to have a Saint, that clan would rise up and flourish. If you and Linley were to marry...then what happens if the Yulan Empire and the O'Brien Empire were to engage in a large-scale war? Our Empire would no longer dare to have much faith in the Leon clan."

Delia immediately had become enraged.

Her father's explanation had seemed laughable.

"Delia, think about it. If you were the Emperor and you discovered that the daughter of one of your largest clans had gotten married to a Saint on the enemy's side, wouldn't you be concerned that this clan would betray him?" Dylla Leon had said seriously.

Delia had been stunned.

There was nothing she could say, because there were historical precedents for this.

In the past, a daughter of a noble clan in the Rohault Empire had married the king of one of the kingdoms of the great plains to the far east. Afterwards, her entire clan had rebelled and joined the side of that great plains kingdom.

Don't think that the Rohault Empire was necessarily far stronger than the kingdoms of the great plains.

The great plains to the far east had three kingdoms in total.

The people of the great plains were extremely violent, and each of them were born warriors. Although in terms of population, they were far lower in number than the Rohault Empire and the Rhine Empire, these three major kingdoms had done battle with the two Empires for countless years without being at any disadvantage.

"Father, Linley and I..." Delia had begun to speak.

Dylla Leon had interrupted her. "Delia. You are a smart child. You should understand everything. Our Leon clan has been building ourselves up for a thousand years. That's why we now have our current status. If you were to marry Linley, even if his Imperial Majesty didn't actually do anything to our clan, without question...his Imperial Majesty's faith in our clan would be lessened!"

"Once his faith in us is lessened, the countless descendants of our clan in the military and in the government will find it very hard to be promoted." Dylla Leon sighed. "Delia, I hope you can consider the interests of the clan."

"But father, Linley doesn't belong to the O'Brien Empire. He has gone to the Anarchic Lands." Delia had hurriedly said.

"The Anarchic Lands?" Dylla Leon had been startled, and Delia's mother had also stared at her in surprise.

Delia had hurriedly explained, "Yes, father. Linley isn't attached to the O'Brien Empire. He wants to start his own undertakings in the Anarchic Lands. In the future, he will be part of the Anarchic Lands. Father...the Anarchic Lands and our Empire aren't enemies, right?"

Dylla had been silent for a moment before nodding slowly.

This was indeed the case. In the entire continent, the only force that was worthy of the Yulan Empire considering it their enemy was the O'Brien Empire.

As for the Anarchic Lands, who would consider these chaotic lands which had several dozen Duchies an enemy?

"If Linley truly were to establish himself in the Anarchic Lands, then it wouldn't be a problem for you to marry him." Dylla Leon had said slowly. These words had been like heavenly music to Delia's ears, making her heart instantly calm down.

Dylla Leon had looked at Delia and said solemnly, "My beloved daughter, I must remind you...only when the day comes when Linley is no longer a member of the O'Brien Empire in the eyes of the imperial clan, will you be permitted to be with him. Otherwise, you definitely cannot."

"Father, I understand." Delia loved her parents, her grandparents, her older brother, her cousins, and the rest of her family. She didn't want to break off her relationships to them.

Dylla had nodded. "For now, stay in the imperial capital. Don't go looking for that Linley.”

.....

Thinking back to that conversation, Delia gently sighed again. Delia understood...Linley was already a Saint and had an unlimited lifespan. As a magus of the seventh rank, she herself would have a long lifespan as well, as she continued to train.

She wasn't too worried about a year or two.

Staring out of the window towards the north, she saw the large, feather-like snowflakes slowly drift down. The entire world seemed so hazy, and nothing could be clearly seen. But Delia's gaze seemed to pierce through the walls of reality and see into the distant Anarchic Lands, and see into Blackdirt City...

.....

Outside Blackdirt City, one squad of soldiers after another were running laps on the black dirt, and alongside each squad, there was a military officer constantly shouting, "Faster, faster! Don't get left behind! Goddamnit, if you get left behind, no breakfast for you!"

On an uplifted area, the fourth of the Barker brothers, Boone, and the fifth, Gates, were clad in just a pair of long pants, their upper bodies bare. They watched the training proceed.

During this period of time, Blackdirt City hadn't attacked any other cities. They had only been training. The cities around Blackdirt City had all sensed that Blackdirt would pose a threat to them, and their city governors were very nervous. But at the same time, those city governors didn't dare to attack first either.

Suddenly, Linley walked over. He watched the soldiers train while heading towards Gates and Boone.

"Lord, what do you think?" Gates said proudly.

Linley nodded with satisfaction. "Very good. Oh, right. When do you plan to begin attacking the nearby cities?" Linley didn't know a single thing about military tactics. The only thing he knew was that unless things came to a critical juncture, there was no need for him to get involved.

Boone laughed heartily. "Lord, we haven't attacked anybody yet, but some people from the nearby cities have already surrendered to us and promised that they would undermine their cities from the inside."

"Oh, is that so?" Linley laughed as well.

Gates hurriedly said. "Of course, how could we make this up? Lord, think about it. After the power of we five brothers spread across the Anarchic Lands, many of the nearby cities are terrified of us. In order to deal with those cities, after all, we don't even need to mobilize our armies. Just by ourselves, we five brothers can slaughter our path into those cities and easily take victory."

Linley laughed again.

To this sort of small city, a single expert could decide everything. For example, the city army of Blackdirt City numbered only a few thousand people. A warrior of the ninth rank could easily kill that many people. Alternately, he could directly kill the leader and force the rest to surrender!

Attacking a Duchy, however, was different.

Each Duchy had perhaps around a hundred thousand soldiers. Similarly, if in the future, they were to fight against the Radiant Church, perhaps the enemy would have a huge number of soldiers. Against this sort of human wave tactics, how many people could a single expert kill? However, a magus in this sort of situation would be extremely useful.

But as long as there were no Saint-level magi about, when two armies engaged in wide-scale warfare against each other, the quality and the ability of each armies' soldiers was of paramount importance.

"What are you training them in?" Linley frowned as he looked at these scattered squads.

Boone explained, "Lord, this is the training of a medium-sized brigade. Each battalion is split into a brigade of three hundred people who will train together. Each brigade has a captain and six lieutenants who are in charge of supervising and training. This is a very effective way of training."

Gates and Boone had trained soldiers before in the Eighteen Northern Duchies. They knew what the best methods were.

After coming to Blackdirt City and learning what the situation was, Linley returned to Mt. Blackraven.

Like an ephemeral blue trail of smoke, Linley wisped back into the depths of Mt. Blackraven. Linley currently lived in the center of a beautiful lake in Mt. Blackraven, which had several boulders in the center covering several dozen square meters. Linley had found those boulders from elsewhere in Mt. Blackraven, then with his sword, chopped them flat, then moved them to the center of the lake to serve as his base.

In the center of the lake, the boulders were only half a meter or so higher than the surface of the lake. There, atop those boulders, Linley had built himself a wooden house.

"Bebe, what are you up to?" Linley walked atop the water, gracefully arriving at the center of the lake. But when he did so, Linley suddenly discovered that Bebe was digging at the side of one of the boulders.

"Boss!" Bebe turned his head and chortled at Linley, while at the same time his sharp little claws continued to swipe at the edge of the rocks, sending debris everywhere. "I'm making a flight of stairs. I'm going to make a few stairs over here. That way, in the future when I get into the water, I can choose to either rest on the stairs, or lie in the water. That'll be so comfortable. Boss, aren't I, Bebe, simply the smartest?"

Linley began to laugh.

"Slash, slash." Swiping with his claws, Bebe gradually dug out the six steps of stairs, with each step roughly ten centimeters high, with the last one in the water itself. Bebe sat his rear down on the bottommost step, happily whacking the water with his four limbs.

Linley chuckled. Seeing the stones lying around the lake, Linley waved a single hand...

"Whoosh!" A sudden wind began to howl, and a terrifying tornado appeared, picking up a human-sized boulder and depositing it in front of Linley. The beautiful surroundings of Mt. Blackraven had made Linley feel very peaceful, and he couldn't help but think about the person who was in his heart.

Linley's lips quirked upwards slightly, a hint of a smile on his face.

With a flip of his hand, he withdrew his straight chisel and began to carve the sculpture. Pieces of rock flew everywhere. Slowly...a human-sized model began to appear from within the boulder. Bebe, his small claws resting on the stairs, raised his head to stare at the sculpture.

"Oh ho, Boss, you're carving a woman? Haha, I know, it has to be Delia!" Bebe snickered.

But Linley was totally absorbed in his carving. His straight chisel flashed as fast as lightning, carrying with it the soft, gentle grace of the wind. Having already reached the grandmaster level of sculpting, Linley was now totally capable of carving anything he desired.

Linley was entirely focused on his carving, and the details began to appear...

From morning until three in the afternoon of the next day. After having spent more than a day and a night, Linley finally put down his straight chisel.

"Whew." Linley lightly exhaled, blowing the fine dust off from the sculpture. The woman he had sculpted possessed a unique, heroic aura. In particular, her eyes...they made the stone sculpture look as though it was truly alive.

Linley looked at the sculpture with satisfaction, then turned to stare towards the southwest. In his heart, he thought to himself, "Delia, you should have received my letter by now."

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 2, Two Letters

Although Linley's first love had ended in failure and caused Linley to develop an aversion towards love, Delia's repeated actions, beginning since they had known each other while they were children, had forced Linley to admit...that he enjoyed being together with Delia. He enjoyed that sort of warm, intimate feeling.

At the Institute, Linley already knew how Delia felt about him.

He knew that Delia was waiting for him to make the first move, but after his first love had failed, Linley's heart had become knotted, and he simply couldn't.

Far away, in the imperial capital of the Yulan continent, although the sun was high in the sky, the world was still extremely cold. Delia was wearing an expensive, thick robe as she sat in her courtyard, enjoying the rays of the sun. In her hands was a letter which Linley had sent her. This letter had come to her via the high speed information network of the Dawson Conglomerate.

Holding the letter in her hands, Delia couldn't help but laugh, laugh with great joy.

"Delia, what are you looking at?" A thick, heavy sound rang out. It was the Worldbear, Hatton. Hatton's adorable bear eyes stared at the letter in Delia's hands. "C'mon, Delia, lemme see it. Let Big Yellow be happy with you."

The Worldbear, Hatton, was on exceedingly close terms with Delia.

As soon as Delia saw Hatton, she immediately hid the letter away, wrinkling her nose and snorting at him. "Big Yellow, are you causing trouble again? Where's Teacher? Why aren't you by Teacher's side?"

The Worldbear shook his head. "Master is engaging in closed door meditation training. He won't be coming out for the next ten days or half a month. He doesn't need me by his side right now. So, Big Yellow has come to find Delia." The Worldbear beamed at Delia.

Delia was in a fine mood today as well, and so she continued jesting with the Worldbear for a while.

"Delia, that letter is from Linley, right?" The Worldbear suddenly asked in a lowered voice.

Delia glanced with vexation at him, but she still nodded. Delia's eyes were filled with irrepressible excitement. Linley's letter had clearly detailed how his life had been, and had also told Delia that he was currently in Blackdirt City, in the Anarchic Lands. He even gave Delia clear instructions on how to get there.

Although Linley didn't explicitly say that he wanted Delia to come visit him, just based on how carefully he described the route to the city, his intentions were quite clear.

"That silly man. He's always trying to hide his intentions. If he wants me to go, he should say so." Delia both laughed and cursed him in her heart.

Delia was in such a mood that just sitting there by herself, she would start giggling. The Worldbear, next to Delia, continually chatted with her as well.

"Delia, tomorrow is the Yulan Festival. Will you go back tonight?" The Worldbear, Hatton, asked softly.

Delia, hearing these words, couldn't help but frown. Letting out a sigh, she said, "Yeah. Tonight, the entire clan will be coming together. Ugh...I really don't want to go back." During this period of time, each of the two times Delia had gone back, her clansmen had exhorted her to forget about Linley.

However...

Was that possible?

When Delia had believed Linley dead, she had even made up her mind to never marry. Ten full years had passed like that. Now that she knew Linley was alive, and would soon set up his own dominion, how could she give him up now?

That night.

All of the important members of the Leon clan were in attendance at this banquet. Nearly a hundred important clan members happily chatted and toasted each other, and this noble procession naturally included the clan leader, Dylla Leon. Not only was Dylla Leon himself quite accomplished, his two children were incredible as well.

Dixie was a magus of the eighth rank, and the personal disciple of the High Priest.

Delia had reached the seventh rank years ago, and was the disciple of the Saint-level Grand Magus, Master Longhaus.

These two children truly were extremely amazing.

Today, although Delia didn't put on much makeup, the combination of her noble, aristocratic bearing and her natural good looks made Delia appear more dazzling than any of the young noble ladies. Only, Delia headed to a corner of the main hall with her wine goblet in hand.

A middle-aged person walked towards Dylla Leon with goblet in hand, glancing at Delia. Laughing, he said, "Big brother, Delia truly is growing more and more beautiful. Quite a few young noblemen in the imperial capital have been smitten by her."

Dylla Leon laughed calmly.

"Big brother, the son of Prince Reed [Li'de] has always been enamored of Delia. Do you think there is a chance that the two of them..."

Dylla Leon shook his head. "Third Brother, there's nothing to discuss. If Delia was willing to accept marrying one of the nobles of the imperial capital, then she would have done so many years earlier. As for now...it's best if you don't say anything. Later, I'll let my wife go speak with her."

There had been quite a few people who had raised this issue with Dylla Leon during this banquet.

This was because, clearly, Delia was young, beautiful, and talented, and was the disciple of a Grand Magus Saint. She also had the backing of the powerful Leon clan...such a perfect woman had countless suitors.

Delia sat there quietly in the corner.

"Little sister." A handsome young man, standing 1.8 meters tall with utterly straight golden hair which fell to his shoulders, walked over to her.

Raising her head up, Delia revealed a smile on her face. "Big brother." The person had come was Delia's older sibling, Dixie. Just like back at the Ernst Institute, Dixie remained as cold and indifferent to others as ever. But towards his little sister, Dixie was filled with affection.

Dixie sat down opposite from Delia.

"What is it? You seem to be in a bad mood?" Dixie smiled as he spoke.

Delia shook her head resignedly. "Big brother, you are always training by the side of the High Priest. You don't know much about my affairs."

"Does it have to do with Linley?" Dixie asked.

Delia laughed as she tossed him a glance. "Big brother, you are quite clever. But both father and mother are somewhat opposed to me being together with him. I've been vexed about this...after all, I don't want the relationship with the family to become too stiff."

Dixie nodded. He understood how his sister felt. He had watched Delia grow up, and Dixie knew very well...that although Delia was a very determined, resolute girl, in the depths of her heart, she was somewhat mentally reliant on her family members.

"Most likely tonight, mother will come over and chat with me yet again about how promising this young man is, or how promising that young man is." Delia laughed bitterly.

Every time she came back, her parents would always raise this issue with her.

Dixie frowned. "Those wastrel sons of those rich nobles still want to marry you? Linley has acted improperly as well. He should have openly come to the imperial capital and proposed to you long ago! If he did so, I would definitely support him." In his heart, Dixie actually quite admired Linley.

After all, Linley was someone who was an even greater genius than he himself was.

"Propose to me?" Delia was startled, but then she burst into laughter.

Delia thought back to that night at Wushan Township and how she had kissed Linley. That look of utter shock and panic on Linley's face. Even despite her best subtle efforts, she wasn't able to get Linley to summon the courage to say that he loved her. How could he possibly come to the imperial capital to propose to her?"

"Big brother, Linley is very different from how you imagine him." Delia laughed.

Delia was in a fairly good mood while her big brother was with her during the banquet. Unfortunately, after the banquet was over, she chatted with her parents for a time, and afterwards, her mood became terrible once again. Her parents tirelessly tried to persuade her.

She hated being pressured like this.

On the day of the Yulan Festival, Delia came to the headquarters of the Dawson Conglomerate in the Yulan Empire's imperial capital.

"Miss Delia." The supervisor here knew Delia by sight.

"I'd like to trouble you, sir, to help deliver this letter to Linley." Delia handed over a letter.

The supervisor immediately nodded. "Please don't worry. I will definitely make sure that this letter is delivered to Master Linley's hands." The Dawson Conglomerate was extremely efficient in carrying out any tasks related to Linley. The same day, they sent a flying magical beast out with the letter away from the imperial capital.

After the blizzard had ambushed them last night, this morning, when Linley left his room, he discovered that Mt. Blackraven was now covered with a layer of silver 'ornaments'. Some snow was drifting about on the surface of the lake. As the warm rays of the morning sun began to shine down from the east, the snow covering the trees and the boulders reflected the light dazzlingly.

"Whew." Taking a deep breath and sensing the fresh air after the blizzard, Linley allowed a smile to appear on his face.

Bebe appeared from within the wooden room as well. Rubbing the sleep from his little eyes, Bebe's four little paws left behind marks in the snow as he walked.

"Lord, Lord!" That loud voice rang out from afar, causing some of the snow on the trees to be shaken loose. Turning, Linley saw a huge figure rush towards him at high speed. With each step, the man moved over ten meters. With a mighty leap from the lake's edge, the man flew over seventy or eighty meters before landing on the flat boulder in the center of the lake.

"Gates, why'd you run over here in such a rush?" Linley laughed.

Gates chortled. "To handle your affairs, of course. Otherwise, I wouldn't rush over here so quickly."

"My affairs?" Linley was clearly rather puzzled.

"Look, see!" Gates took out a letter from his clothes. "This is Miss Delia's letter. The Dawson Conglomerate's men just delivered it to Blackdirt City.

Haha, those people from the Dawson Conglomerate have decided to just go ahead and set up a branch office in Blackdirt City."

"Delia's?"

Linley immediately accepted the letter. After opening it, he began to read it. At this time, Bebe growled towards Gates, "Gates, big guy, step aside. Don't try to sneak any peeks at the letter between Delia and my Boss."

"Got it, got it." Gates didn't know whether to laugh or to cry.

What Gates did know, however, was that he didn't dare to offend this terrifying fellow, Bebe. Even the Saint-level magical beast Haeru admitted he was no match for Bebe. How would he, Gates, dare to offend him?

Linley was reading the letter very carefully.

"To the most esteemed Master Linley,

Greetings and happy reading!

You've been quite impressive lately. You've already taken over Blackdirt City...but Blackdirt City is just a small city. Given your status as the venerable Master Linley, I'm sure that you can't possibly expect me to come over after you took over a single tiny city such as Blackdirt, can you? Wouldn't that be rather embarrassing for you?

I've come to the decision that I must wait for you to, at the very least, found your own Duchy within the Anarchic Lands before heading over there. Otherwise...hrmph, I won't see you.

As for your questions regarding how my life is? My life isn't bad. I'm just quietly spending my time with my Teacher in training. My grandmother is doing much better now. There's no need for you to worry about my affairs. It's best if you spend your time worrying about the Anarchic Lands and your training.

Remember that I'm waiting for you to set up your Duchy.

The day that your Duchy is founded is the day I will leave the Yulan Empire. This is our appointment!

However...be careful. Don't exhaust yourself. I have all the time in the world, and I'll wait for you to found your Duchy! I'll wait to see you!

Yours...Delia."

After reading this letter, Linley felt warmth in his heart, and he couldn't help but let a smile creep onto his face as he stored the letter into his interspatial ring. The nearby Gates couldn't help but mock, "Lord, you seem to be quite happy. Your face is about to split apart from that smile. What did Miss Delia write?"

"Yeah, Boss, what did she write?" Bebe was staring at Linley as well.

Linley chuckled, then looked at Gates. "Enough. Let me ask you something. When are you preparing to begin attacking the other cities?"

"We can start at any time. But right now, it is the Yulan Festival..." Gates said. The Yulan Festival was a festival which was celebrated throughout the entire Yulan continent. Even many soldiers would go back at this time to reunite with their families. Naturally, a portion of the soldiers would have to remain on duty to keep watch.

Linley shook his head. "Catching them by surprise will reduce our casualties."

"Then give the order, Lord." Gates' eyes were shining.

Linley nodded slightly. "Go back and make preparations immediately. Tomorrow morning, we'll begin our attacks against the neighboring cities. We must subdue the surrounding cities with the greatest haste... our current plan is to take over an amount of land equal to a Duchy in size."

"Yes, Lord!" Gates said in a clear voice.

"Go, then." Linley laughed calmly.

Gates immediately nodded, then left Mt. Blackraven. Blackdirt City, which had been in a state of preparation this entire time, began to frantically prepare to make its move after receiving Linley's orders via Gates. And so, the hibernating Blackdirt City finally began to reach out towards the neighboring cities with its fierce claws.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 3, Expanding Power

Yulan calendar, year 10010. January 5th. Night time. The world was covered with a dim gray gauze, and in some cooler places, the snow had yet to melt. Right now, the city of Tours [Tu'er] was under tremendous pressure.

The city governor of Tours was up on his walls, staring outside in desperation. Outside the city, there was an indeterminate number of people whom couldn't be seen very clearly.

"How many people does Blackdirt City have?" The city governor, Delai [De'lei] shouted a question to his subordinates.

"Lord Governor, the scouts came to report to us as soon as they saw the enemy forces. They weren't able to clearly make out how many men they have. However, the leader of them seems to be one of those five legendary wargods which Blackdirt City possesses." A nearby subordinate reported back with some panic.

"One of the five wargods?" The city governor grew frantic. "Is he of the ninth rank just because he says he is? Hell, I can say that I'm a Saint! All of you, be careful. You must stand your ground."

"Yes, Lord Governor." Those soldiers assented.

Tours City didn't dare to receive the attackers in a pitched battle on open ground. They could only stay inside the city and stand guard. After all, defense was always easier than offense.

The second brother, Ankh, stared coldly at the distant city. Blackdirt City had gone into full mobilization mode. Of the five major battalions, only one had stayed behind to guard the city, while the other four, under the leadership of Ankh, Hazer, Boone, and Gates went to attack the nearest four cities.

"Stop!" Ankh raised his right hand and shouted loudly.

Instantly, the 1800 soldiers came to a halt. Everyone stared worshipfully at the massive figure in front of them. All five of the Barker brothers were evenhanded in their treatment of the soldiers, rewarding and punishing as appropriate, and they spent much of their time with the soldiers as well.

When the soldiers trained, they also trained.

When the soldiers ran laps while carrying heavy weights, those five Barker brothers would train while carrying boulders weighing hundreds of thousands of pounds. The soldiers of Blackdirt City naturally grew to adore their leaders even more.

"Delai, listen up!" Ankh roared furiously.

That voice, brimming with Undying battle-qi, echoed in Tours City like thunder. The hearts of the soldiers of Tours City quailed. That huge voice alone caused their morale to drop dramatically. It seemed the legends were true. How could they possibly resist an expert like this?

The city governor, Delai, was growing frantic as well. But he didn't want to give up his base.

"Say what you want to say. Don't waste time." Delai summoned his courage and shouted back, but although his voice was quite loud at the walls, by the time it reached Ankh, it had grown very soft, without any hint of threat.

Ankh continued shouting like a bullhorn. "Delai, if you offer Tours City to us, we can spare your life. Otherwise...my greataxe will show no mercy." As Ankh spoke, many of the soldiers of Tours City began to have thoughts of betrayal.

In addition, long before Blackdirt City had launched its attack, many people in Tours City had secretly surrendered to Blackdirt City already.

"Oh, you want to fight to the end?" Ankh's voice once more echoed in the ears of all the soldiers of Tours City.

"Kill!" A loud shout that shattered the heavens.

Many of the soldiers on the walls of Tours City were terrified by this shout. From below, they could hear countless warriors angrily screaming, "Kill!" "Kill!"

....

All of them were charging wildly towards the walls of Tours City, their shields held high. Those ferocious, roaring knights created panic in the city guards.

"Archers! Shoot them! Shoot them dead!" The city governor, Delai, shouted angrily, his face red.

The archers on the city walls immediately nocked their bows, then began shooting arrows at the charging enemies. Most of the arrows in this first volley struck the shields. A few injured some of the soldiers of Blackdirt City. Three unlucky soldiers were shot to death.

"Shoot them all to death!" Delai roared angrily.

But before the second volley of arrows was loosed, Ankh charged forward, outpacing his men by over a hundred yards and rushing to the gates of the city. With a mighty howl, he brandished his terrifying greataxe and gave the city gates a thunderous chop.

"BANG!"

The entire city wall trembled, and the gates to Tours City instantly shattered into smithereens which flew everywhere. Even in his human form, Ankh was a warrior of the ninth rank. There was no difficulty at all for him to break past the defenses of these soldiers.

"The city gate is down!"

"That wargod is charging in!"

All sorts of shouts could be heard from within Tours City. Even the city governor, Delai, upon realizing that the gate had been breached, instantly turned pale.

"Whoosh!" With each wave of the greataxe, the surrounding soldiers were instantly blasted into countless pieces, sending blood and flesh everywhere. The nearby soldiers all began to retreat in terror. Ankh, covered by his Undying battle-qi, seemed a veritable devil.

Twirling his terrifying greataxe about, Ankh roared angrily, "Those who stand against me will die!"

Ankh brandished his greataxe about like a tornado, but this 'tornado' was a visible one. Anything touched by this 'tornado' was instantly blasted to bits. At first, some soldiers of Tours City had attempted to attack, but afterwards, no one dared to get near this fiend.

In but a few moments, the forces of Blackdirt City swept into the city through the gates.

"We surrender! We surrender!"

First, a single voice called out to surrender, but then, countless voices joined in. By the time Ankh and his bloody greataxe arrived at the city walls, the soldiers on the walls had all put down their weapons, while the city governor, Delai, was tied up in rope and placed on the floor. Several military officers were there, awaiting Ankh's arrival.

"Milord, my name is Ford [Fu'er'de]." One of the military officers said respectfully.

"Oh, so you are Ford."

Ankh knew very well that Ford was one of the military officers who had surrendered to them even before the battle had began. Many had done so. Given that Blackdirt City had the five Barker brothers, how could they possibly lose?

Battles were fought by men and won by men.

When two forces were roughly on the same level of power, perhaps some stratagems and deceptions would be effective. But once the gap in power reached a sufficient level, such as now, where Ankh alone could demolish the forces of Tours City? A battle like this had no other possible outcomes at all. There wasn't the slightest chance of defeat.

Yulan calendar, Year 10010. January 5th. Blackdirt City began its conquests.

By January 6th, Linley's side already had five cities, and the number of people they controlled, including the various satellite towns and villages, was a grand total of nearly three million. Generally speaking, however, in the Anarchic Lands, only an entity which was in control of a prefectural city would be considered to be a Duchy.

Linley's side had five cities, but all of them were small cities, with only a few tens of thousands of people within the cities. But a prefectural city was capable of holding hundreds of thousands of citizens.

After these lightning-fast battles concluded, Linley's side temporarily stopped attacking. Instead, they quickly began to reorganize their armies. The original five battalions of Blackdirt City were now part of the 'First Legion', which was the core-most legion. The other four legions belonging to the other four cities all saw their military pay levels increased to roughly two thirds of the salary of the First Legion.

The taxes on the common people were lowered by over half across the board.

Each legion now had nine thousand people. In the Yulan continent, large legions could reach up to twenty thousand people. In the Anarchic Lands, however, since warfare was relatively scattered, Linley decided to lower the number of people per legion, forming five battalions into each legion.

The five legions quickly began to train together and organize internally.

The surrounding cities all sensed the threat, but they knew that Blackdirt City's forces were simply too powerful. While Blackdirt City's forces were still busy training and reorganizing, a nearby city voluntarily surrendered. The reason? The previous city governor had taken all of his enormous wealth and his guards and fled from that city.

Barker and Zassler both arrived at Mt. Blackraven. They stared up at the mountain.

"Barker." Zassler suddenly spoke.

Barker looked at Zassler. Zassler said, "Hazer has reached the ninth rank on the way to the Anarchic Lands. By now, all five of you brothers possess the power of a Saint. I will make my breakthrough in the next year or two as well. Think about it...with you five brothers making up the bulk of our military power, with me providing support, and of course, most important of all, with Linley and his two powerful magical beasts...with such a overpowering force, we can erect our own kingdom, or perhaps even an empire!

"Mr. Zassler, what do you intend?" Barker's eyes lit up.

Zassler said seriously, "Barker, right now, the continent has six major powers. Aside from the O'Brien Empire and the Yulan Empire, the other forces, ie the Rohault Empire, Rhine Empire, Holy Union, and Dark Alliance, do not have a Deity amongst their ranks."

Barker nodded his head in agreement.

"As for the Rohault Empire and the Rhine Empire, these two Empires don't even have an expert on the same level as Haydson. But we not only have Linley, we also have Bebe." Zassler was extremely confident. "The most important aspect of founding an empire is the strength of its highest level experts. The more powerful its highest tier members are, the better of a chance one has."

Barker was growing excited as well.

"Mr. Zassler, are you saying that we should build an empire together?" Barker looked at Zassler.

Zassler laughed. "That's just one of the things I've been considering. Our current goal is destroying the Radiant Church's influence in the Anarchic Lands. However, the Radiant Church currently occupies nearly a third of the territory of the Anarchic Lands. In order to eliminate them, we will need a great deal of land as well. After destroying them and taking over their territory...we would be in control of over half of the Anarchic Lands. At that time, we would then deal with the Cult of Shadows...and the Anarchic Lands would then be ours."

Barker felt his heart rate speed up.

The Anarchic Lands was an area in constant turmoil and chaos. Although in size, it was smaller than the O'Brien Empire, it was still comparable to the Rhine Empire and the Rohault Empire.

"Erecting an empire..." Barker's eyes were shining.

"Haha, no rush. One step at a time. Given our current power, with all of us working together, it shouldn't be too hard for us to take over at least ten Duchies in the Anarchic Lands and found a kingdom at the very least." Zassler said confidently.

Barker nodded repeatedly.

The Rohault Empire. The Rhine Empire. How many Saints did they have? The roots of these two Empires weren't nearly as deep as the roots of the O'Brien Empire and the Yulan Empire, nor did they have the assistance of Descended Angels like the Radiant Church or the Cult of Shadows.

For example, the Rohault Empire could at absolute most produce just over ten Saints.

Linley's side had five Undying Warriors. Once Barker and his brothers reached the Saint-level in human form, they would have the power of true Saint-level Undying Warriors. If the five of them worked together in concert with Linley and Bebe...a force like this wouldn't be afraid of the Radiant Church at all.

So why couldn't they found an Empire, then?

"Occupying the entire Anarchic Lands will be a bit difficult. After all, there are a lot of complicated aspects to this place." Zassler smiled. "But I still feel very confident." Zassler turned and stared up at Mt. Blackraven. Linley was there, in the mountain.

Zassler slowly said, "In my mind, I have a goal. One day, we will create a powerful empire, and Linley...he will be to our empire what the War God is to the O'Brien Empire."

"The War God?" Barker was very shocked.

Zassler smiled and nodded.

An enormous, mighty empire could only be founded with a cadre of fear-inducing top-tier experts. For example, in reality, the Rhine Empire and the Rohault Empire were both reliant on the Yulan Empire, precisely because they didn't have enough top-tier power.

But in the empire which Zassler dreamed of, the top-tier power was Linley.

Just like how the War God watched over the O'Brien Empire and the High Priest watched over the Yulan Empire...the future Linley would also watch over his future empire! But of course, Linley currently didn't yet have that much power.

"He's only twenty eight years old, but he's already reached such a terrifying level. Can you imagine what someone like him will be able to accomplish in the future?" Zassler laughed as he glanced at Barker.

Barker nodded.

Barker and his brothers were truly awed by Linley's prowess.

"Let's go. Let's go see Linley." Zassler laughed.

Zassler, this old fox who had lived for over eight hundred years, now had a particular desire which excited him. He wanted to see the Yulan continent bring forth yet another Empire. How exciting that would be!

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 4, War Machine

“Rumble...”

Water rushed down from that tens of meters high waterfall, striking against the deep pool of water at the bottom, creating countless sprays of water. The water within this deep pool flowed out into a narrow creek, slowly winding its way downwards. Barker and Zassler followed this little creek deeper and deeper into Mt. Blackraven.

At the end of this creek was a peaceful lake. In the center of the lake, there was a gracefully built wooden cabin.

In front of the wooden cabin, there was a long-haired man wearing a loose robe who was wielding a violet longsword slowly. But in actuality, this ‘slowness’ was an illusion, a misperception of Zassler’s and Barker’s. Although it seemed slow, in truth, it was terrifyingly fast.

This sensation of a visual misperception made Barker and Zassler have the urge to vomit blood.

With each strike of the sword, it seemed as though the surrounding space itself was twisted.

Barker and Zassler glanced at each other, their eyes filled with shock. It had only been a few months, but Linley had made yet another breakthrough! They had never before seen Linley use this sword technique before. Just now, from what they had seen, they were certain... that this sword technique definitely was astonishingly powerful.

Barker and Zassler stood at the edges of the lake, quietly waiting.

After a long time, Linley sheathed his sword.

"Come over." With a wave of Linley's hands, a sudden gust of wind emerged, creating a 'bridge of air' between the wooden cabin and the lakeshore. "You can just walk over. Don't be afraid. You won't fall."

Baker and Zassler glanced at each other, and then they stepped onto this 'bridge of air', walking to the center where Linley's wooden cabin was.

Linley sat down next to the stone bench. With a flip of his hand, he withdrew a flask of wine and three cups. Laughing calmly, he said, "Zassler, if you had come a few days ago, I probably would've only been able to use the wind to bring you over directly. I wouldn't have been able to do what I just did."

Zassler was an Arch Magus necromancer of the ninth rank. Although he was almost at the Saint-rank, he couldn't fly. And given his body's relative frailty, there was no way he could walk on water either.

"Lord, what was that, just now?" Barker had yet to recover from his shock.

Zassler looked at Linley as well. Laughing, Linley explained, "It is one way by which one can use the Laws of the Wind. Not too long ago, I gained some insights on the 'Slow' aspect, which allowed me to do what I just did. But I still am quite a ways off from the 'Spatial Lock' level."

"What is a 'Spatial Lock'?" Zassler questioned.

Linley didn't explain further. Zassler and Barker weren't practitioners of the Elemental Laws of the Wind. How could they possibly understand his explanations? When Linley had sparred against Miller, that expert from the mysterious mountain village, Linley had suddenly seen a clearer path to gaining a deeper understanding in the 'Slow' aspect of the wind. Naturally, that made training progress twice as fast for half the effort.

If Miller were to have seen Linley training, he would've been shocked.

In just a few short months, Linley had been able to advance this much. This sort of rate of improvement was simply terrifyingly fast.

Pouring cups of wine for each man, Linley raised his own winecup in a toast. Smiling, he said, "Just tell me why you have come."

Barker said, "Lord, after spending some time on the management of our current territory, we have completed our military reorganization, and given them three months of training. It is about time to attack a few other cities." As soon as he heard these words, a smile crept onto Linley's face.

He had been eagerly awaiting this day.

"This time, we should be attacking that prefectural city, right?" Linley said.

The nearby Zassler nodded. "Right. According to my plans, this time, we should attack three small cities and the prefectural city of Moat [Mo'te]." Linley's side currently had six cities and six legions with fifty thousand soldiers. This sort of military power was on par with that of a prefectural city.

However...

Linley's side had experts as well! This was a definite advantage.

"After we take down the prefectural city, we will be able to announce publicly that we have founded a Duchy." Barker chortled.

Linley had been eagerly awaiting the founding of the Duchy. He still remembered Delia's appointment with him in that letter. The day he founded his own Duchy was the day on which Delia would leave the Yulan Empire to come looking for him.

"Linley." Zassler asked, "After we take down the prefectural city, what should we do next? Should we continue taking over cities which belong to neither the Radiant Church nor the Cult of Shadows? Or should we begin to launch attacks against the cities which the Radiant Church controls?"

Per their battle maps, after taking down the prefectural city, to the south of the territory which Linley controlled was the territory under the dominion of the Radiant Church.

Of course, the Radiant Church's control was in secret. On the surface, they were all Duchies. But in truth, it was quite easy to tell which were controlled by the Radiant Church and which were controlled by the Cult of Shadows! The way to do so was to simply look at the temples in those prefectural cities. If the city had a Radiant Temple, then that Duchy was secretly controlled by the Radiant Church.

If it had a Shadow Temple, then it was controlled by the Cult of Shadows.

"Begin attacking the Duchies controlled by the Radiant Church." Linley's eyes narrowed as he made his decision. "As our activities grow more and more pronounced, the intelligence network of the Radiant Church would definitely take note of the five Barker brothers. Knowing that you are here, it would be strange if they didn't realize that I, Linley, was here as well."

Linley looked at Barker and Zassler, then chuckled. "After we take down the prefectural city, we'll spend some time stabilizing it and do a wholesale reorganization of our armies. After reorganizing our armies, then we will begin attacking the territory controlled by the Radiant Church!"

"But of course, let's only launch some small attacks at first, and see how the Radiant Church responds." Linley laughed calmly. "Let's see if they immediately counterattack, or if they refrain from doing so, or if they send over experts to find me."

Zassler understood Linley's intentions. Laughing, he said, "Right. If the Radiant Church decides to openly fight you, Linley, then...the name of the Duchy will be based off of your family name. Let us call it the 'Baruch Duchy'!"

“But if the Radiant Church refrains, then we can continue to pretend you are not here, and we can just choose a name for the Duchy at random.”

Hearing Zassler’s words, Linley nodded in approval.

Right now, what they needed to see was how the Radiant Church would react. If the experts of the Radiant Church did not appear, then Linley wouldn’t act. He would let Barker and his brothers stir up trouble, repeatedly attacking cities. If enemy experts appeared....then they would respond in this manner.

“When will we attack the city of Moat?” Barker looked at Linley.

“Hurry up and start.” Linley replied.

Linley’s words caused all six cities to begin gearing up for war. One legion with nine thousand men, led by Boone, Ankh, and Hazer, went to attack three smaller cities, while the other four legions, under the leadership of Gates and Barker, went to attack the prefectural city of Moat.

Zassler watched over Blackdirt City.

“Kill!” The grounds beneath the walls of the prefectural city of Moat were totally red with blood. At first, the prefectural city of Moat had sent their army of twenty thousand out, preparing to directly battle against the enemy. But when the troops led by Gates and Barker had charged into them, massive casualties had resulted.

Gates and Barker were two terrible gods of battle.

Wherever those massive greataxes whirled about, people died in vast numbers. Each army had its own elite squads, and Gates and Barker focused precisely on those people. Wherever there was a tough pocket of resistance, they went to snuff it out.

Quickly, the twenty-thousand man army of the prefectural city of Moat was utterly shattered. Their morale totally gone, many people immediately surrendered, then and there.

More than half had died. The lucky survivors...were all captured.

They couldn't flee even if they wanted to. The city gates to the prefectural city of Moat were firmly shut. The city governor of the prefectural city of Moat simply didn't dare to open the gates. Once he did, those two fiends would charge inside and he would definitely die. Right now, the prefectural city of Moat only had twenty thousand soldiers.

The soldiers of Blackdirt City were arranged in neat, orderly rows. Those ten thousand prisoners were utterly demoralized, with many wounded. Only two or three thousand were in battle-shape. Blood covered the ground, and the morale of the city guards of the prefectural city of Moat was at rock bottom.

"What is going on? Why are they standing so far away?" The garrison troops were growing frantic. The range the enemy was at was far beyond bow range.

Suddenly, those two godlike leaders suddenly charged forward at high speed, greataxes in hand. Their speed was so fast that everyone gaped as they watched. The garrison troops immediately shouted out, "Archers, prepare to attack those two men. Fire!"

The hundred elite archers selected from within the ordinary ranged division were all equipped with powerful bows, which they began to use to fire down upon the two men. However, Barker and Gates were simply too fast. Only a few arrows hit them, but even the ones that hit them were deflected off.

"Haha, watch this!" Gates roared in excitement. Raising his heart-stoppingly terrifying greataxe, he chopped down in the direction of that distant city gate.

"Bam!"

A sudden, terrifying sound rang out from the city gates. The tall, strong city gates shuddered and then began to crack, but it didn't actually break.

"The gates of a prefectural city are far sturdier than those of smaller cities." Gates laughed loudly, the sound of his laughter shaking the heavens. The soldiers on the walls of Moat could hear it clearly. "Big brother, no need for you to get involved, I can deal with that gate."

That powerful blast of force from afar had already caused the soldiers on the wall to turn pale-faced.

Who fought battles like this?!

Smashing straight through the front gates and charging in?!

"Drop the boulders, quick, drop the boulder!" The shrill voice of the city governor rang out. The walls of this prefectural city were over ten meters thick. Aside from the normally closed city gates, there were actually a few other apertures. From those apertures, massive boulders began to fall down.

Those ten-plus thick, heavy boulders crashed down with enough power that not even a warrior of the ninth rank could disregard them. These were used especially for dealing with experts.

"Dropping boulders?"

Gates' face changed, and he howled angrily, "Motherfucker, out of my way!" That greataxe moved as agilely as a leaf, gently touching the city gate. The gate shuddered violently, and then half of it broke apart and crumbled. But with a low rumbling sound, those boulders began to fall down, blocking off the city entrance.

"Break." Barker also used the same technique, 'wielding something heavy as though it were light'.

"Boom!" The boulder shuddered, and pieces of rock were sent flying everywhere. Over a meter-deep crack appeared on the surface of the boulder, but compared to its terrifyingly massive size, even a deep crack meant little to it.

Gates and Barker glanced at each other.

"We'll have to act per his Lordship's orders." Gates laughed.

As Linley had directed, Barker and his brothers were to keep their identity as Undying Warriors a secret. They were one of Linley's hidden weapons. After all, the Radiant Church didn't know their identity for certain. The only thing they could reveal was what the Radiant Church already knew.

"Haeru!" Barker let out a loud roar.

"Groooooowl!" An earth-shaking roar could be heard, and that terrifying black panther which had been in the middle of the army suddenly grew dramatically larger, reaching a height of ten meters and a length of twenty. Seeing this enormous, three-story tall magical beast...all of the people in the prefectural city of Moat were utterly stunned.

"A Saint-level magical beast!"

Those guards were speechless.

"Bang!" The three-story tall Haeru transformed into a black blur, charging at the city gates. In the blink of an eye, he traversed the thousand meters of distance to the city gates. The city gates were twenty meters high, but Haeru's terrifying body slammed directly against that ten-meter thick boulder.

A terrifying explosion could be heard.

That boulder split apart as though it were made of tofu, exploding into countless pieces which went flying every which way. Many of the garrison soldiers in the city were struck by the flying stones and had their heads broken open or their chests caved in...and that was just the appetizer.

The terrifying magical beast, Haeru, charged through and began to kill.

He was an absolute war machine. Anything standing before him would be trampled to death or knocked flying. Countless casualties!

"Surrender! We surrender!"

"Surrender!!!"

Even the sturdiest of warriors, when faced with such a terrifying magical beast, would feel powerless. All of them immediately threw down their weapons and knelt down, signifying surrender. A Saint-level magical beast...how could soldiers like them possibly resist against such an overpowering force?

"Surrender. I surrender." The city governor of the prefectural city of Moat fell to his knees, his entire body shaking.

After taking over the prefectural city of Moat, Linley's side now had a prefectural city and nine smaller cities, and now controlled a population of nine million. They could already be considered a relatively large Duchy in size.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 5, Heading Out

Late night. Within a quiet study, there was a desk with a lit lamp atop it, flickering with dim light.

Atop the table, there was a hawk-nosed, skinny man with long violet hair. This man was flipping through a thick book. Under the dim light of the lamp, the hawk-nosed man's appearance couldn't be clearly made out. But just at this moment..."Knock, knock, knock." The sound of knocking.

"Enter." The hawk-nosed man didn't even look up, continuing to leaf through the book.

"Creaaaak." The door swung open, and a handsome-looking golden-haired middle-aged man walked in. As soon as he walked in, he shut the door, then bowed respectfully. "Lord Praetor, Linley's forces have already taken the prefectural city of Moat."

The hawk-nosed man was the awe-inspiring Praetor of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal of the Radiant Church. Osenno.

Publicly, the Holy Emperor was the leader of the Radiant Church. The church did, however, whitewash its actions to make itself look pure. When dealing with some experts, they had the Ecclesiastical Tribunal carry out missions with extreme ruthlessness. Their leader, the Praetor, within the Radiant Church itself, had power and authority not one whit lower than the Holy Emperor's.

"Oh." Osenno continued to read his book.

The golden-haired man said respectfully, "Taking over the prefectural city of Moat is a small affair. More importantly...Linley's side used that mysterious Saint-level panther-type magical beast in order to break through the city walls!"

"They used the Saint-level beast?" Osenno's head suddenly snapped up.

Osenno's eyes were as deep and dark as the depths of the sea. The golden-haired man felt his heart shake from Osenno's gaze, but he forced down his fear and said, "Lord Praetor, Linley's side actually used Saints to do battle. This is a clear provocation."

Generally speaking, Saints did not get involved in battles.

Once a Saint got involved, that meant that there was no leeway left, nor any chance of reconciliation. It would be a fight to the death.

As the prefectural city of Moat was not part of the Radiant Church's territory, for Linley to act in such a way wasn't a direct provocation towards the Radiant Church. But for him to have Saint-level magical beasts engage in battle...this was a gesture. A provoking gesture towards the Radiant Church. Linley's intentions were quite clear...

My magical beast has already shown himself. These forces belong to me, Linley. So what is your Radiant Church going to do about it?

At the same time, Linley's side was displaying their might. 'Since I dare to send out my Saint-level magical beast to do battle, if your Radiant Church wishes to battle me, you'd best bring your Saints along as well. Don't bother with the soldiers.'

"Lord Praetor?" The golden-haired man looked at Osenno.

Osenno's deep, dark eyes were totally unreadable. Suddenly, Osenno spoke. "Remember. From today forward, don't fight head on against Linley. We will endure!" The golden-haired man was shocked, and he stared at Osenno in disbelief.

Osenno was definitely an extremely, terrifyingly powerful expert.

As one of the towering figures of the Radiant Church, his power was no lower than Haydson's, and probably higher. The Radiant Church had quite a few Saints in the Anarchic Lands as well. There was no need for them to fear Linley.

"Lord Praetor, Linley's side only includes himself and those two magical beasts." The golden-haired man said uncomprehendingly.

Osenno said calmly, "No. He doesn't only have so few Saints. Those five Barker brothers, if our predictions are correct, should be the descendants of Armand. They are all warriors of the ninth rank now. Upon transforming, they would be early-stage Saints. Only experts on the level of mid-stage Saints would be able to beat them."

"Undying Warriors?" The golden-haired man was shocked.

Osenno glanced at him.

When Cesar had rescued Barker and his brothers and threatened Stehle, the Holy Emperor Heidens had immediately suspected that the Barker brothers were of the Armand clan. After all, for Cesar to act in such a way and so strongly...there was no other explanation.

"They aren't much weaker than us." Osenno lowered his head to his book again. He said a few final, calm words. "Remember. Endure."

"Then what if Linley erects a Duchy and begins attacking our territory?" The golden-haired man asked. Although he was the managing supervisor for the Radiant Church's forces in the Anarchic Lands, now that Osenno was here, naturally Osenno was now in charge.

Osenno said calmly, "If they attack our territory, we retreat and let them take it."

"Uh..." The golden-haired man stared at Osenno in shock.

Osenno said calmly, "If they provoke us, we will endure. If they attack our territory, we will retreat! Let Linley think that we fear them and that our power is less than theirs...however, understand this. When he takes over our territory, he will naturally reorganize and make use of the soldiers of those cities."

"Ah!" The golden-haired man's eyes lit up. He understood Osenno's hidden meaning.

"The Lord Praetor is wise." The golden-haired man said excitedly.

Osenno chuckled calmly. "This is how warfare has always been. Human resources are of the highest importance! In terms of ensuring loyalty, what can be more powerful than faith? Linley...I'll let you know how terrifyingly powerful 'faith' can be."

The golden-haired man was secretly shaken.

Osenno was simply too sinister.

They possessed great power and many experts, but they still used such sinister methods. The golden-haired man could totally visualize...how the cocky, overconfident Linley's forces would suddenly be beaten back to the starting point.

"You can leave now." Osenno lowered his head to his book as he spoke calmly.

"Yes, Lord Praetor."

The golden-haired man left respectfully, leaving behind Osenno by himself in that dimly lit study. He quietly continued to read that book. Next to it, there was another scroll, which had a few words written atop it; 'Linley Baruch.'

.....

In the northern area of the Anarchic Lands. In one breath, they had taken over a prefectural city and nine small cities, erecting a dominion which controlled nine million citizens. But although they had taken over the prefectural city of Moat, the political center of Linley's side was still in Blackdirt City.

The current Blackdirt City was extremely developed.

The policy of no taxation caused many people to desire to migrate to Blackdirt City, and caused Blackdirt City to be bursting from the seams. This had resulted in the population management department of Blackdirt City to raise the immigration requirements. But as the political center of this dominion, Blackdirt City continued to attract many migrants.

"Boss, Blackdirt City has changed so much." Standing on Linley's shoulders, Bebe accompanied Linley as he walked along one of the primary roads.

Linley also stared at the surrounding hotels, clothing stores, and weaponry stores on each side of the road. When Linley had first arrived at Blackdirt City, the local citizens were dressed in rags and most looked yellow and malnourished. But in recent months, Blackdirt City had totally changed.

Those tattered old stores had all been completely renovated.

The streets had been repaved as well, and there were trees on each side of the road. In some of the hotels, Linley saw many commoners drinking wine while casually chatting. Most of them were talking about their 'five wargods'.

Under the leadership of these five virtually invincible wargods, their lives had become stable, and the null taxation rate had caused their quality of life to improve by several levels.

"If those five wargods were to be defeated..." Just as a person in the hotel spoke these words...

"Motherfucker, what are you farting about?"

"Those wargods are invincible. How can they be defeated? Punk, you better watch your mouth."

Many people instantly began to curse him angrily. These commoners all deeply enjoyed their current peaceful, stable lives. Naturally, they didn't wish for their lives to be disrupted.

"In the O'Brien Empire and the Holy Union, peaceful lives are so easily found, but in the Anarchic Lands, they are so precious and valuable." Linley suddenly was moved. "This is what constant chaos causes."

"If one day, the Anarchic Lands could be unified and the chaos brought to an end..."

Looking at the smiles on the faces of the commoners, Linley suddenly realized that his heart had a happy, satisfied feeling.

"Unification?" Linley shook his head and laughed.

He didn't aspire to this. To be able to make his loved ones happy and to allow himself to constantly improve in his training. This would make him very satisfied.

"It's best to allow Zassler and Barker to continue handling the affairs of war." Linley's body suddenly flickered and disappeared with a light wind.

Within the city governor's mansion in Blackdirt City, Jenne, Rebecca, Leena, and the others were eating lunch in the living room. Suddenly, Linley appeared in front of the door...

"Lord." Barker immediately stood up, and the others did as well. Linley hurriedly said, "Sit, everyone. I'm just here to visit you and talk about a few things." Linley smiled as he walked to a nearby chair and sat down.

Zassler immediately said, "Linley, we were planning to go find you and discuss recent developments with you. Now that you are here, Jenne... make your report to Linley." Currently, Jenne was the highest level administrator of their dominion.

But just as Jenne opened her mouth and was about to begin, Linley chuckled as he reached out to stop her. "Jenne, sit. No rush."

Jenne nodded and sat down.

"As far as the wars are concerned, you can make up your minds on your own. Right now, I am thinking...there is still a period of time before we begin to do battle against the Radiant Church. I want to take this opportunity to make a trip to the south and spar with a few Saints.”

Linley still remembered the invitation from that Miller.

Sparring with experts, especially experts who trained in the same Elemental Laws, would give him many insights. In addition, his forces would soon do battle against the Radiant Church. By the time the battles started, he wouldn't dare to casually leave.

He had to seize the time he had.

“Lord, don't worry.” Barker laughed. “However, in another seven or eight days, we will begin attacking the Duchies controlled by the Radiant Church. Given what we discussed with you last time, Lord, if the Radiant Church fights us head on, we won't cower from them, and a month from now, we will found our Duchy as the Baruch Duchy. If they are afraid of us, we can continue to pretend as we attack them, and pick another name for the Duchy.”

Linley nodded.

“Very well then. Haeru will stay with you, in case of any emergency. Bebe and I will head out.” Linley immediately stood up.

“Big brother Linley, won't you have a meal with us?” Jenne suddenly said.

Linley chuckled towards Jenne, then shook his head. “No.” Linley's body flickered, then disappeared from within the living room. Jenne, somewhat disappointed, let out a soft sigh.

.....

In the southern areas of the Anarchic Lands. Within that quiet, mysterious little village.

Ever since the news of Reynolds choosing to stay here in the village had spread out, Reynolds had been ostracized within the village! The reason? Monica! Monica was the most beautiful, eye-catching girl in this village. There were simply too many suitors pursuing her.

Originally, many youngsters had thought that Reynolds would definitely leave and thus not be a threat.

But in the end, Reynolds had stayed.

Within a hotel in the mountain village. Reynolds was sitting there drinking wine.

"Hey, punk, move over." Three youngsters walked over and slapped his table hard as they barked viciously at Reynolds.

Reynolds lifted his head up and glanced at them.

"What, you got a problem?" Those three youngsters' bodies began to faintly glow with battle-qi. A magus of the seventh rank didn't count for much in this mysterious mountain village. There were dozens of youths here who had reached the seventh rank, and quite a few who had reached the eighth. The three youngsters in front of him? One was a warrior of the seventh rank. The stronger one was of the eighth rank.

There was nothing he would be able to do if they wanted to beat him.

Taking a deep breath, Reynolds held down his temper and moved aside. There was nothing he could do...he had no one to rely on here in this village. But many of the uncles, aunts, grandparents and what not of the youngsters here were all experts. How could he possibly fight against them? And many of the youths here had grown up together. If they banded together, how could he possibly fight them all?

"What are you doing?"

Monica and her serving maid came over, and she snapped angrily at them.

"Princess Monica." Those three youngsters immediately bowed. Within this mysterious mountain village, Monica's father's status was extremely high. According to legend...this mysterious mountain village had already existed a thousand years ago, and at that time, Monica's father had looked exactly the way he looked right now.

Monica stared angrily at each of them, then grabbed Reynolds by the hand. "Big brother Reynolds, let's go."

Reynolds stood up. Taking a deep breath, he left alongside Monica.

"All he can do is hide behind a woman. Useless creature." Those three youths cursed him in whispers. Reynolds, who had left alongside Monica, naturally could hear their voices. His body just trembled slightly, and then he followed Monica away.

In this mysterious mountain village, he had no one to rely on. All he could do was endure it!

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 6, Third Bro?

Within a grassy area near the mountain village.

Monica had her serving girl go back, and then held hands with Reynolds as they walked together.

“Big brother Reynolds, those people go way too far. This isn’t the first time either. I’m going to tell Uncle Miller and have Uncle Miller teach them a lesson.” Monica was so angry that her face was a bit red. Looking at Monica, Reynolds only smiled. “Monica, it’s fine. Don’t tell your Uncle Miller.”

“But big brother Reynolds, they...” Monica said frantically,

Reynolds shook his head. “These people are only angry that you are always with me. They are jealous of me, get it?”

Monica’s face instantly turned red.

Seeing the embarrassed look on Monica’s face, Reynolds quickly felt that the little bit of unhappiness he had just experienced was nothing. “Monica, for you, I chose to stay in the mountain village. I knew these things would happen. Monica...don’t worry. I’m still weak. When I grow stronger, they won’t dare to do these things any longer.”

“But that will take a long time.” Monica frowned.

Reynolds said confidently, "Trust in your big brother Reynolds. I'll be fine."

Monica nodded obediently.

It must be said that Reynolds was extremely skilled in chasing girls. Despite having only known him for a few months, Monica had very early on fallen for this experienced, humorous, and attentive man, Reynolds.

Holding hands, the two quietly walked on the grass.

"If we can always be like this and walk together into eternity, how wonderful that would be?" Monica leaned against Reynolds. Reynolds gently said, "Monica, let's get married."

"AH!"

Monica jerked her head up as though she had been hit by lightning. Utterly stunned, her face turned pure scarlet. Reynolds laughed and lowered his head to look at her. "What, Monica? Are you unwilling?" Monica stuttered for a few moments, then said with a frown, "My mother wouldn't agree."

"Why wouldn't your mother agree?" Reynolds asked.

Monica shook her head. "My mother has very strict requirements. She originally said that only a person at the Saint-level could marry me. After my father coaxed and cajoled her, she still said...that my husband had to at least be of the ninth rank. My mother looks down upon the weak."

Reynolds was stunned.

"How could your mother..." Reynolds didn't know what to say.

Monica lowered her voice to a whisper. "Big brother Reynolds, my mother is very cold. Only in front of me does she occasionally smile. Usually...even Uncle Miller is terrified of her."

Reynolds was shocked. Reynolds had a faint idea as to how powerful Miller was. His terrifying speed was something which most likely warriors of the ninth rank would find difficult or impossible to reach. In other words...this Uncle Miller was at least of the ninth rank, or perhaps a Saint.

The two chatted on the grass for a long time.

"Alright, it's getting late." Monica looked upwards at the sky. "I need to go back and eat dinner. If I get home late, mother will reprimand me again." Reynolds nodded slightly, watching Monica as she left.

Monica's residence was one of the restricted areas in the mysterious village. Aside from a few people like Miller who were granted entry, most of the dwellers of the village were not permitted to go near it. Naturally... Reynolds couldn't go there either, and he hadn't met Monica's parents.

Shortly after Monica had left.

"Reynolds, you seem to be enjoying yourself." Five youths walked over.

Their leader had long golden hair, like that of a lion, and a handsome, rugged face. Seeing these people, Reynolds knew that today was not going to be a good day.

The name of this youngster was Videle [Vi'de'li]. He was one of the leaders of the younger generation. Despite only being forty, he was a warrior of the eighth rank.

To those powerful warriors and magi, their lifespan was usually quite long, at least three or four centuries. Forty was quite young.

"Reynolds, I already warned you last time to stop bothering Monica." Videle stared coldly at Reynolds. "A man should know his limits. Punk, how can you be worthy of Monica? Monica's parents are both Saints. And what are you?"

Reynolds was startled. He knew that Monica's father was a Saint, but this was the first time he had heard that Monica's mother was a Saint as well.

"Big brother Videle's father is a Saint as well. Him and Monica are a good match. You outsider punk, what type of thing are you?" The other youngsters were cursing Reynolds as well. These youngsters simply couldn't stand to watch an outsider take away 'their' princess.

"Brothers, help this punk learn his lesson." Videle said coldly.

The four nearby youths immediately charged forward together, while Reynolds continuously retreated...and then immediately turned and began running towards the village. But he was a magus; how could he compete against warriors in speed? In a few short moments, he was caught up to.

Instantly, punches and kicks began to land all over his body. His face, however, wasn't injured at all. These people were quite clever, reserving their attacks for Reynolds' body. But the rules of the village were strict; the villagers were not to engage in mutual slaughter. Fighting was fine, but if someone was killed, those youths would have been in for it.

This was the reason why Reynolds had endured.

He knew that these people wouldn't dare to kill him.

....

"Creaaak." Reynolds opened his door. At this time, a burly neighbor of his laughed, "Reynolds, you are back? Hrm? What's wrong? You seem to have some trouble walking. Did those punks beat you up again?"

Reynolds forced out a smile. "Big brother Field [Fei'er'de], I'm fine."

In the village, there were still some people who were very kind to Reynolds. These were mostly the older crowd. Because Reynolds had a good character, many people liked Reynolds. Field was one of those who cared about Reynolds the most.

"Reynolds, in the future, don't go out so much. Maybe you can help out at my weapon shop. As long as you are with me, I'd like to see who'd dare try and abuse you." Field said repeatedly.

"Thank you." Reynolds forced out a smile as he entered his room.

In his quiet room, Reynolds sat down cross legged, thinking to himself, "Those bastards! But in this village, I am an outsider, after all. All I can do is to endure. One day...when my power increases, I won't be afraid of them again."

His life in this village was very tough.

But Reynolds had never thought about abandoning it. Each time he was humiliated, Reynolds would think about Monica. This was the only reason why he had been able to endure.

"Boss...Second Bro...Third Bro...who knows when I'll be able to meet you again?" Reynolds couldn't help but think of his dear friends. And then, he closed his eyes and began to meditate. In the past, he had never trained so hard before, but he knew that the only way he would be allowed to leave the village was if he reached the top ten in the annual tournament.

.....

The sky was clear and blue. Linley flew agilely through the skies, with Bebe by his side. Beneath them was the boundless earth and cities which seemed the size of a fist. They had left at noon. Just by using the Windshadow spell, by the afternoon, Linley had arrived at the southern part of the Anarchic Lands.

Linley was able to easily find that large mountain around a hundred kilometers south of Southmount City.

"This little mountain village really is mysterious." Flying into the air above the mountain valley, Linley stared down at the quiet little village below. Linley instructed Bebe, "Bebe, don't use your spiritual energy to scan them. Let's just go down."

Bebe snickered, "Boss, I got it. It is very impolite to use spiritual energy to scan other Saints, right?"

Linley nodded slightly.

It was actually not a big deal if a powerful Saint used his spiritual energy to scan a weak Saint, but Linley had interacted with Miller before. According to Miller...there were multiple Saints within this mysterious village, and in particular, they had that 'Lord' amongst them.

Someone whom even Miller would refer to as 'Lord' was definitely someone much more powerful than Linley.

In a place such as this, it was better to be a bit humble.

Before Linley even had a chance to fly down, suddenly, a human figure streaked into the air at high speed. It was Miller. Miller's face was all smiles. "Haha, brother Linley. You came. This is wonderful. As soon as I got back, I began to wonder to myself when you would come, brother Linley."

"Miller, you really are powerful. As soon as I came, you noticed me." Linley said with surprise.

Neither he nor Bebe had utilized their spiritual energy, and yet they had been discovered so quickly. This was indeed terrifying. Miller laughed self-mockingly. "Linley, I am not as formidable as that. When you arrived, his Lordship discovered you and spoke to me mentally to inform me."

"Spoke to you mentally?" Linley stared at Miller in surprise.

They weren't master and magical beast companion. How could they mentally communicate? At most, Saints would be able to reach the level of using spiritual energy to broadcast their location or to scan people. There was no way one could use spiritual energy to communicate.

"You and I aren't capable of it, but that doesn't mean his Lordship isn't capable of it." Miller laughed.

Linley became even more curious about this mysterious expert.

Suddenly, another human figure flew towards them at high speed. It was someone with fiery red hair and a dominating aura that made even Linley feel surprised. This person should be extremely powerful.

"Miller, is this the genius, 'Linley', that you mentioned?" The red-haired man stared at Linley, as though staring at some sort of rare specimen.

Miller immediately made the introductions. "Linley, this is my good friend, Livingston [Li'wen'si'dun]. He trains in the Elemental Laws of Fire, and is on par with me in power." The nearby red-haired man hurriedly said, "What do you mean, on par with you? Miller...when you fight with me, you always dodge here and dodge there. If you are so tough, take me head on!"

Linley began to laugh.

"That's Livingston for you." Miller laughed as well.

Livingston glanced at him, then laughed towards Linley. "Linley, although I rarely leave the village, I've heard of you long ago. You are only twenty seven...oh, twenty eight years old now, right?"

Linley nodded.

"I am so ashamed I could die. I'm over a thousand years old." Livingston said with a self-mocking laugh.

"Useless. So useless." Bebe's voice rang out.

Livingston and Miller stared at the little tiny 'Bebe' on Linley's shoulders. When they did, Miller's face suddenly changed and he said with surprise, "Linley, is this Saint-level magical beast the one which defeated Haydson?"

"Twas indeed I, Bebe!" Bebe arrogantly raised his little head up high.

Miller laughed and nodded, then said to Linley, "You've come at just the right time. Today, we are holding our annual village tournament. Livingston and I are responsible for organizing it. In a while, the tournament will begin. Linley, come take a look with us."

"A village tournament?" Linley grew interested.

Linley, Livingston, and Miller all flew downwards, while Miller introduced some of the details about the village tournament. Hearing more and more, Linley was quite astonished. This mountain village really was quite strict, for them to make it so hard for someone to leave the village.

In the empty area east of the mountain village, virtually all of the villagers had assembled. Thousands of people were there, filling the tournament grounds to the brim.

Within the village, this annual competition was one of the biggest events of the year. Because so many people participated, each tournament would take a great deal of time. Generally speaking...Saints would be the officiators for the first day's competition.

"Lord Miller and Lord Livingston have arrived."

Those thousands of people stared at the sky as those two human figures flew over at high speed. They instantly recognized Livingston and Miller. Although the mountain village had many experts and quite a few experts of the ninth rank, producing a Saint was extremely difficult. Centuries might pass without a single new Saint appearing. Thus, all of the people in the village were very much in awe of Miller and Livingston.

"Hey, who is that lord who is flying alongside Lord Miller and Lord Livingston?" Many villagers were puzzled.

Reynolds, standing in the middle of the crowd, just stood there, stunned as he stared at that familiar figure. That person chatting and laughing with Miller and Livingston..."Third, Third Bro?" Reynolds' eyes were filled with disbelief.

But Linley was busy chatting with Miller and Livingston. How could he possibly notice that in this crowd of thousands, Reynolds was present?

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 7, Desri

Virtually all of the villagers in this secretive little village in the southern part of the Anarchic Lands were clustered here, staring at Miller, Livingston, and Linley as they flew over. Those thousands of people instantly grew excited and began to chant the names of those two Saints.

"Miller!" "Miller!" "Miller!" "Miller!"

"Livingston!" "Livingston!" "Livingston!" "Livingston!"

A wave of cheers echoed forth from the valley. The atmosphere here was extremely lively and energetic. Miller, Livingston, and Linley flew to the center. Miller just extended his hand and waved, and everyone in the area fell silent.

Everyone stared at those three people in the center, and many also noticed the cute little Shadowmouse on Linley's shoulders.

A smile appeared on Miller's face. "This year will be the same as the past. We are about to begin our annual tournament. However, there is one difference this year. First of all, there is a total of 1022 participants in this year's tournament, which is much higher than in the past. And secondly...this year, Master Linley, renowned throughout the Yulan continent, has come!"

Master Linley?

Upon hearing this name, the thousands of villagers all fell silent, turning their gazes towards Linley...and then, the entire village exploded into explosive cheers of welcome. Everyone felt extremely excited that such a legendary genius Saint had arrived.

"Excuse me. Excuse me." Reynolds constantly squeezed forward.

But there were too many people. Reynolds, having always been low-key, had originally been at the margins of the crowd, but now, he was squeezing forwards.

"Why are you squeezing forward?" An unhappy shout.

Reynolds turned his head and saw that it was Videle, the youth who had a grudge against him. Right now, the area was filled with thunderous cheers, but Videle stared coldly at Reynolds and whispered, "What, you want to take a look at Master Linley? Haha...what a joke!"

But Reynolds paid Videle no heed, passing by more people as he continued to squeeze forward.

"Everyone, silence." Miller reached his hand out and waved, and the villagers began to fall silent. But just as Miller was about to speak, a voice rang out from within the crowd. "Third Bro!"

Linley had been engaged in quiet chatter and laughter with Livingston, but suddenly, his face stiffened. Seeing the change in Linley's expression, Livingston couldn't help but feel startled. He whispered, "Linley?" But it seemed as though Linley didn't even hear him, as he slowly turned his head towards the direction of that noise.

That familiar figure in the crowd...

"Third Bro..." Reynolds was so excited that his entire body was shaking.

"Fourth Bro!" Linley felt filled with joy and excitement. Paying no heed to what Miller and Livingston were saying, Linley's body turned into a blur as he rushed towards Reynolds, who had already squeezed his way in. The two bros immediately embraced each other in a hug.

A very tight hug!

After learning the truth behind how Reynolds had 'died', Linley had been filled with utter rage, and in that rage, slaughtered Prince Julin. When Linley had learned that it was Hugh who had killed Reynolds, Linley had planned to kill Hugh right there in the military camp to avenge his bro.

But afterwards, Hugh claimed that Reynolds didn't die. Only then had Linley forbore from killing him.

Linley was no soldier. In his heart, he didn't care about noble ranks or military matters. According to noble privileges, as the saying went, 'If the monarch ordered his officials to die, his officials had no choice but to die.' Prince Julin, in his fear of death, had let Reynolds 'die' pointlessly. He could do this because according to noble privileges, the rights of the lord were far greater than that of the subject.

But to Linley?

Bullshit!

Even the Emperor wasn't as important as his bros. What was the big deal about an Emperor? He was born to the royal clan and inherited the Imperial throne. What, did that mean he was necessarily more noble than Linley's bros? That was nothing more than the brainwashing foolish commoners believed in. Linley didn't care about those at all.

"Reynolds and Master Linley...but..." Everyone was stunned.

In particular, Videle. That 'pretty-boy' Reynolds was tightly embracing Linley? What was the relationship between them?

Linley and Reynolds released each other.

It was rare for Linley to have such a look of utter joy on his face. Turning to look at Miller and Livingston, he said, "Miller, so sorry. I interrupted your officiating over this tournament."

"It's fine." Miller hurriedly said, but then looked at Linley in confusion. "Brother Linley, you and Reynolds...?"

Linley casually rested his hand against Reynolds' shoulders. "Reynolds is my friend, one of my closest, dearest brothers, like a real brother." Reynold laughed as he slapped Linley on his shoulders as well. "Third Bro, don't say such sappy things."

"Haha..." Linley laughed with great happiness.

The village tournament was held in accordance with the normal rules, of course, but many of the youngsters, upon seeing Linley and Reynolds together, felt utterly stunned. They had bullied Reynolds in the past, serving him regular meals of punches and kicks. If Reynolds was to tell Linley, and Linley was to tell Miller...

Given Miller's legendary severity in dealing out punishments, they would be doomed.

"This Reynolds...how did this Reynolds get involved with Master Linley?" Videle and the other youths felt full of regret.

After the tournament's officiating ceremonies were ended, Miller, Livingston, Linley, and Reynolds departed together, heading to the restricted area; Monica's home.

"Uncle Miller, I shouldn't go." Reynolds saw that distant copse of trees and immediately said.

This was a restricted area.

Miller laughed. "No need. Since you are Linley's bro, come along with us. It is no big deal." Miller suddenly frowned and let out a laugh. "Reynolds, you called me Uncle Miller...but I address Linley as brother. This...this really is...amusing, haha."

Linley and Reynolds were both startled. Only now did they realize this as well.

Livingston laughed as well. "Miller, enough chitchat. You each can address each other as you should. You and I are both over a thousand years old, yet we know Saints who are over four or five thousand years ago. Don't we all just address each other by name?"

"I'm just making conversation." Miller pursed his lips unhappily.

Reynolds began to laugh as well. Even the normally icy-faced Miller had his humorous side, it seemed. Most likely, very few people in the village had ever seen Miller laugh. Reynolds understood...only in front of experts of his own level would these people joke about so freely.

"Miller, let's hurry. I'm very curious about those experts you mentioned." Linley urged.

Linley had always felt a hint of anticipation whenever he thought about the experts in this mysterious village. He knew...these experts were perhaps some of the people whom the War God had spoken about, those 'experts who were quietly training in seclusion'. These experts weren't very well known in the continent these days. Or perhaps, long ago, they were very famous. These experts, in terms of power, were much stronger than the famous people of the current era.

Passing through the dense copse of trees, they arrived at a large grassy area, filled with flowers and with stone benches and stone tables placed nearby.

In the center of the grassy area was a round lake.

Passing by the grassy area, they arrived at a location next to the mountainside. Next to the mountainside were several stone houses. The mountainside itself had been hollowed out as well with several tunnels.

"Big brother Reynolds!" An excited and happy voice rang out, and from a nearby tunnel, a figure dressed in white came running out. Seeing the jade-haired, beautiful girl, Linley turned to look at the expression on Reynold's face.

Linley laughed softly. "Fourth Bro, no wonder you weren't willing to leave."

Reynolds let out an awkward chuckle.

The look Linley saw on Reynolds' face made Linley feel as though he had seen a doppelganger. The playboy Reynolds could actually be embarrassed? Could it be that this time, Reynolds had really fallen?

"Big brother Reynolds, what are you doing here?" Monica grabbed Reynolds by the hand. She was very excited. Reynolds immediately walked with Monica off to one side, then whispered and explained to Monica, who immediately turned to stare at Linley in surprise. "He's Linley?"

"Haha, I hear Linley came?" A loud laugh could be heard.

Three figures emerged from the other side of the grassy area. The person who had just spoken was an old man with snow-white hair but the ruddy complexion of a child. The other two? One was a rather chubby, friendly seeming middle-aged man, while the other man who walked between them was an elegant middle-aged man with long black hair who wore a moon-white long robe.

The elegant middle-aged man was clearly the leader of the three.

"Father." Monica immediately ran towards the elegant middle-aged man, tugging his hand affectionately as she pointed towards Reynolds and introduced him. "Father, this is the Reynolds who I spoke to you about."

Monica had immediately introduced Reynolds, making him nervous.

This was the tantamount to seeing his father-in-law for the first time. Most importantly...his future father-in-law seemed to be an extremely incredible personage.

"Not bad." The elegant middle-aged man favored Reynolds with a friendly smile. Miller immediately introduced, "Lord, this Reynolds originally went to the same school as Linley. They are close friends. For them to be able to meet with us here means that the bonds of destiny tie us together."

As Miller spoke, he walked towards the elegant middle-aged man, while at the same time, he mouthed something.

The elegant middle-aged man's face froze for a moment, but then it returned to normal. However, when no one was paying attention, he snuck a peek at the little Shadowmouse, 'Bebe', on Linley's shoulders. The smile on his face instantly increased in friendliness by another 30%.

"Linley, hello. Very happy to be able to meet you. Haha...let me introduce you." The middle-aged man spoke in an extremely friendly manner. Pointing to the ruddy-faced old man, he said, "This is my good friend who came here with me, Hayward [Hai'wo'de]. He is a magus as well, but he is a fire-style magus."

The red-faced elder, Hayward, chuckled towards Linley. "The ninth rank by age twenty seven. Truly admirable."

"This gentleman is Foreman [Fu'man]. He's a Saint-level warrior, and like you, he trains in the Elemental Laws of the Earth." The elegant middle-aged man laughed. "I have another friend who is currently in training. He should be arriving a while later. Oh, right. I haven't introduced myself yet."

The elegant middle-aged man smiled as he stared at Linley. "My name is Desri. I train in the Elemental Laws of Light."

Linley's heart shook slightly.

It was him after all!

According to the War God, the Yulan continent had five Prime Saints who were only one step removed from becoming Deities. Fain of the War God's College was one such, while another was an expert named Desri in the Anarchic Lands.

Linley understood that experts such as these people could defeat him with just one move, much like how Fain had caused him to collapse and nearly pass out with one attack.

Both Fain and Desri had reached the doorway to the Deity-level. With one step past that doorway, they would reach it, but that step was extremely hard. Cesar, for example, who had previously been on par with Fain, had taken thousands of years as well, but upon breaking through and taking that last step, he had become a Demigod.

"Respectful greetings, Mr. Desri." Linley said humbly.

Desri laughed calmly. "Come, let's take a seat inside. My wife should be arriving soon as well."

Everyone immediately headed into a nearby tunnel.

"Whoah." Linley stared with astonishment at the architecture inside the mountain. The insides had been hollowed out, creating a large, empty space with all sorts of rooms and courtyards built inside. Most importantly, the ceiling above was filled with all sorts of gemstones, filling the area with a multicolored, dazzling, dream-like light.

Inside the mountain, the sound of dripping water from a mountain spring could occasionally be heard. It seemed so peaceful.

The temperature today was rather low, but inside the mountain, it was much warmer and quite comfortable. In an empty area, there were multiple square tables which were covered with all sorts of fruits and delicacies.

“Linley, take a seat first. Let me go call my wife. Hayward, you and the others can keep Linley company for now.” Desri smiled, then immediately headed deeper inside. After taking a number of twists and turns, Desri arrived at a sealed stone room.

The sound of stone rumbling could be heard, and the stone door swung open. A jade-haired beautiful woman dressed in a noble white robe walked out. At a casual glance, she looked nearly identical to Monica. Only when one stared at her more closely would one notice that she was a bit more mature and poised than Monica.

“Wife.” Desri laughed as he looked at this lady. “Come. Today, not only has Linley come, but Reynolds has come as well.”

The beautiful woman frowned. “Why did that Reynolds come?” She truly disliked this pretty-boy who had suddenly appeared out of nowhere and wanted to pursue her daughter.

“Reynolds and Linley are good friends who grew up together.” Desri explained.

“So what if they are? Linley’s nothing more than a genius.” The beautiful woman didn’t hold Linley in any particular regard. “If it wasn’t because his rate of training is so fast and if we were only to look at his current level of power, how could he be worthy of me leaving my training for him?”

Desri laughed as he shook his head. "Wife, I think you had best not prevent Reynolds and our daughter from being together, and you need to alter your attitude towards Linley."

"Why?" The beautiful woman frowned.

Desri said confidently, "Go take a look at that Saint-level magical beast on Linley's shoulders and you'll know why. I think...when you see it, your attitude will change."

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 8, The Terrifying Power of Grand Magus Saints

“Oh?” The beautiful woman was surprised.

A hint of a smile was on Desri’s face. When he had seen Bebe on Linley’s shoulders, he had been shocked as well. As soon as he saw Bebe, Desri had decided...he had to build up a good relationship with Linley, no matter what the cost was.

In Desri’s heart, he found it hard to believe that Bebe would recognize a human as his master.

But Desri understood that since Linley was Bebe’s master, then building a good relationship with Linley was absolutely necessary.

“I want to see what sort of magical beast this is.” Seeing the secretive air that Desri was putting on, she chuckled then followed him out. After walking for a while, Desri and his wife arrived at the place where Hayward, Livingston, and Linley and the others were.

The beautiful woman immediately stared at Linley’s shoulders.

But...there was nothing on Linley’s shoulders.

“On the table.” Desri’s voice rang out in the beautiful woman’s mind. Only now did the beautiful woman notice that adorable little Shadowmouse, Bebe, was holding a cup of wine and drinking it in a very satisfied manner. "The fur is black!" The beautiful woman's heart shook.

Mice with black fur weren't necessarily restricted to just the lowest type of Shadowmice.

Perhaps the Radiant Church and the War God's College weren't familiar with what Bebe was, but the Anarchic Lands and the Frost Goddess Shrine definitely were.

"Father. Mother." Monica was extremely happy, but upon seeing her mother, Monica began to worry for Reynolds. She knew what sort of temper her mother had.

Desri and the beautiful woman walked towards the table together, taking the hosts' seats.

"Desri's wife?" Linley stared at this beautiful woman in astonishment. In terms of hair and every other aspect, Monica and her mother looked identical. Outsiders would think that they were siblings. However, that icy aura surrounding this beautiful woman made Linley feel surprise in his heart.

"Yet another expert, one who isn't much weaker than Miller."

Linley once more felt that the War God's words were very true. The War God had said...of those experts who had quietly trained in seclusion for thousands of years in the Yulan continent, aside from the Deities, the highest tier was the five Prime Saints including Fain and Desri. The second tier was the tier of the Holy Emperor, while the third was Haydson.

Haydson's level was just an ordinary level amongst the hidden experts.

This was the reason why Olivier had tasted bitter defeat in the Arctic Icecap. After all, he wasn't even able to defeat Haydson. Who could he possibly defeat?

Desri said warmly, "Linley, let me make the introductions. This is my wife, Pennslyn [Bing'se'lin]."

"Sincerest greetings, Madame." Linley said humbly.

A friendly smile appeared on Pennslyn's face. "I truly am sorry. I've been training this entire time and just came out now. I hope you don't mind." As soon as she said these words, the nearby Monica was shocked. Her mother's temper was such that aside from Monica's father, her mother paid others no heed.

But...her mother had actually apologized? Was being polite?

Was this her icy, cold mother?

This was the first time Linley met Pennslyn. Naturally, he didn't know about her normal temper. He thought Pennslyn was very friendly by nature, and he immediately laughed, "Madame, you are too courteous."

"Monica, this is the Reynolds you've spoken of?" Pennslyn chuckled as she looked over at her daughter, and then her gaze rested on Reynolds. Reynolds had been warned by Monica early on, and thus he felt some dread towards this future mother-in-law of his.

Monica hurriedly said, "Yes, mother."

"Sincerest greetings, Madame." Reynolds felt rather nervous.

An approving look was in Pennslyn's eyes. "Mmm, not bad at all. Monica...good eye. Why didn't you bring Reynolds over sooner?" These words from Pennslyn instantly filled Reynolds with joy. It seemed as though this future mother-in-law had taken a liking to him.

But Monica was flabbergasted once again.

Was this her mother?

Linley's impression towards Pennslyn became even more favorable. Just at this time, a clear, loud voice rang out. "Big brother, I hear we have guests?" A middle-aged man with long, dazzling golden hair walked in. His gaze immediately fell upon Linley, but at the same time, when he noticed the nearby Bebe, he raised an eyebrow.

"Higginson [Xi'jin'seng], hurry on over. You are the last one." Desri laughed.

Immediately, Desri turned to look at Linley. "Linley, Higginson, like Hayward, came alongside me to this place. He also trains in the Elemental Laws of Light."

"Sincerest greetings, Mr. Higginson." Linley immediately said.

Higginson found an empty seat and sat down, then laughed, "Linley, don't be so courteous. Just treat this place like you would your own home." Hearing these words, Linley felt warmth in his heart. Desri and his gang truly were incomparably hospitable.

Within this inner mountain residence, there were some serving maids as well.

The serving maids brought over all sorts of delicacies, and the group began to engage in idle conversation. Reynolds and Monica sat there, not daring to say much. It was primarily Desri and the others chatting with Linley, while occasionally mentioning Bebe.

But today, Bebe didn't have much to say. As Linley would've described it...Bebe was 'playing it cool'.

Over the course of this discussion, Linley had discovered that the leader of this group was Desri, of course, followed by Hayward and Higginson, who had come to this place alongside Desri. Next was Miller, Livingston, and Foreman. This was obvious because...Miller, Livingston, and Foreman all addressed Desri as 'Lord', while Hayward and Higginson addressed him as 'big brother'.

After the meal.

After having eaten and drank their fill, these people naturally wanted to go do something.

Linley and the other experts naturally wanted to engage in some sparring.

"Linley, Foreman is also a practitioner of the Elemental Laws of Earth, just like yourself. How about you two have a spar?" Miller chuckled, while a hint of a smile appeared on Foreman's face as well, revealing two large dimples. "Miller, there's no need for me to spar with Linley. My training path in the Elemental Laws of Earth is roughly the same as Haydson's. Since he has already competed against Haydson, there's no need for him to spar with me."

Livingston glanced at him. "Foreman, you scared?"

Desri laughed, "Foreman speaks the truth. His power is almost identical to Haydson's. There's not much point to him sparring with Linley. How about this...Hayward, why don't you spar with Linley instead?" Desri glanced at Linley. "Linley, you need to be careful. Hayward's power is extremely strong."

"But he is a Grand Magus Saint." Linley still remembered Desri's introduction.

"So what if I am?" Hayward laughed.

Linley let out an awkward laugh. In his view, a Grand Magus Saint without the protection of a magical beast who was to engage in open battle against a Saint-level warrior would be at a great disadvantage. Linley asked, "Mr. Hayward, can it be that you don't have a magical beast companion?"

"I did, and he was a Saint. But unfortunately, he is dead already." Hayward sighed.

Desri nodded. "Two thousand years ago, for the sake of protecting Hayward, that Saint-level magical beast died. That time, another one of my close friends died as well. I wanted to save him, but I wasn't able to help in time...alas..." Desri, Hayward, and Higginson seemed to be reminiscing about past events.

Linley was secretly shocked.

Despite Desri having been there, a Saint-level magical beast had died in order to protect Hayward. Just how fierce had that battle been?

"Why did you bring up magical beasts? Can it be that you believe a Grand Magus Saint with no magical beast is inadequate?" Hayward looked at Linley with a laugh.

Linley could only chuckle.

As Linley saw it...in sparring with a Grand Magus Saint, he would rely on his speed to charge over and defeat the opponent before his opponent had even had the chance to use any magic. Wouldn't that be an easy victory? If he were to allow his opponent to use his magic, on the other hand, then he probably wouldn't even have a chance to run.

The main thing that mattered was speed. What was the point of competing?

“Linley, after reaching the Saint-level, you’ve been living in the O’Brien Empire, right?” Desri suddenly said.

Linley nodded. “Right. What of it?” Linley was confused as to why Desri would suddenly ask him this.

Desri laughed, “That makes sense. The O’Brien Empire is famous for its warriors, while the Yulan Empire is famous for its magi. Most likely, all the Saints you encountered in the O’Brien Empire were Warrior Saints, and you haven’t truly sparred against a Grand Magus Saint.”

Linley started.

This was indeed the case. All the people he had competed against were warriors. There wasn’t a single magus.

Longhaus was a Grand Magus Saint, but they hadn’t dueled.

“Grand Magus Saints are far fewer in number than Warrior Saints. However, the ratio isn’t as lopsided as in the O’Brien Empire.” Desri sighed. “In the continent, generally speaking, out of every four Saints, one is a Grand Magus Saint while the other three are Warrior Saints. But in the O’Brien Empire, perhaps only one Grand Magus Saint will appear for every ten or more Warrior Saints. The ratio is far too low.”

“The Yulan Empire is different, however. In general, one out of every two Saints is a Grand Magus Saint.” These words from Desri made Linley’s heart tremble.

One to one ratio?

The Yulan Empire truly was the wellspring for magi. Desri continued, "The Holy Union is also famous for its magi. However, the Holy Union is famous more for its basic-level training, while the Yulan Empire has the High Priest, which is why it has so many Grand Magus Saints. Generally speaking, all of the disciples of the High Priest have the potential to become Grand Magus Saints."

Linley's heart clenched.

Two freaks!

One War God, one High Priest.

One trained a heap of Warrior Saints, while the other taught a heap of Grand Magus Saints.

"Grand Magus Saints aren't as simple as you think them to be. Let me tell you this. In a one on one battle between a Grand Magus Saint and a Warrior Saint, the Grand Magus Saint has the greater chance of victory." Desri laughed. "Grand Magus Saints find it harder than warriors to train and advance to begin with. Even in a place such as the Yulan Empire, which highly prizes magi, the ratio is still only one to one."

Linley nodded.

It was true that magi found training to be far harder than warriors. Linley had always thought it strange...since it was so hard for magi to train, if they were inferior to warriors at the Saint-level, wouldn't that be very unfair? But in the O'Brien Empire, Linley had witnessed how powerful Warrior Saints were.

As for Grand Magi Saints? He hadn't.

"Come, Linley. Let's go...today, let Hayward show you how powerful Grand Magi Saints are. That way, when you meet Grand Magi Saints in the future, you won't be caught off-guard." Desri stood up.

Linley immediately rose to his feet as well.

Only after a true spar would he learn how powerful Grand Magi Saints were.

At this time, Bebe hopped onto Linley's shoulders as well, and their group left the cave estate. Reynolds and Monica couldn't fly, so they stayed inside. Everyone else left and flew out of the valley.

Linley and the others flew to a different part of the mountain.

"This is the place where we usually spar against each other. You'll spar here." Desri said.

Desri, Hayward, Higginson, Miller, Livingston, Foreman, Pennslyn, Linley. In total, there were eight of them standing there in mid-air. Linley and Hayward moved to stand opposite of each other at a distance of a hundred meters.

"Come." Hayward chuckled. Linley, not hesitant in the slightest, removed his outer robe and immediately Dragonformed. Those ferocious spikes erupted forth from his forehead, and his draconic black tail began to sway from behind...and his eyes turned dark golden.

Linley's body suddenly flickered. "Boom!" He charged towards Hayward at high speed.

"Linley's speed is a bit faster than last time." Miller noticed Linley's improvement. "But he's still unable to overcome Hayward."

Smiling, Hayward didn't move at all. He just quietly waited for Linley to arrive. When Linley reached a distance of ten meters from him, Hayward finally made his move. He transformed into a flash of blazing light in the blink of an eye, immediately pulling away from Linley. The distance between the two actually increased.

In terms of flying speed, Linley was inferior to Hayward.

"But..." Linley's face changed. If his flying speed was inferior, didn't that mean the opponent would be able to cast spells and easily devastate him? Indeed, moments later, a terrifying blast of heat began to emanate from Hayward's body, and countless flecks of light began to swirl around in the air above Hayward.

A brilliant, clear bird cry split the air!

Two gold-tinged red wings, that crown-like crest of feathers, those cold, arrogant eyes...this terrifying creature was a size larger than even those gigantic dragons. Before this massive Fire Phoenix, Linley and the others were like ants.

"Crackle." The air itself began to crackle from the terrifying heat, which forced Linley to raise his defenses.

"The forbidden-level spell, 'Phoenix Metamorphosis'?" Linley felt a surge of panic.

Fire magic was reputed for its offensive power, and its single-target attack, the 'Phoenix Metamorphosis' spell, was only weaker than the 'Dimensional Blade' spell. Linley didn't have the ability to deal with it yet.

The Fire Phoenix suddenly shrank in size, but it appeared to become more substantial. When it shrank to the size of ten meters in length, in all aspects, be it the plumage or the gaze, it looked just like a real magical beast. The entire body of the Fire Phoenix had turned golden.

But although it had shrank in size, the amount of pressure it was exerting on Linley had increased to a terrifying level.

"Whoosh!" The Fire Phoenix charged straight towards Linley, whose body was now covered by a layer of that roiling azurish-black mist. This was the Pulseguard Defense which Linley was so proud of.

"Rumble." Linley's azurish-black battle-qi was being burned away at a visible rate. "If this continues, I'll only be able to sustain it for a few more seconds." Linley immediately flew backwards, and the Fire Phoenix flew back to Hayward's side as well. Only then did Linley let out a sigh of relief.

This golden Fire Phoenix was simply too terrifying.

Laughing, Hayward looked at Linley. "Both Warrior Saints and Grand Magus Saints can fly once they reach the Saint-level. As far as flying speed goes, warriors are not necessarily faster. For example, wind-style magi and light-style magi...are extremely fast. Even I, a fire-style magus, am extremely fast, given my current level of training. Just through speed alone, I can make sure that you are unable to catch me, while I easily trample you."

"But of course, those entry-level fire-style or water-style Grand Magus Saints are inferior to you. In terms of speed, Grand Magus Saints are still a bit weaker than Warrior Saints. But despite that, there are Grand Magus Saints who are faster than Warrior Saints."

Linley understood.

In terms of speed, Warrior Saints might have an advantage, but that didn't mean all Grand Magus Saints were slower. Some of them flew at an astonishing speed. If one were to encounter an extremely fast Grand Magus Saint, then that would be dangerous...upon meeting such a person, the only choice was to flee.

"But of course, this sort of technique is only suited for a minority of Grand Magus Saints." Hayward continued. "Now, come attack me again. I'll show you the technique which Grand Magus Saints usually use against Warrior Saints."

Linley suddenly had the feeling...

That perhaps, Grand Magus Saints truly were more terrifying than Warrior Saints.

"Are you ready?" A visible smile was on Hayward's face.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 9, Sparring

Desri, Higginson, Miller, and the others all quietly watched this sparring competition from afar.

“Now, let’s pretend my speed was lower than yours.” Hayward grinned at Linley. “Come attack me. Watch how I deal with you.”

Linley felt a hint of anticipation.

If his speed was inferior, how would a Grand Magus Saint cope?

Linley suddenly moved, transforming into a black blur. As Linley moved, Hayward also transformed into a flaming blur, retreating at high speed, but clearly his speed was far lower than Linley’s.

“I want to see how you are going to block me.” Linley stared at Hayward.

“Boom!” “Boom!” “Boom!” “Boom!” Suddenly, the air was filled with house-sized chunks of flaming meteors. The large number of flaming meteors carried tremendous power as they slammed towards Linley, and in a blink of an eye, they totally covered the space in front of Linley, forming a barrier in front of him.

Linley’s facial expression changed.

Fire-style magic of the ninth rank: Scorching Meteor Shower. This technique, although much weaker than the forbidden-level spell 'Heavenly Meteor's Descent' in terms of both scope and single-target damage, still forced Linley to have to break through these countless meteors if he was to continue attacking Hayward.

The meteors were clustered so densely that there was no space to dodge at all.

"Bang!" Linley charged forwards, smashing hard against a flaming meteor.

Those massive flaming meteors were knocked flying by Linley, one after the other, while some others exploded and split apart. But although Linley's body was tough enough that he didn't fear these attacks, the constant impacts against these meteors caused his speed to decrease quite a bit.

"Bang!" With a punch, he shattered the final flaming meteor in front of him. Linley finally saw the distant Hayward.

Hayward stood there in mid-air, his face covered with smiles. "Linley, you lose again."

Linley nodded.

"Your spells of the ninth rank are unable to hurt me, but they can greatly lower my speed. By the time I charged out, you probably would've already used a forbidden spell." Linley understood this very well, but he didn't have any choices. Those meteors weren't like ordinary rocks, and Linley had to use great force to break each one of them.

The nearby watching Desri said, "Linley, the most basic method which Grand Magus Saints use against Warrior Saints is to instacast spells to block them while retreating at high speed, then utilizing forbidden-level spells to attack them."

Linley nodded.

"However, Mr. Hayward, you were able to instacast a spell of the ninth rank. This truly is..." Linley now knew how terrifyingly powerful this man was. Even while depending on the Coiling Dragon ring, Linley was only able to instacast spells of the seventh rank.

Hayward chuckled, "But of course. Most Grand Magus Saints have very powerful spiritual energy, but can only instacast spells of the eighth rank. The reason I can instacast spells of the ninth rank is only because I've trained for many years and thus have even stronger spiritual energy."

Linley secretly sighed, "His Phoenix Metamorphosis can cause a Fire Phoenix which was hundreds of meters tall to condense into a phoenix which was only ten meters tall. I've never even heard of such a thing."

Generally speaking, the Phoenix Metamorphosis spell was capable of creating a Fire Phoenix which was roughly a hundred meters tall, and which was already frightfully powerful. But Hayward...clearly was one of the most powerful of Grand Magus Saints.

"But in a dangerous situation, if a Grand Magus Saint was to wildly and repeatedly instacast spells of the eighth rank at you, they would still be able to slow you down." Hayward said with certainty.

Linley nodded and laughed. "However, it wouldn't be effective as you, Mr. Hayward, instacasting spells of the ninth rank. It would take me far longer to break through your Scorching Meteor Shower. If it was a spell of the eighth rank that was used to block me, my speed probably would've been much faster."

"Linley, you can be considered a peak-level Warrior Saint. An ordinary Warrior Saint wouldn't be able to break through an instacast spell of the eighth rank as quickly as you." Hayward said.

Linley nodded.

Linley fully understood now...it was like how an ordinary person could sprint a hundred meters in ten seconds, but if he were running atop a track of mud, he might take fifteen seconds or even longer. Mud, to ordinary people, didn't pose much of a threat either.

But it definitely would be able to slow their speed down.

"Linley, you must understand; the most important thing for a Grand Magus Saint to do when fighting against a Warrior Saint is to lower the opponent's speed! Instacasting spell is one method, while for example darkness-style spells includes maledictive slowing spells...as long as the Grand Magus Saint can prevent you from catching up to them for a time, then the Grand Magus Saint will use that chance to utilize forbidden-level spells against you."

Desri and the others flew over as well.

“Now that you’ve encountered a forbidden-level spell from a Grand Magus Saint, you should know how powerful they are.” Desri chuckled towards Linley.

Linley nodded.

Forbidden-level spells truly were terrifying. For example, that Phoenix Metamorphosis. Even if Linley were to stab straight through the skull of the Fire Phoenix, it would still constantly attack him, because it was a creature formed from elemental essence and wasn’t actually alive. A forbidden-spell like this was even more terrifyingly strong than a Saint-level magical beast.

At least Saint-level magical beasts feared injury.

To deal against forbidden-level magical spells, the only option was to break it by repeated blows and make it run out of energy.

“Linley.” That beautiful lady, Pennslyn, smiled as she spoke. “Instacasting and slowing the opponent’s speed is a rather passive way for a Grand Magus Saint to deal with an opponent. Actually, Grand Magus Saints have another powerful method.”

“Oh?”

Linley stared at Hayward in astonishment. “Mr. Hayward, can it be that you have other tools at your disposal?”

Grand Magus Saints were too terrifying!

Hayward nodded. "Of course. This method is a fallback method which Grand Magus Saints rely upon. Linley, come and try to attack me again. If you experience it yourself, you will understand it clearly." As he spoke, Hayward flew backwards, pulling once more to a distance of a hundred meters away from Linley.

"The fallback method they rely on?" Linley was curious.

"Boom!" Linley once more charged towards Hayward, but Hayward didn't move at all, only staring at Linley with confidence.

Once Linley drew near him though, Linley's face suddenly changed. He felt a terrifyingly powerful storm of mental energy suddenly surround him and attack his spirit. In the blink of an eye, Linley suddenly felt dizzy, and his body swayed. Only after several seconds later did he fully recover.

Several seconds, to Saints engaging in battle was more than enough to determine the outcome.

Linley stared at Hayward in astonishment. "Mental attack?"

"Haha..." Miller flew over, laughing. "Linley, that isn't a mental attack. If it was a mental attack, your head would be splitting from pain and you would've collapsed."

Desri and the others flew over as well.

Desri personally explained to him. "Linley, what's the biggest advantage magi have over warriors?"

"Mental and spiritual energy." Linley didn't hesitate at all.

Desri nodded. "Right. Magi possess the most powerful spiritual energy. The spiritual energy of a Grand Magus Saint is as powerful and boundless as the seas. They are far more powerful than that of a Warrior Saint. Aside from those few Grand Magus Saints who just entered the Saint-level, the vast majority of Grand Magus Saints are capable of using this sort of basic 'Mindstorm' attack."

"This Mindstorm attack doesn't require any understanding of any Elemental Laws. It is nothing more than a spiritual energy based attack that uses a great deal of spiritual energy to strike at the opponent's soul. This sort of tactic is very simple. Upon reaching the Saint-level, a Grand Magus Saint will quickly come to understand it." Hayward said with absolute certainty.

Linley understood this as well.

The so-called 'Mindstorm' just then felt like a tremendous amount of spiritual energy smashing upon his soul time and time again, even though it didn't actually cause much damage to the soul.

"Hayward, naturally, developed his own unique spiritual attacks long ago. If he truly were to use his spiritual energy against you, you would be in trouble." Desri laughed.

Linley now understood the basic underpinnings of these mental attacks (or spiritual attacks). It was to form that normally soft and weak spiritual energy into sharp 'knives' and repeatedly stab at the opponent's soul. This sort of attack was truly frightening! If one's soul wasn't strong enough, it might be directly shattered and destroyed.

"Mindstorm! Haha..." Hayward shook his head and laughed. "This name was created by Grand Magus Saints long ago. But in truth, it's nothing more than a very basic mental attack. It is only useful against Warrior Saints who are far weaker in mental energy."

Linley felt a sense of dread.

Grand Magus Saints truly were powerful.

Whether by instacasting spells to slow movement or by using Mindstorm type attacks to attack the soul...they had methods to be highly effective.

"Grand Magus Saints are far fewer in number than Warrior Saints. Generally speaking, Grand Magus Saints have an advantage." Higginson laughed loudly. "Linley, Warrior Saints have their experts, but Grand Magus Saints have their own as well. Who is stronger? That depends on the person."

Linley nodded.

If he were to truly fight all out against Hayward, when faced with Hayward's meteor blockade, he would've used his Profound Truths of the Earth – Hundred Layered Waves attack to blow a tunnel straight through all of the blocking stones.

In the past, Linley's sword blow had created a tunnel in an entire mountain.

Just then, Linley was playing the role of an ordinary expert. But if this were a true life-and-death battle, most likely Bebe would've gotten involved as well. If Bebe and Linley were to charge forward together... given Bebe's speed, how many Grand Magus Saints would be faster?

Even if they used mental energy to attack, could it be that they could simultaneously attack Linley and Bebe?

"Grand Magus Saints being stronger than Warrior Saints is just a generality. It can't be treated as an absolute." Linley understood.

But of course, if this Hayward wanted to kill him, it would be very easy. All he would have to do is use a mental attack. Given Hayward's ability, he could definitely cause Linley's head to hurt badly enough to make him collapse, and then Hayward could use the Phoenix Metamorphosis to attack. He wouldn't even have had the chance to flee.

There is always someone mightier than the mighty.

Hayward was mighty, but if he were to encounter Fain, he probably wouldn't be able to do anything. After all, Linley had personally witnessed how powerful Fain's mental attack was.

On the flight back with Desri's group, Bebe was mentally chatting to Linley while standing on his shoulders. "Boss, when in the future you reach the Saint-level as a magus, you'll be both a Dragonblood Warrior and a Grand Magus Saint in one. Hrmph...by then, beating them will be easy."

Linley chuckled.

If he were to reach the Saint-level in his human form as a warrior and also as a magus, the synergistic power would probably increase his power by dozens of times, if not more. By then, Linley most likely would be confident in his ability to deal with even the likes of Fain and Desri.

.....

The imperial capital of the Yulan Empire. Master Longhaus' residence.

Delia was seated in a courtyard alone, drinking some tea while flipping through some of Master Longhaus' magical tomes. The Wildthunder Stormhawk, Parry, as well as the Worldbear, Hatton, were off to one side, chatting in the language of magical beasts.

"Hrm?" Delia saw something of interest in the magical tome. Her eyes lit up and she smiled.

Grand Magus Saints truly did have a deep understanding of magic. Delia felt that she truly was reaping great benefits here.

"Someone's coming." The Worldbear, Hatton, suddenly spoke. Delia stared questioningly towards Hatton. "Someone is coming? Why haven't the guards informed us? Big Yellow, are you just making things up again?" Delia laughed as she looked at the Worldbear, Hatton.

The Worldbear stared at Delia with wide eyes. "Delia, you don't believe me? Am I that sort of bear?"

"Someone really is coming." Delia sensed it as well by now. In terms of environmental awareness, she was far inferior to a Saint-level magical beast.

Soon afterwards, footsteps could be heard from the outside.

"Might I ask if Master Longhaus is here?" A calm, confident voice could be heard.

"Come in." Delia said casually. For this person to be able to come in unannounced meant that he definitely was no ordinary figure. The door was pushed open, and two handsome youths walked in at the same time. Delia immediately rose to her feet. "Respectful greetings, your Imperial Majesty."

Of those two youths, one was the Emperor of the Yulan Empire, his Imperial Majesty, Emperor Rande [Lan'de].

Emperor Rande's eyes lit up when he saw Delia. Laughing, he said, "Delia, you are growing more and more beautiful. Right, where is your teacher?"

"Your Imperial Majesty, wait a moment with George." Delia said, then she turned to look at the Worldbear. "Big Yellow, ask Teacher where he currently is. His Imperial Majesty wishes to meet with him." The youngster who had come alongside Emperor Rande was indeed the youngest Grand Secretary of the Yulan Empire, the highly favored minister, George.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 10, Forget It!

Emperor Rande smiled towards Delia. "Delia, We haven't seen you in quite some time. Ever since you've returned from the O'Brien Empire, you haven't gone to the imperial palace." Emperor Rande was roughly the same age as Delia and they were on quite good terms.

"Teacher is quite strict. I have to train hard and study my magic." Delia pretended to be resigned.

Emperor Rande laughed.

Right at this time, the Worldbear, Hatton, said to Emperor Rande, "Hey, blue-hair. My master says you can come in." The Worldbear wasn't the slightest bit courteous in his words, but Emperor Rande didn't mind in the slightest. "Big Yellow, even if you don't address Us as 'your Imperial Majesty', you should at least call Us 'Rande'. That way, We would at least save a bit of face."

"Is 'Big Yellow' a name which the likes of you can call about?" The Worldbear turned his big furry head away, seemingly very disdainful.

Rande chuckled, then after saying a few words to George and Delia, he entered the inner room. Right now, only George and Delia were left inside the courtyard. Delia had a very good impression of George... because George was Linley's good friend.

Second Bro, 'George'. He was the most rational and most reliable of the four bros.

He had a very good temper and rarely grew angry at others. He had extremely good relationships with people.

But Delia knew very well that George was also an extremely formidable person. At such a young age, he had become one of the Grand Secretaries of the Yulan Empire. It must be understood, the world of officials and bureaucracies was a dark, sinister place. For someone to reach such a powerful, influential official position and even become a Grand Secretary meant that in secret, George surely used quite a few tricks as well.

As to who was most vicious amongst the four bros, it was George, amiable, good-natured George, who had become the most vicious.

"George, sit." Delia laughed.

George smiled and sat down. "Delia, last year, you should've seen Third Bro in the O'Brien Empire. Oh, by Third Bro I mean Linley." In his heart, George longed for his dear bros, but as a high level member of the Yulan Empire, he simply didn't have the opportunity to visit the O'Brien Empire.

"I know." Delia's smile was very bright. "Linley's often thinking about you as well."

George felt warm in his heart.

After separating from Linley, over ten years had passed. George was now twenty nine years old, nearly a man in his thirties. He even had two children. Those crazy childhood days were beautiful recollections.

The ten years he had spent in bureaucracy had caused George to become more and more mature and more and more crafty. But the more mature he became, the fewer the number of people he truly trusted in the Yulan Empire.

"I feel very proud that Third Bro was able to reach his current accomplishments." George sighed emotionally. "In the O'Brien Empire, most likely no one would dare to offend him. In this entire world, only upon reaching the pinnacle of power can one be confident."

"Linley has gone to the Anarchic Lands." Delia said.

"The Anarchic Lands?"

George frowned. He remembered the enmity between Linley and the Radiant Church which he had found out about in Hess City. In particular, with those high level people of the Radiant Church. George knew very well how powerful the Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows were in the Anarchic Lands. "Given Third Bro's temperament, he definitely wouldn't be interested in just taking over territory. That means..."

George looked at Delia and whispered, "Third Bro is about to begin his battle against the Radiant Church?"

Delia felt a hint of shock in her heart. George truly was formidable.

"Right." Delia nodded. Linley had told her about this long ago.

George began to worry. He knew what sort of temper Linley had. In the past, for the sake of vengeance, Linley was willing to give up everything. If it had been him, George, he definitely would've continued to secretly endure until he reached the point where he had absolute certainty of victory. Then, he would make his move.

"Is Third Bro confident of victory?" George looked at Delia. "The Radiant Church isn't as simple as it would appear to be."

Delia laughed as she looked at George. "George, Linley isn't as simple as you think he is either."

George laughed. Indeed. Despite being a genius, George never imagined that after they separated, Linley would become so powerful that he could fight Haydson to a virtual standstill. In particular, that Shadowmouse, Bebe...George felt quite speechless. "That little rascal, Bebe. He's so monstrously powerful. What a freak."

After a while later, Emperor Rande came out.

"George, let's go." Emperor Rande said to George, and George immediately stood up. Emperor Rande smiled towards Delia, who was sending him off. "Delia, if you are free, you can come to the imperial palace for a stroll. The Third Princess has been missing you."

Delia laughed. "I definitely will go."

"Then there's no need for you to send me off." Emperor Rande laughed, then left alongside George.

.....

The imperial palace. Emperor Rande's study. There were only three people present; Emperor Rande, his personal palace attendant, and the leader of the Leon clan.

"Dylla." Emperor Rande put down the quill in his hand, raising his head to smile towards Dylla Leon. "Today, We have summoned you for the sake of your daughter, Delia."

Dylla Leon looked at Emperor Rande. "Your Imperial Majesty, what do you mean?"

Emperor Rande smiled. "As We recall, your daughter is yet unwed."

"Right." Dylla Leon nodded.

Had Emperor Rande taken a fancy to his daughter?

Emperor Rande nodded. "That's right. In honesty...We rather like Delia. How about this. Help Us say a few words to Delia on Our behalf, and see if Delia is willing to marry Us. But of course...you have to let her make her own decision."

Dylla Leon said respectfully, "Your Imperial Majesty, don't worry. Your servant shall definitely go ask Delia."

Emperor Rande nodded and smiled as he looked at Dylla Leon. "Dylla, you should understand that when We were but a prince, We had to have children before We could assume the throne. We don't have much affection towards that woman. In terms of lineage as well as character, Delia is far superior to her. If Delia was willing to marry Us...We promise that Delia can become the Empress."

Dylla Leon's heart trembled.

Empress?

If his daughter were to become an ordinary concubine, there would be no need for the mighty Leon clan to agree. But the Empress...now that was a different situation.

Dylla Leon knew quite well that this Emperor Rande was an extremely upright and extremely bold person. If he said Delia would become Empress, he would definitely make that happen.

"Alright, you can go now." Emperor Rande said with a faint laugh.

"Yes, your Imperial Majesty." Right now, Dylla Leon's heart was still in a state of excitement.

Dylla Leon immediately sent someone to summon Delia home. Delia actually didn't wish to go home. Each time she did, her parents would try to persuade her on the subject of marriage. Although Delia insisted that Linley was now outside the O'Brien Empire and that her marriage to Linley wouldn't pose any problems to the clan, it seemed as though her parents didn't really like Linley.

In Dylla's eyes, Linley's younger brother had wed the Seventh Imperial Princess, Nina, after all. There was an indisputable relationship between Linley and the O'Brien Empire.

.....

"What?" Delia immediately rose to her feet, staring at her parents in astonishment.

Her mother hurriedly said, "Delia, his Imperial Majesty's age is close to yours, and he is one of the boldest, most competent Emperors in the history of the Yulan Empire. You are on good terms with him as well. If you were to marry his Imperial Majesty...it would be wonderful for both you and the clan."

"It would be wonderful for the clan, but how would it be wonderful for me?" Delia couldn't help but be furious.

She hadn't thought that the reason her parents had summoned her back so urgently was to discuss this with her.

"Delia, can it be that his Imperial Majesty isn't talented enough? Do you dislike him?" Dylla Leon hurriedly said.

Delia said angrily, "Father, what does his Imperial Majesty's talent have to do with me? No, I don't dislike him. But there's many people I don't dislike. Does this mean I have to marry them all? Marrying someone has nothing to do with whether or not I 'don't dislike them', understood?"

"Delia, his Imperial Majesty's feelings for you are genuine. He said that so long as you marry him, in the future, you would definitely become the Empress." Dylla said hurriedly.

"Then what about the current Empress?" Delia frowned.

Dylla Leon laughed calmly, "That Empress was just someone the Emperor married when he was only a prince. She isn't very capable, and she was born to a common noble clan. There have been many people unhappy that she became Empress. It will be easy for his Imperial Majesty to remove her."

"Hrmph!"

Standing, Delia stared at her father. "Father, perhaps to you, the position of Empress is very important, but to me, it isn't worth a fart." The furious Delia began to spout obscenities.

Dylla Leon was so angry that he slapped the desk and stood up as well. "Delia, how can you say such things?"

"Father." Delia stared at her father. "Don't try and put on a brave show in front of your daughter. Let me make it clear for you today...with regards to his Imperial Majesty, you can forget it! Even if I die, I won't marry him. I won't marry anyone aside from Linley."

Dylla Leon stared disbelievingly at his daughter. His daughter actually dared to speak to him in such a manner?

"I'm sorry, father." Delia took a deep breath.

"Cough...cough..." The furious Dylla Leon began to cough. Dylla's mother immediately went to assist him, but Dylla stared angrily at Delia. "Delia, you are no longer a child. Don't be so rash and immature. Enough. Go back and think it over."

Delia glanced at her red-faced, coughing father, then silently turned her head and left.

"What happened to my parents?" Delia could still remember how when she was a child, her father and mother had treated her like a precious treasure. Whatever she wanted done, her father would do. She had even ridden on her father's back like a horse.

Her childhood memories were so beautiful, and her parents were so perfect.

But now...

Delia cared about her family. Her parents, her big brother, her grandmother, her other relatives...Delia had always hoped that she would be able to be together with Linley, while maintaining the relationship with her clan.

"I'll wait a bit longer. I'll wait for Linley to found his Duchy. By then, father's attitude would change." Delia chose to continue to endure.

.....

In the mysterious village. On the wide expanse of grass in front of the cave estate. Desri, Hayward, Miller, Pennslyn, and the others were seated around a stone table, drinking wine while watching Linley and Higginson spar. As for Reynolds and Monica, they were at the side of the grassy area.

"Monica, were you telling the truth in the past when you described your mother?" Staring at the distant Pennslyn, Reynolds then looked at Monica in puzzlement.

Monica didn't know what to say either.

In the past, her mother was always rather cold and distant. It must be understood...her mother came from the Frost Goddess Shrine. That sort of cold arrogance was bred in the bones. But these past few days, Pennslyn had treated Linley and Reynolds unbelievably well.

Reynolds had even begun to suspect if Monica had lied about her.

"I don't get it either." Monica was truly speechless.

At this moment, Linley was wielding his adamantine heavy sword, while Higginson was wielding a silver, blurred longsword. The two were sparring, and Linley had begun to truly use his 'Profound Truths of the Earth'. Although he hadn't gone full force, it was still enough to cause Higginson to sigh with surprise.

"Bizarre, bizarre." Higginson sighed in praise. "I've never seen such a bizarre attack."

Linley stared helplessly at Higginson as well. Dealing with an expert of the Laws of Light truly was a pain. This was because once a person reached a certain level in the Laws of Light, his self-healing abilities would become extremely terrifying. Even broken arms would self-repair in a short period of time.

"Linley, at this time, you should take a look at my ultimate attack." Higginson smiled.

Linley was startled. Up till now, Higginson had demonstrated a speed that was even faster than that of Olivier's. But he had been just playing around?

"The name of this sword technique is 'Illusionary Void Sword'." Wielding that silver longsword, Higginson suddenly transformed into a line of white light, appearing before Linley in the blink of an eye. A layer of azurish-black energy was swirling around Linley, and his adamantine heavy sword was at the ready as well.

Linley paid careful attention to the sword.

Why was it called 'Illusionary Void Sword'?

"Rumble..." The space itself in the surrounding area began to shudder and ripple. The silver longsword clearly appeared before Linley's eyes, but the strange thing was, Linley felt as though the longsword had transformed into multiple layers, and the nearby space had transformed into multiple layers as well. It was as though space itself had turned chaotic.

"You lose."

Before Linley even had the chance to react, that sword came to a halt in front of Linley's eyes. Linley hadn't even had the chance to resist or to block.

"This..." Linley's mind was totally preoccupied by that sword. He felt as though he had suddenly mentally found something. He immediately descended to the ground and closed his eyes, beginning to meditate. Without paying any attention at all to the nearby people, he immediately began to try hard to find that sense again.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 11, The Order Comes Down

Higginson stood there staring at Linley. Linley had actually immediately begun to train without paying attention to anyone else.

"Amazing, amazing." Higginson let out a sigh of praise, then flew over to Desri. Desri's group was staring at Linley with approval in their eyes as well. All of them sat down, and Hayward laughed, "Big brother, this Linley truly is a genius. Even when sparring with Higginson, who uses the Elemental Laws of Light, he will still have some insights."

Desri's group of people were all amongst the highest class Saints.

Seeing Linley do this, they knew that Linley must have gained some insight into something important, which was why he had immediately started training.

"Uncle," Reynolds had immediately run over after seeing Linley's actions. "What's wrong with Linley? Is he wounded?"

"Haha..." Desri and the others began to laugh loudly. Miller laughed and said, "Reynolds, Linley is fine. However, it is hard to say how long he will be in training. For those of us at our level, it is very hard and rare for us to suddenly gain an insight."

Only then did Reynolds relax.

Currently, Linley's mind was filled with all sorts of movements. A longsword-wielding figure was flashing about in his mind, once again stabbing at him using the technique Higginson had just displayed. Higginson's sword had seemed like an illusion...

The sword striking out. The flash of light. The distorted space...

Those folded, blurry layers of space...that terrifying penetrative power... it had seemed unstoppable.

"What is it? What exactly is it?" Linley was repeatedly thinking on this matter, and in his mind, he replayed that sword attack over and over. For an instant, upon seeing that sword, Linley seemed to have understood something.

But it was extremely blurry!

Again and again, he replayed the attack in his mind, concentrating on it whole-heartedly.

Suddenly-

It was as though a lightning bolt had suddenly flashed in Linley's mind. Linley's heart shook, and that layer of obscuring fog was stripped away. He finally understood that sensation he had felt. "Right. It is the wind. The wind! The 'Fast' aspect of the wind!"

Linley's heart was filled with wild joy.

Previously, when Linley had witnessed Miller using the 'Slow' aspect of the Elemental Laws of the Wind, Linley had come to understand the direction in which he should train the 'Slow' aspect. Linley had learned that the power of his 'Tempos of the Wind' technique could increase.

This was because the 'Tempos of the Wind' was similar to the Profound Truths of the Earth. With the Profound Truths of the Earth, the more vibrational waves created, the more powerful the attack was.

By that same logic, the 'Tempos of the Wind' utilized the combined forces of the 'Fast' and the 'Slow' aspects of the wind to create the frictional force that created a spatial edge attack. The deeper his understanding of the 'Fast' and the 'Slow' aspects of the wind became, the more powerful his combination attack would become in creating a more powerful 'Tempos of the Wind'.

After having sparred with Miller, Linley's insight into the 'Slow' aspect of the wind was slowly increasing.

But his progression in understanding the 'Fast' aspect of the wind had come to a standstill.

Elemental Laws of the Wind – What was the path to training in the 'Fast' aspect?

But today, after seeing Higginson's 'Illusionary Void Sword', Linley now clearly understood how he should proceed. "Of the Elemental Laws, in terms of speed, the Elemental Laws of Wind and the Elemental Laws of Light have an advantage. Higginson is fast, so fast that in the instant of his attack, space itself is distorted. But the 'Slow' aspect of the Elemental Laws of the Wind can cause space to suddenly freeze. Right...the Elemental Laws of Wind, in their 'Fast' aspect, should also be able to instantly cause space itself to distort into multiple layers."

Linley already had some basic insights into the 'Fast' aspect of the Elemental Laws of Wind, and he had been pondering it for some time now.

But now, he knew exactly what his goal was...Linley's mind began to rapidly ponder how to train. It was as though he now knew the starting point and the endpoint. What he now needed to do was to decide what was the best way to go about on this path, and then actually follow the path to its endpoint.

Linley's mind played countless scenarios in his mind, and gradually, his insights into the 'Fast' aspect of the Elemental Laws of the Wind deepened as well. Whenever he could no longer resolve a question in his mind, Linley would stand up and use the Bloodviolet flexible sword to test out a theory on the spot.

This was the nature of training; tough, pain-staking, and occasionally needing a burst of insight.

It was as though a person had suddenly seen a flash of light and seen the rough picture of the road ahead of him. He now had the general idea of where he should go. All that had to be done next was to continue studying and continue testing. As long as one had enough time, one would definitely be able to reach that goal.

.....

To be able to gain insights into the 'Fast' aspect of the Elemental Laws of Wind from watching a sword technique based on the Elemental Laws of Light wasn't something which just anyone could do. Right now, Desri and the others didn't have any idea what Linley had suddenly understood.

"It's been over half a month, but Third Bro, he..." Reynolds stared at the meditating Linley with some urgency in his eyes.

The nearby Monica laughed. "Big brother Reynolds, last night, I saw Linley suddenly stand up and then perform what appeared to be a sword technique. However, his sword was so blurry and indistinct. When that violet light flashed, the wind began to blow all around him, and the speed of his sword was very fast as well. I couldn't see anything clearly."

"If Third Bro continues like this, who knows how long it will take." Reynolds said with some agitation.

"Big brother Reynolds, look." Monica suddenly pointed towards Linley excitedly. Reynolds turned to look...and saw that Linley had already stood up and was smiling towards Reynolds while walking over to them. "Fourth Bro, what's the matter? Did a flower blossom on my face?"

At this moment, a black blur suddenly streaked out, leaping onto Linley's shoulders.

"Bebe." Linley lovingly rubbed Bebe's head.

Bebe quirked his lips unhappily. "Boss, it's been half a month. You sure can sleep."

"Sleep?" An involuntary laugh escaped Linley's mouth.

He knew that while he was training, Bebe had definitely been extremely bored. However, Linley was in an extremely fine mood today...because he had made progress in the 'Fast' aspect of the Elemental Laws of the Wind. Linley understood very well that in order to reach the power of that sword attack of Higginson's, he would most likely need to spend at least ten or so years.

As for reaching Miller's level in using the 'Slow' aspect of the wind, he would most likely only need three or four years.

Clearly...Miller had a much lower level of understanding than Higginson. Linley was secretly delighted. Indeed, sparring with experts truly did allow one to improve much faster.

If he had been training by himself in the mountain the entire time and training aimlessly, if he was lucky, perhaps in ten years or a hundred years, he would've found the correct path. If he was unlucky, he might spend hundreds or even thousands of years before finding the correct path.

This was the nature of training. If you gained insights quickly, you trained quickly. If you gained insights slowly, you would train slowly. After all, not too much time was needed after one reached the Saint-level for one's battle-qi to reach the limits of the Saint-level. Everyone spent their time on increasing their insights into the Laws...for example, Olivier was able to defeat Dillon as soon as he had reached the Saint-level, precisely because Dillon had virtually no insights into the Elemental Laws. There was nothing for it.

.....

In the northern part of the Anarchic Lands, a large-scale campaign had begun.

As per Linley and Zassler's plans, roughly seven or eight days after Linley headed off to the mysterious village, Barker and the others began to attack southwards, invading one of the Duchies controlled by the Radiant Church. The name of this Duchy was the Sherry [She'li] Duchy.

The soldiers of the Sherry Duchy were inferior in quality to Linley's forces. Linley's people lived very close to the Forest of Darkness, and were thus highly accustomed to violence. They had a much greater battle strength. And of course, they had the five Barker brothers leading them into the fray.

Utter devastation!

The most powerful experts of the Sherry Duchy were nothing more than three experts of the eighth rank. They didn't have a single expert of the ninth rank. How could the Sherry Duchy possibly stall Linley's forces at all?

Barker and his brothers were like five gods of battle as they led their ravenous troops into a slaughtering invasion, breaking past all defenses.

In just four days, the prefectural city and five smaller cities of the Sherry Duchy had all been taken over. Linley's territory had just dramatically expanded.

Gates, Hazer, and Ankh all stayed within the prefectural city of Sherry.

"They are totally unable to fight back." Gates said loudly. "Too weak. Too weak. There's no one here who can even slow us down." Indeed. Even if they did meet with strong resistance, who would be able to fight in single combat against the likes of Gates and the others?

In addition, the Saint-level magical beast, the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, had been in a state of readiness this entire time, ready to attack.

"Andrew [An'de'lu]." Ankh suddenly turned to stare at a silver-haired middle-aged man behind them. The man immediately bowed, awaiting Ankh's order. Ankh asked, "Right now, how is the reorganization of the Sherry Duchy's military proceeding? And what is the situation amongst the masses?"

In order to manage a country, one naturally had to use appropriate personnel. Barker and the others were only used for military conquest.

"Milords." Andrew said respectfully. "Currently, the military reorganization has already concluded. We have placed many soldiers of Blackdirt City into their ranks as well."

Barker and the others didn't fully trust these surrendered troops. Thus, the only thing they could do was to try and spread them out as much as possible, preventing them from easily coordinating with each other. At the same time, they killed some people while inserting their own loyal followers.

"The Sherry Duchy has been dominated by the Radiant Church for a long time, and there are many believers in the Radiant Church here." Andrew said with concern. "I believe if the Radiant Church was to come attack us, the masses might even rebel against us. But there are too many people here. There's not much we can do."

"Rebel?"

Hazer said confidently, "What are we afraid of? Threatened with death, how many waves can these commoners possibly cause?"

"Andrew, we have just taken over the Sherry Duchy. Right now, the people are still restless. We'll have to trouble you to handle it." Ankh instructed. Andrew respectfully assented to the order.

"Enough. You can leave now." Ankh laughed. Soon, only Ankh, Hazer, and Gates were left.

Ankh looked at his two siblings. "The results of Mr. Zassler's meetings have come. We are ordered to stop attacking for now, and prepare to found our Duchy half a month from now. By now, we have over ten million people under our banner."

Hazer and Gates both grinned.

"I didn't expect that the Radiant Church wouldn't fight back at all. It seems they don't want to go against us head on." Gates laughed. "Then just like how we originally planned, we'll continue to put on an act. Only after we publicly announce the founding of our Duchy will we continue our attack against the Radiant Church."

The Radiant Church really was spineless. The Church indeed had convinced Hazer and Gates...that they were unwilling to face their forces head on.

.....

The golden-haired middle-aged man once again arrived at the dimly lit room.

"Lord Praetor." The golden-haired middle-aged man said respectfully.

Seated behind his desk, Osenno's eyes were flickering with flames. He calmly said, "Right now, Linley's side has just taken over the Sherry Duchy. They will definitely spend quite some time absorbing it. I trust they now believe we aren't willing to fight them."

The golden-haired middle-aged man looked towards Osenno and said excitedly, "Are we going to attack?"

"Our attack must utterly annihilate Linley's side." Osenno's voice was freezing cold. "This Linley poses an enormous threat to our Radiant Church. If he is allowed to flourish, then we won't live to regret it. Even now, he already dares to provoke us and attacked the Sherry Duchy.

Clearly...he intends to fight against our Radiant Church."

"Since they want to fight, then we must annihilate all of the experts on Linley's side." His voice grew even colder, and a devilish purple light flickered in his eyes.

The golden-haired middle-aged man grew more and more excited. But then, he said in confusion, "Lord Praetor, can it be that we are going to use Saints? But wouldn't that result in dissatisfaction from the Cult of Shadows, the O'Brien Empire, and the other sides?"

"No need to worry about that." Osenno said coldly. "If Linley is allowed to continue to expand, then the work that the Church has carried out for thousands of years here in the Anarchic Lands is going to be laid waste. In addition, Linley himself cannot be permitted to grow further. His rate of improvement is simply too terrifying. Right now...I still have the ability to kill him. But if this continues..."

Osenno looked at that golden-haired middle-aged man. "Enough. Carry out our original plans, and begin the protocols."

"Yes, Lord Praetor." The golden-haired middle-aged man assented.

"Tomorrow night, nine Saint-level Angels will immediately head out... and I myself will have a good 'meeting' with that rat-type pet of Linley's." Osenno was extremely confident. He was on the same level of power as the Holy Emperor, and was a full level higher than Haydson's.

He was fully confident in his ability to kill Linley.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 12, A Sudden Change of Events

The night was pitch-black. Dark clouds covered the moon, and the entire world was cast in shadows. Suddenly...from the north, nine streaks of white light blazed through the sky at high speed towards the Sherry Duchy. Halfway there, five of the streaks of white light changed to fly towards each of the five small cities around the Sherry Duchy, while the other four streaks of light flew towards the prefectural city of Sherry.

If one drew near, one would discover...

That these streaks of light were awe-inspiring Angels who were radiating a soft, holy light. Every single one of these Angels had four wings. For them to immediately enter their Angel forms meant that the bodies they had descended into were totally capable of sustaining their might.

According to the hierarchy of Angels...

Two-Winged Angels were low-level Angels, Four-Winged Angels were middle-stage Angels, while Six Winged Angels were peak-stage Angels. As for Eight-Winged Angels...those were of the Demigod level. The legendary Twelve-Winged Angels possessed the awe-inspiring might of a Highgod.

Unfortunately, in the Yulan continent, it was impossible to find a body capable of withstanding the descent of a Twelve-Winged Angel.

"What a pity..." Osenno, flying behind those four Angels, mused to himself while staring at them. "The Radiant Sovereign created these humanoid constructs, but there is no chance of them making any breakthroughs. No matter how long they live for, their power will not change at all."

People of Osenno's level knew a great deal about what Angels were.

Angels, in truth, weren't living creatures. They were humanoid constructs which the Radiant Sovereign had created in the Divine Realm of Light. Of course, Osenno had no idea how they were created, but he understood that Angels would never be able to break through. However many wings they were created with, that was how many wings they would forever have. For example, the Radiant Church had Angels who had lived for thousands of years, but their power was the exact same level as it had been thousands of years ago.

Although Angels were powerful, they were not capable of advancing.

This caused Osenno to somewhat look down on the Angels. He just treated the Angels as tools. On this day, his forces consisted solely of Angels, aside from himself. Not a single human Saint had come. As far as Osenno was concerned, the lives of human Saints, who were capable of advancement, were far more valuable than these Angels.

Within one of the smaller cities in the Sherry Duchy, a Four-Winged Angel descended into the center of the city. The soft, holy radiance around the Four-Winged Angel suffused the surrounding area, turning the night into day and illuminating the city.

Seeing this light, the citizens of this village all came running out.

"Ah! Angel!"

"An Angel!"

Everyone here was awestruck. Due to the long-term presence of the Radiant Church, many of these people believed in the Radiant Sovereign. Now, all of them had the feeling that the emissary of the Lord had come to save them.

Countless civilians fell to their knees.

"Those who have faith in the Lord shall receive the Lord's protection. Those who betray the Lord shall be destroyed in the end." The Four-Winged Angel's voice penetrated throughout the little city, and over half of the four thousand soldiers in the town fell to their knees as well. As for the others who came from Blackdirt City, they stood there, feeling astonished.

An Angel?

A legendary Angel?

"Kill those heathens!" Suddenly, someone drew out his sword and stabbed a nearby military officer to death. Many of the military officers here were from the prefectural city of Moat. They didn't believe in the Radiant Sovereign, and had even destroyed several churches in recent days.

But today...

A large number of nearby soldiers as well as civilians began to charge forward to kill all of the outsiders.

Without having to do a single thing, the Four-Winged Angel had reclaimed this city.

"Followers of the Lord, the Lord shall definitely give you his protection." The Four-Winged Angel's voice rang out.

The entire city was on its knees, filled with sincerity and faith. A smile appeared on the face of the Four-Winged Angel. He had easily discovered that there were over ten or so people here who trained in light-style magic. The Four-Winged Angel landed on the ground and walked towards one of the experts. "What is your name?"

The silver-haired old man was very excited. He respectfully said, "Oh, mighty and venerated Lord Angel, my name is Felton [Fei'er'dun]. In the past, I was a priest in the Radiant Church here in this town. I was lucky enough to survive."

The Four-Winged Angel nodded. "From today onwards, Felton shall be the city governor for this city." The Four-Winged Angel's voice shook the skies, penetrating the entire city.

"Felton!" "Felton!" "Felton!"

The citizens of this village all began to shout loudly in joy. As they chanted, the Four-Winged Angel flew into the air, and in a burst of dazzling, holy light, the Four-Winged Angel left this little city and flew towards the prefectural city.

The other four little cities saw the exact same happen. The appearance of the Angels caused the believers of the Radiant Church to go crazy, and they fearlessly slaughtered the 'heathens', while those who trained in light-style magic or light-style battle-qi became appointed the new city governors.

As for the prefectural city of Sherry...

When the other five Four-Winged Angels had arrived, fires could be seen everywhere, because there were many soldiers who had come here from the prefectural city of Moat or from Blackdirt City, causing the battle here to be extremely intense.

"Lord Praetor." The five Angels flew to Osenno's side.

Osenno stood in mid-air, watching the three major battles going on below. Three Four-Winged Angels were currently engaging in battle with three Undying Warriors.

"Undying Warriors?" One of the Angels called out in surprise. Osenno nodded calmly. When Osenno had brought these four Angels to the prefectural city, due to the majestic awe-inspiring presence of the Angels, countless citizens began to attack Linley's forces.

Even some soldiers had turned traitor.

This battle was extremely unfavorable for Linley's side.

"fk off!" A terrifying, three-meter tall body that looked like a war machine, with bulging, muscled arms the size of a human waist. The man was covered with a layer of marble-like armor, revealing only his face, which was an awe-inspiring green color.

A Saint-level Undying Warrior!

Three Four-Winged Angels fighting three Saint-level Undying Warriors.

"Second brother, these guys are too fast." Gates shouted angrily. The three people here were Gates, Hazer, and Ankh. All three of them were only warriors of the ninth rank. Even after transforming into Undying Warriors...they were only early-stage Saints. Perhaps they had the advantages of possessing the terrifying 'defense' and 'strength' inherent to Undying Warriors, they were able to fight the middle-stage Four-Winged Angels head on...but the Angels were too nimble.

A Four-Winged Angel very agilely swooped in from the side, kicking viciously against Gates. That kick, easily capable of shattering boulders, landed directly on Gates, but it only caused his body to tremble slightly.

Gates suddenly stared up at the sky, and saw that even more Angels had come. He immediately shouted, "Second brother, third brother, let's go, now! More Angels are coming!"

They weren't even able to handle three Angels, but six more Angels could now be seen above them, along with that human Saint. How could they win this battle?"

"Let's go. The Radiant Church is really going all-out this time." Ankh growled with anger as well.

With mighty leaps that caused the ground to shake and shatter, the three flew wildly towards the north like human meteors. However, of the Four Supreme Warriors, the Undying Warriors had the slowest flying speed.

As for Angels, they specialized in speed.

With a flicker of their wings, four of the Four-Winged Angels instantly appeared in front of Gates and the other two, while the other five remaining Four-Winged Angels appeared behind them.

"Fifth brother, what should we do?" Hazer looked at Gates.

Of the five brothers, Gates usually had the most ideas, but right now, seeing how they were surrounded by nine Angels, he only had the desire to cry. Good heavens. The difference in power was just too vast.

One on one, they could just barely fight to a standstill.

Nine on three? How could they fight?

"What to do?" An insane light appeared in Gates' eyes. "Motherfucker.

Let's go all out. If we take one with us, that's a fair trade. If we take out two, we'll have profited." Gates let out a growl, then wildly charged towards the Angels. Although the Four-Winged Angels had good defense, they didn't dare to clash head on against these human-shaped monsters.

The distant Osenno said calmly, "Angel Battle Formation."

Instantly...

Three of the Four-Winged Angels flew away at high speed, while the other six Four-Winged Angels immediately set up the Angel Battle Formation, surrounding Gates and his brothers. One was above them, one was below them, while four were around them. This sudden encirclement caused Gates, Hazer, and Ankh to all be stunned.

"Break through!" Gates charged viciously against one of those walls of light.

"Bang!"

A terrifying, blazing force pierced towards Gates' white armor, knocking him backwards.

"Fifth brother, are you alright?" Ankh immediately went to support him.

"I'm fine." A hint of blood could be seen at the corner of Gates' lips. "What tremendous force. It should most likely be comparable to a peak-stage Saint. Fortunately, this Undying Warrior Armor is also very strong.

Otherwise, I'd be dead."

Osenno flew over, calmly watching Hazer, Ankh, and Gates. "Saint-level Undying Warriors. The Armand clan?"

Gates and the others didn't pay any attention to Osenno.

"I'll give you three a chance. As long as you are willing to surrender to our Church, then I won't kill you." Osenno said calmly.

Gates, Ankh, and Hazer exchanged glances.

"Motherfucker, if you have the ability to kill us, then come kill us." Gates stared angrily at Osenno. "Daddy aint afraid of you!"

Osenno's face turned cold.

"Do you take your old man to be a fool?" Gates said, staring upwards. "Stop bullshitting. Can it be that your Radiant Church has forgotten Lord Cesar's warning?" In the past, the King of Killers, Cesar, had said long ago that if the Radiant Church dared to act against the five brothers, then Cesar would slaughter a path to the Holy Isle.

Osenno snorted coldly.

Indeed, just now he had just been trying to trick Gates. He really didn't dare to kill Gates and his brothers. After all...he didn't dare to disobey the words of Cesar. The King of Killers who had become a Saint five thousand years ago had reached a terrifying level of power long ago.

And in recent years, he had reached the Deity-level.

He had become a Deity!

Even if Osenno was ten times as bold, he wouldn't dare to offend him. Offending him...meant that perhaps the Radiant Church would face annihilation.

"Disperse the Angel Battle Formation." Osenno said calmly.

"Hrm?" Gates and the other three exchanged glances. Could it be that Osenno would be so kind-hearted as to release them? But as soon as the six Four-Winged Angels dispersed the Angel Battle Formation, Osenno's body transformed into a black blur. Gates and his brothers didn't have the chance to dodge at all.

"Bang!" "Bang!" "Bang!"

Three vicious kicks landed against each of the three brothers, transforming these three humanoid monsters into meteors which slammed into the ground at high speed.

"Boom!" The ground split apart from the collision, and the earth itself shook violently. Three massive human-shaped craters appeared, with Gates and his brothers in the center of each of them. Their white armor had cracked like a tortoise-shell, and blood was vomiting forth from their mouths.

They could no longer move. Osenno's control of force had been perfect. Although he had badly injured them, they weren't in any mortal danger.

With a flip of his hand, Osenno retrieved three adamantite-alloyed manacles and tossed them to the nearby Angels. "Help me chain them up. You two are responsible for watching over them. The rest of you, come with me to the prefectural city of Moat." After finishing his words, Osenno flew off towards the north, not even looking at Gates and the others, followed by seven Four-Winged Angels who followed him.

Between the prefectural city of Sherry and the prefectural city of Moat was a distance of a few hundred kilometers.

Gates and his brothers had been suddenly ambushed, and they hadn't had a chance to even warn the remaining brothers. Caught totally off-guard, the prefectural city of Moat was hit by the sneak attack of Osenno and the seven Four-Winged Angels as well. This time, Osenno acted very quickly!

As soon as Barker and Boone had transformed into their Undying Warrior forms, Osenno had given each of them a kick.

"Bang!" "Bang!"

The two Undying Warriors were smashed into the ground by the kicks, creating two man-shaped craters.

"And there's a Saint-level magical beast as well." Osenno's spiritual energy quickly discovered the Blackcloud Panther, Haeru, who was currently retreating at high speed. As soon as Haeru had seen Barker and Boone be defeated in the blink of an eye, he had known what the situation was. If he were to defeat Barker and Boone at the same time, he would have to spend a little bit of time.

This mysterious human Saint was simply too powerful.

Without even doing battle, Haeru had immediately turned tail and fled.

"Master, master. Come back, quick!" Haeru called out in his mind.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 13, Linley's Return

Osenno transformed into a black blur as he chased after Haeru at high speed.

"He's too fast! This isn't good!" Haeru frantically flew towards the southeast at high speed, and as he did, his spiritual energy detected Osenno chasing towards him. In terms of speed, Haeru's speed was a good bit lower than Osenno's.

Haeru had a very good understanding of his own level of power.

In truth, Haeru was only an early-stage Saint-level magical beast. Because magical beasts were naturally more powerful than humans, he was able to compete against peak-stage human Saints. For example, the Worldbear was a creature who would be able to defeat most peak-stage Saints as soon as it entered the Saint-level. This was a question of inherent gifts!

Bebe was the same as well.

Bebe had only just reached the Saint level not too long ago, but Bebe belonged to an extremely rare, exalted lineage. Despite only being an early-stage Saint, he was so powerful that even the Monolithic Sword Saint, Haydson, was inferior to him. In terms of inherent giftedness, even the Worldbear was a level lower than him.

"You want to flee?" Osenno quickly saw that the Blackcloud Panther was scurrying away through the air at high speed.

Osenno's entire body was currently surrounded with dim black flames, making him look like a fiend from hell. Osenno quickly charged towards the Blackcloud Panther, preparing to attack. Haeru, terrified, instantly shrank in size, quickly transforming into a fist-size.

"Swish!"

The now mouse-sized Blackcloud Panther dove directly down into the ground.

"Bam!" A terrifying surge of black flame blasted towards the ground, instantly vaporizing the rocks and the dirt, revealing an incredibly deep tunnel in the ground. Osenno landed near it, peering down into the immeasurably deep tunnel.

"Hmph. You really can run." Osenno sneered coldly.

Saint-level magical beasts could change their size freely, and after shrinking in size, they could move incredibly fast. Human Saints, by contrast, didn't have this ability. Although Osenno was extremely powerful, he was far inferior to a Saint-level beast when it came to tunneling through the ground.

Hundreds of meters below the ground.

Haeru frantically continued to dig, creating a natural flow of sharp wind in front of him as he quickly pierced through the dirt.

“Master, Master!”

Haeru was extremely panicked. “Master only said he was going to the south. The distance is too far. We can’t even communicate spiritually.” Magical beasts and their masters had a maximum distance by which they could communicate spiritually. The more powerful the spiritual energy, the greater the distance they could communicate at.

Currently, Linley and Haeru could communicate at a distance of a thousand kilometers.

However...right now, Linley was in the southern part of the Anarchic Lands, fully three thousand kilometers away from Haeru. There was no way Haeru could communicate with Linley. All he could do was vaguely sense the direction Linley was in. Travelling beneath the ground, Haeru ran frantically in Linley’s direction.

Osenno returned to the prefectural city of Moat. In the air above it, he stared at those Four-Winged Angels and instructed, “Take those two Undying Warriors and imprison them in the prefectural city of Sherry along with the other three. I’ll go pay a visit to Blackdirt City.”

With a flip of his hand, Osenno retrieved two more adamantine-alloyed manacles and tossed them to the angels.

“Yes, Lord.” Those Angels said respectfully.

Osenno stared towards the north. According to his calculations, Linley should be in the Blackdirt City region right now. “That panther-type beast of his should have gone to inform him. I wonder if Linley will fight or flee!"

And then, Osenno transformed into a black blur and began to fly towards the north.

In the southern part of the Anarchic Lands, within a small forest in the mysterious village, there was a stone room with a stone table inside. Linley and Reynolds had been drinking here all night. It was roughly 3 AM or 4 AM by now. At daybreak, Linley was going to leave.

"In another two or three hours, Bebe and I will both leave. Fourth Bro, when you are free, you can go back to the imperial capital for a while. Your parents most likely have been missing you very much." Linley instructed Reynolds, and then winked at Monica who was seated next to him. Laughing, he said, "Alright, Fourth Bro, you should go get some rest. You haven't slept all night."

Monica and Reynolds were sitting side by side.

"Third Bro, thank you so much for everything." Reynolds said gratefully.

Whether it was allowing him and Monica to be together, or allowing him to have the special permission of leaving the village once every year, it was all due to Linley. Reynolds understood...given his own abilities, Desri and the others wouldn't have cared about him at all.

Linley's lips quirked up in a smile, and he laughingly berated him, "Fourth Bro, why do you stand on courtesy with me?"

"Uh?"

Linley's face suddenly changed. Haeru was now within a thousand kilometers of him, and Haeru's voice instantly rang out in Linley's mind. "Master, things have gone badly. The Saints of the Radiant Church have attacked, and Barker and his brothers have already been captured."

This news came as a huge shock to Linley.

"Reynolds." Linley's face suddenly became grim. "I'm sorry. I have something to take care of. I need to leave immediately."

"What happened?" Reynolds and Monica were both surprised.

Linley shook his head. "Some private matters. Right. Fourth Bro, you don't need to worry about it." Linley squeeze out a smile, then clubbed Reynolds on the chest. "Alright, I'm off." With a flicker, Linley disappeared, transforming into a blur. Arriving at Desri's residence, he said in a clear voice, "Mr. Desri!"

In the area around the mountain residence, there were a number of stone rooms. Hayward was currently with Foreman inside one of them.

"Linley, what's wrong?" Hayward, who had just been in the middle of training, stopped and walked out of the stone room. For Linley to have rushed here at such high speed meant that something must have happened.

A few moments later...

Desri and the others walked out from the residence.

Linley looked at Desri, Hayward, and the others, then immediately said apologetically, "Mr. Desri, everyone...something came up, and I need to leave." Linley had an apologetic look on his face.

"Did something happen? Do you need my assistance?" Desri asked.

"No need." Linley shook his head.

Linley knew that Desri and his group had been training in seclusion for a long time now. No doubt, they had no interest in fighting over power or authority. Desri asking him if he needed help was nothing more than him just being courteous. If he truly asked for Desri to go help him deal with the Radiant Church, that might actually make Desri feel resentful towards him.

More importantly...

Over this recent period of time, Linley had come to understand that in the past, Desri had been a member of the Radiant Church. Naturally, he had already left the Radiant Church by now. It wasn't just Desri; even Higginson had previously been a member of the Radiant Church.

"Everyone, farewell."

After bowing, Linley instantly utilized the Windshadow spell and flew into the sky. Bebe, who had been sleeping nearby in the grass, instantly transformed into a black shadow as well and flew into the air. A man and his magical beast flew away, just like that. Desri and the others watched them fly out of the mysterious village, out of the mountain, and then continue north at high speed.

It was still late at night.

"Boss, what happened? What's the rush?" Bebe asked while flying alongside Linley.

"The Radiant Church is playing for keeps." Linley's eyes narrowed, emitting a razor-sharp light.

Bebe instantly grew excited. "Oh? The Radiant Church really dares to go head on against us? Wonderful! I've been bored to death lately. Now, I can have some good fun." Bebe's eyes had a hint of bloodlust in them. "It's been a long time since I've had a nice good slaughterfest."

Linley's eyes contained a killing intent as well. "I've waited for this day for a long time!"

Linley felt utter hatred from the depths of his heart towards the Radiant Church. Whether it was his father, his mother, or Grandpa Doehring...all of his loved ones had departed for reasons related to the Radiant Church. This superficially honorable but secretly vicious organization was one which Linley had desired to destroy long ago.

Linley and Bebe flew at very high speed.

Soon, they saw a black blur erupt from the ground below and join them, flying next to Linley.

"Master." Haeru said respectfully.

Bebe immediately called out, "Haeru, what's the situation? Quick, speak up."

While flying, Haeru said, "Barker and Boone were staying in the prefectural city of Moat, but today, seven Four-Winged Angels of the Radiant Church and a human Saint came attacking out of nowhere."

"Seven Four-Winged Angels?" Bebe's eyes lit up. "Whoah-ho! Awesome!"

"The Four-Winged Angels weren't so bad, but that human Saint was absolutely terrifying. In the blink of an eye, he kicked the already-transformed Barker and Boone and injured them so badly they couldn't move. I didn't dare to fight against him at all. My only choice was to flee. When I fled into the ground, he emitted a wave of black fire that blasted a hole several hundred meters deep. I nearly lost my life. That human Saint is too powerful. I feel he is far more powerful than that Haydson." Haeru, when discussing Osenno, still felt a hint of fear even now.

Linley pondered this in his mind.

"According to what the War God said, the 'Holy Emperor' of the Radiant Church should be a level lower than the likes of Fain and Desri, but stronger than Haydson. The person who came today...it sounds like he is on par with the Holy Emperor."

Black flame, and power on par with the Holy Emperor...

"Could it be the person who is on par with the Holy Emperor in both power and status...that ruthless, diabolical...Praetor Osenno of the Ecclesiastical Tribunal?" Linley secretly wondered.

Linley didn't believe that the Holy Emperor himself would attack, but it was very possible that Osenno would.

"Bebe, this opponent should be more powerful than Haydson. You need to be careful as well." Linley reminded. "This time...we can't be overconfident in the slightest. When we reach the Sherry Duchy, I'll cast the Windshadow spell on both of you."

As a spell of the ninth rank, despite only being a supportive spell, the Windshadow spell still consumed a great deal of mageforce. Fortunately, Linley possessed the Coiling Dragon ring, and by casting spells through the Coiling Dragon ring, he only needed to expend a sixth of the normal spiritual energy and mageforce.

"Windshadow?" Bebe rolled his eyes. "Could it be that he's faster than me?"

"We can't be too cocky." Linley shook his head.

Bebe nodded. Linley said towards Haeru, "Haeru, let me and Bebe handle that human Saint. As for you...go deal with those Four-Winged Angels. When we first arrive, we'll help you kill a few Four-Winged Angels as well."

"Yes, Master." Haeru replied.

Immediately, the man and his two magical beast flew north at high speed. At around five in the morning, as the sky was just barely beginning to lighten, Linley, Bebe, and Haeru arrived within the borders of the Sherry Duchy. Upon reaching the Sherry Duchy, Linley immediately Dragonformed while also casting the Windshadow spell on Bebe and Haeru.

"Boss, I feel as though your current level of speed has increased quite a bit." Bebe could sense the extra speed provided by the Windshadow spell, but at the same time, he stared in puzzlement at Linley.

"I had some insights while training on the Elemental Laws of the Wind. Naturally, my speed went up a level as well." Linley laughed as he spoke. Linley had made breakthroughs in both the 'Fast' and the 'Slow' aspects of the wind, allowing him to be even more graceful and even faster.

Given that he was a Dragonblood Warrior to begin with, and had the Windshadow spell supporting him, Linley's speed was now a full level higher than when he had dueled with Haydson.

"How rowdy." Linley saw one of the small cities of the Sherry Duchy from afar. The families of that town were all extremely active, with lamps lit everywhere. Not too long ago, on this night, two Angels had descended!

Naturally, these small cities were filled with so much excitement that nobody could fall asleep. All of them were even firmer in their faith towards the Radiant Church now.

Linley saw quite clearly that the flags on the small cities had all changed, returning to the previous flag of the Sherry Duchy.

"As soon as the Angels arrived, the lost territory was all reclaimed."

Linley couldn't be bothered with the small cities. He flew straight towards the prefectural city of the Sherry Duchy. Soon, the man and his two magical beasts arrived in the air above the prefectural city of Sherry. By now, it was day, and the fresh morning air filled the lands.

The Dragonformed Linley, Bebe, and Haeru stood in the breezy air above the prefectural city of Sherry.

"Only six Angels and Barker and his brothers. No other Saints present." Linley's spiritual energy quickly scanned the entire area below.

"Just six?" Bebe seemed rather dissatisfied.

By now, those six Four-Winged Angels had sensed Linley's spiritual energy. They flew up into the sky at the same time, surrounded by that dazzling holy aura. It was as though six suns had suddenly risen into the skies. At the same time, lightning danced within Linley's eyes, and he barked coldly, "Kill all six of the Angels!"

"Yes, Boss (Master)." Bebe and Haeru replied simultaneously as they transformed into two flashes of black light, charging towards those six Four-Winged Angels.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 14, Downfall

The citizens of the prefectural city of Sherry knew that there were Angels within the governor's mansion, so many people were continuously watching the mansion. Seeing those six Four-Winged Angels fly out into the air, they instantly began to shout jubilantly...which in turn attracted the attention of even more citizens.

Six Four-Winged Angels. Creatures whom these commoners had tremendous faith in.

"What are those three black shadows? How dare they fight against Angels?" Many people also noticed that the six Four-Winged Angels were currently engaged in a wild battle against three black shadows. In the blink of an eye, the citizens once more shouted in joy...

Because those three shadows had already been completely surrounded by the six Four-Winged Angels.

"Their movements are very orderly and almost perfectly choreographed in sync." Linley laughed calmly as he stared at his surroundings. Just then, Linley, Bebe, and Haeru had charged forward to fight them, but unexpectedly, the Angels had instantly scattered in multiple directions, setting up the Angel Battle Formation in the blink of an eye, surrounding Linley, Bebe, and Haeru within it.

The six Four-Winged Angels had turned into six points of this heavenly cage.

"Growl..." Bebe sent out a claw swipe against one of the Four-Winged Angels, but that pure white light only shuddered and didn't break.

Linley secretly sighed in amazement. This Angel Battle Formation truly was formidable. These were nothing more than six middle-stage Four-Winged Angels, but the Angel Battle Formation they created couldn't be broken by even Bebe, who dared to fight Haydson's 'Worldbreaker' attack head on.

"This magical beast is very formidable. Be careful." One of the Four-Winged Angels immediately shouted.

At the same time, a brilliant light began to emanate forth from the Four-Winged Angels, blasting forth towards the skies. When it reached a certain height...that eye-piercing brilliance suddenly exploded, temporarily blinding the countless citizens of the prefectural city of Sherry.

Immediately, the citizens began rubbing their eyes, trying their best to stare upwards at the battle.

"Informing Osenno?" Linley said to the six surrounding angels.

"Hrmph. Linley. This time, you will definitely die." One of the Angels said with certainty. "Soon, the Lord Praetor shall come, and you won't have the chance to flee."

"So it really is Osenno." Linley's gaze turned cold. "You think you can defeat the Lord Praetor?" The six Four-Winged Angels were very cold and arrogant. They knew exactly how terrifyingly powerful Osenno was.

The faces of the six Four-Winged Angels turned cold, while at the same time, a thick, powerful blast of holy light was transferred to one of the Four-Winged Angels. Linley knew that this was one of the powerful attacks of this formation. Shaking his head, Linley let out a cold chuckle.

"Whoosh!"

Linley suddenly appeared in front of one of the Four-Winged Angels, and that Four-Winged Angel's body immediately began to glow with divine light. "How laughable." That Four-Winged Angel was very confident. According to their reports, Linley's power was only on par with Haydson. It wasn't greater than that of the magical beast named Bebe.

If even Bebe couldn't break the Angel Battle Formation, how could Linley?

A hint of satirizing amusement appeared in Linley's eyes. If he wasn't confident, how could he have let himself be 'trapped' within this Angel Battle Formation?

"Bang!" The adamantine heavy sword struck against the protective light.

A terrifyingly powerful surge of vibrational force transferred directly into the Four-Winged Angel's body. Those vibrations actually caused the internal organs of the Four-Winged Angel to instantly rupture and turn into a pile of soft mud. Even Haydson would have been badly injured after taking this blow, to say nothing of the Angel.

The face of that previously very confident Angel instantly turned ashen pale, while fresh blood spurted forth from his nose, ears, and mouth. In an instant, his eyes turned dim, and then like a pile of soft mud, he fell down from the skies, smashing into the ground like a ruptured sandbag and kicking up a cloud of dust.

Profound Truths of the Earth – 150 Layered Waves!

This was Linley's limit!

"Last time, it was six Angels also. And this time, once again..." Linley laughed coldly. "The Angel Battle Formation is useless against me. But unfortunately, those six Angels who died last time didn't have the chance to tell you."

The power of this 150 Layered Waves attack was far stronger than when he had previously competed against Haydson. Even someone as defensively powerful as Haydson probably wouldn't be able to take two of these hits head on.

"How is this possible?" The other five Four-Winged Angels were still in a state of shock. They hadn't felt much of an impact against their holy power, but their comrade had died. And at this time, Bebe and Haeru instantly transformed into streaks of black lightning...

"Shkreeeee!" An ear-piercing, heaven-shattering screech.

"Slash." A Four-Winged Angel wanted to dodge, but Bebe, after having his already-terrifying speed enhanced by the Windshadow spell, was simply too fast. The Angel simply couldn't fight against him at all. Those sharp claws tore directly into the Angel's chest and ripped out his heart.

Bebe, with just three claws, sent three Four-Winged Angels falling from the skies, their blood covering the ground.

"Bang!" Haeru killed one of the Four-Winged Angels as well.

"Whooosh..." Linley's body seemed to have turned into the wind itself, as he flickered everywhere. Sometimes, his adamantine heavy sword moved fast, while sometimes, it moved slowly...in front of the adamantine heavy sword, a spatial edge actually appeared, chopping down at the head of one of the Four-Winged Angels. The Four-Winged Angel, terrified, tried to dodge, but it was chopped into two halves.

Profound Truths of the Wind – Tempos of the Wind.

"Using the adamantine heavy sword with the Profound Truths of the Wind is indeed somewhat weaker." Linley chuckled calmly as he looked down at the corpse on the ground.

The Profound Truths of the Earth and the Profound Truths of the Wind could be used with any weapon, even fists. Only, the level of effectiveness would vary. If the adamantine heavy sword were used to display the Tempos of the Wind attack, it would only be roughly half as powerful as the Bloodviolet sword. The power was roughly the same as using a knife-hand chop.

Although all of this took a while to describe...

In truth, when Linley used the Profound Truths of the Earth to kill one of the Four-Winged Angels, it happened in the blink of an eye. And then, the other five Four-Winged Angels were killed by Linley, Bebe, and Haeru. Six Angel corpses lay scattered on the ground.

"How...how is this..."

"Imp...impossible..."

The countless citizens of the prefectural city of Sherry all stared. The Angels whom they venerated in their hearts above all other creatures. The 'Messengers of the Lord'! But the six Four-Winged Angels had died in the blink of an eye by those three shadows.

Linley's body was covered with a roiling layer of azurish-black battle-qi, and he floated high in the air.

The citizens of the prefectural city of Sherry stared up at this fiend.

"You actually believe in the Radiant Sovereign? What a joke!" Linley's voice seemed to shatter the heavens like thunder. "The teachings of the Radiant Church are nothing more than a type of deception. In this world, don't entrust anything to a 'god'. Rely on yourself. If you are strong, you can even kill an Angel as easily as you can raise your hand."

The citizens of the prefectural city of Sherry were somewhat baffled.

The Messengers of the Lord. Those six Four-Winged Angels had been killed, just like that. According to the teachings of the Radiant Church, nothing could block the glory of the Lord, and in the face of the Messengers whom the Lord sent, anything blocking them would be turned to ash. But today...the ones which were turned to ash were the Angels!

"Who is this person?" Many people in the prefectural city of Sherry were quietly whispering this question to each other.

"Remember. My name...is Linley!"

Linley's voice echoed nonstop in the prefectural city of Sherry, and then Linley, Bebe, and Haeru flew into the governor's mansion. The citizens of the prefectural city of Sherry remained in a stunned state.

"Linley...it's actually Linley..."

In the Yulan continent, there was only one expert named Linley. It was the grandmaster sculptor, the genius magus, the Dragonblood Warrior... Linley Baruch!

Ever since he knew that he would have to fight head on against the Radiant Church, Linley had decided to no longer conceal his identity. The reputation of a peak-stage Saint was extremely alluring, and so Linley immediately proclaimed his identity. Most likely, some of the other Duchies would no longer dare to resist and might even immediately surrender to him.

"Boom!"

Osenno was flying at high speed towards the prefectural city of Sherry. "I didn't expect that Linley would head to the prefectural city of Sherry. I thought he had fled." Osenno had badly injured Barker and Boone, then sent people to lock them up with Gates and the other two in the prefectural city of Sherry, then headed towards Blackdirt City in the night.

But in the area around Blackdirt City, Osenno couldn't find a single Saint-level expert.

"Linley ran away!" This was Osenno's first reaction.

He believed that the Blackcloud Panther had mentally contacted Linley, and Linley had been so terrified that he immediately fled. Osenno was quite disappointed. He had no choice but to return to the prefectural city of Moat. But unexpectedly, just as the sky was beginning to brighten, a dazzling burst of light could be seen from the direction of the prefectural city of Sherry.

It was a signal!

The signal of Linley's appearance!

"Although Linley is powerful, when those six Four-Winged Angels join forces and set up the Angel Battle Formation, even if they cannot kill Linley, they should be able to stay alive." Osenno said to himself. The reason he had arranged for six Four-Winged Angels to be there was so that they could set up the Angel Battle Formation.

After all, they were six Four-Winged Angels! To the Radiant Church, they were still extremely valuable.

When Lyndin and the other five had died, the Radiant Church hadn't minded, because Lyndin and the others were only of the ninth rank, after all. Only when going all out could they have the power of a Saint. The Radiant Church had quite a few of those low-level Angels. But these six Four-Winged Angels were another matter altogether.

To find bodies capable of holding the power of Four-Winged Angels was fairly difficult.

Those bodies had to be of the seventh rank in physical power alone. Only those bodies could allow Four-Winged Angels to descend into them and for their full power to be put on display. Bodies of the seventh rank... the Radiant Church only acquired a few despite thousands of years of searching.

"I've arrived." Osenno saw the distant prefectural city of Sherry and instantly flew towards the governor's mansion.

Osenno's spiritual energy encapsulated the entire prefectural city of Sherry like a tempest, but his face quickly changed. In the blink of an eye, he arrived in the air above the governor's mansion. He clearly saw that on the main walkway in front of the governor's mansion...

Six corpses!

"All six of the Four-Winged Angels died?" Osenno's heart contracted tightly. Even when the King of the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, Dylin, had led his Saint-level magical beasts to attack the city of Fenlai, the Radiant Church hadn't lost many Saint-level experts. But today, in the blink of an eye, they had lost six Four-Winged Angels.

Osenno's dark eyes flashed with cold light, and the temperature around him dropped precipitously. The blood on the corpses of those six Four-Winged Angels actually began to turn to ice.

"Linley, get out!"

Osenno's cold voice shook the heavens. Those citizens of the prefectural city of Sherry, who had just been agitated by Linley, now found to their shock that yet another figure with dark golden eyes was standing in the air above the governor's mansion.

"A challenge to Linley?" Many people felt their hearts tremble.

They had simply been over-stimulated too much today. First, Angels had descended, and then, the Angels had been killed by Linley's forces. But now, yet another Saint had come to challenge Linley...in their entire lives, they had never seen such a constant stream of exciting battles.

"Linley, are you only capable of hiding inside the governor's mansion? Do you think I am unable to find you?" Osenno's voice contained a hint of extreme rage.

In the past, he wanted to kill Linley because Linley was a threat. But now...Linley had killed six Four-Winged Angels. When had the Radiant Church ever suffered such a loss? If Linley was a Deity-level expert, then the Church would only be able to swallow their anger. But Linley's power was inferior to Osenno's!

"Hide?" A cold voice rang out from the city governor's mansion.

"Osenno, you think too highly of yourself." Regular, stable footsteps could be heard. Linley, dressed in a long, deep blue robe, casually walked to the courtyard with Bebe and Haeru by his side. Those Barker brothers were behind Linley as well. They formed a straight line.

Linley stared upwards at the mid-air Osenno. Osenno stared downwards at Linley as well. Their two gazes met, and as they did, it seemed as though the space between them began to shudder and rumble.

Within several hundred meters around Osenno, the temperature had reached to an extremely low level.

Extreme cold. Deathly silence.

In this area, it was as though Osenno was in total, complete control.

"Whoosh!" Suddenly, a wind arose in this area. The origin of the wind was Linley. Linley's deep blue robe and his long hair fluttered in the wild wind, which twisted upwards towards Osenno. But Osenno was like a boulder upon which the waves broke themselves. He didn't move at all.

"You killed six Four-Winged Angels of my Church. Today, I must kill you, and also let your soul forever be tormented by the flames of hell." Osenno's voice seemed to be as cold as a dagger, piercing into everyone's ears.

Linley stared up at Osenno. His lips curved into a smile. "If you are so tough, then come on over."

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 15, The Fierce Battle Against Osenno

Black draconic scales. Fierce, sharp spikes. They all quickly emerged, covering Linley's entire body as he Dragonformed. The blue robe that had been covering Linley's body was torn to shreds by the ferocious battle-qi, and pieces of it fluttered around Linley.

"Go!" Linley's dark golden eyes stared at Osenno.

Instantly, those countless pieces of blue cloth suddenly shot towards Osenno like arrows. As they did, Bebe, who had been directly behind Linley, suddenly disappeared, crossing those hundred meters...

In just the blink of an eye.

The half-meter long Bebe suddenly appeared in front of Osenno. "Shkreeee!" The ear-piercing screech tore through the skies, while at the same time, Bebe's sharp claws transformed into a fierce storm which tore down towards Osenno.

"Crackle."

Osenno's body immediately exploded with a black flame which emanated from within his body. The black fire surrounded his fist, which clashed directly against Bebe's sharp claws. "Bang!" "Bang!" Eardrum-rupturing collision sounds could be heard repeatedly.

"Swish!" Osenno quickly retreated a hundred meters in an instant.

Bebe stared angrily at Osenno. "Osenno, if you are so tough, don't run." Just as Osenno opened his mouth and was about to speak, a tempest suddenly appeared in front of him, while at the same time, a scale-covered draconic claw slashed through the air, chopping towards him like a sharp blade.

Osenno once more dodged backwards.

Only now did Linley reveal himself fully. Standing in mid-air, the azurish-black energy surrounding him, he said, "Osenno, why do you keep on retreating? Didn't you say that you were going to kill me?" Linley's voice was very low. His eyes flashing like cold daggers, he was a heart-shaking sight.

"Boss, those black flames Osenno uses are very powerful. But they shouldn't be able to break your Pulseguard Defense." Bebe's voice rang out in Linley's mind.

"I know. Osenno hasn't used his best techniques yet." Linley was very careful.

With a flip of his hand, Osenno retrieved a pitch-black, narrow and long sword. Osenno stared coldly at Linley and Bebe, the man and his magical beast. "Just now, I wanted to see how strong you were. Indeed...you are worthy of me drawing my blade."

Linley and Bebe on one side. Osenno on the other. Staring at each other.

The citizens of the prefectural city of Sherry stared with bated breath at this battle, the likes of which Sherry had never seen since its founding.

"Let's go." Linley's voice rang out in Bebe's mind, and the two of them almost simultaneously charged towards Osenno. The adamantite heavy sword in Linley's hand radiated with azurish light, chopping down agilely at Osenno.

Seeing Bebe and Linley charge towards him, Osenno instantly came to a judgment: "This magical beast called Bebe is even faster than me. This Linley is a hair faster than me as well. Our intelligence was wrong?"

Linley's body seemed to drift forward gently as though it was very slow, but also as though it was very fast. It was extremely bizarre.

The deeper his insights into the Elemental Laws of the Wind had become, the faster Linley had become as well.

Bebe was the first to arrive in front of Osenno. Osenno just stood there in mid-air, not moving at all, allowing Bebe to claw at him. But the black katana in Osenno's hands suddenly flashed, then chopped down against Bebe's claws.

"Clang!"

A metallic ringing sound. Osenno's body was sent flying back nearly a hundred meters, but Bebe stood there, not moving at all.

"Bebe." Linley had a bad feeling.

“Boss, be careful. His katana attacks contain a spiritual attack.” Bebe warned him. “Just then, my head went dizzy for a moment.”

Linley grew nervous. Spiritual attack?

However, from what Linley could tell, this Osenno was a Warrior Saint. Most likely, his spiritual energy wasn't too powerful. This was much like Olivier, who despite being capable of spiritual attacks, only had the spiritual energy of a magus of the eighth rank. Thus, his spiritual attack wasn't too dangerous to people with powerful souls.

“My spiritual energy has reached the ninth rank. I should be able to take it.” Not hesitating at all, Linley once more struck out with his adamantine heavy sword, while Bebe, shaking his head a few times, let out another screech and charged towards Osenno.

Osenno's body flickered as he actually moved forward to face Linley.

“Whoosh.” The adamantine heavy sword flowed gracefully through the air, slashing down at Osenno in an instant. Osenno's black katana seemed to pierce through space itself, coming at an incomparably monstrous speed as it chopped against Linley's adamantine heavy sword.

The adamantine heavy sword and the black katana clashed...

Linley's body was sent flying backwards, and he shook his head in pain.

"Rumble..." A bizarre, terrifying vibration had passed through the black katana and attacked Osenno. It had pierced straight through Osenno's protective layer of infernal black flames and directly attacked Osenno's internal organs. Those terrifying, powerful vibrations caused all of Osenno's organs to shudder.

"Urgh." Osenno spat out a mouthful of blood.

Osenno stared at Linley in disbelief. He didn't expect that he would have suffered a serious injury in just his first exchange of blows with Linley.

"If this happens another time, I probably won't be able to take it. This Linley's attack is too bizarre and too terrifying. My defenses are useless." Osenno now realized how terrifying Linley was. "I didn't expect that I would have to use my ultimate technique to deal with Linley."

Only now did Linley's head feel a bit better.

"What a terrifying spiritual attack." Linley's heart shook. "It didn't just attack, it also possessed an illusionary, mesmerizing power."

"Die!" Bebe charged fiercely at Osenno, the tips of his sharp fangs biting down at Osenno, but Bebe actually passed straight through Osenno. 'Osenno' was still in his original position.

"Two of them."

Linley stared in astonishment. At this moment, there were two

'Osenno's' standing in mid-air. And they definitely weren't illusions. Both were real!

"Doppelgangers?" Linley couldn't believe it.

The two Osenno's suddenly moved, transforming into four Osenno's. This was totally different from Olivier's technique, which relied on high speed movement to create illusions. All of these four Osenno's were real. Linley's spiritual energy could detect all four of these Osenno's and sense their auras.

"This...what in the world is this?" Linley couldn't dare believe it.

The four Osenno's stood in mid-air, staring coldly at Linley. The four Osenno's each said one phrase at a time. "Linley, you really do have some skill. You forced me to use this technique. Just then, you saw that when you attack me, you will find that my body is illusory, but when I attack you, you will find...that my body is real. In other words, I can attack you, but you can't attack me. Your death is...inevitable."

The four Osenno's all flew towards Linley at high speed.

"Die!" Linley flew at high speed towards one of them, but suddenly, Linley utilized his adamantite heavy sword to chop at a different one.

Profound Truths of the Earth – 150 Layered Waves.

However, it was as though he had hit nothing but air. Linley's adamantite heavy sword passed straight through this 'Osenno', not having harmed him at all. But then, this 'Osenno' suddenly chopped towards Linley, and Linley quickly used his adamantine heavy sword to block.

"Bang!"

Linley was knocked flying back, and his head felt dizzy yet again.

"How is this possible? How can someone possibly have such a freakish ability?" Linley didn't dare to believe it. Even when dealing with Fain or Desri, Linley hadn't had such a hopeless feeling. He couldn't attack his opponent, but the opponent could easily attack him? What the hell was this?

"Osenno, don't believe your own lies."

Bebe's voice rang out. Linley turned to look at Bebe. Bebe's little eyes were staring at Osenno. "Others are unable to attack you? If four people simultaneously attacked your four bodies, tell me...would they be able to attack you?" Bebe seemed to be quite familiar with this technique.

All four Osenno's were wielding that black katana.

"It seems you understand this technique?" Osenno laughed coldly.

"Of course. Don't forget. I am a darkness-element magical beast." Bebe's body suddenly flickered, and then split into two as well. The two Bebe's stood there in mid-air. Osenno was stunned as well, and Linley was also awestruck.

The Barker brothers were watching all this from below.

"What the hell?" Hazer looked at Gates.

Gates shook his head, lost. "This battle isn't one in which the likes of us can get involved in. Let's just watch."

Linley flew towards the two Bebe's, while Bebe said to Linley, "Boss, there is a relatively basic darkness-style attack known as the 'Stealthwalk Technique'. Once the Stealthwalk Technique reaches an extremely high level, it can be transformed into the Shadowshape Technique. The Shadowshape Technique causes one's body to merge with the shadows themselves. However...there is a level even beyond the Shadowshape technique which is known as...the Shadowshape Doppelganger Technique. This is something which only Saints can train in."

"However, Osenno's Shadowshape Doppelganger Technique is more powerful than mine!" Bebe said.

"So this is known as the 'Shadowshape Doppelganger Technique'?" Osenno frowned.

"You didn't know?" Bebe looked at Osenno.

Osenno was silent. In truth, while Osenno had been training in the Elemental Laws of Darkness, he slowly managed to develop this 'Doppelganger Technique'. As for its name, he had casually decided to simply call it the 'Doppelganger Technique'.

Shadowshape Doppelganger Technique.

The basic underpinning of the Shadowshape Doppelganger Technique was to create a shadow from another shadow, and then allow the real body to change position at any time from amongst the shadow-bodies.

Just then, when Linley had attacked one of the doppelgangers, Osenno had switched places with one of his other shadows, and then when he attacked Linley, he had switched back.

This technique was very powerful, but in the face of the Godrealm technique of Deities, it was still useless.

"Bebe, when did you learn this technique?" Linley asked mentally.

"Darkness-elemental magical beasts are born knowing some darkness-style spells and special attacks. Only upon reaching the Saint-level was I capable of utilizing this Shadowshape Doppelganger Technique. Unfortunately, I'm not as good at it as Osenno." Bebe said resignedly. Magical beasts were born with some special, magical skills. The more powerful the beast, the more powerful the magic.

Linley secretly sighed as well.

"And so what if you know it? You will still die!" The four Osenno's moved at the same time. The target...Linley! The four Osenno's attacked together, and Linley quickly flew back...one against four, how could he fight them? He could block one, but the real body would then be in one of the other three.

If he fought head on, he would definitely lose!

"Shkreee!" As Linley retreated, the two Bebes screeched fiercely as they charged forward.

The two Bebes were freakishly fast. The two Bebes engaged in a wild battle against those four Osenno's, but since Osenno could choose between those four shadow doppelgangers, he could dodge much more easily than Bebe.

"Bang!" The two Bebes flew back.

"Bebe, quick, come over to me. Listen to my order." Linley was currently standing in one of the streets of the prefectural city of Sherry. Standing on the ground, his head was upraised as he stared at Osenno in mid-air, quietly awaiting Osenno to come over.

Bebe was somewhat puzzled, but he still flew over towards Linley at high speed.

"Boss, what do you want to do?" Bebe asked suspiciously.

But when Bebe heard Linley's mental response, his eyes instantly lit up, and he once more scurried atop Linley's shoulders. Linley and Bebe just stood there on the ground, staring up at the four Osenno's, not afraid at all.

"Hrm? What trick do you have up your sleeves?"

Seeing how confident Linley was, Osenno was rather suspicious. But when he scanned the area with his spiritual energy, he found that Linley and Bebe didn't have any backup at all, nor were there any apparent traps. In addition, for someone like him, an expert who trained in the Shadowshape Doppelganger Technique, how could he be afraid of a trap?

"Hrmph." Osenno sneered coldly. No longer hesitating, the four Osenno's simultaneously charged down towards Linley!

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 16, Baruch

Linley wielded the adamantine heavy sword in one hand, and Bloodviolet in the other. He stood there in the middle of the street, and Bebe was on his shoulders, not moving. The man and the beast stared as Osenno charged over, but when Osenno reached within ten meters of Linley, he suddenly paused.

There was a plot here!

Osenno stared at Linley, who seemed brimming with confidence. He grew a bit nervous.

"What sort of nasty trick does this punk have up his sleeve?"

"What, are you afraid?" Linley, his two swords in his hands, stared at Osenno. "If you are afraid, then just roll the fk out of my city. It's fine. I won't chase you."

Linley's words made Osenno so angry, he could vomit blood.

"Chase me?" Osenno secretly cursed Linley in his mind. It was clear and apparent that he, Osenno, had the advantage. But Osenno was born cautious. He truly began to wonder if Linley did indeed have some sort of nasty trick up his sleeve. But seeing how confident Linley was looking, Osenno suddenly thought, "Wait, can it be that Linley is just pretending to be like this to try and scare me away?"

Osenno carefully inspected Linley. "If Linley really had some sort of ultimate attack, he would've used it long ago. Why feign weakness? In addition, if one has an ace up one's sleeve, one wouldn't be so blatantly self-confident. Being this confident is as good as telling someone you have a technique lying in wait."

Osenno laughed coldly in his mind. "What is true is false, what is false is true. This punk is trying to play me. I refuse to believe he is able to wound me."

"Why are you hesitating, Lord Praetor? What happened to your usual awe-inspiring presence and decisiveness?" Linley mocked coldly.

Osenno stared at Linley's dark golden eyes. He sneered, "Punk, I still..." Halfway through his words, the four Osenno's simultaneously attacked Linley with terrifying speed. But right at that moment...

"Rumble..."

Within a hundred meters, the land quickly became covered with a layer of earthen light, and Linley and Bebe's body became covered with it as well.

Instacast – Supergravity Field, rank seven!

A Supergravity Field of the seventh rank would cause the strength of the gravity affecting one's body to instantly quadruple. This gravity wouldn't just impact the muscles; it would also affect the organs and the blood vessels. Even powerful opponents would be slowed when suddenly affected by this.

To a Saint, if you threw a boulder weighing ten thousand tons at him, he would easily shatter it with the flick of his finger, not harmed by it at all.

But the Supergravity Field was different.

For example, the quadruple gravity wasn't something as simple as just adding a few hundred tons of weight. It could cause the flow of blood in a person's body to slow and make breathing more difficult...weak people, under a quadruple gravity field, might even die in an instant. Even Saints would have their physical functions impacted.

"Kill!"

After instacasting the Supergravity Field as well as the nullifying magic on himself and Bebe, Linley charged forward towards Osenno with Bebe by his side in a simultaneous attack. One Linley and two Bebes arrived at the four slower Osenno's.

The adamantine heavy sword once more chopped down, while at the same time, Bloodviolet chopped through the air as well.

"Bang!" Osenno was knocked flying, and all four of the Osenno's merged into one. A hint of blood could be seen dribbling from his mouth. He had dodged Linley's attack, but he wasn't able to dodge the two Bebe's attacks.

Linley didn't hesitate at all, charging directly towards Osenno, but Osenno instantly transformed into four people as well, while at the same time, his body began to emit a large amount of black flame. The ground around him was burnt to nothing, and Linley's Supergravity Field was wiped out as well.

"I didn't expect you to have this sort of technique." Osenno stared angrily at Linley. "However, this technique of yours is useless."

"Useless?"

Linley stood on the ground confidently.

The four Osenno's once more charged forward at high speed, while at virtually the same instant, Linley's surrounding area once more appeared to be covered by that earthen light – Supergravity Field of the seventh rank!

The four Osenno's paused slightly, and then, with a 'Bam!', the black flame began to burn, once more wiping away the Supergravity Field. Osenno's eyes were filled with fury. "It is useless, Linley. My body is totally capable of getting accustomed to this level of Supergravity."

"Bebe, let's do it."

Linley and Bebe both charged towards Osenno, while at the same time, Linley once more cast the Supergravity Field. Only this time...it was a Supergravity Field of the sixth rank!

Osenno had already been prepared for quadruple gravity, but when he suddenly became affected by double gravity instead, his movements couldn't help but falter a bit.

"Bang!"

Profound Truths of the Wind – Tempos of the Wind. Bloodviolet seemed both 'Fast' and 'Slow', and that spatial edge appeared on the edge of Bloodviolet. The edge of the sword chopped down directly towards Osenno, and was actually able to cut through his infernal flames, sending him flying back once again.

A wound had appeared on Osenno's chest.

Osenno had dodged Linley's adamantine heavy sword and the attacks of the two Bebes, but he had been injured by Bloodviolet.

"How can it be so powerful?" The look on Osenno's face changed.

Just then, he had nowhere to run. Because all four of his shadows were attacking Linley, Linley naturally attacked two while the other two were easily attacked by the two Bebes, who was faster than them. No matter what, he would end up taking a hit.

He didn't dare take the adamantine heavy sword head-on, and he didn't want to take a hit from Bebe's claws either.

In the end, he had chosen Bloodviolet.

However...that Bloodviolet sword seemed to be even more formidable than Bebe's claws by a whisker.

"According to our intelligence, the attacks of that violet sword aren't very powerful though." Osenno couldn't believe it.

Indeed, when he dueled with Haydson, Linley's 'Tempos of the Wind' was not too powerful. But now that he had broken through to a higher level of comprehension towards both the 'Fast' and the 'Slow' aspects of the Elemental Laws of the Wind, then combined them in his 'Tempos of the Wind', the power had been raised by far more than just one level; it was raised by at least two levels, or even more.

"Osenno, didn't you want to kill me?" Linley seemed very arrogant.

Attack!

The demonic-looking Linley and the enlarged Bebe charged wildly towards Osenno. As they did, Linley instacast the Supergravity Field again, filling the area once more with that earthen glow.

"Bang!" In the blink of an eye, Osenno's infernal black flames once more wiped away the Supergravity Field.

But for Linley, this sort of low-level technique was something he could use a hundred or two hundred times without exhausting his mageforce. And more importantly, Linley had the Coiling Dragon ring and only needed to use a sixth of the mageforce to begin with.

Supergravity Field of the seventh and sixth ranks. Linley was using them on a rotational basis.

"Not good." The constantly changing gravitational power caused even Osenno's attacks to become less coordinated.

The Supergravity Field of the sixth rank increased gravity by two times. There was a big difference between it and the Supergravity Field of the seventh rank...these two spells with huge differences in power caused Osenno to constantly be unable to get accustomed to the local gravity. It was as though an ordinary person, when walking, would suddenly feel gravity disappear, and then he would have to walk while weightless. He wouldn't be used to it.

Same line of reasoning.

Sometimes, Supergravity Fields weren't necessarily the stronger the better.

With no way to dodge, Osenno was struck viciously again by Bebe's two claws and was sent flying. With a crunching sound, Osenno's rib had broken...this time, Osenno didn't fly into the air, nor did he dare to go closer to the ground. After having learned this lesson, Osenno didn't dare to get near the ground again as he remained in mid-air.

"I didn't know that different Supergravity Fields could be used at this level." Osenno said.

He had been badly hurt.

After being struck by Linley's adamantine heavy sword and the Bloodviolet sword, he had then been struck twice by Bebe's claws now.

"Bebe, let's charge. He's badly injured and not in great shape."

Osenno didn't hesitate at all. His four shadows instantly flew at high speed towards the south, paying no attention to Bebe who was behind him. Perhaps Bebe would be able to catch him, but he could change between the four shadows nonstop. He had no reason to fear Bebe.

But if Linley were to charge over....

Perhaps Osenno would be the one to injure Linley instead. After all, in mid-air, Linley would not be able to utilize the Supergravity Field. His speed would then be inferior to Osenno's. Wasn't he just asking for trouble if he did that?

.....

At this time, Barker and his brothers came running out of the city governor's mansion.

"That Osenno escaped." Ankh sighed.

"His Lordship and Bebe beat Osenno so bad he ran away." Gates was excited. The brothers carefully inspected the streets in front of the city governor's manor, and instantly, they were speechless. The bodies of the six Angels had already been frozen into blocks of ice.

Near Linley's position, the ground itself was a full meter lower.

In addition, another meter of earth had been burned by Osenno's infernal flames and destroyed by it. Linley was currently at the end of that depressed patch of land.

"Lord."

"Lord."

Barker and his brothers ran excitedly towards Linley, while Linley transformed back into his human form. With a flip of his hand, he withdrew a robe from his interspatial ring. Bebe landed on Linley's shoulders, and Linley let out a long sigh.

"Lord, we won." Barker said excitedly. The other four stared at Linley with excitement as well

A hint of laughter was on Linley's face. He stared towards the south. "We didn't truly win. What a pity. The attack power of each strike of my 'Rippling Wind' isn't powerful enough. If it was more powerful...I would be able to hold off Osenno by myself."

The Rippling Wind could instantly create ten million swords.

It was the absolute peak of speed, but each attack wasn't too powerful.

If Linley were to use this attack against the four Osenos, he wouldn't be able to harm them at all. Instead, he would be the one to be wounded.

"Tempos of the Wind and Rippling Wind are two different concepts. There is no way to merge them. The only thing I can do is infuse the 'Rippling Wind' with the insights I have gained into the 'Fast' aspect of the Elemental Laws of the Wind. By then, the power of the 'Rippling Wind' would increase by another level."

Linley still remembered Higginson's sword technique.

It had been so fast that it had distorted and folded space itself, and it carried a terrifying penetrative power.

If Linley was able to reach that level and use his Rippling Wind technique, then the equivalent of countless 'Illusionary Void Swords' would attack his opponents. Although the attack of each sword would still be a bit lower, it would be incredibly powerful nonetheless."

"Me too." Bebe muttered. "If my Shadowshape Doppelganger Technique could reach the level of splitting into four shadows, I would be able to fight him by myself."

Barker and his brothers stared at Linley and Bebe, the man and his magical beast. They were speechless.

"Lord, you aren't even thirty yet. Yet you are so powerful." Barker finally said loudly.

Linley and Bebe glanced at each other, then laughed.

Good point. One couldn't be too greedy.

Linley was on the fast track to understanding both the Elemental Laws of the Wind and the Elemental Laws of the Earth. He wasn't like some people who were bottlenecked or stuck. He should be overjoyed.

"Barker, immediately send people to reclaim the Sherry Duchy. Here in the prefectural city of Sherry, most likely those soldiers won't face a single bit of resistance." Linley was quite confident. After that massive battle with the Angels and the battle just now, who in the prefectural city of Sherry would dare to resist?

"Yes, Lord."

"Per our plans, since we are fighting head on against the Radiant Church, then we will make our affiliations public. Ten days from now, we will openly proclaim to the world that we have founded a Duchy, and the name of the Duchy....is the Baruch Duchy!" Linley announced.

Barker, Ankh, Hazer, Boone, and Gates all said with respectful excitement, "Yes, Lord."

.....

The battle at the prefectural city of Sherry had determined that for now, the Radiant Church was not capable of suppressing Linley. Linley had slaughtered six Four-Winged Angels, and then forced Praetor Osenno to flee. This victory, once announced by Zassler and the others, quickly spread across the entire area.

The morale of Linley's side was like a rainbow.

The Sherry Duchy no longer had any hint of resistance. It once more returned to Linley's control.

Blackdirt City. Within a garden.

"Lord Linley, the western Anne Duchy immediately surrendered to us after we said a few threatening words to them. The Duchies to the east are a bit more stubborn." Zassler laughed. Linley's reputation was extremely useful.

A simple threat had caused an entire Duchy to capitulate.

How could they not surrender though? What, would they fight against a Saint? After all, the most powerful combatants in a Duchy were usually of the eighth rank only, and a very few Duchies had warriors of the ninth rank. As for Saints...how could a Saint stay in a Duchy?

"Zassler." Linley instructed. "In three days, I will found the Baruch Duchy. How about this...send some people to one of the branches of the Dawson Conglomerate. Tell them immediately send a message to Delia in the Yulan Empire. Tell her about the founding of the Baruch Duchy."

Zassler assented.

Linley stood there in the garden, staring towards the south. "Delia. I've completed my side of our agreement. So...when will you come?"

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 17, Homecoming

Osenno's study.

"Lord Praetor?" The golden-haired middle-aged man called out softly. Ever since Osenno had been defeated and sent fleeing by Linley and Bebe, Osenno had become even grimmer and colder. His subordinates didn't even dare to get close to him.

Osenno raised his head, staring at him with those cold eyes.

The middle-aged man squeezed out a smile. "Lord Praetor, how should we deal with Linley?"

"Linley?" Osenno let out a cold sneer.

The middle-aged man's heart quailed. He could sense the temperature in the room drop. Osenno said coldly, "Immediately send someone to deliver the news to the Holy Isle and inform the Holy Emperor. If Linley is not eradicated...then in the future, if the Radiant Church is eliminated, it would most likely have been done by Linley!"

Osenno was truly frightened by Linley's rate of improvement.

Last year, in August, when Linley dueled with Haydson, Linley's strength was just on par with Haydson. But now, in the following April, just eight months later, in eight short months...Linley's power had increased by an astonishing amount.

In the past, that violet sword was incapable of harming Haydson. But now, it harmed him. Osenno!

"He...he's not yet thirty!" Osenno's heart was filled with worry.

"Yes, Lord Praetor. I will immediately send someone conveying your words to the Holy Emperor." The middle-aged man hurriedly said.

Osenno sighed in his heart. "If...if in the past, the people we had killed and sacrificed to the Radiant Sovereign didn't include Linley's mother, then perhaps...perhaps Linley would have become the central pillar for the Radiant Church, capable of helping us overthrow the Cult of Shadows."

But it was too late.

Linley and the Radiant Church were now openly opposed.

.....

The Anarchic Lands. Currently, there were three primary factions. One was the Radiant Church. One was the Cult of Shadows. And the final one was Linley's. Because of the battle at the prefectural city of Sherry Duchy, the Radiant Church was now quite silent and kept its head low.

The Cult of Shadows wouldn't interfere. They wanted to see Linley and the Radiant Church continue to fight against each other. Naturally, they too, would just keep their head low and watch. As long as Linley didn't antagonize them, they definitely wouldn't antagonize Linley.

In this sort of situation.

Linley's side was the most vigorous and expanded the most, and was now preparing the festivities for the founding of the Baruch Duchy. Currently, the Baruch Duchy had three prefectural cities, nineteen small cities, and led over twenty million citizens. This sort of large faction was actually about the size of half of a regular Kingdom.

This was an extremely large Duchy.

And Linley? His legend was once more sung about in songs by the countless masses...his list of myths now included destroying six Four-Winged Angels and defeating the Praetor of the Ecclesiastical Court of the Radiant Church. Linley's fame continued to grow, causing many warriors and magi who worshipped Linley to head to the Baruch Duchy in a wave.

They wanted to fight for Linley!

.....

The imperial capital of the Yulan Empire.

Master Longhaus' residence. Delia was in the courtyard as always, soaking up the rays of the sun and enjoying the fresh air while studying Master Longhaus' notes on magic.

"Miss Delia, the Dawson Conglomerate's representative is here." A guard ran over and reported to her.

Delia's eyes instantly lit up.

"I, Big Yellow, am willing to bet that it is a letter from Linley." The Worldbear next to Delia chortled, while Delia glanced at him sideways. She said, "Quick, let him come in."

"Yes." The guard said respectfully.

A short while later, a beaming, middle-aged man entered the courtyard. Seeing Delia, he immediately withdrew a letter from his robes. "Miss Delia, here is your letter. It comes from the Anarchic Lands." This wasn't his first time delivering a letter to Delia.

As soon as Delia saw this person, she knew that the letter came from Linley.

"Miss Delia, I bid you farewell." The middle-aged man was extremely polite.

Delia laughed in excitement. After the man left, she immediately opened the letter and began to read. The nearby Worldbear craned his big head over to sneak a peek as well. Delia couldn't help but turn and glance at him. "Big Yellow, I'm getting angry."

The Worldbear immediately let out a couple of deep, awkward chuckles.

Delia laughed as well, then continued to read. But as she did, Delia's body began to tremble.

"Wonderful. Wonderful." Delia was so excited that she immediately rose to her feet. She could feel her heart racing and her entire body was beginning to be covered in sweat.

"Delia, why are you so happy?" The Worldbear asked puzzledly. Even the nearby Wildthunder Stormhawk stared towards Delia in confusion. Just at this moment, a middle-aged man appeared in the courtyard. It was the wind-style Grand Magus Saint, Master Longhaus.

"Teacher." Delia said respectfully.

Master Longhaus laughed as he looked at Delia. "Hatton tells me that you received a letter from Linley. It seems there is some joyous occasion?"

Delia stared at the Worldbear, who began to laugh delightedly.

"Teacher." Delia was still quite excited. "It is Linley's letter. He tells me... that the Baruch Duchy is going to be founded this year, April 16th. That's today. Linley is finally founding his Duchy. This is...this is wonderful."

Master Longhaus knew everything there was to know about Delia's affairs.

"As happy as that? Is it because you're about to be able to see Linley?" Master Longhaus teased.

Delia's face had turned red. Was it because she was embarrassed, or was it because she was too excited?

"Alright, Teacher. I can't talk right now. I have to go home first and tell my parents about this. According to what they previously said, now that Linley has erected his Duchy, they shouldn't be against me and Linley being together anymore." Delia said.

Master Longhaus nodded.

"Fine. Go."

Delia repeatedly nodded. She immediately rode the Wildthunder Stormhawk 'Parry' and left her teacher's residence. Watching Delia fly away, Master Longhaus shook his head and sighed. "Delia's father won't be so easily swayed, I'm afraid."

.....

Within the Leon clan's residence.

Dylla Leon and his wife were both quite puzzled. Why had Delia pulled them here to this quiet room to discuss something?

"Father, mother, there's something I need to tell you." Delia took a deep breath.

Delia's mother started to laugh. "What sort of joyous event is it, that has you all worked up like this?"

Delia began to laugh as well. "Right. Father, mother, didn't you say that if Linley and I were together, it would lower his Imperial Majesty's faith in our clan? But now, Linley has erected his own Duchy in the Anarchic Lands."

"Erected a Duchy?" Dylla Leon and his wife looked at each other.

"Delia, my dearest daughter, I hope you aren't lying to your father. After all, I've never heard of this." Dylla Leon said.

Delia secretly laughed.

Linley's Baruch Duchy was being founded today. It would take at least ten days or half a month for the news to spread several thousand kilometers away to the Yulan Empire. It would be a strange thing if her father did know about it.

"It is true. I just have some advance information. Linley's Duchy is named the Baruch Duchy." Delia said with certainty.

Dylla Leon and his wife exchanged glances.

"It's true. Father, mother, can it be that you don't believe me?" Delia frowned.

Dylla Leon chuckled while shaking his head. "I believe you. But why must you marry Linley? Although Linley has founded a Duchy...can being the wife of a Grand Duke compare to being the Empress of an Empire?"

Delia's smile froze.

"Father, what are you trying to say?" Delia's face was more serious than it had ever been.

Dylla Leon stretched his hand out, placing it on Delia's shoulder. Sighing, he said, "Delia, it is true that Linley is a Saint and is powerful. But Emperor Rande is the Emperor of our Yulan Empire. If you marry him, that would be wonderful as well. And...it would be very beneficial for our entire clan."

Delia looked at her father, her eyes filled with disbelief.

"Father. Are you still that father who loved me?" Delia's voice had turned hoarse.

Dylla Leon was startled, and his wife was taken aback as well.

"Father. I love Linley, love him very much. But this isn't because he is a Saint. When I met him at the Ernst Institute, I fell in love with him. Was he a Saint back then? Why do you have this sort of idea in your mind about the type of person your daughter is?"

"Also. Ever since returning from the Institute, in the past eight or nine years, why is it that I refused to accept the advances of any young man in the imperial capital? Why? Can it be that you don't understand?"

Delia truly didn't know what her parents were thinking.

"Ever since I came back from the O'Brien Empire and told you about Linley, what I wanted was your blessings. But...instead you tried to stop me." Delia's eyes were glimmering with tears. "I admit, your words are very logical. Back then, if I was to be with Linley, it would indeed lower Emperor Rande's trust in our family."

"Father. Mother. I love you. I love my family. That's why I didn't want to put you in a difficult position. Although I wanted to go meet Linley a long time ago, for your sake, I've been enduring. I've stayed in the imperial capital, because I cherish my family and cherish you."

"But you try to convince me to marry this person and that person. What is it? Can it be that Linley is inferior to those nobles? Why are you always like this?" In the past seven or eight months, Delia had felt extremely depressed.

"I finally waited for this moment. Linley's erected his own Duchy. I today came to you filled with excitement. I hoped...I hoped I would receive my parents' blessings. But..." As Delia spoke, her tears began to come out. "You disappoint me. You truly disappoint me."

Dylla Leon and his wife were silent as they faced their daughter.

"Father. Mother. I love you both very much, and cherish you both very much." Delia took a deep breath. "If you still love and cherish me, I hope that on the day of my wedding with Linley, I'll receive your blessings. But if you no longer care about this daughter of yours...then forget it."

After finishing her words, Delia turned and left.

Dylla Leon and his wife were both somewhat stunned.

Only after their daughter had gone did they come to their senses.

"Delia!" They called out, but Delia was already seated on the back of the Wildthunder Stormhawk and had flown away.

....

Delia was mounted on the Wildthunder Stormhawk and looking down at the rapidly shrinking imperial city. She had bid her teacher farewell, and then left the imperial capital. The wind blew against Delia's golden hair, and also blew her tears dry.

Right now, Delia's aching heart only longed to see Linley. Only in Linley's embrace would she find comfort.

The Wildthunder Stormhawk let out a few hawk cries as well, as though comforting Delia.

Slowly...the Wildthunder Stormhawk and Delia disappeared into the northern horizon.

.....

Blackdirt City. At the base of Mt. Blackraven.

"Linley is currently training at Mt. Blackraven." Zassler pointed towards a mountain while laughing. Seeing the beautiful scenery of Mt. Blackraven, Delia managed to clamp down on her excitement. "Mr. Zassler, is Linley always there?"

Zassler laughed. "Almost his entire time is spent there training. Bebe is there as well."

As they spoke, they headed up the mountain.

Following that creek, Zassler led Delia to the side of a lake. Delia instantly saw Linley. Right now Linley was dressed in a long, sky blue robe. His long hair was unbound, and he was wielding a violet longsword on the surface of the lake, testing out his sword attacks.

Wherever the violet sword passed, space itself seemed to ripple, making Linley seem indistinct and hazy.

Clearly, Linley was currently immersed in training.

"Ah! Delia. You came. BOSS!!!!!!!" Bebe, who had been playing around in the water, immediately saw Delia, and he immediately let out an excited cry.

Linley's movements came to a halt, and he turned around.

Seeing Delia, Linley seemed to have suffered a blow to his spirit. His entire body froze...but then, he flew over at high speed. As for Delia? A smile had made its way onto her face, and her eyes had instantly turned moist.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 18, Delia, Marry Me

Linley landed on the side of the lake. Filled with excitement, he stared at Delia, whose eyes were filled with unshed tears. He had the sudden urge to immediately take Delia into his arms. But although he had this urge, he still just stood there in front of Delia, his mouth open, but not knowing what to say.

He had ten million words in his heart, but he couldn't get a single word out.

"Linley, you haven't changed." Delia laughed. She was the one to reach out to him, with her left hand.

Seeing that white, dainty hand, Linley was stunned for a moment. Delia glanced at him out of the corner of her eyes. "Hey, Dumbo, are you going to make me use the Soaring Technique, just so that I can get to the center of the lake?" There was a distance of several dozen meters from here to the center of the lake. If Delia didn't use the Soaring Technique, she wouldn't be able to get there.

Seeing the way Delia was looking at him, and her ivory white arm, Linley immediately reached out with his own right hand and took hers in his own.

"So, uh, Linley. I'll be leaving now." Zassler finally spoke.

Linley and Delia's faces both suddenly flushed pink. Linley turned to glance at Zassler, speechless. Zassler winked towards Linley, then turned and ran away at high speed.

"That's just how Zassler is." Holding hands with Delia, Linley tapped his foot, summoning a wind which swirled around both of them. Gently... Linley and Delia floated to the center of the lake. They stepped onto the edges of the stone platform, then sat down next to each other.

The two continued to hold hands. Feeling the soft warmth of Delia's hand in his own, Linley felt as though he was currently standing in the clouds. Delia's face was slowly turning pink as well. The atmosphere between the two instantly grew more intimate.

Suddenly...

Linley saw that in the water, not too far away, Bebe had popped his little head out and was using his sneaky little eyes to peek at Linley and Delia.

"Oh! Boss! You guys keep doin' what you were doing. Bebe's gonna just go somewhere else to play for a bit. You guys keep on at it!" Bebe, knowing that he had been discovered, immediately sank down into the water. However, Linley and Delia didn't notice that far away, on top of a tree near the peak of Mt. Blackraven, a Wildthunder Stormhawk was stealthily peeping at them.

"Hehe." Delia immediately began to giggle. "Linley, Bebe really is adorable."

Linley nodded and laughed as well. "That's just how Bebe is. Oh, right. Delia, why is it that you waited so long to come here after you left the O'Brien Empire? Did something happen?" Linley still remembered how, when Delia had left, she said she would soon come find him.

Delia nodded, but she fell silent.

The events which had occurred in the imperial capital had truly hurt Delia. She was very disappointed in her parents. Linley's words...instantly made Delia feel downcast.

"What happened? Talk to me." Linley squeezed Delia's hand.

"You really want to know?" Delia stared at Linley, her face close to his.

Linley nodded.

"If you listen to the story, then you'll have to marry me." Delia suddenly said.

"Wha...." This sneak attack truly caught Linley offguard. Delia truly was the only woman Linley was currently interested in, but for him to immediately marry her...Linley, in his heart, was still rather nervous. His first relationship's failure had caused Linley to be rather defensive in these matters.

He still didn't dare to totally invest himself in any relationship with a woman.

He was afraid he would be utterly heartbroken once again.

"I'm just joking with you." Delia began to laugh, then let out a flirtatious sniff. "Sheesh, Linley. Can't you just pretend or just tease me for a moment?" Delia's words made Linley feel less awkward.

Delia took a deep breath. "I can tell you the story now, if you still want to hear it?"

Linley immediately nodded.

Delia settled her thoughts. Holding Linley's hand, staring at the peaceful lake waters, she slowly said, "Linley. When I received my clan's letter saying that I had to go back, I found, upon my return...my grandmother was perfectly fine. There was nothing wrong with her at all."

Linley frowned.

When Delia had written him a letter saying that his grandmother was in excellent shape, Linley had already sensed that there was something that lay hidden.

"Afterwards, I found out that my parents found out from Teacher that the reason I stayed behind in the O'Brien Empire was to be together with you. Thus, my parents used this scheme to get me to come back and to part from you." Delia laughed bitterly as she looked at Linley. "This scheme was a very clumsy one, but I still fell for it."

Linley was puzzled. "Your parents..."

"It was for the clan."

Delia sighed. "Before you had started your own side in the Anarchic Lands, virtually everyone in the six major forces believed you were a member of the O'Brien Empire. The O'Brien Empire and the Yulan Empire have always viewed each other as principal rivals."

Linley understood. The most powerful forces in the Yulan continent were these two Empires.

"In my parents' opinion, if I were to marry you, then that would be tantamount to colluding and allying with an important Saint of the enemy. The Emperor of the Yulan Empire would have less trust in our clan. Thus, my father and mother didn't want me to be with you."

Delia glanced at Linley. "Naturally though, this was just my parents' opinion. They didn't know...that we've never discussed marriage."

Linley could only rub his nose.

Delia said falteringly, "The imperial capital is filled with people pursuing me, and my parents kept on trying to persuade me to marry someone else. I wasn't willing! I really hate that! Linley...I really wanted to leave right away and come looking for you, but I didn't want to break the relationship between me and my parents. I really love my parents!"

"I understand," Linley said consolingly.

Of course he understood how Delia was feeling. This was because he, too, was a man who cherished his relatives and his parents.

"I really wanted to come find you, but I didn't want to lose my parents either." Delia chewed on her lips, lowering her voice. Linley could clearly sense that Delia was squeezing his hands more tightly now.

Linley rested Delia's hand on his leg.

Delia glanced at Linley, a hint of a smile appearing on her face. "I was waiting...waiting for you to found your Duchy. But my parents said that I should marry the Emperor of the Yulan Empire and become the Empress."

"Hrm?" Linley felt a hint of anger in his heart.

Delia's parents really were going too far.

"I wasn't willing. That time, I got angry with my parents." Delia shook her head helplessly. "I've always been a filial, obedient child in front of my parents. But that time, I really lost my temper. I told my father clearly that I would rather die than marry those people."

Linley felt a grateful feeling in his heart. For a woman to be willing to do this was truly moving.

"I was waiting...and finally, the letter I waited for arrived. You had founded the Baruch Duchy." Delia looked at Linley. "At the time, I was extremely excited. My parents would no longer block us from being together." Linley felt extremely happy as well.

As Linley saw it, Delia should have come happily after having a good talk with her parents.

"But when I told this news to my parents...they once again advised me to marry that Emperor." A bitter look was on Delia's face.

"How can they be like that?" Linley's face changed.

For them to act like this...Linley could totally understand how Delia must have felt.

"Right, how can they be like that?" Delia's eyes had a sad look in them. "I had went to them happily, but I didn't expect that this would be the result. Actually...I should've predicted it. My father is the leader of our clan. Of course he has to think about things from the clan's standpoint. In his eyes, the Emperor is very talented and has a high status. Marrying him would also be of benefit to the clan. Marrying his Imperial Majesty truly would have been absolutely perfect. However...he had never considered things from my standpoint."

Delia took a deep breath. "So. I didn't spend any more time on vain hopes."

Delia looked at Linley. "I just came. I didn't bother with discussing it with my parents. I left the imperial capital and came to find you."

Seeing the look in Delia's eyes, Linley, in his heart, had a powerful surge of emotion...he felt moved, saddened, and fulfilled!

"Delia..." Linley wanted to say something, but the words stuck in his throat and wouldn't come out.

The girl in front of him...

For his sake, she had waited ten years by herself.

For his sake, she could ignore the allure of becoming the Empress.

For him, she even left her beloved parents and journeyed all alone to this place to find him.

.....

Linley suddenly felt a strong sense of humiliation. He suddenly felt that he really despised himself, really hated himself!

"She's a girl. She's sacrificed so much for you, but from start to finish, you've never even...you've never even given her as much as a promise." Linley was berating himself mentally.

"What am I waiting for? What do I have to hesitate about?"

He looked into Delia's eyes. Delia had always made her feelings very clear, and had always been waiting for him...but he had always been hesitating. But today, Linley knew that he could no longer hesitate. He had kept on hesitating for so long...

What he had gained was already extremely precious.

"She gave up everything and waited ten years. And she is still waiting... without any promises from me." Linley saw the tears in the corner of Delia's eyes. His heart twitched hard, and he howled at himself, "Do you want to have Delia wait forever? Until the day her heart dies and she leaves by herself?"

Linley felt a stabbing pain in his heart.

"Crunch."

That layer of ice surrounding Linley's heart finally shattered and melted away.

Linley didn't want to wait any longer.

He didn't want to make himself wait!

And he didn't want to make Delia wait either!

"Linley, what's wrong?" Seeing the look on Linley's face, she couldn't help but feel concerned.

Linley suddenly stretched out his hand and held Delia by her shoulders. Delia could feel her heart begin to thump. Linley stared at Delia, took a deep breath, then said seriously, "Delia...marry me!"

Delia's eyes turned as round as the moon as she stared at Linley in shock.

Upon these words coming out, in Linley's consciousness, a bolt of lightning flashed past his mind, illuminating every single scene he had shared with Delia. From the very first time they had met at the Ernst Institute and he had seen that adorable girl. Their time spent together as children. That farewell kiss that night at Wushan Township...

One scene after another.

He felt a warm feeling in his heart.

With a wife like this, what more did he need?

"Linley." Delia cleared her throat, staring at Linley with wide eyes. "What did you just say? Can you say it again? Please?" Delia's voice was quavering.

Linley stared at Delia. One word at a time, he said to her, "Delia. Marry me! Marry me, Linley. Be with me forever, and let us never be separated. Alright?" Linley's voice was trembling as well. Right now, Linley felt very nervous.

Right. Nervous.

Delia looked into Linley's eyes. Suddenly, her tears came rolling out.

How long had it been?

How long had she waited for this day?

Even when they were children and their affection was rather indistinct, she had hoped for this day to come one day. Hoped that Linley would become her knight in shining armor.

One day after another, she had waited...

That year, she had only been a little girl in her teens. But now, she was already a twenty eight year old lady. Over ten years had passed. Whether it was when Linley and Alice had been together, or when Linley had gone missing for ten years, or when her parents had stopped them from being together, she hadn't given up.

The only thing she was afraid of was...

Linley abandoning her!

She had always been waiting. She hadn't even dare to force Linley to give her any promises!

"Are you willing?" Seeing Delia's entire face covered with tears, Linley felt deeply touched and moved.

Delia suddenly threw herself into Linley's embrace, wrapping her arms around him tightly and saying repeatedly into Linley's ear, "I'm willing, I'm willing, I'm willing..."

Linley could feel the warmth from Delia's body. In his heart, he felt more content than he ever had in the past.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 19, Kingdom

Linley clearly could sense how, when he held Alice in his arms when they were young, he had felt happy. But now, when he held Delia in his arms, Linley felt, in the deepest part of his heart, a sort of contentment, a spiritual fulfillment!

This...was true happiness!

The ice covering Linley's heart had totally melted.

Delia's face was covered with smiles. She had never been so happy before.

"Linley. I'm so happy." Delia gently whispered into Linley's arms.

"Me too." Linley gently stroked Delia's fragrant hair and touched her sleek shoulders.

Delia obediently rested herself against Linley's chest. She murmured, "Linley, I feel as though I'm in a dream...tell me, is this real?" That tough woman who could make even an Emperor feel nervous was now as obedient as a child.

"It's real, it's real." Linley could feel the warmth from Delia's body, and a warm, protective feeling arose in his heart.

Delia suddenly raised her head and looked at Linley haltingly. "Linley, if one day, Alice comes to find you, what would you do?" Delia was truly afraid, afraid that Linley would be taken away by someone else.

"Alice?"

Linley's hand paused, but then he continued to stroke Delia's hair. He said comfortingly, "The affection between the two of us ended long ago. I feel neither love nor hatred to her. After all, she can choose who she likes..." Linley stroked Delia's face and chuckled, "Delia, don't overthink things. I'll never leave you. If I abandon you...then I would truly be an utter fool."

"Delia, am I an utter fool?" Linley looked at Delia.

Delia laughed, laughed very happily.

"You are a genius. You are the greatest genius in the Yulan continent." Delia harrumped 'coldly'.

Seeing Delia's full, bewitching lips, Linley suddenly had an urge... without hesitating at all, Linley lowered his head and planted a kiss on Delia's lips. Delia seemed to have been struck by lightning, and her body quivered. But then, she sank into the kiss....

This was the second kiss Linley and Delia had shared.

The first was that night at Wushan township.

After that, they were a long time apart.

Delia didn't say anything, just staying in Linley's embrace. A hint of shyness was still on her face. To Linley, Delia was so utterly mesmerizing right now.

"Ah, hell, I can't watch any more, I can't watch any more, I can't watch any more!!!!" Suddenly, Bebe burst out from underneath the lake water.

Linley and Delia both were startled.

Bebe, in mid-air, laughed openly and honestly. "Uh, sorry, Boss! Sorry, Boss' Wife! You two can continue."

"Boss' Wife?" Linley and Delia couldn't help but begin to laugh.

"So you were peeking the entire time, Bebe. Tell me, how should I punish you?" Linley guessed by now that Bebe was peeking the entire time, and actually, Bebe had utilized the Shadowshape technique and been hiding within the shadows of the lake.

Linley hadn't been searching for Bebe with his spiritual energy, so naturally he hadn't noticed.

"Punish me?" Bebe pondered for a moment. "Oh. Punish me with a lady mouse, one as powerful as me. I'm very lonely right now." Bebe put on a very pitiable look.

Linley and Delia couldn't help but both begin to laugh.

"Unfortunately, I am an extremely, unnaturally gifted mouse that might appear once in a thousand years." Bebe sighed, then tittered. "Boss, Boss' Wife...when are you getting married? I'm getting impatient for you."

"Get married?"

Linley looked at Delia. It was indeed time to discuss this issue.

....

The governor's manor. Blackdirt City.

When Barker and the others saw Linley and Delia holding hands and walk in together in such an intimate manner, all of them were stunned. Zassler was the first to recover and intentionally said in a loud voice, "Lord Linley, what's going on between you and Ms. Delia?"

Because of Linley's status, when they were in front of other people, Zassler addressed Linley as 'Lord' Linley.

"Delia and I are getting married." Linley smiled.

This news had the effect of a forbidden-level magical spell, instead causing everyone present to explode with sound.

"Wow! Getting married?" Gates was the first to shout.

"Whoaaaah! Ms. Delia, you and Lord Linley are getting married? Wonderful!" Rebecca jumped up in excitement as well. The entire hall instantly became a pandemonium of excitement. There was only a single person whose smile was rather forced. Jenne. In recent days, Jenne had immersed herself in managing the affairs of the Duchy.

She hadn't expected to suddenly receive this sort of news.

But of course...Jenne had expected that this day would come, long ago.

There was nothing which Linley kept from Delia, and she knew of the history between Jenne and Linley. Smiling, Delia walked over to Jenne, then took Jenne's hands in her own in an extremely warm manner. "Jenne, when Linley and I are getting married, you come be my bridesmaid, alright?"

Looking at the smile on Delia's face, Jenne nodded.

Delia immediately pulled Jenne into a friendly manner off to one side and began chatting with her.

Linley walked towards Barker, Zassler, and the others. "Delia and I have already come to a decision. We will directly host a wedding ceremony. The day of the wedding will be three months later, on July 2nd." Linley laughed as he looked at Barker. "Barker, I think...in the next three months, it would be good if we can take over the nearby Duchies and found a Kingdom before three months are up. Can you do this?"

Linley wanted his wedding with Delia to be an exciting affair.

But three months, in Linley's opinion, seemed to be rather short.

"Three months? No need." Barker was extremely confident. "One month is enough."

"A month?" Linley was puzzled. "It would be hard to just organize and drill the troops in a month, and we'd have to also reorganize the conquered Duchies. That's all rather troublesome. How can you take them over in a month?"

Gates laughed loudly. "Lord, there's something you aren't aware of. Please take a look." Gates walked to a military map that had been hung up on a wall. "Lord, take a good look at the current disposition of forces in the Anarchic Lands. These twenty-plus Duchies all belong to the Radiant Church, while these all belong to the Cult of Shadows. But these... these are unaligned."

Linley immediately understood.

This power distribution was quite strange.

The Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows both controlled Duchies in the center of the Anarchic Lands as well as in the south. They occupied more than half of the Anarchic Lands. Only the northernmost areas next to the Forest of Darkness were unaligned.

The Anarchic Lands were rectangular in shape. If you were to divide it into four equal quarters, then the northernmost portion was the portion closest to the Forest of Darkness.

Neither the Radiant Church nor the Cult of Shadows wanted that area!

"Lord, our Baruch Duchy is located near the Forest of Darkness." Barker explained.

"Oh. In the past, I never paid attention to this." Linley stared carefully at the military map. "The Cult of Shadows and the Radiant Church have taken over half of the Anarchic Lands. But why is it that they don't want the northernmost area which is located close to the Forest of Darkness?"

The Baruch Duchy, after all, had been set up close to the north.

"Lord Linley." Zassler walked over, laughing. "This is why we say that we can easily unify the area in a short time."

"Oh?" Linley looked at Zassler with a questioning glance. "Is it because it belongs to neither side, which makes it easier to unify?"

Zassler explained, laughing, "That's not what I mean. I mean, aside from our own Duchy, most likely more than half of those seven other Duchies near the Forest of Darkness would be willing to directly surrender to us."

"More than half would surrender to us?" Linley didn't understand. "Can it be that they feel pressured by our power?"

Zassler explained, "Lord Linley. Have you forgotten that every few decades or every decade, there will be a massive wave of magical beasts from the Forest of Darkness? Each wave of magical beasts first attacks the border Duchies closest to the Forest of Darkness, and thus the battles rage on the most in these Duchies as well."

Linley instantly understood.

"Are you saying that these Duchies..."

"Right. These Duchies are the poorest Duchies in the Anarchic Lands and the most pitiable ones as well." Zassler sighed. "The Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows are both uninterested in unifying it, because... resisting the magical monster waves costs too much gold, far more than these Duchies can generate."

Linley now fully understood.

This was a barren wasteland!

Unifying this region meant that one would have to struggle against the countless magical beasts in the Forest of Darkness. Linley could totally imagine how brutal those battles would be...each time, most likely over a million people would die, or even more.

"Linley, of the seven Duchies here, aside from a few who don't want to surrender, the rest all deeply desire to have a strong base of support. And you, Lord...are a Saint and would make an excellent, powerful support."

Zassler laughed. "Not just them. Even the commoners wish for you to lead and unify them. That way, they would be safer."

Barker laughed. "And Lord, even now, there have been at least three Duchies who sent people to come and negotiate the terms of their surrender. Only, because their territories are not immediately adjacent to ours, we need to first take over the Duchies east of us."

Linley nodded. "Since that's the case, then do it as quickly as possible."

Gates slapped his chest and boasted, "Lord, a month from now, a full quarter of the Anarchic Lands will be under your control. Of course...this is the poorest quarter in the Anarchic Lands, but at the same time, it is the most militant and ferocious quarter."

Linley nodded. "Zassler, make the arrangements. Have my wedding invitation letters be sent to these people. I'll send the list of names to you in a while."

"Yes, lord Linley." Zassler acknowledged, and then laughed. "Then are you planning to openly announce the news of your marriage?"

Linley looked towards the side at Delia and Jenne who were happily chatting. Linley had a desire; no matter what, he would definitely have to make Delia happy.

"Publicize it! I want the day of the founding of the Baruch Kingdom to be the day of my grand wedding!" Linley said heroically.

Clearly, this meant that a month from now, they would unify their quarter of the Anarchic Lands under their banner, while three months from now...the Baruch Kingdom would be founded and the wedding would also be held. From a territorial standpoint, controlling a quarter of the Anarchic Lands meant controlling quite a large swathe of territory.

The size of it was significantly larger than the former Kingdom of Fenlai.

In population alone, there was roughly a hundred million citizens.

....

A lonely island in the oceans. The most core area of the Radiant Church – the Holy Isle. It received news from the Anarchic Lands.

On the ninth floor of the Radiant Temple. Heidens was reading this letter.

“When Linley and his magical beast combined forces, they were able to force Osenno to retreat?” Staring at this letter, Heidens felt as though he had been stricken heavily. Osenno’s power was unquestionable. Especially his ‘Doppelganger Technique’, which let him divide into four. It was incredibly terrifying.

Even Haydson probably would have been badly injured and then killed by Osenno.

After all, it was simply too hard to block the ‘Doppelganger technique’.

"Osenno speaks the truth." Heidens' heart tightened. "If this continues, then..."

The Radiant Church didn't fear Linley.

But Linley wasn't alone. He had that mysterious, godlike magical beast, Bebe. He also had five Undying Warriors...and his little brother."

"In the future, when Linley reaches the Saint level in his human form and the five brothers also reach the Saint level in human form, and when Linley's little brother reaches the Saint level in his human form...that means they have seven peak-stage Supreme Warriors. If you add in that magical beast rodent which is no inferior to Supreme Warriors...that means they will have eight!"

Every single peak-stage Supreme Warrior was capable of being described as the most powerful of Saints.

Seven Supreme Warriors and the magical beast Bebe, if they were to attack the Holy Isle in masse...Heidens could totally imagine the scene. The Radiant Church would be in a battle for its very life, and in the end, it would probably perish.

"Unacceptable. Linley must die."

Heidens turned to look at Cardinal Guillermo. He ordered, "Guillermo, go invite Commander Lehman, quickly!"

"General Lehman?" Guillermo was shocked.

In the Radiant Church, the most powerful person was the Holy Emperor, Heidens. The most frighteningly mysterious person was Osenno. The most admirable and most respected person was the spiritual leader of the Ascetics, Lord Fallen Leaf. But the person who caused the most dread...was the legendary Commander of the Zealots: Lehman!

The Zealots all possessed a unique power.

"Why are you hesitating? Quick, go!" Heidens rebuked.

Heidens didn't dare to hesitate any longer. He had to send a man whose power was no lower than that of Osenno's; Commander Lehman. If the two joined forces...then it would be surprising, indeed, if they were still unable to overcome Linley!

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 20, A Procession of Arrivals

One of the prefectural cities in the northern part of the Anarchic Lands. Ankh, Gates, and Boone each wielded their massive long-handled greataxes, standing atop the city walls like wargods. Corpses littered the ground around them, and fresh blood stained the walls and the ground below the walls.

The nearby soldiers were all terrified.

They didn't dare to fight back anymore. All of them put down their weapons.

"Of the seven Duchies, five Duchies have voluntarily surrendered. The previous Duchy was easily taken over. You are the last one." Gates grabbed the leader of the town guards, his furious, ox-like eyes staring into the terrified, quivering leader. "Motherf*cker, why fight back when you don't have the power to? Isn't that the same as just ordering your soldiers to commit suicide? Eh?!"

It was indeed tantamount to suicide.

The two sides were on totally different levels of power. Gates and the other two had killed a huge number of the enemies by themselves.

Hoisted high into the air, the captain of the guards said in terror, "Lord, this has nothing to do with me. It was the orders of the Grand Duke."

"Fifth Brother." Ankh laughed. "Enough. Let's go down. Big Brother and the others are all down below. Most likely, they are already drinking celebratory wine. After having taken over this prefectural city, when we add it to the five which surrendered and the one we just took over, that means we have finished our mission!"

Gates and Boone both began to laugh loudly.

In twenty short days, all of the eight Duchies which bordered the Forest of Darkness had been reformed into a kingdom; the Baruch Kingdom. The Baruch Kingdom had over a hundred million people under its rule and took up a quarter of the Anarchic Lands.

Although the people here were poor, they were very violent and ferocious.

In the richer areas of the Anarchic Lands, the Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows still remained in control. From this point onwards...the Anarchic Lands had been divided into three major spheres of influence.

The number one genius in the history of the Yulan continent, Linley, was going to hold a wedding with Ms. Delia of the Leon clan of the Yulan Empire! The day of this wedding was going to be the same day the Baruch Kingdom was formally established.

Time: Yulan calendar, year 10010, July 21st.

Place: The future capital of the Baruch Kingdom – Baruch City (currently known as Blackdirt city, being rebuilt).

This news quickly swept throughout the Anarchic Lands like a tornado, and at the same time, it was made public to the various powers in the entire Yulan continent. One letter of invitation after another was sent to the various locations of the Yulan continent...countless eyes were focused now on the Anarchic Lands.

The imperial capital of the Yulan Empire. The Leon clan's main hall.

In terms of status, the person with the highest status in the Leon clan wasn't the clan leader, Dylla Leon. It was Dixie Leon!

First of all, Dixie would be the next clan leader. But more importantly... he was the personal disciple of the supporting pillar of the Yulan Empire, the High Priest. The High Priest was one of the most powerful entities in human society. In the hearts of the countless masses, perhaps only the War God could compare to the High Priest.

An astonishingly powerful expert who had wielded the power of the Deities before the Yulan calendar had even started. The vast majority of the people the High Priest accepted as a personal disciple ended up becoming Grand Magus Saints!

The personal disciple of the High Priest, and a future Grand Magus Saint! And a dual-element Grand Magus Saint at that!

Dylla Leon was currently frowning as he handed the letter of invitation to his son, Dixie.

His back was ramrod straight, and his golden hair was long and unbound. He had an aura of icily keeping all comers at arm's length. This was just the way he was. Dixie. After reading the letter, however, a rare smile actually touched his lips. "Linley didn't disappoint my little sister after all."

"Dixie, what do you think we should do?" Dylla Leon asked.

Dixie glanced at his father, then frowned. "What do you mean, what we should do? My little sister has finally gotten the happiness she has been pursuing for over ten years. Of course we need to celebrate."

Dylla Leon and his wife hesitated just a moment.

"Father, Mother, I know what you two were scheming." Dixie said calmly. "You must allow your vision to expand beyond the limits of mortal, worldly power. The true controllers of the destiny of the Yulan continent... are still the likes of the War God, the High Priest, and the various Saints."

Dixie had to admit that his parents were rather short-sighted.

"Dixie, my beloved son, no matter how powerful Linley is, how can he possibly influence the Yulan empire?" Dylla sighed. "After all, the root of our clan lies in the Yulan Empire."

Dixie glanced at his father. "Father, I must tell you something. You underestimate Linley."

"Oh? How so?" Dylla Leon was a bit puzzled.

Dixie said seriously, "Actually, this time before I returned, Master gave me an order."

"Master? Ah!!! The High Priest!" Dylla Leon's eyes instantly turned round. Good heavens. Ordinary people like them might never meet the High Priest in their entire lives. But now, the High Priest had personally issued an order to their son.

They suddenly felt honored and glorious beyond compare.

"The High Priest instructed me and two of my fellow apprentices to go to the Anarchic Lands and be his representatives in congratulating Linley." Dixie said seriously.

Dixie didn't understand it either. Why did someone at the level of the High Priest need to express such friendliness towards Linley? Especially since Dixie knew...the War God and the High Priest were on opposing sides. Linley was on good terms with the War God. Logically speaking, the High Priest should be on bad terms with Linley.

But it seemed...

The High Priest actually wished to express friendliness towards Linley.

"The waters of the Yulan continent are deep indeed." Dixie sighed to himself.

The imperial capital of the Yulan Empire. The Walsh clan.

"Milord, this is the letter of invitation from Master Linley, from the Anarchic Lands." The housekeeper respectfully handed a letter to George. By this point in time, George had already been appointed the successor to the clan leader possession by the Walsh clan.

George accepted the letter.

"Haha...Third Bro, Third Bro. I didn't expect that you'd end up with Delia after all." George began laughing loudly as he read the letter.

"The world plays jokes on us all." George still remembered how, when they had first entered the Ernst Institute, Delia would often go looking for Linley. But when George had seen Alice and Linley start to date, he had thought that Linley and Delia would never work out.

Unexpectedly, in the end, after ten years, the circle was completed.

Linley and Delia had gotten together.

The leaders of all the organizations in the Yulan continent which either had some relationship with Linley or were extremely powerful all received letters of invitation. After all, this wasn't just a wedding ceremony. It was also the founding of a Kingdom. Naturally, they had to invite the leaders of the various organizations.

Ever since Linley had entered the city of Blackdirt, Blackdirt had begun to engage in a construction boom. By now, Blackdirt City, despite being territorially small, was extremely exquisite and lavish. Even the region outside Blackdirt City was beginning to engage in large-scale construction.

Linley had invited many guests. Amongst the first group to arrive in Blackdirt City was Wharton, Nina, Uncle Hillman, and Grandpa Hiri.

In the governor's mansion. A scene of excitement and joy.

"Big brother, Nina and I have decided that from today onwards, we won't be leaving. We'll be staying here at your place." Wharton laughed loudly. "Big brother, you've worked so hard to establish your own realm. How can we live a life of luxury and comfort in the imperial capital? We're embarrassed to do so!"

Linley was secretly overjoyed.

He didn't actually have much free time to manage the Kingdom. Most of his time was spent training.

"Wharton, I've been waiting a long time to hear you say these words." Linley laughed.

Linley suddenly stared towards Nina's stomach, then looked at Wharton with suspicion. "Wharton, it seems Nina's stomach has gotten a bit bigger. Can it be that..."

Nina and Wharton exchanged glances, then began to laugh. The nearby Uncle Hillman laughed as well. "Linley, you truly are a Saint-level expert. Your perception is truly amazing. Right. Princess Nina is already pregnant. Linley, you've fallen a bit behind in this area. In the future, you and Delia need to work hard."

Linley and Delia didn't know whether to laugh or to cry.

"Sister Nina, have you decided on a name for the child yet?" Delia asked.

Nina nodded. "I have. Whether it is a boy or a girl, we are going to name it Cena [Xi'ne]."

"Cena." Linley looked at his little brother Wharton. "Does this have some sort of special meaning?" Wharton immediately began to laugh loudly, exchanging a knowing glance with Nina. Then he said secretively towards Linley, "This is a secret between me and Nina. I can't tell you."

Linley clapped his hands to his head. "What? You are keeping secrets from me, your big brother?"

Everyone in the hall laughed joyously. Halfway through the event, Linley secretly pulled Wharton into a nearby flower garden, and the two siblings took a private walk.

"Big brother, what is it?" Wharton waited for them to enter the garden before asking.

Linley looked at his little brother. Probingly, he asked, "Wharton, I've always been hoping that you would decide to come here and live with me. Now that you are here, I truly am happy. But...is Nina truly happy about it as well, in her heart? Don't make her do something she doesn't want to do."

Wharton nodded. "Big brother, Nina had a long talk with me. She decided to come with me, and in the future, when she has some free time, she'll occasionally go back for a visit."

"That's the only way, I suppose."

Linley laughed as he looked at Wharton. "Wharton, after the Baruch Kingdom is formally founded and Delia and I are married, I intend to directly coronate you as the King of the Baruch Kingdom." Linley was telling his little brother in advance, so as to mentally prepare him.

Wharton was stunned. "King?"

"I've already named the Kingdom 'Baruch'. Naturally, it must be ruled over by the heirs of the Baruch clan." Linley had made this decision a long time ago.

Wharton didn't decline. "Fine, then. I'm currently only a warrior of the eighth rank. It should be twenty or thirty years before my human form reaches the Saint-level. Right now, there's not much of a point to training to gain a higher level of understanding. When I reach that level, I'll pass the throne down to my son, or perhaps your son, big brother." Linley understood what Wharton was thinking; Wharton would need to spend time training after all.

But training in understanding the Laws was something which required someone to be in harmony with and able to clearly sense nature, and to sense the various movements of the elemental essences. That required an extremely high level of elemental essence affinity. Generally speaking, magi had high levels of elemental essence affinity, but the same was not true for warriors. Their elemental essence affinity was not as high.

The same was true for Wharton. Right now, he virtually couldn't sense nature at all. Thus, it would be extremely hard for him to gain any insights on the Laws.

But upon reaching the Saint-level, things would change.

Upon reaching the Saint-level, one would have a much greater level of ability to sense the surrounding elements. Saints could clearly sense the elements and quickly increase their level of insight! This was the same reason why it was so hard for one to advance from being a warrior of the ninth rank to the Saint level. Only a small number of warriors of the ninth rank had a high elemental essence affinity.

However, Supreme Warriors didn't need any particular level of insight. So long as they could train their battle-qi to a certain level, they would naturally reach the Saint-level.

After spending three days in the city of Blackdirt, Linley and Delia left the city and returned to Mt. Blackraven and began a life of quiet training. As for Bebe, whenever he got bored, Bebe and Haeru would go around the Forest of Darkness, slaughtering magical beasts.

.....

The light blue skies had a dark streak of light and a white streak of light flashing through it at high speed, heading in the direction of Blackdirt City in the Anarchic Lands.

The black streak of light was Osenno.

Today, Osenno was dressed in a long black robe with golden threads interwoven into it. His devilish purple hair flowed freely in the wind. By his side was a powerful middle-aged man dressed in a loose, long white robe. This powerful middle-aged man's body was an astonishing 2.5 meters tall.

A height of 2.5 meters was virtually unheard of in humans.

His long white robes fluttered in the wind, and his short green hair gleamed like steel needles. His face seemed to have been carved from stone, but there was an extremely faint seal located in the center of his forehead. The seal of a white flame. His body emanated an oppressive, heart-shaking aura.

This person was the Commander of the Zealots. Lord Lehman.

The two flew together, side by side, as Osenno constantly explained about Linley and Bebe's combat tactics and abilities to Lehman. "That's everything. Lehman, by now, you should have a good sense of the situation, right? How confident are you?"

Lehman glanced at him, his eyes flashing with light. His deep voice echoed forth from his massive chest, "Osenno, that man and his magical beast are inferior to you in strength, but you were still defeated by them. However, that isn't surprising; your single-target attacks are not that strong. What you mainly rely on is the bizarreness of your Doppelganger Technique. As for me...I can kill both of them by myself."

Osenno understood, as well, that his single-target attacks were relatively weak.

But for Lehman, it was the opposite; his forte was in single-target attacks.

"Blackdirt City is up ahead." Osenno pointed at the city below them. "Next to it is Mt. Blackraven. According to my intelligence, Linley spends virtually all of his time there at Mt. Blackraven. We should head directly to Mt. Blackraven."

Lehman focused his gaze on the below Mt. Blackraven.

Instantly, the two charged down towards Mt. Blackraven.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 21, The Laws of Light

Osenno and Lehman flew at high speed towards Mt. Blackraven, while at the same time, they spread their spiritual energy to encapsulate the entirety of Mt. Blackraven.

“Linley is at Mt. Blackraven. He’s the one wearing blue!” Osenno immediately said.

“Got it.”

Lehman’s eyes were flashing with light, and at the same time, the energy in his body began to be roused. In Lehman’s hands, a three meter long longstaff suddenly appeared. Although it was a ‘longstaff’ to him, to an ordinary person, a better word would be ‘tree branch’. However, given Lehman’s size and 2.5 meter height, his massive hands could fully wrap around the thick ‘longstaff’, which had various mysterious runes carved onto it.

“That rat-type magical beast isn’t there, but there are two other Saints present, along with an ordinary woman. Could that be Delia?” Osenno was rather puzzled.

But for now, there was no need for them to over-think things.

“Boom.” It was as though a bolt of lightning had blasted down. Lehman, staff in hand, charged down at high speed. He ignored all others, focusing on his target: Linley.

Linley and Delia were currently entertaining guests. Desri, and his wife! Desri and his wife had just gone to the Frost Goddess Shrine, and on the way back, they came to visit Linley and to offer him their congratulations. Just as the two couples were chatting happily...

A terrifying surge of power descended from the heavens. The target: Linley!

"Out of the way!" Linley's face changed, and he immediately pushed Delia aside. A surge of wind suddenly surrounded Delia, while Linley himself immediately transformed into the Dragonblood Warrior form. His sky-blue robe was directly shredded into pieces, and the adamantite heavy sword appeared in his hands.

A silver longstaff that carried boundless force with it had already appeared in front of his eyes.

"Whoosh!"

The air itself rippled and folded, as though space itself was being ripped apart. The silver longstaff smashed directly towards Linley, who sensed that he was facing a greater danger than he ever had before. He could sense that he had been totally locked down, with the surrounding space applying pressure on him.

"Linley." Delia, who had been pushed to the side, stared at him with eyes filled with terror.

But just at this moment...

A milk-white, gentle light appeared in front of Linley, appearing like a white silk cloth. That silver longstaff, which seemed to contain enough force to obliterate the entire Mt. Blackraven, smashed against the milk-white light and the white 'silk cloth' formed from energy.

The white silk cloth only caved in slightly, and the longstaff could no longer push any further.

But the longstaff wielding Lehman felt the rebound force, which sent him flying backwards before landing a hundred meters away. Osenno also landed by Lehman's side, staring at Desri in astonishment. He knew that it was this person who had blocked Lehman.

"Who are you?" Osenno spoke.

"Osenno, it's you!" Linley's face became grim. Delia ran over to Linley's side. She was extremely worried.

Right now, Linley and Desri were in the center of the lake, while Lehman and Osenno were on the shore. The two sides stared at each other across the water.

"The Radiant Church's forces?" Desri frowned.

Linley was secretly startled. "Desri used to belong to the Radiant Church. He wouldn't still feel a degree of nostalgia for them, would he?" At the same time, Linley immediately spoke mentally to Bebe, "Bebe, stop messing around in the Forest of Darkness. Come back, quick. The Radiant Church's forces have come knocking."

"Boss, I'll come back at top speed." Bebe immediately replied.

Linley carefully looked at Osenno and Lehman, especially Lehman, whose 2.5 meter tall frame was terrifying to behold and gave Linley a forboding feeling. "Just then, the one who attacked me was the big guy. That big guy is definitely not one bit weaker than Osenno."

"Delia, make sure you protect yourself." Linley whispered to Delia by his side him.

Delia didn't dare to make a sound. She didn't want to distract Linley.

"Who are you?" Osenno stared at Desri. "This is the private affair between Linley and the Radiant Church. I hope you won't interfere. It seems that you, too, are a practitioner of the Elemental Laws of Light... today, if you step aside, it would be considered giving the Radiant Church face. In the future, we will definitely repay it."

The proud and arrogant Lehman didn't say a sound.

The technique that Desri had used just then had let Lehman know exactly how much of a threat this man was.

"My name is...Desri." Desri finally spoke.

"Desri, it's you?" Osenno and Lehman's faces both changed dramatically.

Desri was a legendary figure within the Radiant Church. Long ago, the legendary Holy Emperor Ernst founded the Holy Union. In that era, Desri was the spiritual leader of the Ascetics of the Radiant Church.

His position was equivalent to the status of the current Lord Fallen Leaf.

Osenno and Lehman exchanged glances. They both could sense the terror in each other's heart. They were facing a Saint from the era of the legendary Holy Emperor Ernst. From then to now, one could simply imagine how much more powerful the person had grown.

"Lord Desri, I hope that you will consider the former affection and relationship between our two parties and not get involved in this matter." Osenno said sincerely.

"Hrmph. In your dreams." An ice cold voice rang out from behind. It was the nearby Pennslyn.

Pennslyn gave Linley a 'no need to worry' look. Hearing Pennslyn's words, the formerly nervous Linley felt a sense of gratitude. But Linley still turned to look at Desri...after all, the decision maker here was Desri.

"What are you thinking about?" Pennslyn said angrily as she saw that Desri was hesitating. As far as Pennslyn was concerned, there was nothing to hesitate over.

Delia began to grow nervous as well. She looked at Desri with concern.

"Lord Desri, can it be that you've forgotten the kindness which Lord Ernst showed you in the past?" Osenno hurriedly said. Desri hesitated for a while, but then sighed and said, "I won't allow you to kill Linley. You can leave, now."

Desri did indeed feel some degree of affection for the Radiant Church.

Especially Ernst. In the past, the two had been as close as real brothers.

"Lord Desri!" Osenno said frantically. "This Linley killed six Angels and shows no mercy to our Radiant Church at all. If he is allowed to develop, especially alongside those five Undying Warriors, the threat he will pose to our Church is simply too great. Can it be, Lord Desri, that you are just going to watch as the Church is destroyed by him?"

Desri frowned.

"I told you to leave." Desri's voice turned heavy.

Osenno and Lehman glanced at each other. They had already made a decision.

Lehman stared at Desri and said loudly, "Desri, since you are going to be like this, we don't have any choice either." They now addressed Desri directly by his name. Lehman's body suddenly began to glow with a white fire, and a terrifying surge of power began to emanate from him, turning the grass nearby into nothingness.

The silver longstaff in his hands flashed like a bolt of lightning.

"Zealot?" Desri chuckled calmly.

Osenno's body began to emanate with that black fire, and his body transformed into four Osenno's. "Lehman, I'll deal with this Desri. I'll hand Linley to you." Osenno felt that although he was weaker than Desri, by using his doppelgangers, he should be able to hold down Desri without too much trouble.

"Madame Pennslyn, I entrust Delia to you." Linley whispered.

"Don't worry." Pennslyn immediately pulled Delia away. Delia didn't say anything, just giving Linley a meaningful look. Linley felt his heart swell with the desire to do battle: "No matter what, for Delia's sake, I can't die."

Linley immediately stared coldly at Lehman.

"So what if your attack is powerful? Can you kill me with one blow from your staff?" Linley's body began to be surrounded by that roiling azurish-black energy. "My Pulseguard Defense has already reached 152 layers. With my draconic scales protecting me as well...kill me in one blow? In his dreams!" Linley felt confident in his heart.

His Profound Truths of the Earth was nothing to laugh at. "At this time, I have to use my last, fallback technique." Linley's left hand gripped Bloodviolet. At the critical juncture, he would have to utilize the terrifying baleful aura held within Bloodviolet.

"Boom!" A terrifying sonic boom could be heard as Lehman charged forward.

At the same time, the four Osenos also emitted sonic booms as he charged forward to try and entangle Desri. Because of his sudden acceleration, the nearby wind began to howl, and stones were actually blown loose from Linley's stone house and were knocked far away, while the water of the lake began to rise in waves.

"How laughable!"

A clear sound rang out from Desri's mouth. Desri simply stood there in mid-air, while his entire body began to emanate a dazzling white light. Instantly...Desri transformed into the sun, and lines of white light shot towards all four of the Osenos as well as Lehman.

No matter how fast someone was, they couldn't be faster than light.

The four Osenos and Lehman were all struck instantly by those beams of white light. All four Osenos shuddered, and three of them instantly collapsed, while the last one blazed with that black fire, using it to resist the white light.

"Ah!" Lehman let out a furious howl, and the seal of white fire on his forehead instantly lit up.

"Bang!" Lehman actually smashed straight through Desri's protective barrier with his silver longstaff. Desri was extremely shocked. Before he had the chance to let out a second attack, Linley and Lehman exchanged blows.

After having broken through Desri's first barrier, Lehman saw a pair of cold, dark golden eyes and a dark blue heavy sword. Lehman was startled. "It's Linley!" Not hesitating at all, he swung his longstaff down and smashed it hard against Linley.

Linley didn't hold anything in reserve either, attacking simultaneously with his adamantine heavy sword and his Bloodviolet longsword.

"Die!" Lehman howled with rage, a fierce look on his face. The seal of a white flame on his forehead became even brighter, and the silver longstaff in his hands seemed to have created ripples in space as it smashed down against Linley with terrifying force.

Linley instantly activated the 'baleful aura' hidden within Bloodviolet.

Linley's dark golden eyes suddenly contained a hint of red, and his consciousness immediately became filled with that familiar scene...the boundless sea of blood, with skeletons and corpses of various species littering the place. Corpses of ten meter tall giants covered with scales and two horns on their forehead. White skeletons that had a hint of strange gold tint...

All of the corpses and skeletons had the aura of at least a Saint, and some were even more terrifying.

"Ah!" Lehman suddenly let out a wild howl.

That terrifying baleful force penetrated his consciousness. That baleful aura that belonged to an incomprehensibly powerful expert caused even the likes of Lehman to quail in fear. Even the white flame seal on his forehead shook, and the longstaff in his hands naturally weakened.

“Bang!”

The silver longstaff and the adamantine heavy sword clashed.

Profound Truths of the Earth – 152 Layered Waves!

Linley’s adamantine heavy sword was smashed so hard, it was knocked back towards his own body. When that terrifying force struck his Pulseguard Defense, the energy of the defense immediately sprang up, but a terrifying power which he had never before experienced still was able to break through the defense.

Linley was knocked back flying...

“Linley.” The distant Delia grew frantic.

With a somersault, Linley landed on the edges of the lake. He flashed Delia a smile. “Don’t worry. I’m fine.” As he spoke, Linley forced down the blood that had risen to his throat. Seeing the shattered draconic scales on his chest, Linley couldn’t help but be secretly startled.

If just then, he hadn’t used the Bloodviolet longsword, he probably would’ve been deeply injured and collapsed.

Lehman was still standing in mid-air, a hint of blood leaking from his mouth. His gaze was clear now.

"Bastard." Lehman let out a furious howl, once more smashing down against Linley with his silver longstaff.

"Hrmph."

A cold sneer could be heard, and a translucent ripple that could be seen by the naked eye emanated forth from Desri's body. In the blink of an eye, it struck against Lehman. Lehman's massive body trembled, and then collapsed down from the skies. "Splash!" He sank directly into the lake.

"The two of you, don't force my hand!" Desri's face had turned grim.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 22, The Four Sided Gathering

“Such powerful spiritual energy. He is able to cause injuries from a distance with it. Lehman wasn’t able to resist at all.” Linley was utterly shocked. “No wonder the War God said that Desri and Fain are the five Prime Saints who were at the doorway to becoming a Deity. They only need to take that last step! They are simply too strong.”

Osenno no longer dared to move. His heart, too, was filled with terror.

“Burst.” A human figure charged up through the water. It was Lehman. Lehman, at this point, obediently flew to Osenno’s side. His face was exceedingly pale, and he stared at Desri with a hint of dread in his eyes.

Desri looked at these two men with furrowed brows. “You know that in the past, I was the leader of the Ascetics. You should also know that I am a Grand Magus Saint.”

Osenno and Lehman exchanged glances.

Grand Magus Saints specialized in powerful spiritual energy, especially this sort of expert like Desri, who had trained for millennia. When using his spiritual energy, he was on a far higher level than his good friend Hayward. In terms of spiritual energy or in understanding the Elemental Laws of Light, Desri was at the absolute limit of power a Saint could reach.

With one more step, he would become a Deity.

"Lord Desri." Osenno once more addressed Desri as 'Lord'.

Osenno still remember the information regarding Desri in the scrolls of the Radiant Church. He knew that Desri had been on extremely close terms with the legendary Holy Emperor Ernst.

"Lord Ernst worked all his life to raise up the Radiant Church. He founded the Holy Union. He let the Radiant Church rise to glory! These five thousand years, we have never given up and never stopped working hard." Osenno's voice was very low.

Desri frowned.

In his heart, he didn't feel much affection for the Radiant Church. But, he felt a great deal of guilt towards Ernst. Ernst was like an older brother to him! His older brother had indeed labored on behalf of the Radiant Church his entire life, and in the end, he had gone to the Divine Plane of Light.

"But Linley...not only is he himself a Dragonblood Warrior, he has a younger brother and five Undying Warriors under his control. He also has that magical beast, Bebe, who is no weaker than him." Osenno looked at Desri. "In a few decades, that means he will have seven peak-stage Supreme Warriors and a terrifying magical beast. If they were to attack together, our Church would be finished!"

"Lord Desri, our Church would be finished!"

"The life's labor of Lord Ernst would be destroyed!"

Osenno's voice caused Desri's heart to tremble. He still remember the help and affection which Ernst, his 'big brother', had given him.

Linley, Pennslyn, and Delia were standing together. Pennslyn sighed softly to Linley. "The only person Desri feels guilty towards is Ernst. He must feel very torn right now."

The Ernst Institute got its name from Ernst.

Linley naturally knew much about Ernst as well.

A sigh could be heard from Desri. Desri stared at both sides, then said in a bright voice. "How about this. Both sides take a step back. Consider it giving me, Desri, some face. Alright?"

"Take a step back?" Osenno and Lehman stared at Desri in confusion.

Linley was mystified as well.

"Both of you, come to the center of the lake." Desri said. Linley trusted Desri, and so with Delia's hand in his own, he flew to the center of the lake. Osenno and Lehman also quite obediently flew to the center of the lake.

Linley and Delia stood on one side of the massive central boulder, while Osenno and Lehman stood on the other side. Both of them were on guard.

"What is Desri planning?" Linley frowned.

Desri smiled calmly. "I know very well that there is a deep grudge between the two of you. How about this...in the next twenty years, the Radiant Church is not permitted to kill Linley."

"Twenty years?" Osenno was unhappy. "Lord Desri, twenty years later, Linley will be at the Saint level in human form. Even if we wanted to kill him, we wouldn't be able to. Unfair. Unfair!"

"Shut your mouth!" Desri had a hint of anger on his face.

Osenno's heart shook. He suddenly remembered at this moment...it was Desri whose words counted.

"This requirement is the same as asking the Radiant Church to take a step. As for you, Linley, I also wish for you to take a step back." Desri looked at Linley.

"Lord Desri, pray tell." Linley said.

Desri smiled apologetically. "Osenno's words are true as well. Linley, you yourself aren't a major threat, but combined with your little brother and those five Undying Warriors, you represent a force of seven Supreme Warriors. That is indeed capable of destroying the Radiant Church. Thus, I want you to agree that from today onward, if you want to seek revenge on the Radiant Church, you have to do so by yourself. The others, including your magical beast, cannot."

Hearing these words, Osenno and Lehman both let out a sigh of relief.

What sort of place was the Holy Isle?

That was the headquarters for the entire Radiant Church. They had a huge pile of Angel Saints, and the likes of Heidens and Lord Fallen Leaf. And given that the Holy Isle was also protected by some large-scale magical formations...anything short of a Deity would definitely die if they attacked.

"Do you understand what I intend, now?" Desri looked at the two sides.

"Our side, within the next twenty years, is not to act against Linley. In exchange for Linley only being allowed to seek revenge on his own?" Osenno laughed calmly. "I can agree. If we can't even hold you off by yourself, then there is nothing I can say on behalf of our Radiant Church if we are destroyed."

Osenno agreed easily as well.

The Radiant Church wasn't afraid of Linley. They were afraid of the entire group of people behind Linley.

"Linley, how about you?" Desri looked at Linley.

In his heart, Linley was rather unwilling.

"Exterminate the Radiant Church by myself?" Linley still knew his own limits. "A Church which has existed for ten thousand years...that's no easy task. But to reach the Deity-level...even Cesar spent five thousand years. The legendary War God who reached the Deity-level in a short time period actually was simply fortunate enough to find a divine spark. If it was just based on his own abilities, who knows how long it would have taken?"

Linley frowned.

"Linley!" Desri spoke again. Osenno and Lehman were both looking at him.

Linley suddenly turned to look at Delia by his side. Linley's heart trembled. "No matter what, I can't let Delia come to harm." Linley made up his mind. He immediately said to Desri, "The Radiant Church is not permitted to attack me within the next twenty years, fine, but there's one more clause...they are forever forbidden from harming my family and friends."

"Fine." Osenno hurriedly said.

Linley looked at Osenno, a hint of cold light in his eyes. He secretly said to himself, "By myself? Although I might not dare to attack the Holy Isle, but if I ever meet you people traveling alone, can't I kill you then? If you want, then just stay inside the Holy Isle forever!"

For the sake of his family and friends, Linley chose to accept this compromise.

Osenno and Lehman both let out secret sighs of relief. After all, Desri was on Linley's side. They didn't have much support here.

In the middle of the lake in Mt. Blackraven, Linley's side and the Radiant Church both accepted this treaty.

"If in the next twenty years, Linley comes to attack us, we will counterattack. If he dies due to our counterattack, we cannot be blamed." Osenno hurriedly said. Linley sneered. "Hrmph. Don't worry. I don't plan to play word games with you."

Linley suddenly laughed loudly. "If in the future, someone like the War God leads experts to attack the Holy Isle, I'll also seize the opportunity to go. I cannot be blamed in that situation."

"That naturally wouldn't be your fault." Osenno shook his head.

If the War God wanted to destroy the Radiant Church, most likely the Radiant Church would've been finished long ago.

After the two agreed to the treaty, Delia suddenly said, "Then what about the territory in the Anarchic Lands? Will Saints take part in the battles?"

"Saints?" Osenno frowned.

Indeed. The Radiant Church had a large expanse of territory under its control in the Anarchic Lands, and Linley did as well. If the two came to a fight...once Saints got involved in the battle, then perhaps before the twenty years was up, Linley and the Radiant Church would come to blows.

"How about this." Desri spoke.

"Mortal, worldly battles...Saints are not to be involved." Desri looked towards Pennslyn. "Madame, go find O'Casey [Ao'ke'xi] of the Cult of Shadows. Tell him I need to speak with him. We'll wait for you here."

"Fine." Pennslyn nodded, then flew away immediately.

"O'Casey? Who is he?" Linley frowned as he asked.

Osenno said, "O'Casey is the Elder Judge of the Cult of Shadow's Tribunal. His position is equivalent to mine in the Radiant Church. He is also the general supervisor for the Cult of Shadows in the Anarchic Lands."

Linley nodded.

"In mortal battles, Saints are not to participate. Linley...dare you accept?" Osenno stared coldly at Linley.

"Barker and his brothers aren't Saints in their human form. They should be able to participate in battle, right?" Linley asked.

"Of course. They are just five warriors of the ninth rank." Osenno said disdainfully. "Linley, in terms of the numbers of experts of the ninth rank, you are far from being able to match our Radiant Church and the Cult of Shadows."

Linley smiled confidently, not paying any attention to him.

"Delia." Linley held Delia's hand. Right now, he was still in Dragonform, and his hand was covered with scales, but Delia didn't mind at all. She looked at Linley, and in a soft voice, she said, "Linley, thank you."

Delia knew that Linley had compromised for her sake in part.

Linley didn't say anything.

After all these years and having suffered so much, Linley had learned something. Sometimes, a single mistake caused by being unbending could cause someone to suffer a lifetime of regret. The occasional compromise that allows one's loved ones to be safe also allowed one to pursue revenge with even greater ferocity!

"What, I am unable to eliminate the Radiant Church by myself?"

Linley secretly said to himself, "In history, has there ever been a Supreme Warrior Saint who was also a Grand Magus Saint?" When his power reached its utmost peak, Linley would prepare to challenge the Holy Isle. Even if he wasn't able to destroy it, he should be able to escape with his life.

A long time later.

"Boss!" A black shadow streaked towards him at high speed.

"Bebe." Linley felt delighted.

Bebe hopped directly onto Linley's shoulders, then stared angrily at Osenno. "This guy came again?"

"It's fine now." Linley said.

"Hrmph." Bebe sneered coldly, then said mentally, "Boss, don't be afraid of these people. In the Forest of Darkness, I made friends with a few Saint-level magical beasts. All of them are really powerful. When the time comes, I'll ask them to help out and deal with these guys together."

"Saint-level magical beast friends?" Linley stared at Bebe in astonishment.

When Linley trained, Bebe would often go have fun in the Forest of Darkness. Unexpectedly, he had actually made friends with Saint-level magical beasts.

"Right. They are all quite powerful. Haeru's race is normally at the ninth rank. He just barely broke through. His power amongst Saint-level magical beasts is just ordinary. But these friends that I made, like 'Big White', he is a Thunderwinged White Tiger. The 'Big Guy', he is a Golden Behemoth. Or 'Big Snake', a Nine-Headed Serpent Emperor."

Linley was utterly speechless. How could Saint-level magical beasts make friends with other Saint-level magical beasts so easily?

“Right. One of the Saints is also a rat-type magical beast.” Bebe chortled.

Linley was startled.

A Saint-level rat-type magical beast?

“Unfortunately, he’s male.” Bebe mentally said with resignation.

Linley didn’t know whether to laugh or to cry. As they mentally conversed, he asked, “What does that Saint-level rat-type beast look like? Is he like you?”

“No.” Bebe shook his head. “That Saint-level magical beast is all purple. He’s quite handsome. However, he treats me quite well. He even gave me many precious, delicious things to eat.” Bebe’s face was all smiles.

Linley secretly sighed.

A purple Saint-level rat? The books had no record of such a creature. It seems the books were incomplete.

“But Boss, all of those friends of mine are very arrogant. They only became my friends after fighting with me.” Bebe’s face was covered with a delighted smile.

Just at this moment, two human figures streaked through the air at high speed. One of the two was Pennslyn. As for the other, it was a man covered in a long black robe. It should have been Osenno's counterpart in the Cult of Shadows; Senior Judge O'Casey.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 23, The Wedding

O'Casey landed in the middle of the lake, while at the same time, removing his enveloping black robe. Inside, he was wearing a tailored suit, like a gentleman at a banquet.

"Lord Desri, I've heard of your famous name long ago, but only today do we meet. I truly feel honored." O'Casey smiled as he bowed, and then turned to look at the nearby Osenno. "Oh, Osenno. Who is this person next to you?"

Lehman's voice rumbled out, "Commander Lehman of the Zealot Division!"

"Mr. Lehman." O'Casey smiled and nodded.

"Master Linley, ten years ago, our Cult of Shadows invited you to come to us, but sadly, at that time, the Radiant Church had sunk its claws into you and wouldn't let you go." O'Casey looked at Linley and began to grumble, as though seeing an old friend of his.

Linley could only smile politely.

"Enough." Desri laughed calmly. "Everyone should know what the situation is. It truly is rather inappropriate for Saints to participate in mortal battles. The Yulan Empire and the O'Brien Empire both do not use Saints in normal battles. Saints are just used as a source of fear."

Desri sighed. "I've been in the Anarchic Lands for thousands of years now. I don't want it to be too anarchic. Thus...I suggest that in the battles between your three sides, Saints are not to participate. Would you be willing to accept this?"

"Yes." Osenno nodded.

Linley smiled and nodded.

Desri immediately looked at O'Casey, who grinned. "Do you need to ask? Of course I accept."

"Wonderful." Desri's face grew solemn. With a flip of his hand, he retrieved four scrolls of paper and a pen. "Then today, let the four of us write down a treaty. If any side goes against it...then the other three sides will join forces to destroy them!"

Linley frowned, while O'Casey and Osenno were also startled.

Right now, the strongest of the four sides was definitely Desri's side. After all, Desri had Higginson, Hayward, and the other Saints behind him.

"Sign here." Desri quickly wrote down the four agreements, then handed them to Linley, Osenno, and O'Casey.

With a smile, O'Casey was the first to sign his name. Linley didn't hesitate either as he put down his name.

"Sign!" Osenno signed his name as well.

"Excellent." Desri smiled. "Each of us will have a copy of this agreement. But of course...this agreement is founded on our personal honor. If someone is so shameless as to allow Saints to do battle, then destroy the evidence...you must know that no secret is airtight. Once it is discovered, then the other three sides will immediately destroy the fourth."

.....

It was nightfall now. The night fog covered the skies.

Linley and Delia were enjoying the peaceful night.

"From today onwards, our life will become very peaceful." Delia's face had a hint of happiness on it. Smiling, she said, "In the future, we'll no longer need to worry about many things. Linley, in the future, will you regret today's decision? Actually, you didn't have to agree today. I think Desri would still have supported you."

Linley, too, had the feeling that Desri was still on their side.

Even if he had not agreed, Desri wouldn't have allowed the enemy to kill him.

"No. I will never regret today's decision." Linley held Delia in his arms. "Because if I did not agree, given my current power, although I can protect myself, I am not necessarily able to protect you. If you were to die...I think I would regret it for the rest of my life!"

It was because he had thought of Delia and of his family and friends that Linley had made this decision.

"Thank you." Delia rested her head against Linley's chest and said in a soft voice.

Feeling her soft warmth, Linley felt all the more certain that this decision was the right one.

.....

Yulan calendar, year 10010. July 21st. The city of Baruch (formerly Blackdirt City) was a hubbub of commotion. The construction of Baruch City was now complete. The inner city was a renovated Blackdirt City. The construction style of Baruch City focused on 'simplicity' and 'practicality'.

The palace didn't take up too much area. It was only two square kilometers in size.

In the past, when the Baruch Duchy had been founded, they had begun the renovations. After five months, they had finally finished. Most of the buildings in the palace were a single story tall, while the tallest buildings were only two stories high. The main hall of the main palace was very large, capable of holding several hundred people.

And today, the main hall was full of guests.

"Your Majesty, Linley, I come as the representative of the Emperor of the Rohault Empire to bring our sincerest congratulations." A middle-aged man said respectfully to Linley. Linley toasted him with a cup of wine, while Delia held her arm in his. Smiling, the two toasted him.

The two were very tired from all of this, but they were very happy as well.

"So many people have come today." Wharton walked to Linley's side. "Big brother, the envoys from the Rohault Empire, Rhine Empire, and the O'Brien Empire have all arrived. Oh...look. Those ones are from the kingdoms of the great plains of the far east."

"Mighty King Linley, on behalf of our King of the Muhan Kingdom, we would like to convey our King's most sincere congratulations." An envoy from the Muhan Kingdom of the great plains of the far east also toasted Linley, and Linley naturally had to give him face and respond.

Linley and Delia shared a smile.

"Linley, you seem rather tired." Delia said softly.

"I'm not too bad." Linley forced out a smile. Linley hated having to welcome guests, but today was his own wedding. He couldn't hide from this responsibility. Delia said softly, "How about this? For those people of lower status, let me handle them."

In the past, Delia worked as a diplomat. Thus, making conversation was quite easy for her.

And she was much better at it than Linley, who would just say a few short, blunt sentences.

"Lord Cardinal Guillermo of the Radiant Church has arrived!" The voice rang out from outside the hall, and the entire hall fell rather silent. Linley and the Radiant Church, and the grudges between them, was known to everyone here. After all, the news of Linley's slaughter of those six Angels had spread across the continent.

But now, the Radiant Church was actually sending someone over?

"King Linley." Guillermo bowed modestly as he stepped forward.

Linley still remembered how, ten years ago, Guillermo had went to the Ernst Institute to recruit him. Now, after more than ten years, Guillermo was still a Cardinal, while he was now the King of a Kingdom whom even the Radiant Church had to compromise with.

"Mr. Guillermo, please come inside and rest." Linley said with a smile.

"The disciples of the War God's College have arrived!"

The people who came were Castro and two other personal disciples.

"Lord McKenzie has arrived!"

Yet another Saint.

"Lord O'Casey of the Cult of Shadows has arrived!"

Hearing the list of names, the envoys of the various kingdoms and Empires all headed off to the various corners to engage in conversation. Good heavens. All of them were Saints.

"Three disciples of the High Priest of the Yulan Empire have arrived!"

Linley and Delia immediately went to welcome them. Seeing these people, Delia immediately called out with excitement, "Big brother!" The person in the center of this three-person delegation was Dixie. Dixie and his two fellow apprentices both walked over, offering Linley their congratulations.

"Linley, you finally lived up to my little sister's hopes." In front of Linley, Dixie finally showed a smile.

When they were at the Ernst Institute, Linley and Dixie had been acknowledged as the two major geniuses.

Dixie suddenly whispered into Linley's ears, "Linley, let me warn you. In the future, you better not make my little sister angry. Otherwise...even if I'm not able to deal with you, I'll ask my Master to personally make an appearance!"

"No need for your Master to make an appearance. I'll engage in self-punishment." Linley began to laugh.

Today, Linley could feel that he and Dixie were on very close terms now. Seeing how friendly Linley and Dixie were being, Delia felt extremely happy.

Right at this time.

"The disciples of the 'War Saint' of the great plains of the far east have arrived!" The voice ringing out from outside the hall confused Linley.

Who was the 'War Saint'?

Desri had arrived very early today, and he went to Linley's side. He whispered, "Linley, currently, there are four people on par with me in the Yulan continent. The number one expert of the great plains of the far east, the 'War Saint' Tulily [Tu'li'lei] is one of them."

Linley now understood.

There were five Prime Saints. One was Fain. Another was Desri. So a third was this Tulily. Who were the other two?

A middle-aged plainsman with a turban around his head walked in, two people behind him. Seeing Linley, the plainsman smiled. "King Linley. I, Moor [Mao'er], would like to bring my master's most sincere greetings and congratulations."

"My deepest thanks to Mr. Tulily." Linley smiled.

The eyes of the plainsman, Moor, lit up. "So King Linley also knows of my master's name. Ah. Lord Desri." The plainsman immediately bowed upon seeing Desri.

Moor had previously seen his master, Tulily, personally spar with this Desri. His master, Tulily, had said that this Desri was on par with his own power. Naturally, Moor was extremely courteous.

"The Holy Lady of the Frost Goddess Shrine has arrived!"

Desri and Pennslyn immediately went to welcome her. Naturally, Linley and Delia went as well. Linley felt quite curious. How powerful exactly was this mysterious Frost Goddess Shrine?

This 'Holy Lady' had long, jade hair, and she seemed as cold and as unapproachable as a block of ice. Behind her were two beautiful girls.

"Big sister." Pennslyn was boundlessly overjoyed.

Desri whispered to Linley, "Linley, this 'Holy Lady' of the Frost Goddess Shrine, Rosalie [Luo'sha'li], is the number one expert of the Frost Goddess Shrine. Her power is on par with mine." Hearing these words, Linley understood that this Rosalie should be yet another of the Five Prime Saints.

He now knew four of the Prime Saints: Fain, Desri, Tulily, and Rosalie.

"Who is the last one?" Linley secretly wondered. Unfortunately, the last expert didn't arrive, even by the time the wedding was concluded.

In the main hall of the Baruch Kingdom, there was a huge pile of Saints. All the envoys of the various Empires were engaged in conversation, while the Saints were engaged in conversation with the other Saints. Desri and Rosalie and the others were together as well.

Each level was segregated quite clearly.

"The envoy of the Yulan Empire has arrived!"

The person who had come was George.

"Second Bro." Linley began to laugh loudly, and George excitedly ran towards him, then intentionally made a deep bow. "O most puissant King Linley! I, George, on behalf of his Imperial Majesty...urgh!" Linley whacked George on the shoulder, not letting him get the words out.

"Enough, sheesh. Acting like this in front of me." Linley was overjoyed. "Come, come see Fourth Bro with me."

"Fourth Bro is here as well?" George was extremely excited.

Ever since they had separated seven or eight years ago, he hadn't seen Reynolds a single time.

"Fourth Bro!" "Second Bro!"

As soon as Reynolds and George saw each other, they instantly shouted and then threw their arms around each other. And right at this time...

"The Chairman of the Dawson Conglomerate has arrived!" Before the announcement was even finished, Yale rushed into the main hall. He immediately saw Linley, Reynolds, and George.

"Haha, Second Bro, Third Bro, Fourth Bro, your Boss has arrived!"

Laughing loudly, Yale charged towards them.

The many people in the hall all looked at these four friends. If ordinary people had caused such a scene, they probably would've been rebuked already. But this was Linley and his closest friends. No one dared to say a thing.

Ten years late, the four bros had finally come together in one spot.

"Hey, as soon as this kid Linley has become a King, he starts acting differently. His attendants even ask me where my letter of invitation is? And asks me who I am? Jeeze, what a pain!" A lazy looking middle-aged man in a long, loose robe suddenly appeared in the middle of the hall. He grabbed a nearby cup of wine, then took two sips, seeming to enjoy it very much.

"Mm. Not bad." An expression of satisfaction was on his face.

"Lord Cesar?!" In the main hall, Barker suddenly saw this middle-aged man. He would never forget this Deity who had saved his life.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 24, That Night

Barker and his brothers immediately rushed forward, but Cesar frowned in impatience. "Don't get so close to me. Don't let me become the center of attention. Low-key, low-key!" The five brothers could only grin awkwardly as they greeted Cesar from far away.

"Gurgle."

As he sampled the wine, Cesar went hiding into a corner of the room. Whenever he encountered the envoys of the kings and Empires, he would toast them, not putting on any airs of being a Deity at all.

"Cesar." Suddenly, a cold voice rang out.

Cesar turned. An awkward smile couldn't help but to appear on his face. The person who had spoken was the Holy Lady of the Frost Goddess Shrine, Rosalie. Rosalie stared at Cesar. She snorted a few times, but she didn't say anything else. Being stared daggers at like this, Cesar couldn't do anything except grin stupidly.

"You've already become a Deity, but you still act like this." A hint of moisture seemed to appear in the eyes of Rosalie, the icy beauty.

Cesar squeezed out a smile. "Rosalie, aren't you having a wonderful time being the Holy Lady? Alas, I'm just a wastrel who wanders all over the place. I go wherever I like and do what I like. I can't take good care of you." Cesar felt some misery in his heart.

"Lord Cesar." Linley saw Cesar as well.

"Don't go." Desri held Linley back, a 'nasty' little smirk on his face. "Why are you going to get between those two lovebirds?"

"Lovebirds? Isn't she the Holy Lady?" Linley was stunned.

"Who says a Holy Lady can't have a man?" Desri glanced at Linley. "Rosalie is almost at the Deity-level herself. For her to continue working on behalf of the Frost Goddess Shrine is already giving it quite a bit of face." Desri grinned as he watched Cesar and Rosalie from afar.

Linley exchanged amused glances with Delia. "Linley, so this is the Lord Cesar you spoke of?" Linley nodded.

"It seems this Deity has incurred a romantic debt." Delia pursed her lips as she laughed, and Linley shook his head as well. "Lord Cesar, he, uh... how should I put this...he's quite the dissolute romantic."

This night was quite a festive one, especially Desri's group. George, Yale, and Reynolds as well. By the time he greeted and chatted with everyone, it was already midnight. Only now did Linley head towards Delia's room...

One of the benefits of being a Saint was that despite having drank an enormous amount of wine, Linley wasn't drunk at all.

"Linley?"

He heard someone call his name before he even reached the door. Linley turned and saw Cesar lying on a couch and drinking wine. "Linley, how come you ended up getting married? Jeeze, after I heard you got married, I felt really sorry for you."

"Really sorry?" Linley was stunned.

Cesar stood up, then flew over gracefully. "Really sorry! Yet another man has stepped into his tomb!" As he spoke, Cesar's body flew high into the air. "Oh yeah, happy wedding. Alright, I'm off." Cesar's voice sounded in Linley's ears.

Suddenly...

"You old lecher!" A clear sharp sound. A graceful, white-garbed figure flew into the air as well, chasing after Cesar.

Cesar's flying speed instantly increased.

"Uh...maybe it's better to be in the 'tomb'" Linley had a hint of a smile on his lips as he headed out. Soon, he arrived at the doorway to Delia's room. There were two beautiful maids in front of it, and the two maids respectfully drew open the door.

Linley waved his hand at them. "You can go now."

"Yes, your Majesty."

In the dark room, the only person there was Delia, sitting quietly in front of her bed. She just looked at Linley, waiting for Linley to speak. And finally, Linley did speak..."Bebe. Get out."

"Haha, Boss." Bebe crawled out from beneath the bed.

"Bebe?" Delia didn't know whether to laugh or to cry. Today, Bebe disappeared very early on. Who would've thought he had been hiding here?

Linley looked at Bebe, also not knowing whether to laugh or to cry. "Bebe, what are you doing?"

"Preparing a gift for ya, Boss!" Bebe raised his head high.

"What gift?" Linley was puzzled.

Bebe grinned, his little claws handing over a black rock. "This is something my good friend gave me. It was that violet-gold Saint-level rat that I told you about last time. I'm too young and haven't accumulated much wealth, so my bro gave me this."

"What is this?" Linley took the black stone in confusion. "Can it be some sort of rare or precious mineral? Can't be. What use would a small piece of rock be anyhow?" Linley carefully inspected it, but couldn't tell what it was.

"I don't know either." Bebe handed it to Delia. "Delia, personalize and soulbind it with blood."

"Bind it with blood?" Linley raised an eyebrow.

Anything that needed to be bound by blood was definitely a treasure. For example, Linley's Bloodviolet sword, or his Coiling Dragon ring. Even the adamantine heavy sword wasn't worthy of needing to be blood bound. Generally speaking, only extremely rare and valuable items would require this process.

"Alright." Delia trusted Bebe very much. A blade of air cut Delia's finger, immediately creating a tiny wound.

A single drop of blood fell onto the black stone.

The black stone suddenly transformed into a ray of light and suddenly enveloped Delia. Linley was shocked...he watched as the black stone merged into Delia's body and utterly vanished.

"What is going on?" Linley was shocked.

He had never seen anything as weird as this before. Bebe stared with a gaping jaw as well. "I have no idea."

"Delia, how do you feel?" Linley immediately asked.

Delia shook her head, puzzled. "I don't feel anything at all. Hmm... actually, it seems I can sense the nearby elemental essence much more clearly. Right. That's it." Linley secretly nodded. Generally speaking, even the vilest of items, once bound by blood, wouldn't harm its master.

Linley wasn't too worried about that.

But...what was that thing?

"Bebe, this black stone...why did that magical beast give it to you? This seems to be a treasure." Linley asked. Of course, all they knew right now about this treasure was one thing; it could increase elemental essence affinity tremendously.

Bebe hurriedly shook his head. "Boss, honestly, that good friend of mine gave it to me. He said it is very useful to magi."

"Very useful to magi?" Linley understood. Perhaps this was some sort of special object that could enhance elemental essence affinity. It was useless to Saint-level magical beasts, which is why he gave it to Bebe. But Linley had a feeling...

There was more than met the eye to this black stone!

"Alright, Bebe. Do you plan to stay here?" Linley stared at Bebe.

Bebe's beady little eyes rolled, and then he rubbed his nose twice. "Boss, once you got a wife, you forgot about Bebe. Sniff." Linley immediately sent a kick in his direction, but by then, Bebe had already disappeared in a flash as he left the room.

The door shut.

The room instantly turned quiet. Linley and Delia sat side by side on the bed.

"What are you looking at?" Delia was a bit shy right now.

Linley laughed. "I'm thinking...about how many kids we should have." Delia was startled. Linley suddenly lifted Delia up and carried her over to the bed, and then...one piece of clothing after another came flying out from the bed.

.....

"Unngh..."

They hadn't slept all night.

"Whew." Linley lay there on the bed, with Delia resting on top of him, her head against Linley's chest. Beads of sweat caused Delia's fragrant hair to stick to Linley's body. Linley lowered his head to look at Delia. That faintly red face looked like that of a kitten's.

Her pert little nose was sniffing.

Linley's hand gently stroked Delia's slick, bare back. In his mind, he continued to savor what had happened just then. How nervous he had felt when he had entered Delia's body...Linley had to admit, things had gotten just a little too wild just then. It had been three entire hours.

"Delia, what is it?"

"I want to cry." Delia hugged Linley's chest. "I just want to cry right now. When I think about how you and Alice were together, I want to cry. When I think about how I waited ten years, I want to cry. Sob."

Linley held his head in his hands.

Women. It was impossible to understand them.

"Linley, can I tell you something?" Delia said softly.

"Hrm?" Linley lowered his head to look at Delia.

Delia raised her head to look at Linley. Her face serious, she said in a soft voice, "You...got hard, down there."

"Uh?"

For a moment, Linley had no idea what to say.

"Delia, you know, Wharton and Nina's kid is going to be born in a few months. Don't you think the two of us need to work harder?" Linley whispered.

"Um?" Delia was startled.

"So, I need to keep at it." Linley flipped over and pressed Delia down once again.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 25, Twelve Years in the Blink of an Eye

The Radiant Church. The Holy Island. The ninth floor of the Radiant Temple.

Staring outside the window, a hint of worry was on Heidens' face. Previously, Linley had made an agreement with the Radiant Church, allowing the Radiant Church to relax. After all, without the assistance of his Supreme Warriors and that terrifying rat-type magical beast, Linley, by himself, wasn't too great a threat.

But they were only relaxed for nine years.

Because on the ninth year, the Radiant Church discovered a terrifying secret.

Linley's human form had reached the Saint level.

"Heidens." An icy voice rang out. Osenno, his devilish purple hair fluttering behind him, appeared in the middle of the ninth floor.

Heidens didn't turn. Calmly, he said, "Osenno, what is it?"

Osenno had a hint of frustration in his voice. "Heidens, the many experts of the Church have been cooped up in the Holy Isle for three full years. During these three years, you've ordered that we are not to go outside the Holy Isle without authorization. Heidens...can it be that just because of Linley, we have to live like this?"

"And Heidens, you must understand, the information we got came from an agent who overheard the conversation which Linley's son was having with Wharton's son. That's the only information we have stating that Linley has reached the Saint level in human form. The words of children are not necessarily true." Osenno said unhappily.

Because of this news, that Linley had reached the Saint-level in his human form, Heidens asked Osenno and the others to not leave the Holy Isle.

Heidens remained with his back turned towards Osenno. Calmly, he said, "Osenno, first of all, Wharton's son, Cena [Xi'ne], is a very reliable and very meticulous youth. His words should be true. And secondly... when Linley was hidden within the O'Brien Empire, he had already reached the ninth rank. It has been over ten years now. Given the rate of growth for Dragonblood Warriors, it is about time that Linley reaches the Saint level in human form."

Heidens suddenly turned and stared at Osenno.

"You should be very clear about how powerful Linley is. Twelve years ago, he was only slightly weaker to you. Now that his human form has reached the Saint-level...his power should be more than ten times greater than before. Even if he didn't gain any additional insights at all, he can defeat you. But do you believe that in twelve years, Linley hasn't increased his level of insights at all?" Heidens asked Osenno.

Osenno was silent.

He knew full well how quickly Linley trained.

Twelve years without any breakthroughs? Who would believe it?

That ancestor of the Baruch clan who had only reached the 'impose' level when he reached the Saint-level as a human-form Dragonblood Warrior was nonetheless able to rely on his terrifying post-Saint-level defense and power to fight head on against peak-stage Saint-level magical beasts.

And Linley?

In strength and battle-qi, he was not inferior to his ancestor. However, he had a very deep understanding of the Laws. He was even more terrifying to deal with than the ancestors of the Baruch clan.

"Heidens, the Holy Isle doesn't need me to defend it, does it." Osenno asked.

"Osenno, if you truly want to leave the Holy Isle...I won't try to stop you." Heidens said calmly. "But leaving the Holy Isle means that you are betting that Linley won't find and kill you! Of course, your fleeing abilities are top notch. But I'm not certain if you would be able to flee from Linley."

Osenno had the Doppelganger Technique and was very fast.

But he probably only had a fifty-fifty chance of fleeing and surviving if Linley encountered him.

“Hmph. Fine. I’ll wait until my Doppelganger Technique reaches the peak before I have another tussle with Linley.” Osenno sneered coldly, and then with a flicker, disappeared from the ninth floor. But although his words were tough, clearly he had already submitted.

A hint of a bitter smile could be seen on Heidens’ face.

It was virtually impossible to keep tabs on someone at Linley’s level. Right now, Linley’s flying speed was far quicker than it had been in the past. It would take him less than half a day to cross the entire Yulan continent. This sort of speed...if he wanted to chase after and kill someone, he could definitely make sure that his opponent didn’t have time to call for help.

Yulan calendar, year 10022. May. An area outside Baruch City with wild flower and wild grass swaying, their beautiful dance so moving to behold. Right now, there were two luxurious carriages and a squad of elite knights who were escorting them down this wild road.

“Your Majesty, we are at Mt. Blackraven.” A knight said respectfully towards the second carriage.

Immediately, a husband and wife couple stepped out of the carriage, along with a youth. The couple was Wharton and Nina. Wharton was much more mature now than he had been. He was the King of the Baruch Kingdom, and his personal strength had dramatically increased as well. Wharton’s body emanated the aura of an expert. As for Nina, she wasn’t as unripe as she had been in the past; her body was fuller, now, and she had become even more womanly.

As for that twelve or thirteen year old child in front of them, who seemed so friendly and yet graceful? This child was the son of Wharton and Nina: Cena Baruch.

"Wow, we are at Mt. Blackraven!" An excited voice rang out from the carriage in front of them, and a very excited youth clambered out of the carriage.

"Taylor [Tai'le]." Cena laughed as he called out.

"Big brother." Taylor ran over happily. Taylor was relatively handsome, but he was far more energetic than Cena.

At this time, yet another beautiful lady stepped out of the carriage in front, as well as a pretty young girl. It was Delia and her daughter, Sasha [Sha'sha]. Sasha looked quite similar to Taylor. The two of them were actually twins, but Sasha was born just a little while before Taylor was, and thus Taylor was forced to be the 'little brother'.

Cena was twelve, while Sasha and Taylor were ten.

"We're about to see Father soon. I haven't seen him in half a year." Taylor was extremely excited right now, and Cena's eyes had a hint of excitement in them as well. As the children of the Baruch clan, they all worshipped this person who supported the entire Baruch clan...Linley.

The countless members of the Baruch Kingdom also worshipped Linley. Linley was the spiritual support for the entire Baruch Kingdom. There was no question about this.

Although twelve years had passed, Delia's appearance hadn't changed at all. In fact, she actually now had a certain aura about her. Delia's children had blissful smiles on their faces. Twelve years of peaceful, happy life. Delia truly was very satisfied.

She stared at the distant Baruch City.

The royal capital, Baruch City, had been expanded long ago. The normal population was over a million. Because Linley had brought the massive fortune he had taken from the Kingdom of Fenlai, the Baruch Kingdom had easily weathered the first few tough years, and now, the entire Kingdom was prospering very nicely.

Raising her head to look at Mt. Blackraven, Delia's heart was already by Linley's side.

"Wharton, Nina, let's go up the mountain." Delia laughed. "Taylor, Sasha, Cena, follow along."

"Got it." Taylor said loudly.

His sister, Sasha, was very quiet. The squad of knights came to a halt at the foot of Mt. Blackraven, while Wharton, Nina, Delia, and the three children went up Mt. Blackraven together. Mt. Blackraven was as beautiful and graceful as ever.

Following the little creek, they finally saw the lake in the distance.

There were now three massive flattened boulders in the center of the lake. The central boulder was the first one which Linley had put down, and the stone house was naturally the one he had built long ago. As for the other two boulders, Linley had arranged them after his wedding, for when people came to visit for a while.

A faint blue figure was currently fishing in the middle of the lake.

"Father!" Taylor's voice rang out from far away.

That blue-robed figure turned around. It was Linley. Linley looked slightly more mature than he had in the past, and looking at him from a distance, one had the sense that he had totally become one with nature. Linley immediately stood up and laughed, "Haha, Taylor!"

Linley's standing motion gave the sensation of moving with the wind itself, but it also gave an extremely solid, stable sensation as well. These two opposite sensations, merged into one person, was simply unimaginable for those who didn't personally experience it.

Linley waved his hand...

"Bang!" Part of the flowing water instantly came to a halt, forming a bridge of water. The other parts of the lake continued to flow normally. Taylor and Sasha, quite experienced, stepped directly onto the bridge of water and ran over.

The water bridge was solid and durable.

If one looked at it closely, one would see that on top of the water bridge was minute, tiny flows of air.

"Taylor. Come. Hug." Linley happily lifted Taylor into his arms, and the nearby Sasha immediately stared at Linley with her big, innocent eyes. Linley immediately reached out and lifted his beloved daughter into his embrace as well. "Taylor, Sasha, it's been half a year since you've seen Father. Have you missed Father?"

"Yes." Taylor said immediately. "Every day."

Linley's face instantly was covered with smiles. He now totally could understand how Grandpa Doehring had felt towards him, and how his father's superficial severity masked a deep layer of love.

"Hey. Taylor, Sasha, Cena, you all came." A happy voice emanated from the skies, and a black shadow suddenly appeared in the middle of the lake. It was the magical beast Bebe, now two meters long.

Linley looked at Bebe and couldn't help but laugh inwardly.

Whenever Bebe was in front of these three 'juniors' (Taylor, Sasha, and Cena), he always made his body a little bit bigger. As Bebe put it, 'if my body is too small, I won't have the aura of an elder'.

"Uncle Bebe." Taylor immediately broke free from Linley's embrace and went to hug Bebe.

When Taylor was young, Bebe often played around with Taylor.

Wharton chuckled. "Big brother, let's sit down first. We can talk while eating. I brought many delicacies with me." As he spoke, the family sat down around a long rectangular table, and within his interspatial ring, Wharton withdrew the freshly prepared dishes.

The family began to eat.

"Big brother, have you heard of the big battle that occurred in the O'Brien Empire?" Wharton asked.

With an 'Oh' sound, Linley said, "Are you talking about half a month ago, how Olivier challenged Haydson to another duel?" Olivier had already returned from the Arctic Icecap, returned with the aura of utmost confidence.

Wharton sighed appreciatively. "Right. With just a single sword blow, he killed Haydson, who was famous for his defense. How terrifying."

"Haydson. Is it the Haydson who dueled with father at Mt. Tujiao?" Taylor raised his head up high and asked. This little fellow deeply venerated Linley, and he knew the details of Linley's famous battles as well as anything.

Linley laughed and nodded.

The nearby Delia also sighed in approval. "This Olivier really is formidable. Just one sword blow! Haydson's defensive abilities were legendary. To be killed in one blow..." Delia also sighed repeatedly. The nearby Cena suddenly looked at Linley and asked, "Uncle, if you were to duel with Olivier again, can you win?"

Linley laughed calmly.

"Olivier's improvement speed was faster than I had anticipated. In just twelve years, he reached the level of being able to kill Haydson with one sword blow. Without actually competing with him, it's hard to say who would win and who would lose." Linley laughed.

"Boss, what are you being modest for?" Bebe said unhappily. "Haydson's defense was on par with yours in the past. But now? Just by relying on your post-Saint transformation, the defensive power of your draconic scales alone is on a higher level than the combined power of your draconic scales and Pulseguard Defense of twelve years ago. And now, your Pulseguard Defense is more than ten times greater than before. In front of you, that Olivier isn't worth a fart. Even people on the second tier, like Osenno, don't dare to offend you. I think...only the five Prime Saints are able to compete with you now."

Wharton also said, "Big brother, you are the most powerful Dragonblood Warrior in the history of our clan. Why be modest?"

Wharton and the others knew exactly how terrifying Linley had become.

After twelve years of painstaking training, Linley's level of achievement in understanding the Elemental Laws of the Earth and the Wind was so high as to make Wharton and the others utterly speechless.

Power?

Linley knew exactly how powerful he currently was.

He had reached the Saint level in human form. Once he Dragonformed, his draconic scales were ten times as powerful as they had been in the past. His strength and battle-qi had also risen to terrifying levels. Linley could fully understand...the reason why his ancestors, despite not having a high level of insight, could rely on Dragonform alone to defeat peak-stage Saint-level magical beasts.

As for insight...

The Throbbing Pulse of the World. He had already mastered 256 layers of vibrational waves. The more waves, the more difficult improving became. It had always been like that, but upon reaching the 256th layer of waves, after spending an entire year, he hadn't been able to improve whatsoever.

It seemed...as though 256 layers was some sort of limit.

"It can't be a limit." Linley was very certain. "According to the War God, if one follows an aspect of the Elemental Laws to its limits, then one would enter the Deity-level. I'm far, far away from the Deity-level. So what exactly comes next, after the 256 layer level?"

Linley didn't know either.

His understandings of the Throbbing Pulse of the World were unique, and there was no one he could ask for advice. All Linley could do every day was to try and immerse himself in the Throbbing Pulse of the World and try to make a breakthrough.

As for the Elemental Laws of the Wind, Linley continued to slowly but surely improve. He hadn't reached a bottleneck yet.

"However, spiritual energy really is hard to build up. After twelve years, I'm still only at the peak of the ninth rank. Breaking through to the Grand Magus Saint level really is hard." Linley sighed in his heart. If anyone else heard what Linley was thinking, they would have cursed him to hell and back.

As a magus, going from the sixth to the seventh rank was one bottleneck, while going from the ninth rank to the Saint-level was the other major bottleneck.

How could this bottleneck be so easily broken through?

Linley looked at Delia, and he couldn't help but think back to that black rock which Bebe had given her on their wedding night. "In just twelve years, Delia has advanced from the seventh rank as a magus to the ninth rank as an Arch Magus. Although she previously had already been at the seventh rank for quite a few years, this sort of improvement rate really is terrifying."

Delia was already an Arch Magus of the ninth rank.

After the wedding, Delia had discovered that it wasn't just her elemental essence affinity that had been raised to a terrifying level; she even was able to absorb mageforce at an astonishing speed, and her spiritual energy rapidly increased as well...her rate of improvement vastly outstripped Linley's. As Linley saw it, there was only one explanation for this change.

That mysterious black rock.

After the meal.

Cena, Taylor, and Sasha were having fun by the lake, while Linley, Wharton, Delia, and the others all sat down.

"Big brother." Wharton finally brought up the purpose of their trip. "Cena and Taylor were tested when they were young. The density of Dragonblood in their veins hasn't reached the required level. It seems we'll have to use that method you spoke of in the past."

Linley frowned.

"Oh? That's right. It is time to use fresh dragon's blood to activate the Dragonblood in their veins, so they can begin training in the Secret Dragonblood Manual early on." Linley nodded slightly. When Linley had chatted with the Planar Overseer, Hodan, he had realized...

There were far more Dragonblood Warriors in the history of the Baruch clan than the book had mentioned. The real number was very high, and they relied on dragon's blood.

"Would it be very dangerous?" Delia was a bit nervous.

"As long as the dragon's blood is mixed in with Blueheart Grass, there is no danger at all to activating the Dragonblood in their veins." Linley said with absolute certainty, while at the same time, he looked at the three children by the lake. "Taylor and Cena need to have their blood activated. What about Sasha?"

"Sasha?" Wharton and Delia both looked at the distant Sasha.

Sasha was just a girl. Although male warriors generally were somewhat superior to female warriors, that didn't mean girls couldn't become experts.

Delia smiled calmly. "Let her make her own choice."

Linley nodded slightly.

....

"Become a Dragonblood Warrior?" Taylor was the first to whoop in joy. "Oh, I'll do it, I'll totally do it. I dream about being a Dragonblood Warrior like Father. Wow! I'm excited just thinking about it."

Cena nodded slightly as well. "I'll do it."

Linley, Wharton, Nina, and Delia weren't surprised. It'd be weird if any of the male children in their lineage passed on this opportunity. Now they all looked at Sasha. Sasha was very quiet. Although she was just ten years old, the beauty she had inherited from Delia was beginning to show.

"I...I'll do it also." Sasha bit her lips, but nodded firmly.

Delia stroked Sasha's head and praised, "Sasha, in the future, you are going to be a powerful female Dragonblood Warrior." A smile appeared on Sasha's face.

"Alright." Linley nodded. "If that's the case...then Wharton, Nina, you can just hand Cena to me. I'll take the three of them to...the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun to search for Saint-level dragons. It's time to engage in some bloodletting with Saint-level dragons." Linley chuckled.

Engage in bloodletting with Saint-level dragons. These words filled the eyes of Sasha, Taylor, and Cena with shock and joy.

"I'll go as well." Wharton was somewhat nervous.

"Hey, little Wharton, you're only at the ninth rank. Even after transforming, you are only an early-stage Saint." Bebe flew over here and said unhappily, "Do you think your level of insight is comparable to the Boss of twelve years ago?"

Although he was also an early-stage Saint after transforming, in terms of insight, Wharton was far inferior to Linley.

"I'll go with the Boss. Shit, if one dragon comes we'll kill one dragon; if two comes, we'll kill one, then capture the other one to use as a mount." Bebe was extremely boastful, but he had the strength to back it up. After the past twelve years, Bebe's power was far stronger than it had been twelve years ago as well.

Wharton nodded and laughed. "Since you are going as well, Bebe, then I won't be worried at all."

The squad was thus decided as being: Linley, Bebe, Delia, and the three kids. Delia was responsible for taking care of the kids, and Bebe's job was to protect them. As for Linley...he would deal with any Saint-level dragons.

....

The skies stretched off far into the distance, and a few white clouds were drifting here and there. A ten-meter long magical beast was soaring through the air at high speed. It was the transformed Bebe, with Delia, Cena, Taylor, and Sasha on his back.

Delia had cast a magic spell to form a protective invisible barrier, preventing the wind from scraping against the children's bodies.

"Wow...Mother, that city is the biggest one I've ever seen." Taylor pointed below at a 'fist-sized' city. Although the city seemed small from up above, the size of this 'fist' was actually a huge space.

A complicated look was in Delia's eyes. Sighing, she said, "That is my homeland, the imperial capital of the Yulan Empire."

"The imperial capital of the Yulan Empire?" Taylor, Sasha, and Cena all looked down.

"Hungry yet?" Delia withdrew some food they had brought along from the interspatial ring. Bebe had transformed to ten meters in length, and his back was naturally very wide. Given that Delia had then used magic to block the wind, this made Sasha, Cena, and Taylor feel as stable as when they were on the ground.

They sat down and began to enjoy the food.

Bebe flew very stably, with no turbulence at all.

"Delia, don't pamper those kids too much." Linley, flying alongside Bebe, said with a laugh as he saw this.

Delia looked at Linley. "Linley, don't reprimand me. You see your children so rarely, and you are going to reprimand me?" Linley immediately didn't dare to say a word. He actually did feel very guilty. Sometimes, he would go off and train for months at a time. He did indeed feel as though he owed the kids and Delia a lot.

Linley looked down at the boundless earth. They weren't too far from the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts now.

The three major gathering grounds for magical beasts in the Yulan continent were the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, the Forest of Darkness, and the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun. Of course, other places also had magical beasts, but they were much rarer in those places. But in these three places, a terrifyingly high number of magical beasts congregated.

By now, both the Forest of Darkness and the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts had a Deity present. Thus, Linley had chosen to go to the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun.

A long time later...

The peaks of the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun appeared in the horizon. The Mountain Range of the Setting Sun started from the Dark Alliance, followed the southern boundaries of the Yulan Empire, and then intersected between the Rhine Empire and the Burning Desert.

In truth, the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun and the Burning Desert were both the southernmost points of the Yulan continent.

If one went past the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun or the Burning Desert, they would enter the boundless Southern Seas.

"Wow, it's so big. It seems to be even longer than the Forest of Darkness." Taylor said in surprise. Taylor and the others had flown on Bebe's back before and had seen the Forest of Darkness from the air.

Cena said, "Taylor, according to the books, the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun and the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts are both very long, but only around a thousand kilometers wide. As for the Forest of Darkness, it is thousands of kilometers long, but also two or three thousand kilometers wide.”

Taylor nodded in understanding.

“Get ready to go down.” Linley suddenly said.

The giant Bebe next to Linley suddenly dove down along with him. When they were only a few hundred meters away from the mountains, the two halted in mid-air.

“We’re going to fly at this height for now. Bebe and I are going to go meet some dragon Saints.” Linley said to Delia and the kids.

“Don’t worry about us, Father.” Taylor said confidently.

Linley, looking at his son, couldn’t help but chuckle, and then split apart from Bebe. At the same time, he began to scan the below area with his spiritual energy. The Mountain Range of the Setting Sun didn’t have fewer monsters than the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts. Naturally, there were quite a few Saints as well.

But the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun was very large. The Saint-level magical beasts were scattered all over. To instantly find a Saint-level dragon was not likely.

“Hrm?” Linley’s spiritual energy suddenly discovered a Saint-level magical beast, one which Linley was fairly familiar with. It was a Violet-

Eyed Goldfur Ape. This terrifying, three-story tall Saint-level beast suddenly noticed a human was scanning him.

“Who is it?” The Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape’s voice rang out like a bolt of thunder, and it raised its head to stare at the human in mid-air.

Linley stood there in mid-air, transmitting his voice downwards. “Linley of the Anarchic Lands. Excuse me for disturbing you.” After finishing speaking, the Violet-Eyed Goldfur Ape didn’t bother with him any further. Saint-level magical beasts were more intelligent than even your average human.

Ones that had lived a long time were very familiar with the experts of the Yulan continent.

Some of the most powerful experts, such as Desri of the Anarchic Lands, Hayward, Tulily of the great plains, were known to them. Linley of the Anarchic Lands had also become well known amongst magical beast experts. As long as Linley didn’t go too far, these Saint-level magical beasts didn’t want to fight such a peak expert either.

After searching for quite a while.

“Boss, I found a Saint-level dragon. It is a darkness-element Tyrant Wyrms.” Bebe’s voice rang out in Linley’s mind. Not hesitating at all, Linley flew directly towards Bebe at high speed.

In the ground atop a mountain, Linley instructed, “Cena, you and the other kids all stay here. Delia will take care of you...Bebe, no matter what, you have to protect them.” Linley looked at Bebe, who said confidently, “Don’t worry, Boss. My Shadowshape Doppelganger Technique is able to create four now.”

Given Bebe’s terrifying speed and his Shadowshape Doppelganger Technique, even three ordinary Saint-level magical beasts working in concert still wouldn’t be able to hurt Delia and the others.

“Be careful, Father.” Sasha said.

Linley began to laugh. “Right. Just wait here. I’ll go bring that Tyrant Wurm over.” As he spoke, Linley flew away at high speed. Delia and the kids just stood there, watching. Fortunately, because they were on a hill, they could see far.

A short while later...

Linley arrived in the air above the Tyrant Wurm. The dragon race was divided into two types; the extremely strong and tough wingless dragons, and the magically powerful winged dragons. The Tyrant Wurm was one of the most powerful wingless dragons. Its enormous body was over a hundred meters long, and its pitch-black, marble-like scales were terrifyingly hard.

The Tyrant Wurm had already noticed Linley. Its massive eyes burned like fire as it stared at Linley. “Who are you?”

“Linley of the Anarchic Lands.” Linley said.

"Linley?" The Tyrant Wyrms growled, "I am Plaket [Pu'lei'ka'te] of the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun. Linley, what do you want?" This Saint-level Tyrant Wyrms, Mountain Range of the Setting Sun, was also an apex combatant.

Linley smiled. "Plaket, I want to borrow some of your draconic blood."

"Growl..." The eyes of the Tyrant Wyrms, Plaket, filled with a fiery rage, and the massive trees and boulders around him began to burn. "Linley, are you trying to humiliate me, Plaket? If you don't beat it, then prepare to receive my fiery rage."

In mid-air, Linley could only shake his head and sigh helplessly. With a flip of his hand, he withdrew Bloodviolet.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 27, A Heated Battle

Seeing Linley draw out Bloodviolet, the Tyrant Wyrms knew that Linley was going to go head on against him!

As a Saint-level dragon, the Tyrant Wyrms was naturally extremely arrogant.

“Bang!” It angrily stomped the ground, causing the earth to shake and crack. The nearby trees all snapped apart and fell, and the Tyrant Wyrms’s hill-sized body shot directly into the air, breathing hellfire as its fiery red eyes stared at Linley.

It didn’t dare to be overconfident.

“Plaket, you are so huge. I just want a little bit of draconic blood.” Linley shook his head and sighed.

“You are trying to insult me, insult a mighty Saint-level dragon!” The Tyrant Wyrms, Plaket, suddenly opened his mouth and blasted out a scorching cloud of black draconic fire, which suddenly enveloped ‘Linley’...but ‘Linley’ immediately dissipated.

Plaket suddenly stared upwards.

Linley was right above him. “Be careful. I’m going to start attacking you now.” Linley seemed to be quite polite.

"Hrmph." The Tyrant Wyrms, Plaket, felt even more insulted, and his massive body immediately rose at a terrifying pace. "Boom!" A sonic boom could be heard as the Tyrant Wyrms sent its entire massive bulk against Linley.

But hadn't he already noticed Linley's astonishing speed?

"What a sly Tyrant Wyrms." Linley's body immediately transformed into a wind-shadow, appearing somewhere else. A black shadow sliced through the air, striking through 'Linley'. It was the Tyrant Wyrms's draconic tail.

"Boom!" The speed of the Tyrant Wyrms's tail caused the air itself to form enormous wind blades which flew in the same direction. The nearby trees and boulders were chopped into small pieces like tofu, and the nearby trees all collapsed.

The speed of the draconic tail alone was enough to create such terrifyingly powerful wind blades. Then how powerful must the actual tail itself be?

"Must not take this draconic tail head on." Linley's face grew serious.

"Whoosh!" Linley's speed suddenly reached its limit, turning into nothing more than a tiny gust of wind. Linley's current level of control over the wind was now far more terrifying than it had been twelve years ago. The Tyrant Wyrms's entire body was emitting a scorching, infernal heat, and the air around instantly began to rise to a terrifyingly high temperature.

If Linley was going to attack, he would have to enter this realm of infernal heat.

Linley's body was covered with that azurish-black wave of energy. Using the Pulseguard Defense, Linley charged straight into the black flames.

"Swish!" Bloodviolet transformed into a streak of violet lightning. It seemed to have passed through reality itself as it reached a terrifying speed, causing space to grow distorted. The blurred space began to fold and distort, and the violet ray of light landed directly on the Tyrant Wurm's body.

Profound Truths of the Wind – Spatial Folding.

Crunch!

Bloodviolet chopped out a large wound that was one meter long and thirty centimeters deep. However, not a single drop of the Tyrant Wurm's blood came out. This was because its scales were more than thirty centimeters thick.

"What strong defense. It wasn't broken through by my sword." Linley was startled. The power of his Spatial Folding attack was so great that it was only one step lower than Higginson's 'Illusionary Void Sword'. After all, Linley's understanding of the 'Fast' aspect was still lower than Higginson's.

Higginson had trained for thousands of years, after all.

"If you have any balls, come fight me, Plaket, head on!" The Tyrant Wyrms roared angrily. He could clearly sense that Linley's speed was simply too fast, but just as he roared out these words and Linley was about to respond, dozens of black tentacles of infernal fire suddenly appeared out of nowhere from the Tyrant Wyrms' body and surrounded Linley.

"Tentacles?"

Linley was startled, while at the same time, he felt the tentacles surrounding him were as cold as ice. Linley didn't worry about his current situation at all. Instead, he began to wonder, "These things are like octopus tentacles. How is it that a Tyrant Wyrms..."

"Boss, these are the 'Icy Tentacles' of the darkness-style spells." Bebe's voice rang out in Linley's mind.

Linley now understood.

The Tyrant Wyrms turned and stared at Linley with its flaming eyes. "Linley, prepare to die." But before it even had a chance to attack, the deep azure layer of energy around Linley began to roil about and expand...and as it did so, those Icy Tentacles began to shudder.

"Bang!" They exploded.

The Pulseguard Defense now had 256 layers to it. It was more than ten times as powerful as it had been in the past.

But just as Linley exploded those Icy Tentacles..."Swish!" That lightning-fast draconic tail slashed over once more. Linley's body instantly retreated at high speed, but it nonetheless grazed the edges of the Pulseguard Defense. The terrifying power transmitted by that draconic tail caused Linley's body to shake.

"There is nothing even remotely 'ordinary' about the strength of Tyrant Wyrms." Linley was secretly surprised.

Experts on the level of Haydson probably couldn't do anything against this Tyrant Wurm, given its power.

"Growl!" The Tyrant Wurm roared angrily, and its terrifying voice somehow seemed to be 'locked' into a specific region and blasted against Linley. The terrifying sound caused Linley's ears to ring, and then, the Tyrant Wurm wildly charged against Linley.

There was only a distance of a hundred meters between Linley and the Tyrant Wurm, but as it charged at Linley, its size rapidly began to shrink.

However, its charging attack power seemed to have become even more powerful.

"Groowl!" In the blink of an eye, it seemed like an earthquake or a mountain was charging at Linley.

At the same time, a gray fog appeared out of nowhere, surrounding everything within several hundred meters, including Linley.

"Can't get hit." Linley didn't pay any attention to the fog at all, and he quickly began to dodge as fast as he could while Bloodviolet began to dance in his hands as well. He just barely dodged the charging attack of the Tyrant Wyrms, and then Linley delivered yet another sword onto the Tyrant Wyrms' body...

His sword was agile and mysterious. It fused both the 'Spatial Freezing' concept and the 'Spatial Folding' concept, two major yet opposite concepts, to form the 'Tempos of the Wind'. The power of this attack was a level higher than even the 'Illusionary Void Sword'.

"Crunch!"

That thick scale instantly split apart.

"Groooooowl!" The Tyrant Wyrms let out an agonized, furious growl. Instantly, fresh blood began to spurt out from that meter-long wound.

Seeing draconic blood spurt out, Cena, Sasha, and Taylor, watching from afar, all let out whoops of joy. A hint of a smile appeared on Delia's face as well. Clearly, Linley had the advantage. And in truth...Linley hadn't even gone into his Dragonform.

The Tyrant Wyrms were actually knocked flying towards the ground.

"Crash!" An earthquake occurred as the Tyrant Wyrms' hill-sized body smashed into the ground. At the same time, it raised its head high and howled. "Hooooowl!" A terrifying burst of sound exploded forth from the Tyrant Wyrms, transforming all the nearby trees to splinters.

Bebe managed to react very quickly, instantly creating a black barrier around Delia and the children.

"What are you doing? Showing off your loud voice?" Linley flew down from mid-air. "I've already opened up a wound on your body. Just let me retrieve a little bit of fresh blood. Don't worry, I won't kill you."

"You are insulting me."

The Tyrant Wyrms, Plaket, growled with the utmost anger.

But Linley's face suddenly changed as he turned to stare into the horizon. Two enormous magical beasts were flying towards them at high speed. One of them had a perfectly sinuous body and a pair of enormous physical wings. It was one of the legendary Saint-level Gold Dragons.

As for the other dragon, its shape was roughly the same as the Tyrant Wyrms, except its scales were a deep blue, and lightning crackled on the surface of its body.

"Saint-level Gold Dragon. Saint-level Thunder Lizard!" Linley felt a bit numb.

The Tyrant Wyrms were already very formidable. Even Linley, if he didn't Dragonform, wouldn't dare to take the Tyrant Wyrms' draconic tail head on just by using his enhanced Pulseguard Defense. The weakness of the Tyrant Wyrms was their speed.

But Saint-level Gold Dragons were extremely fast, and Thunder Lizards... were as fast as lightning.

"Plaket, what's wrong?" A deep voice came forth from the Thunder Lizard. "Is it this detestable human?"

The Tyrant Wyrms growled, "It is, big brother. This detestable human is relying on his speed and reaction speed." The Tyrant Wyrms were furious. If it wasn't for the fact that he was slow, how would he be losing? Tyrant Wyrms were slow, but possessed terrifying defense and attack. They were similar to Undying Warriors.

The Thunder Lizard stared at Linley with its two golden eyes.

Saint-level Thunder Lizard. Saint-level Gold Dragon. Saint-level Tyrant Wyrms. These three dragons made up an extremely powerful force in the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun. Whenever they met a powerful foe, they would all help each other. When they combined forces...they were terrifying, especially when they compensated for each other's deficiencies.

"Father!" The distant Taylor grow nervous. Cena and Sasha both watched the three Saint-level dragons with concern as well.

The Tyrant Wyrms flew into the air. Each of the enormous dragons were the size of a small mountain. The three Saint-level dragons flew in the air side by side, blocking out the sunlight. Their terrifying suppressive aura alone was enough to make one's heart shudder.

"If he's just fast, he's not worth us using our combination attack." A calm voice came out from the throat of the Saint-level Gold Dragon.

A hint of a smile was on Linley's face. This battle was becoming more and more amusing.

Suddenly...

"Swish!" An enormous flash of lightning split the skies. The Thunder Lizard's enormous body suddenly appeared in front of Linley, and it reached out with its sharp claws at such speed that Linley couldn't dodge at all. It clawed viciously against Linley's body.

Linley's Pulseguard Defense was actually reduced by more than half in power, and Linley's body was sent flying.

"Bang!" The Thunder Lizard's eyes simultaneously shot out two bolts of lightning, striking against Linley's body.

Linley's body slammed against the wall, then slid down. "Bang!" The ground shook from the collision and began to crack, while a huge gouge appeared in the ground.

"This speed is monstrously fast, almost as fast as Bebe." Linley, in the ground, was secretly startled. "However, the Thunder Lizard's attack power is a good deal lower than the Tyrant Wyrms'. My Pulseguard Defense was almost broken through, but in the end, it still managed to take the hit."

High speed, but somewhat weaker attack.

After all, if a creature moved as fast as lightning but had an attack as powerful as the Tyrant Wyrms, then it would be invincible.

"Is father fine?" Sasha was nervous.

"He's fine." Bebe could clearly sense Linley's current condition. Laughing, he said, "I bet the Boss is actually really excited right now."

Right now, the three Saint-level dragons were circling in the air above, staring at the ground.

"Bam!"

Linley suddenly erupted from another spot in the ground, shooting out at high speed. But just as he shot out, a terrifying beam of light suddenly shot out towards Linley's head, carrying a terrifying amount of light-style energy. Linley's heart shuddered, and he immediately dodged, but as he did so...

Just as the light touched Linley's body, Linley felt a terrifying wave of force attack his soul.

This was a very familiar sensation. When Linley had tested for magical attitude, they had used this 'Overawe' spell to test his spiritual energy's strength. But the 'Overawe' spell, when used, was like a thin, snake-like ribbon of light.

By contrast, the Overawe attack this Gold Dragon was using was a ten-meter thick beam of light.

"Light-style magic, 'Overawe'? How can there be such a powerful 'Overawe' spell?"

"Haha, my turn!" The Tyrant Wyrms, Plaket, charged down, and its terrifying draconic tail slashed through the air like a whip against Linley. This sort of group attack was one which these three Saint-level dragons had perfected. The Gold Dragon would use the 'Spiritual Intimidation' spell to cause the enemy to feel woozy, and then the Tyrant Wyrms would deliver it a full-strength attack.

"Whooooosh."

As the enormous draconic tail swung down, space itself began to tremble, and a terrifying howling sound wave blasted the nearby trees into splinters.

"Haaargh!" A furious roar emanated from the center of that gradually dissipating beam of light, and then the Tyrant Wyrms felt a terrifying force binding its draconic tail. The beam of light disappeared, and that Saint-level Thunder Lizard, Gold Dragon, and the distant Bebe, Delia, Taylor, and the other kids all saw a terrifying sight.

A human-shaped aberration, covered in deep azure scales, emerged. On top of its scales was a layer of azurish light that was constantly flowing around it.

This was the Dragonform of a Dragonblood Warrior who had reached the Saint-level!

A peak-stage Dragonblood Warrior!

His arms were wrapped around the Tyrant Wyrms tail. The mountain-sized Tyrant Wyrm roared madly, trying to struggle to pull free its draconic tail, but it couldn't budge Linley at all. This was the terrifying strength of a Saint-level Dragonblood Warrior.

"Haaaaaargh!"

With a powerful, explosive roar, Linley actually swung the draconic tail and sent the mountain-sized Tyrant Wyrm flying in an arced line before slamming heavily against the ground.

"Bam!" The Tyrant Wyrms body smashed heavily into the ground, which immediately cracked and shuddered, blasting countless boulders and trees apart as though they were made of tofu.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 28, Submission

“Rumble.” The earth broke apart with many cracks appearing, and sand and stones slowly rolled into those crevices.

A mountain-sized indentation in the ground. The massive dragon shook its head twice, then stared at the terrifying creature which had stopped in midair. The dragon’s fiery red eyes were filled with disbelief. A peak Dragonblood Warrior! Those dark golden eyes swept down towards the Tyrant Wyrms.

Silence!

The only sound that could be heard was that of the wind blowing, the leaves falling, and dust scattering. The Tyrant Wyrms, the Thunder Lizard, and the Gold Dragon had all been stunned by Linley’s terrifying strength.

“Wow! Father’s awesome!”

The distant Taylor was beginning to cheer, while Cena and Sasha were excited as well. In Delia’s heart, she felt all the more proud of Linley. After all, this was her man! Bebe chortled and said, “These three Saint-level dragons aren’t bad. They’ve forced the Boss to use his Dragonform.”

Linley’s current Dragonform was different from how it had been in the past.

In the past, Linley’s scales had been black, but now, they were a fusion between 'black' and 'azure', creating a 'deep azure' color!

"Although I drank the blood of the Armored Razorback Wyrms in order to activate my Dragonblood in my veins, it was still the Dragonblood that truly caused my power to increase." Linley secretly mused. How could the energy in the draconic crystal of the Armored Razorback Wyrms compare with the exalted lineage of the Dragonblood Warriors?

A pure Dragonblood Warrior, when transformed, should have azure scales like Wharton did.

Despite having drunk dragon's blood, upon transforming after having reached the Saint-level, the scales would still trend towards azure.

The massive body of the Tyrant Wyrms flew into the air, once more joining the Thunder Lizard and the Gold Dragon. These three dragons exchanged glances, then turned and looked seriously at Linley. They didn't have any of their earlier arrogance and boastfulness.

Linley had a better sense for these three Saint-level dragons as well.

The Tyrant Wyrms' power and strength wasn't any weaker than that of peak Dragonblood Warriors. The reason why Linley had been able to so easily grab the opponent's tail wasn't just through his strength; he had also used his Pulseguard Defense to reduce the opponent's attack power.

After transforming, the battle-qi in Linley's body was far more powerful than it had been in the past.

The Pulseguard Defense was naturally even more powerful after transforming as well. Using it to reduce the attack power of the tail before grabbing it allowed him to seemingly easily grab the Tyrant Wyrms' tail, then send it flying far away.

As for the Thunder Lizard...

Linley was certain that even after transforming, in terms of speed, he was still a level lower than the Thunder Lizard. But the opponent's attacks weren't very strong and thus weren't able to harm him. Naturally, the 'not very strong' attacks was only in reference to someone with Linley's level of terrifying attack power.

Gold Dragons...

This was a race of dragons that was extremely good at using magic. Linley was now certain of it. But what they had done just then was a simple exchange. He still wasn't too clear on the extent of it.

"Done chatting?"

Linley stood there in mid-air, his dark golden eyes staring at the three Saint-level dragons. In a bright voice, he said, "The three of you, do you intend to fight me to the death, or just give me a little bit of draconic blood?"

The three Saint level dragons had already come to a decision. Their leader, the Thunder Lizard, rumbled out, "Linley of the Anarchic Lands, your power has earned our respect. As long as you leave immediately, we can agree to not quibble about what just happened.”

Linley’s lips quirked upwards.

Twelve years of quiet training had improved his temper quite a bit compared to the past.

“It seems we will have to let our fists do the talking.” Linley clenched his fists, and a wave of deep azure battle-qi spread out around Linley, blasting wildly in every direction and causing the entire area to shake.

Linley’s dark golden eyes stared coldly at those three Saint level dragons. “Come. I haven’t had a true, full-force fight in twelve years. Today...I’ll have a good bit of fun with you.” Linley’s draconic tail swished, causing the air to shudder with each movement.

The three Saint level dragons all stared at Linley.

“That was just one of our simplest teamwork attacks. You had best not really believe you can beat all three of us.” The Thunder Lizard rumbled. “Linley, I’ll tell you clearly. The name of this technique is called ‘Lightning Flashing, Thunder Booming’.”

Clearly, this Saint-level Thunder Lizard was totally confident.

Linley stood there in midair like a demonic fiend, not concerned about the three Saint-level dragons in front of him at all.

"Rumble..."

The Thunder Lizard's blue scales began to flash with lightning, and the air itself seemed to have become electrified as lightning snaked everywhere. At the center of it, the Thunder Lizard stared coldly at Linley...and then suddenly, a terrifying, enormous bolt of lightning struck towards Linley.

No. It wasn't a bolt of lightning. It was the Thunder Lizard's body itself!

"Haha..."

Laughing loudly, Linley instantly transformed into countless shadows as he began to move at high speed. The space around Linley seemed to have frozen, while at other times, it seemed to have folded and distorted. The area around him was totally blurred.

The Dragonblood Warrior, Linley, was constantly shifting about.

Relying on his understanding of the Elemental Laws of the Wind, he was actually able to dodge the Thunder Lizard's attack. The dragon passed by Linley, clearly not having hit him at all...but the lightning flashing in the Thunder Lizard's eyes became even more cold and sinister.

"Rumble..." A clap of thunder could be heard.

The thunderclap seemed to appear in Linley's area, as the Thunder Lizard's powerful draconic tail struck wildly and nonstop at Linley. The speed of the tail was far faster than the speed of the Thunder Lizard itself, and Linley didn't have time to dodge at all.

Because of the back-and-forth motion of the attacking tail, the nearby space began to be distorted, creating multiple terrifying thunderous booms.

The draconic tail attack was the real power of the 'Lightning Flashing, Thunder Booming' attack.

Linley's Pulseguard Defense retracted to the thickness of just twenty centimeters, but the power of the Pulseguard Defense didn't lessen at all. It was like an elastic membrane; each time the draconic tail slashed towards him, the Pulseguard Defense was able to neutralize over half of the force.

One or two hits, Linley didn't mind.

But in the blink of an eye, that draconic tail had whipped him a thousand times.

"This speed really is terrifying." Linley was truly speechless. He had never seen such frightening speed. A dragon's tail was also shockingly fast, and naturally, the tail of the speed-focused Thunder Lizard had reached an apex of speed.

"Is Father alright?" The distant Sasha was worried.

"Uncle Bebe, is Uncle Linley...?" Cena was a bit worried as well. They simply couldn't tell clearly what was going on in the battle in the distance. All they heard was constant, awe-inspiring thunderclaps and countless lightning bolts appearing in the area.

Bebe grinned widely, revealing his white fangs.

"Beat it!" Linley let out an angry growl.

And then, with a clapping sound, the Thunder Lizard suddenly retreated at high speed, while at the same time, its draconic tail could no longer attack at high speed...because just then, Linley had landed a full force punch against the Thunder Lizard's tail.

The Thunder Lizard possessed powerful defense. An ordinary power punch wouldn't do anything to it, but Linley's punch included the 'Profound Truths of the Earth'. The cartilage and soft, flexible bones inside the draconic tail had been broken by the vibrations. The Thunder Lizard roared angrily, "Quick!"

The three Saint-level dragons moved in concert in a practiced manner.

"Groooooowl!" An angry howl erupted from the Gold Dragon's mouth.

The Gold Dragon had been collecting energy for a powerful attack this entire time. And now, a pure, thick white spear of light shot down towards Linley from up high. This pure white spear carried with it a terrifying amount of force, and even Linley's face changed slightly.

"Light-style, forbidden magic: 'Holylight Lance'?"

The power of a single-target forbidden-level spell was shockingly strong.

Linley didn't have the chance to dodge at all. All he could do was watch as the light flashed, and as it did, the huge white spear of light slammed against his body, like a sharp spear slamming against a tough shield. But this spear was the light-style forbidden level spell, 'Holylight Lance'.

And the shield was a peak Dragonblood Warrior who had the Pulseguard Defense!

"Boom!"

Linley's body was sent flying into the ground. The collision between him and the Holylight Lance had caused invisible cracks in space in every direction, and wherever those cracks in space passed by, the nearby trees and boulders turned into powder.

The cracks were like ripples in water.

Even the earth itself rippled once.

"Careful."

Bebe immediately used a powerful amount of darkness-style energy to easily stop this omnidirectional ripple attack. Even at such a distance, the ripple still possessed tremendous force, and within a radius of several kilometers, everything had been turned into dust. Not even a single leaf could be seen.

Because the leaves had been turned to dust as well.

"Is he injured?" The Tyrant Wyrms said quietly.

"That was a forbidden-level spell. Even powerful Saints shouldn't be able to take it head on. However, Plaket, since he was able to grab onto your draconic tail, most likely his defense is very powerful." The Gold Dragon was somewhat uncertain and hesitating as he spoke. "But even if it couldn't kill him, it should have badly injured him."

"Prepare the final attack." The Thunder Lizard said quietly.

The Gold Dragon and the Tyrant Wyrms immediately began to prepare. Their ultimate attack was a single combination attack using the power of all three of these Saint-level dragons. This combination attack was so strong that as far as they were concerned...there shouldn't be any expert beneath the Deity level who was capable of blocking it.

The Gold Dragon's massive mouth was mumbling, as though chanting the words to some sort of malediction.

Draconic-language spell!

"Bam!" Linley shot out from the ground like an arrow with grace and speed. Not a single wound could be seen on him. The defense granted to him after transforming by his Pulseguard Defense and his draconic scales was terrifying indeed.

Just then, the forbidden-level spell had broken through his Pulseguard Defense, but the remainder of the power of the spell wasn't able to damage his scales at all.

Suddenly, the world began to shake. An invisible ripple began to emanate from the Gold Dragon's body, then charged directly towards Linley. Linley instantly understood...in the past, Desri had used this exact technique to badly wound Lehman, the Commander of the Zealot Division, and knock him into the lake.

The ultimate attack of the Saint-level Gold Dragon – Soul Shout!

The Pulseguard Defense around Linley's body just barely weakened the power of this invisible ripple, which charged directly against Linley's consciousness.

Now...

In the mysterious depths of his consciousness, a half-translucent, seven-colored crystal floated, surrounded by an endless, ocean-like amount of spiritual energy. This endless amount of spiritual energy slowly flowed about it like water, but with a strange rhythm that seemed to carry the mysteries of the Profound Truths of the Earth within it.

If one was able to carefully inspect it, one would find that the spiritual energy surrounding that seven-colored crystal had an extremely faint layer of azure light protecting it as well.

Currently, that external burst of ripple-like spiritual energy was charging in wildly, with the target being Linley's soul.

"Bang!"

The Gold Dragon's most powerful attack collided with Linley's soul.

When the Gold Dragon used this technique, the Tyrant Wyrms once more began to emit hellfire from its body, while at the same time, with a thundering sound, its muscles and bones began to crackle and pop as it gathered a tremendous amount of force.

The Thunder Lizard was very confident. It was certain...that right now, Linley had already had his soul badly damaged. Even if he didn't die, he would be dizzy for a while.

In this sort of situation, Linley wouldn't be able to control his defense at all.

But just as the Tyrant Wyrms was preparing its most powerful attack...

"Swish!" Linley, who logically shouldn't have been able to move at all, suddenly transformed into a blur and struck against the exhausted Gold Dragon. With just one mighty fist, he smashed the Saint-level Gold Dragon out of the air and into the ground.

The Tyrant Wyrms and Thunder Lizard stared at Linley in shock.

Linley's dark gold eyes swept them with its icy gaze. His voice was calm. "Stop resisting. Plaket, I can tell that the power of the attack you are about to use is definitely ridiculously powerful. However, given your speed, there's no way you will be able to harm me at all."

How could the Tyrant Wyrms not understand this logic?

If he couldn't touch the opponent, what use was even the most powerful of attacks? They had thought that combining this attack with the 'Soul Shout' would be perfect, but Linley wasn't affected by the Soul Shout at all. The three Saint-level dragons couldn't believe what they had just seen.

Linley was secretly laughing.

"Spiritual attacks? My ancestors in the Dragonblood Warrior clan were able to reach the Saint-level in just a few decades. They didn't have a high level of understanding, and their spiritual energy wasn't very strong either. There are many people in the world capable of 'spiritual attacks'. So why, then, was our Dragonblood Warrior clan so famous? Why would they be proclaimed as the strongest of Saints?"

The Dragonblood Warriors were the Supreme Warriors who had been blessed by the heavens.

Even Linley's ancestors, who had ordinary souls, no longer feared spiritual attacks upon reaching the Saint-level. This was because once they Dragonformed at the Saint-level, their souls would be protected by a unique, strange energy possessed only by the Dragonblood Warrior lineage.

This was what a Dragonblood Warrior was! The invincible Dragonblood Warriors!

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 29, Glory

Seeing this godlike, invincible Dragonblood Warrior, the Saint-level Thunder Lizard, Gold Dragon, and Tyrant Wyrms all began to feel a hint of dread in their hearts.

Right. Dread!

Dread of Linley killing them. These three Saint-level dragons already understood that the Gold Dragon who possessed the most powerful magic amongst them was unable to harm Linley, while the physically most powerful Tyrant Wyrms wasn't able to match him in speed.

As for the Thunder Lizard, someone like Linley with such ridiculous defense was his greatest bane.

"Will we die?"

The three Saint-level dragons didn't know what to do. They didn't think that Linley would spare them, because at the beginning, Linley had been lenient with them, but then the three of them had used their ultimate attacks on him, trying to kill him.

Just then, they truly had wanted to kill Linley. Would Linley spare them?

The three Saint-level dragons didn't think so!

But just then, a calm voice rang out, which to the three of them sounded like music from the heavens. "Choose death, or choose to serve as my mounts for a hundred years." Linley's dark golden eyes stared at the three Saint-level dragons. Perhaps because of his twelve years of quiet meditation, Linley was now rarely moved to engage in slaughter.

The three Saint-level dragons were unable to deal with Linley. But they would be effective against people of Osenno's level.

The Saint-level Thunder Lizard, Gold Dragon, and Tyrant Wyrms all secretly sighed in relief. Just a hundred years. To these creatures with an unending lifespan, that was a fairly short time frame. In addition, as magical beasts, they respected the powerful. Linley had defeated the three of them by himself.

Submitting to him wouldn't be considered a stain on their honor.

"Master!"

The three Saint-level dragons lowered their proud heads towards Linley. From far away, the watching Delia, Taylor, Cena, and Sasha all came over, riding on Bebe's back. The kids were cheering happily. Even the mighty Saint-level dragons, in the end, had lowered their heads to Linley, the one who the kids worshipped.

"Father, you are so powerful! Wow! Three Saint-level dragons!" Taylor screamed in excitement.

Sasha and Cena were normally calm, but upon seeing the three massive Saint-level dragons, their eyes shone and they were extremely enthusiastic as well. Bebe sneered, "You three stupid worms, why'd you have to fight against my Boss? You should've just admitted defeat from the start."

"Hrmph!" The three Saint-level dragons stared furiously at Bebe.

Only now did Linley speak out. "This is my dear brother, 'Bebe'. He is also a Saint-level magical beast. However, his power is far higher than you three's. Bebe's speed is almost on par with yours, Thunder Lizard. He isn't that far off. But his defense and attack are both greater than that of the Tyrant Wyrms."

These words utterly stunned the three Saint-level dragons.

Was there such a monster of a magical beast in the world?

Speed almost on par with a Thunder Lizard, and power and defense even more terrifying than a Tyrant Wurm. How could this sort of magical beast exist?

"You are a rat-type magical beast?" The Saint-level Thunder Lizard said in a low voice, shocked as he stared at Bebe. They didn't doubt Linley's words in the slightest. An expert on Linley's level wouldn't lie to them.

Bebe nodded.

"But...but...your fur is black. Not violet." The Thunder Lizard didn't dare believe it. "In the Yulan continent, there's only one type of rat-type magical beast at the Saint-level...the legendary Emperor Rat of the Forest of Darkness. But the Emperor Rat's fur is a violet gold color."

The place where the most Stoneater Rats and Shadowmice lived was the Forest of Darkness.

"Violet gold?" Bebe suddenly understood. "Oh. You are talking about my friend. He is indeed an Emperor Rat."

"A black Saint-level rat-type magical beast, this..." The three Saint-level dragons simply couldn't understand it.

Bebe looked at Linley. "Boss, isn't it time to be getting back?" Since they had the three Saint-level dragons as steeds now, they could go back and have Cena, Taylor, and Sasha rouse the Dragonblood in their veins.

The Tyrant Wyrms rumbled, "Master, aren't you going to cast the soul-binding technique?" Only by using the soul-binding technique would one be able to effectively control a magical beast. Since these three dragons had admitted defeat, they were willing to accept the restrictions of the soul-binding technique.

"No need." Linley said calmly.

Soul-binding technique?

Based on what Linley knew, a person was only capable of having three magical beasts. If he wanted to take over another one, he would then have to release one of his other master-servant relationships with another magical beast. Linley already had two magical beasts. He would at most be able to take another one.

"No need?" The three Saint-level dragons were shocked. Three Saint-level magical beasts were presenting themselves to him, but he didn't want them?

"I trust you." Linley said calmly.

The sensation of being trusted was quite a good one.

"We three brothers have agreed to serve as mounts for a hundred years. We definitely will honor our word." The three Saint-level dragons felt a hint of admiration for Linley in their hearts. Seeing the three Saint-level dragons being so obedient before him, Linley felt a hint of nostalgia.

He still remembered when he was young, his father had led him to read the legends of his clan in the ancestral hall.

"Baruch, the very first Dragonblood Warrior of the Yulan continent. In the year 4560 of the Yulan calendar, outside the walls of the city of Linnan, Baruch did battle against a Black Dragon and a Titanic Frost Wurm. In the end, he slew both the Titanic Frost Wurm and the Black Dragon, causing his fame to be spread across the world. In the year 4579 of the Yulan calendar, along the coastline of the northern sea of the continent, Baruch did battle against a Nine-Headed Serpent Emperor. On that day, the waves crashed unceasingly and nearby cities crumbled, but after a vicious fight lasting a full day and night, Baruch finally executed the Nine-Headed Serpent Emperor...in the end, Baruch founded the Baruch clan, and became the first leader of the Baruch clan!"

"Ryan Baruch, the second Dragonblood Warrior of the Yulan continent. In the year 4690 of the Yulan calendar, in the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts, he defeated and subdued a Saint-level Golden Dragon, and became known as the Golden Dragonrider Saint! In the year 4697..."

"Hazard Baruch, the third Dragonblood Warrior of the Yulan continent. Born in the year 5360 of the Yulan calendar, in his very first battle, he fought fiercely with a Saint-level Bloody-eyed Maned Lion in the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun. He defeated the lion, forcing it to scurry away and flee, causing Hazard to become famous throughout the world..."

Linley still remembered how his father had looked.

That look of arrogance and pride.

Pride in his ancestors. Pride in being a descendant of the Dragonblood Warrior clan.

However, his entire life, his father had one regret. He had always dreamed of reclaiming his clan's ancestral heirloom. Dreamed...that one day, he would witness the rebirth of his clan's glory.

"Father...can you see this?" Linley murmured in his heart. "I, Linley Baruch, Yulan calendar year 10022, went by myself to the Mountain Range of the Setting Sun and fought against three Saint-level dragons and then tamed them." This record alone surpassed the achievements of his ancestors.

Linley could name himself the most powerful Dragonblood Warrior in his clan's history without any shame.

"If only Father could see this..."

His father had desired his entire life to restore the clan's glory. When Linley had become an Ernst Institute student, his father had entrusted him with the important tasks of recovering the clan's ancestral heirloom as well as restoring the clan's glory. And today...

Linley had done it all!

But his father was gone forever.

"Let's go. Time to return. The three of you need to shrink a bit." Linley sighed, then issued the orders.

Instantly, the three Saint-level dragons shrank in size to roughly ten meters or so, the same size as Bebe. With the three dragons in tow, Linley's group began to fly at high speed north, towards the Anarchic Lands.

The Anarchic Lands. Outside Baruch City. Atop Mt. Blackraven.

"Big brother, your actions really were amazing." Wharton's face was covered in shock and joy. "You brought three Saint-level dragons here directly to have them serve as mounts for a hundred years. In the future, our descendants won't need to go find Saint-level dragons at all."

Linley laughed.

Indeed, when he had decided to have these three Saint-level dragons serve as mounts for a hundred years, aside from increasing the Saint-level power on his side, part of it was indeed for the reason Wharton stated.

“Big brother.” Wharton was extremely excited. “I have the feeling...that our Dragonblood Warrior clan is about to reclaim our glory of thousands of years ago. Didn’t you say to me that Hodan said in the past, our clan had dozens of Dragonblood Warriors?”

Linley nodded. “Right. Thousands of years ago, our Dragonblood Warrior clan definitely used this same method to produce many Dragonblood Warriors. Dozens of Dragonblood Warriors in one place... the stories of the Four Supreme Warrior clans being able to dominate the Yulan continent definitely weren’t just tall tales.”

How splendid his clan had been! One could just imagine it.

“Unfortunately, the reproductive ability of our Dragonblood Warrior clan is weak.” Wharton sighed.

Indeed. Linley’s grandfather had only a single son, Hogg. Hogg only had two children; Linley and Wharton. It must be understood...in many clans, there would be seven or eight children in each household. But the Dragonblood Warrior clan clearly was different.

Linley and Delia, aside from their twins, hadn’t been able to have a single additional child.

“The heavens have already been kind enough to us. If they also gave us many children...then nobody else would be able to survive in the Yulan continent.” Linley laughed, and Wharton laughed as well. Indeed, a person couldn’t be too greedy.

Linley instructed, “Wharton, let Cena and the other two kids prepare. Tomorrow, the Dragonblood lineage in their veins will be roused.”

Rousing the Dragonblood was a major event. The next day, Haeru and Bebe both stayed obediently at Mt. Blackraven. The three Saint-level dragons, knowing this was Linley’s will, didn’t object at all. To these three massive Saint-level dragons, it was just a little bit of blood. It was nothing at all.

The Tyrant Wurm, Thunder Lizard, and Gold Dragon had all shrunk in size, and were looking at the three kids. Laughing, Linley looked at the three children. “You all know that once you drink live dragon’s blood and rouse the Dragonblood in your veins, the type of blood you drank will have a major impact on your transformation.”

“For example, in the past, I drank the blood of an Armored Razorback Wurm, which is why my knees, forehead, and elbows all sprouted the razor spikes of the Armored Razorback Wurm. And my speed was relatively fast as well. This, too, was thanks to the influence of the Armored Razorback Wurm.” Linley explained in detail. “Think well on your choice.”

Taylor, Sasha, and Cena were all considering this question.

The three of them could choose the same dragon, or they could choose different ones. For these three Saint-level dragons to give all three children blood was very simple.

"Taylor, which one do you choose?" Delia looked at her son.

Taylor carefully looked at the three Saint-level dragons, then focused his gaze on the tyrannical, indomitable Tyrant Wyrms. "I choose the Tyrant Wyrms. He's so powerful. I like him." Taylor's words made the Tyrant Wyrms very happy. "Indeed, I, Plaket, am quite powerful."

"I choose the Gold Dragon." Sasha's clear voice rang out. "The Gold Dragon is so beautiful. Those scales are so slick, they look just like gold."

"Beautiful?" Linley and Delia exchanged glances.

Their daughter had actually chosen the Gold Dragon for this reason? The Gold Dragon was relatively happy as well. In the past, he would have considered offering his blood as an insult, but now, his master was Linley. For his master's child to select him meant that they liked him.

Dragons were proud creatures. They hated being inferior to others.

The Thunder Lizard immediately looked at Cena. Cena's face was as graceful and calm as ever. With a chuckle, he said, "Then I choose the Thunder Lizard."

Actually, no matter who they chose, the draconic blood would only have some impact at the beginning. The most important thing was still the Dragonblood Warrior lineage.

“The three of you, put the draconic blood into those three small buckets.” Linley pointed to the side at three buckets which were large enough to completely fill one’s belly. To the dragons, however, these three buckets were nothing at all. The Gold Dragon very straightforwardly cracked and plucked off one of its scales.

The Gold Dragon placed the scale above the wooden bucket, and a single drop of fresh blood, the size of a head, dripped down, instantly filling the bucket.

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 30, Discovery

The buckets filled with dragon blood were placed in front of the three children, and with a flip of his hand, Linley retrieved a large quantity of Blueheart Grass from his ring. The jade green leaves of the Blueheart Grass glimmered with that layer of faint blue light. Linley divided it into three parts, with each part having five clumps.

“Listen up, the three of you.” Linley looked at the three kids.

Cena, Taylor, and Sasha all stood attentively in front of Linley, listening to their elder’s instructions. Linley said, “In a while, drink as much dragon’s blood as possible, until your stomach is totally full. But before doing so, you must eat this Blueheart Grass. Logically speaking, three clumps per person should be enough, but just to be safe, it’s best if you each eat all five.”

“Eat grass?” Sasha wrinkled her nose unhappily.

To let a child eat Blueheart Grass, especially one who had been pampered all her life, would naturally result in some resistance.

“Sis, when Father was in his teens, he had to go all by himself to the Mountain Range of Magical Beasts to search for Blueheart Grass and drink the blood of the Armored Razorback Wurm. Father is now placing dragon’s blood in front of us. And you’re afraid to drink it?” Taylor didn’t have any concerns; he immediately grabbed the Blueheart Grass and began to eat it.

With big gulps, he swallowed it all down.

Seeing this, Linley couldn't help but reveal a hint of a smile on his face. Linley was quite satisfied with his son, Taylor. Although Taylor was rather playful, he was able to work hard and endure bitterness, and he trained hard as well. Taylor wasn't much weaker than the level Linley had been when Linley was ten.

Cena smiled, then grabbed the Blueheart Grass and began to eat it as well.

"Sasha, it's fine. The Blueheart Grass' juice is actually quite cool and refreshing." Cena said enticingly.

"Oh?" Watched by her father, Sasha picked up the Blueheart Grass and began to chew it. As she chewed, her face turned bitter. "Big brother Cena, you tricked me. The juice is cool, but the leaves make my mouth go numb." Despite complaining, Sasha still ate it.

Linley and Delia were laughing.

"Glug, glug." Taylor was the first to lift up that small pail of blood and began to pour it in his mouth. Taylor knew that the more dragon's blood he drank, the easier it would be to activate the Dragonblood lineage in his veins, and so he drank it all with big gulps and no hesitation.

Cena and Sasha raised up their pails and began to drink as well.

"Glug, glug." The three children drank dragon's blood at the same time.

This sight caused Linley to sigh endlessly with emotion.

The predecessors cut the firewood, and the successors will not fear the cold.

Linley's hard work had made it possible for these descendants to not have to experience those life and death dangers.

"Ah!" The first one to begin shouting in pain was Taylor. The pail in his hand toppled to the ground, and Taylor was in such pain that he collapsed to the ground as well, rolling around. His face instantly turned white, and beads of sweat began to pour down his face.

Delia's face immediately changed.

"It's fine." Linley reassured Delia.

Delia knew...that the first time a Dragonblood Warrior activated their Dragonblood, they would involuntarily transform. This first transformation would be an extremely painful one. Linley had experienced this pain in the past as well...when the pain reached a certain level, one would pass out. And indeed...

As black scales sprouted out of his body, Taylor fainted.

Immediately afterwards, Cena and Sasha began to scream in agony as well, both of them rolling around on the ground. Blue scales began to slowly emerge from Cena's body. The sensation of scales growing out of nowhere into his body was even more painful than being killed.

"If they can't even withstand such a little bit of pain, what can they possibly accomplish?" Linley quietly watched.

Shortly afterwards, Taylor and Cena had both fully transformed. As for Sasha, who had been the last to drink the dragon's blood, she finally began to transform as well. Taylor's draconic scales were black, as he had inherited the coloration of the Tyrant Wurm. Cena's scales were blue, as the Thunder Lizard was blue.

As for Sasha...

"Linley, look." Delia seemed startled and frightened.

Linley had noticed Sasha's transformation as well. With a rumbling noise, two golden, butterfly-thin wings began to sprout from Sasha's back. This was what she had inherited from the Gold Dragon; it's two massive physical wings. But these faint gold wings made Sasha look like a celestial spirit.

However, those golden scales which covered her entire face made Sasha look very mysterious, especially given that she had that draconic horn on her forehead and that draconic tail, which gave Sasha's Dragonblood Warrior form a domineering aura as well.

....

After a long time, the three children woke up. After waking up, the three kids excitedly stared at themselves and their transformations.

"Whoah, sis, you have wings?" Taylor stared at Sasha jealously.

Sasha liked her wings as well. They were part of her, like her hands. The two wings fluttered slightly, and Sasha gracefully flew into the air, excitedly shouting, "I can fly, I can fly!"

"I feel so powerful." Taylor excitedly punched at a nearby piece of rock, and that rock instantly split apart into tiny pieces. A ten year old child who was able to smash rocks into pieces? No ordinary person would be able to accomplish this.

Cena was extremely excited as well.

"Whoosh!" Moving like a flash, Cena's body left behind after-images when he moved. He was extremely fast.

Linley, Delia, Wharton, and Nina all laughed as they watched this.

"How marvelous." The Saint-level Gold Dragon sighed in praise. "Dragonblood Warriors truly are incredible." The three Saint-level dragons all sighed in amazement at this scene. The legendary Supreme Warriors really were amazing. They could already foresee...in a few decades, these three children would be three Dragonblood Warrior Saints.

After the three children got tired from playing around.

"Mother. Where's my clothes?" Sasha said to Delia.

The transformation had badly damaged her clothes. Fortunately, Sasha's pants weren't damaged; they were just a little dirty. But her upper body clothes had been shattered by those two wings of hers. It was no big deal right now, in Dragonform, but if she returned to her human form, wouldn't she be totally exposed?

Delia began to laugh.

Linley laughed as he said, "The three of you, listen up. In the future, focus on training in accordance with the Secret Dragonblood Manual. There is one thing, however...generally speaking, you are not to transform into your Dragonforms. In addition, right now, you are weak enough that even in Dragonform, your power won't amount to much."

"Yes, Father (Uncle)."

The three children assented.

"Wharton, I'll hand these three children to you to manage." Linley looked at his little brother. The three children should live in Baruch City. They were still young, after all. If they were to be made to live in a place like Mt. Blackraven, where almost no others were around, the children wouldn't be used to it, and their temperaments would be affected as well.

"Alright." Wharton nodded.

....

Taylor and the others went down the mountain. Two of the three dragons, out of curiosity, decided to go to the Baruch City palace as well. But of course, they shrank in size first. Linley and Delia remained on Mt. Blackraven, living a life of quiet training.

Most of Delia's time was spent with Linley. Naturally, she would also go to Baruch City to spend time with the kids.

As for Linley...

He might go for months or even half a year at a time without seeing the kids. Normally, he stayed on Mt. Blackraven and trained.

The sky was dark.

Mt. Blackraven. The stone room in the center of the lake. The inside of the room was carefully laid out, and Linley and Delia were holding each other on the bed. "Linley, have you ever asked Bebe to go inquire what that black stone was that he gave us on our wedding day?"

"I had Bebe go ask, but the Emperor Rat only said that it was something that was very good for training." Linley said.

Delia began to laugh as well. "Alas. I never thought my training as a magus would reach such a speed. My big brother is such a genius, and is being personally taught by the High Priest, and is now an Arch Magus of the ninth rank. As for me, I wasn't as good as him...but I reached the rank of Arch Magus of the ninth rank before he did. Every day, I feel like my spiritual energy is rising...even when I'm not training, my spiritual energy is slowly increasing. Even I'm scared by how fast I'm improving."

"Enough, don't overthink things. Whatever it was that Emperor Rat gave us, we'll find out soon enough. Alright, it's late. Let's go to sleep."

.....

While Linley was quietly training at Mt. Blackraven and constantly analyzing the Elemental Laws of the Wind and the Earth...in a short mountain three hundred kilometers east of the Baruch Kingdom, two men were carefully inspecting the quality of the soil.

All Kingdoms and Empires needed their own mineral resources to be self-sufficient.

Before the Baruch Kingdom was unified, this region suffered from constant war and was under rapidly changing administrative controls. Today, you'd be in charge of this city; tomorrow, someone else might. Nobody had time or effort to find mineral deposits for mining.

Even if they found them, they would probably be attacked by the neighboring groups and end up dying.

Thus, no one ever went mining.

But after the Baruch Kingdom was founded, they focused on scouting and searching for mineral resources. Those surveyors carefully inspected every inch of the territory within the Baruch Kingdom. In the past twenty years, they had indeed found quite a few metal mines, such as iron mines, copper mines, gold mines, silver mines, and what not. Only, the mines were all of different sizes.

They even found some rather valuable mines, but the output of these mines was relatively low, such as the 'black iron' mines and the 'mithril' mines.

Having their own mines meant the Kingdom wouldn't need to acquire materials for forging weapons from other nations.

"Chief, the soil here seems rather unique." A golden-haired man as skinny as a monkey said in a low voice. The middle-aged man near him carefully inspected the soil as well, then immediately ordered, "Kaya [Ka'ya], let's go down and do some digging. Let's dig a bit deeper and see what is there."

"Yes, Chief." The young man immediately brought out the tools and began to dig alongside the chief. Although they weren't very strong, the young man was a warrior of the third rank, while the chief was a warrior of the fifth. Digging, to them, was very simple.

Their digging skills were quite practiced, and the deep hole quickly deepened without widening.

"Clank." A piercing sound. It seemed they had ground onto some sort of metal.

"Chief, come take a look, quick!" That young man hurriedly said.

The middle-aged man immediately lowered his head to stare. Right now, it was the afternoon, and there was still quite a bit of sunlight. The middle-aged man could clearly see that something was reflecting the light of the setting sun, and he immediately used his hand to push away the nearby dirt and mud.

A half-translucent gem appeared before his eyes.

"This...this is..." The middle-aged man was speechless for a moment, then said in shock, "This is a magicite gem. A magicite gem. Kaya, it's a magicite gem!"

"What?! Captain, we're rich! We're rich!" The young man's eyes immediately shone with happiness.

Magicite gems were extremely valuable. In truth...magicite cores of magical beasts were very similar to magicite gems. Although they were 'cores', they were a type of gem as well. For example, the cores of dragon's were also often called 'draconic gems'.

But of course, natural magicite gems couldn't have the terrifyingly high amount of energy that draconic gems had.

According to the normal market value...

A low-quality magicite gem – 10 gold coins, equivalent to the magicite core of a magical beast of the third rank.

A middle-quality magicite gem – 100 gold coins, equivalent to a magicite core of the fourth or fifth ranks.

A high-quality magicite gem – 1000 gold coins, equivalent to a magical beast core of the sixth rank.

A top-quality magicite gem – 10000 gold coins. Naturally, it couldn't match up to the magicite core of a magical beast of the seventh rank, which was worth around fifty thousand gold coins. To find magicite gems or cores more valuable than top-quality magicite gems, one would have to go out and kill magical beasts of the seventh or eighth ranks, or even higher.

It could be said...that a magicite gemstone mine was more than ten million times more valuable than ordinary gold mines. This was because when engaging in gold mining, one had to pan for gold, and it was extremely time consuming. But magicite gemstone mines were different. They had large numbers of magicite gems clustered together...

It was as though a large number of magicite cores had clustered together.

In the Yulan continent, the only thing comparable in value to a magicite gemstone mine was a mithril mine.

"We're going to be rich, Chief! We can fill up a bag of gemstones, and they'd easily be worth over a hundred thousand gold coins. We're going to be rich!" The young man was wildly overjoyed.

The chief frowned. "Don't be hasty. This should be a magicite gemstone mine...let's take a look and see how large this mine is."

Book 10, Baruch – Chapter 31: Magicite Gemstone Mine

“Yes, Chief.” The young man suppressed his excitement, forcing himself to continue surveying the area with the chief.

“Here as well.” The Chief’s eyes lit up.

“Chief, there’s magicite gems here as well.” A hundred meters away, the young man, Kaya, was extremely excited. The older man surveyed his surroundings, and then immediately ran next to Kaya, so excited he was panting for breath. “Kaya, this clearly is a magicite gem mine. We’ve discovered that it is at least a few hundred meters wide. Such an enormous magicite mine is rarely seen in the entire Yulan continent.”

Kaya nodded repeatedly as well.

Magicite gems. A single sack of them was more than a thousand times the value of a sack of gold. This definitely was an enormous sum.

Kaya looked at his chief, then scanned the surrounding area. Seeing no one else was here, he immediately lowered his voice and whispered, “Chief, we’re both rich. We were able to find so many gems in the area around us. The price of the gems in this area alone has to be worth several hundred million gold coins, or maybe even more.”

The chief surveyor was also a surveying expert. Naturally he could tell how much this location was worth.

"Kaya, what are you trying to say?" The chief could already see the greedy look appear in Kaya's eyes.

Kaya suppressed his excitement and hurriedly said, "Chief, think about it...what's our yearly surveying salary? Now, as long as we keep quiet about it and don't tell anyone, we can secretly excavate a bag full of gems, then sell them. Then we'd be rich! It would be possible for us to become two of the richest people in the entire Yulan continent because of this mine."

The more he thought about it, the more excited Kaya became.

There was nothing that could be done. Magicite gems were a hot commodity, and there were many channels for it to be sold through. In addition, even the lowest of magicite gems were worth ten gold coins. One could imagine how valuable this mine was.

"Kaya, calm down. Even if you have money, you have to be alive to spend it." Just as Kaya was getting so heated up that it seemed to be summer, his chief poured a bucket of verbal ice water over him. Kaya shivered, then looked at his chief. "Chief, what do you mean?"

The chief said seriously, "You should know how tightly we surveyors are managed and overseen. Those senior people are always worried that we will find some valuable mines, then secretly steal from them. The kingdom is extremely strict in its oversight of us."

Kaya sneered and laughed, "Chief, what are you afraid of? Yes, there is oversight, but all we need to do is to make one trip then leave and never return."

"You are still too young." The chief berated him. "You should know that every day, there are records in the headquarters of the areas we have excavated. If we disappear, they would definitely come investigate this area. By then, they would definitely discover the magicite gem mine."

"And secondly..." The chief looked at Kaya solemnly. "The kingdom has quite a few experts. Once the kingdom discovers what we have done, they would definitely pursue us. Our families would most likely get caught in the mix as well."

Kaya suddenly remembered that back in Baruch City, his chief had a very good family.

But he, Kaya, was different. His parents had passed away a long time ago in the chaotic wars. He was all by himself, and hadn't yet married. He had nothing tying him down. Kaya was very confident...that he could take away an enormous fortune, and live a life of luxury.

"Kaya." The chief looked at him. "If we report this to the headquarters, the headquarters will reward us for discovering the mine."

"How much would the reward be?" Kaya scoffed. "Ten thousand gold coins would be the most we could expect from them."

Actually, ten thousand gold coins was an enormous sum already. An ordinary family only used a few dozen gold coins a year. Ten thousand gold coins was enough to allow an ordinary family to live off of for a hundred years. But to enjoy the life of a magnate...ten thousand gold coins truly was nothing.

"Hard to say. It depends on the size of this mine. If the magicite gem mine is fairly large, they might give us several tens of thousands of gold coins, or even a hundred thousand gold coins." The chief tried to persuade him. "Kaya, the gold that the kingdom gives us, we can spend without fear, and we don't have to be forced to leave our home."

Kaya looked at the magicite gems in the hole beneath them, then looked at his chief. After struggling a long time mentally, he slowly nodded.

A hint of a smile appeared on the chief's face.

The chief thought of his wife and his three kids. He truly didn't want to make the kids go fleeing with him.

But just at this moment, a sharp dagger suddenly thrust out at the chief. Kaya's eyes were filled with a hint of madness. "Die!" But as his dagger stabbed at the chief, Kaya suddenly found that he could no longer push the dagger forward.

Because the chief had seized him by the hand.

Kaya's face instantly changed.

The chief stared at him coldly. And then, he exerted some pressure with his hand. "Crack!" Kaya's hand and wrist was shattered. Kaya howled wildly, while at the same time attacking the chief with his left hand. Sadly...he was a warrior of the third rank, while the chief was of the fifth.

The difference was too great.

"Bang!"

The chief, with a simple punch, hit Kaya in the chest. A bone-splintering sound was heard while Kaya went flying backwards, slamming against the floor. Kaya's chest was caved in and blood was flowing from his mouth.

"You...." Kaya's life was fading from his body. He truly couldn't accept it... he had ambushed the chief at such a close range. Clearly, the chief had been ready for him.

The chief sighed as he looked at Kaya. "Kaya, if I was twenty years younger and didn't have anything holding me back, perhaps I would have made the same choice as you, to abscond with a large amount of treasure and leave and become a magnate. Thus, I understand how you are feeling."

The chief had guessed that Kaya would ambush him, and thus had been on high guard, and the battle-qi in his body had been activated as well.

Kaya listened to these words, and then his eyes turned dim. He had no life left in him.

The chief sighed and shook his head as he looked at Kaya's body. But he didn't mind too much; when he was young, the Baruch Kingdom hadn't yet been founded. He had killed quite a few people, and he was rather used to it. For the sake of letting one's self live a good life, far too many people had lost their lives.

The chief immediately covered up the hole with dirt, then turned and left at high speed to the nearby Nifeng City.

The news that the Baruch Kingdom's small city of Nifeng had discovered a magicite gem mine quickly spread throughout the kingdom. The area around the mine had been immediately sealed off by thousands of soldiers, forbidding anyone from going near it. They quietly awaited orders from the capital.

Mt. Blackraven.

Wharton was running at high speed through the mountain. He passed through the thick woods, then followed the creek to the place where Linley was training.

"Big brother." Wharton called out from afar.

Linley, who was meditating in the center of the lake, couldn't help but open his eyes. Seeing Wharton, a hint of a smile appeared on his face. "Wharton, what has you here in such a rush?"

"Big brother, make a trip with me." Wharton hurriedly said.

"Little Wharton, what's going on?" Bebe popped out of a nearby wooded area.

Wharton explained, "Big brother, in the eastern borders, our people have discovered a large magicite gemstone mine. Right now, the scope of the deposit is at least a thousand meters wide. And that's just the surface layer. Exactly how large it is...hard to say. But even if it's just a thousand meters wide, the value of it is definitely several billion gold coins!"

"Oh?" Linley was shocked. "There's such a large magicite gem deposit?"

Magicite gemstones weren't like iron or copper deposits. Magicite gemstones usually formed only after countless years of accumulating elemental energy. They would constantly compress it...and then finally take form. Some magicite gemstone deposits were only a few dozen meters in diameter.

"Let's go, big brother." Wharton said repeatedly.

"Alright, let's go together." As soon as Linley spoke, Bebe chimed in. "I'm going too."

Wharton immediately laughed. "Bebe, if you go, I won't have to Dragonform." Wharton, being at the ninth rank, still couldn't fly unless Dragonformed. But Dragonforming would ruin his clothes.

"Fine." Bebe agreed easily.

Bebe's body immediately grew larger. Wharton mounted on his back, and then the three of them flew at high speed towards the east. The current flying speed of Linley and Bebe was so great that in the amount of time it took to drink a cup of tea, they traversed the three hundred plus kilometers.

"Below." Wharton pointed at the large area protected by a heavy guard.

Linley nodded slightly, and the three of them immediately descended. Seeing people fly over, the soldiers didn't dare to be too rash. Their leader ran over. Sadly, this senior captain had never seen Wharton before.

"Are you...Lord Linley?"

Seeing Bebe shrink then hop onto Linley's shoulders, many soldiers let out surprised shouts. This black Saint-level mouse had virtually become Linley's insignia! He was a legendary figure in the Baruch Kingdom, its spiritual support!

Linley's influence was tremendous.

"Right. I am Linley. This is Wharton, your King." Linley laughed calmly.

Wharton resignedly stretched out his arms, which immediately became covered with azure scales. This was more convincing than any verbal proof. Dragonblood Warrior transformation...only the descendants of the Baruch clan could do this.

"Your Royal Majesty. Lord Linley."

Loud voices rang out.

Wharton said calmly, "Enough. Keep guarding. My brother and I are going to scan this area."

"Yes." The surrounding soldiers raised their heads and their chests, keeping their backs straight. All of them wanted to make a good impression in front of their King and in front of this legendary Saint, Linley. Linley, meanwhile, had already begun to spiritually scan this area.

The nearby Wharton just looked at Linley.

"How huge."

Linley was stunned as he delved deep into the ground with his spiritual sense. Spiritual energy could easily pierce through material barriers, but material barriers would still lessen the range of the spiritual energy much more than air did. After all, in the air, spiritual energy could scan at a range of ten kilometers.

But scanning solid, material barriers lowered that range to one kilometer.

"Big brother, what is it?" Wharton said softly.

Linley cracked a smile. "It seems...I need to take this a bit more seriously."

Wharton was astonished.

He instantly understood Linley's meaning. This magicite gemstone mine was so vast that Linley's casual spiritual energy scan wasn't able to totally investigate the size and scope of this deposit.

"Big brother's spiritual energy is capable of covering a very wide area, even through the ground. How large is this deposit exactly?" Wharton's heart began to shake.

Linley was now using his spiritual energy to scan at full strength.

A full strength scan was very taxing on spiritual energy. Thus, unless there was some special reason, experts rarely would use spiritual energy on such a scale.

Finally...

Linley finished the investigation of this terrifying magicite gemstone deposit.

"How frightening. What a terrifyingly large magicite gem deposit." Linley had clearly discovered...this magicite gem deposit was an oval, round shape. But of course, in the area around the 'oval', there were still some scattered, random deposits.

One of the nearby deposits was fairly close to the ground, perhaps just three or four meters away from the ground.

This massive deposit was over twenty kilometers wide!

Even someone who had trained to Linley's level of understanding couldn't help but feel his heart rate quicken. Linley secretly let out a breath, then looked at Wharton. Wharton asked softly, "Big brother, how is it?" Linley immediately walked to the side. "Talk about it over here."

Wharton and Linley came to a quiet, secluded place.

"Big brother, how big is it?" Wharton was somewhat frantic.

Linley said seriously, "Very big...larger than any magicite gem deposit previously discovered in the Yulan continent. At least ten times bigger."

Wharton was shocked. After all, in the past there had been deposits that were one or two kilometers in size. To be ten times larger than those deposits..."

"This magicite gem deposit is at least twenty kilometers in length. In addition, it's very deep as well...based on my calculations, this magicite gem deposit should definitely be worth at least several hundred billion gold coins." Linley felt his heart tremble as he just thought about this number.

Several hundred billion gold coins?

"Good heavens." Wharton found it hard to breathe as well.
